1 CHARLES SEYMOUR otherwiſe MOORE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 21ſt day of November laſt, two woollen cloth coats, value 3l. one ſattin waiſtcoat, value 10s. one ſilk and cotton waiſtcoat, value 10s. one woollen cloth waiſtcoat, value 5s. two pair of woollen cloth breeches, value 20s. one pair of ſhag breeches, value 10s. one pair of ſilk breeches, value 10s. ſix pair of ſilk ſtockings, ings, value 20s. one pair of thread ſtockings, value 12d. ſix linen ſhirts, value 40s. three linen handkerchiefs, value 3s. one pair of leather boots, value 5s. one man's hat, value 8s. two leather pocket books, value 5s. the property of Edward Poore the younger, Eſquire, in his dwelling houſe.

A ſecond count, For feloniouſly ſtealing, in the dwelling houſe of the ſaid Edward Poore, the younger, Eſq; one promiſory note, called a Bank Poſt Bill for 48l. marked No. M. 7985, dated 18th of Auguſt, 1785, ſigned by John Greenway for the Governor and Co. of the Bank of England, by which at ſeven days ſight was promiſed to be paid that his ſolar Bill of Exchange to Edward Poore, Eſq; value received of Thomas Herne, indorſed by the ſaid Edward Poore the elder, the ſame being the property of the ſaid Edward Poore, the younger, and then due and unſatisfied to him the proprietor thereof, againſt the ſtatute.

EDWARD POORE ſworn.

When I am in town, I live in chambers, there is but one ſtair-caſe to the chambers, and they do not communicate, there are two keys, a ſeparate key of each room, there are no duplicate keys of either room; the priſoner had been in my ſervice occaſionally for ſix weeks at Saliſbury, not in my houſe, but at London, I took him to ſleep in the chambers, he lived there a fortnight: on Monday the 21ſt of November, at ſix in the evening very nearly, I left my chambers, and left him in the chambers; I had at that time, put into my cupboard by the ſide of the chimney, in which I uſually kept valuables, two pocket books, one including the other, and the inner pocket book including a Bank poſt-bill, value forty-eight pounds, which will be produced and ſworn to, which I had received about a week before in a letter from my uncle in Wiltſhire, who was the indorſer; and there was another bank bill that is not in the indictment; I had taken out the pocket book that morning and examined the contents, I had not taken it from my perſon till I put it into the cloſet, I left the priſoner at ſix and told him I ſhould return about eleven; I did not return till ſome time towards twelve, upon my return, I found the door of my own chamber faſt, nor could I find the key; I found the door of the upper room faſt, the outer chamber door, and after ſome ſearch I found the key of that upper room (there was only one key to it, which was in the priſoner's cuſtody) and I found that key thrown into a window of the ſtaircaſe; I then proceeded into his room, and looked for his box where he kept his things.

Was his door alſo faſt till you found that key?—Yes, I found his box was removed, that gave me the firſt ſuſpicion of a robbery, I ſent the porter of the Inn to call up a ſmith to force open the door of my own apartment, that I might get in; he eaſily forced the outward door, it was only once locked, I then went into my room; I obſerved firſt that my cupboard door was forced, the lock was forced from the door ſo as to hold by only two of theſe ſcrews; it had not been unlocked, but was intirely forced out, and ſo opened; I diſcovered that my pocket-books had been taken away from the ſhelf upon which I had left them; I examined my drawers, of which the priſoner uſually kept the keys, and the drawers were opened, they were uſually locked, and the key in them, and a conſiderable quantity of clothes and linen were gone, and on a ſmall table near my fire-place, I found this iron chiſſel, and at the ſame time I found a hammer, which I believe belonged to my chambers; I found two or three papers of no conſequence, but I knew they had been left in my pocket-books that were in the cupboard; one was a card to ſee my Lord Bute's houſe, the other was a paper of no conſequence, which I knew, which appeared to have been ſeparated from the pocket-book, and it was in the outer pocket of the book; the next morning I made the earlieſt application to the public Office, and as I had a compleat deſcription of my bank poſt bill, I went to the bank, and ſtopped the payment; and I went with ſome officers on Thurſday the 24th, in ſearch of the priſoner to Bath, and at about eight in the morning at the three Tons at Bath, I found the priſoner with two men ſitting in a room there, he was dreſſed in my coat and waiſtcoat, one of the officers pulled off his neckcloth and ſhewed me which was mine, he had a ſhirt on which appeared to be mine, and Jealous found upon him a pocket-book which is not mine, but which did contain this pocket-book which is mine, and which I ſwear to, that did contain my notes; in my preſence alſo were taken from the priſoner twenty-one guineas, and two ſhillings and ſixpence, which were then acknowledged before the magiſtrate to be part of the caſh for the notes; the remainder of the property will be proved.

Court. I need hardly aſk you, Sir, knowing your profeſſional knowledge and caution, whether before he ſaid that, you ſaid anything to him?—I ſaid nothing to him, and I take it for granted the officers are too much uſed to propriety in buſineſs, to do anything of that kind.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

I went with Mr. Poore to Bath, and at the three Tons I found this coat and waiſtcoat on him, and one handkerchief round his neck, and the other in his pocket; I then aſked him before Mr. Carpmeal, where the remainder part of the things were, and the young man told me he had ſent them to Staines, at the Red Lion, and we came up in the mail coach in order to call for them, and found moſt of the property at Staines; he told us, that a pair of boots of his maſter's and his own coat were at the Golden Croſs, Charing-Croſs, and in his own coat was found a key which I believe to be the key of the chamber door.

Mr. Poore. It is the key of my chamber door, this coat and waiſtcoat were on his perſon when he was taken, they are my property, this coat I ſwear to.

What do you take to be the value of the things you loſt?—I ſuppoſe ten pounds.

Jealous. Mr. Carpmeal ſearched him, and the money that was found upon him he acknowledged to be the produce of the note of forty-eight pounds.

THOMAS CARPMEAL ſworn.

I found the money upon him, which he owned to be part of the forty-eight pounds that was ſtolen, the money was twenty-one guineas and a half, and two ſhillings and ſix-pence; he acknowledged that to be part of the forty-eight pounds note that he had changed of Mr. Poore's; he ſaid he took the note out of Mr. Poore's room.

Did he give any account of the remainder of the forty-eight pounds note?—He had bought a horſe at Bath, the night before we got there, which he had given twenty pounds or guineas for.

ISAAC PADMAN ſworn.

On the 22d of November which was the Tueſday, Mr. Poore came to me, and acquainted me with this robbery, and likewiſe deſcribed the poſt-bill that was taken away, and deſired me to ſtop it, for it had not been accepted; on the Wedneſday about eleven, perhaps near twelve, I cannot preciſely ſay, it was brought for acceptance by Mr. Holt, and I cauſed it to be ſtopped, this is the identical bill.

(Depoſed to.)

Read. Signed J. Greenway.

Court. This bill varies extremely from the bill deſcribed in the indictment, it is ſigned J. Greenway.

Mr. Chetham. We lay it to be ſigned and ſubſcribed by John Greenway, not with the name of John Greenway.

RICHARD WATKINS ſworn.

On the 14th of November, about nine or ten at night, the priſoner came to me to open the lock at Mr. Poore's, No. 23, in the New Inn; I went with him, and I could not open it, and he ſaid his maſter wanted the tea things out, and I bent ſome of the wards of the lock ſo that Mr. Poore's key would not open it, and in the morning he came to have ſomething to ſtraighten the wards of the lock, and he called me a puppy, and ſaid I had ſpoiled the lock; on Monday night the 21ſt of November, between nine and ten at night he came and aſked me for a chiſſel, I fetched him my maſter's chiſſel; I offered to go myſelf, he ſaid it was of no uſe, for I could not do it; I lent him this chiſſel, I am ſure it was this chiſſel, here is a piece broke off.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, according to the laws preſcribed by my country, I have pleaded not guilty, to a crime of which I am certainly guilty; perhaps to the bench, and the ſurrounding audience, it might appear a ſubterfuge, was I to affirm, that at the commiſſion of the crime I was totally deprived of my reaſon; about ſix days before that, I did come to that boy deſiring him to open a lock, for I knew that there were valueables encloſed in a cloſet, which I opened afterwards; he could not open it then; afterwards Mr. Poore's key would not open it in the morning, he accordingly deſired me to go and have the miſtake rectified; I went, the boy came, or at leaſt the ſervant; they opened the lock, it was then in my power to take the things that were there, but returning reaſon told me it was wrong; on his going out he left the pocket-book, I ſaw him put it in; I cannot account for it, I was wholly deprived of reaſon, juſtice, and every thing; but after the commiſſion of it, when I reflected, I was then prompted to reſtore the book to its primitive ſtate; and I would then, if it had been in my power have reſtored the notes, but I found it was impoſſible; I knew the attempt would looſe my character, and I was then tempted to proceed as I did; I fled, I knew not where, I went in the very mouth of juſtice, I took no precautions that the moſt uneducated thief would have done, and the moment I was taken into cuſtody, remorſe of conſcience told me I ſhould immediately diſcloſe the whole, I did ſo, as far as was in my power. This morning I was ſurpriſed at my trial coming on, or I ſhould have deſired a gentleman to have attended to my character, which has to this moment been totally untainted, and has been always regarded, not only in a proper but an eſtimable light: at preſent I have nothing more to ſay.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

2. JOSEPH LEONARD and GEORGE WILSON otherwiſe JACKSON were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Dickins, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 2d day of December, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, two cloth coats, value 20s. one pair of black ſilk breeches, value 7s. one black ſilk waiſtcoat, value 2s. three pair of nankeen breeches, value 20s. ſix linen ſhirts, value 20s. one waiſtcoat, value 12d. two linen waiſtcoats, value 3s. one pair of iron ſhoe buckles plated with ſilver, value 6d. one cotton gown, value 10s. one petticoat, value 2s. one white ſattin cloak, value 2s. one ditto, value 2s. his property; two cloth coats, value 5s. one great coat, value 2s. one ſhirt, value 3s. one handkerchief, value 1s. one pair of nankeen breeches, value 1s. two waiſtcoats, value 2s. the property of Joſeph Ball, in the ſame dwelling houſe.

A ſecond Count, For ſtealing the ſame goods, on the ſame day, in the dwelling houſe of the ſaid John Dickins.

ANN MURPHY ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Dickins the attorney, No. 8, Holborn-court, Grays-Inn, on the ground floor, between eight and nine I heard a double knock at the door, I went to the door, the priſoner Leonard aſked me if Mr. Dickins was at home, the other priſoner was behind him, he did not ſpeak to me; then Leonard aſked me if Mr. Dickins was at home, I ſaid, no, he immediately drew out a piſtol, and I ſaid, O Lord! and he ſaid huſh, immediately; then he laid hold of my arm, and told me to go in; I ſaid I would not, and he told me if I did not, I was a dead woman; from thence we came into the room, and the other priſoner followed him, and then the priſoner Leonard held his piſtol and ſtood over me in a corner of the room, and bid me ſtand ſtill; then Wilſon took a great coat that hung behind the door, from thence he went to the book-caſe, and took out two coats, one a green one, and the other a grey coat, and from thence he went to the deſk, and took a black cloak and a pair of ſtockings, and ran up immediately to me, and told me he would tie my arms behind me, and ſtop my mouth if I was not quiet, and I told him he ſhould not; and from thence he opened the bed chamber door, and went through the bed chamber door, and through the kitchen to the parlour door, then he took a pair of wet nankeen breeches off the line, and a ſtriped waiſtcoat, and a wet ſhirt that was not finiſhed, out of the pan; from thence he went into the bed-chamber, and opened three or four drawers, and out of one of them he took half a dozen ſhirts that were doubled up for ironing, he threw them down on the floor to make a bundle of them.

Did you ſee him do all this?——I heard him open the drawers, when I was in the next room; and he took a pair of black ſattin breeches, and a black ſattin waiſtcoat, and half a dozen neck handkerchiefs, and there was a new coat of my maſter's, and a black coat of my maſter's hanging up at the ſide of the bed-chamber, and a dark muſlin gown.

Look at the two young men at the bar?——I am ſure them are the two young men that entered into the door, I am very ſure, becauſe they bid me hide my face, and I told them I would not, and I looked in their faces all the time they were with me; the priſoner Leonard was brought back to me in ten minutes, I did not ſee Wilſon till the next morning, but I am ſure he is the ſame man.

Had you a light?——I had.

What became of the light while they were riffling the places?—There was another candle in the window, and he lighted it, and Wilſon was with me while the other was in the bed-chamber with the other candle; they had nothing over their faces, I looked in their faces all the while, and I am ſure of them; they might be in the chamber a quarter of an hour, but I am ſure they were the men.

Was the door open or ſhut when they forced you in, and went in with you?——Wilſon ſtaid behind and ſhut the door, while Leonard held the piſtol to me, that I ſhould not make any alarm.

JOHN DICKINS ſworn.

I live at No. 8, Holborn-court, Grays-Inn; on the 2d of this month, between eight and nine, I heard a double knock at the door, the girl came and aſked me, if I ſhould be at home to anybody, I told her not at that hour; ſhe then went to the door and opened it, it was locked withinſide, I then heard a man enquire if I was within, and in the ſpace of a ſecond or two, I heard the girl cry out, O Lord! I got from the chair where I was ſitting by the fire, the door was cloſe to me, and I ſaw the priſoner Leonard with a piſtol at the girl's head, and I ſaw another man with him, but I cannot ſay it was the priſoner Wilſon; for I did not obſerve him ſo much; the girl had a candle in her hand, I immediately thought of making my eſcape, there are two rooms, there was a bolt under the lock at each door, I bolted it, I then threw up the ſaſh of the window, and got out into the Duchy Court, where my chambers look into, my chambers are on the ground floor, I then went into the Duchy office, and made an alarm from one of their windows which looks into Coney-court, and we called, porter, porter, a long time before we made anybody hear, upon their coming to us, I told them there were thieves in my chambers, and begged of them to come; I then went back to the window, and ſaw the candle on the table, and the door ſhut; in about a quarter of a minute I thought I heard the girl cry out, I ſent ſomebody to put too my outward door on the outſide, which had a ſtaple and a haſp, and I underſtood afterwards, it was put too by a boy that was there, and I found the door made faſt afterwards; in a few minutes afterwards Mr. Jones, the porter, and a lamp-lighter, went into the chambers at the window, and I went to the window and ſaw the priſoner Leonard come along very deliberately, he was in a ſcarlet coat, and had a piſtol in one hand, he came up to the window, and ſaid now for it, and held the piſtol; he run into Gray's Inn-lane, in five minutes he was brought back again, Leonard got out and he run towards Grays Inn-lane, I ſaw the priſoner Leonard in my room, and I ſaw the property, it was my property part of it.

Court. The only view you had of the priſoner Leonard, was by looking through a key hole, and when you ſaw him in the window?——I have no doubt of his being the man I apprehended, theſe are my ſhirts but they have no marks, they have been in the poſſeſſion of the girl ever ſince, they were not carried out of my chambers, only taken out of one room into another; I value the two coats at twenty ſhillings, and my ſhirts, I value at three ſhillings a piece, here are almoſt a new pair of black ſattin breeches, I value them at ſeven ſhillings, I believe I put in the waiſtcoat at two ſhillings in the indictment; I ſuppoſe upon the moſt moderate calculation the things are worth five pounds.

I am one of the porters belonging to Gray's Inn; on the 2d of December, about twenty-five minutes after eight, I heard the cry of porter; and as there had been ſome little time before, a depredation in a gentleman's chambers, I went to the Duchy office, I went to the outward door of Mr. Dickins's chambers, by their deſire, and found the door ſecured; I then came round to the window with Mr. Stephen Hilton, and went through the two rooms, and opened two rooms, and opened a ſlide of the door, and immediately the priſoner Wilſon preſented a piſtol to me, and told me if I ſtirred hand or foot, I was a dead man, I am very clear it was the priſoner Wilſon, he had a candle in one hand, and a piſtol in the other, I ſaw the other priſoner to my right, Wilſon fronted me immediately, I could not defend myſelf, the men ruſhed by, and Leonard held a piſtol at another man's breaſt, and they ruſhed from us out of the room, they went out of the window.

Court. Are you poſitively ſure that theſe were the two men?——I am very clear to every thing that I have declared.

Did you obſerve the things that were in the room?——Yes, the room was ſtrewed with things and linen, there was a quantity that was cloſe to Wilſon.

Were they in the two rooms, or in the room where they were?——In the room where they were.

STEPHEN HILTON ſworn.

I am the lamp-lighter, I went into Mr. Dickins's chambers, I went to the window, and I went to the fire place, and got hold of a poker; Jones unbolted the door, and the maid came out of the bed room, which was the firſt room we entered into; and in a room fronting it there was a light, we went abreaſt of one another as near as poſſible, and as ſoon as ever the whole body was in the room, the priſoner, Mr. Leonard, preſented a piſtol at my ſide; and the other was with Jones, and he came to me, and he thruſt me up againſt the wainſcot, and made his eſcape out of the window, and the other ran after him.

Jury. You think no other but what theſe are the two men?——Think no other! I am ſure of it, becauſe there is nothing in the world againſt it, but what they are the men.

But had you an opportunity of obſerving it, that they are the men?——Certainly I had.

Have you any doubt of it?——None at all.

all, one run into Gray's-Inn-lane, into a little court; he was taken firſt, that was Leonard.

GEORGE MILES ſworn.

I keep a green-ſtall in Gray's-Inn-lane, No. 36, about half after eight, the 2d of this month, I heard the alarm of ſtop thief; I heard the thief was gone down Pinner's-court, which is about twenty yards from Gray's-Inn gate, I went down with a lanthorn, and I ſaw Leonard coming up, the court is no thoroughfare; Leonard ſaid to me that the man was gone over the wall; I held up the lanthorn, and ſaid I believe this is him; and preſently Captain Smith in the Inn, at whom he ſnapped a piſtol, ſaid he was the man; I ſaid there is a piſtol in his pocket; the gentleman took it out of his pocket, and ſnapped it, but it did not go off; this is the piſtol.

Was the piſtol loaded?——Yes, with ſlugs, two ſlugs, but no powder in it; there was nothing but the two ſlugs and ſome paper.

Court to Murphy. Are theſe the piſtols?——I cannot be ſure whether theſe are the piſtols, but I know they held piſtols to me.

—— LLOYD ſworn.

I live in Fox-court, Gray's-Inn-lane, I took the priſoner Wilſon on December the 2d, between eight and nine, going from work, between Fulwood's-Rents and Gray's Inn gate; I heard the cry of ſtop thief about thirty or forty yards from this place, I ſaw the people run acroſs towards Middle-Row, and I immediately ran after them, and when I came to Staple's-Inn-buildings, they ſaid he was gone up there, I then proceeded up the buildings, and the priſoner was among the crowd; a young man ſaid that is the man, he has a piſtol in his hand, I did not then ſee the piſtol; I immediately ſeized hold of his left hand, and aſked him what he had in his hand; he ſaid nothing; I immediately took the piſtol out of his hand; the piſtol was loaded with ſlugs and powder, I did not ſee the priming, but a gentleman the corner of the court ſaid, I will draw out the priming in caſe they ſhould do one a miſchief.

—— PARSONS ſworn.

I found theſe buckles and theſe ſtockings on the priſoner Wilſon, on the 2d of this month, in his right-hand pocket.

(Depoſed to.)

Proſecutor. I am poſitive to the buckles; I know them by one of the teeth of the chapes, I had a pair of ſuch buckles, they were in my ſhoes in my chamber; I had my boots on then.

Murphy. I am very ſure theſe are the buckles that I ſaw Wilſon take out of my maſter's ſhoes, I told him they were not ſilver, he had no occaſion to take them, and he took out another buckle, and I told him the ſame, and he dropped one of them, and put theſe buckles in his pocket, and theſe ſtockings; he came and told me he would tie me, and put his hand over my mouth; I told him I would not be tied by him, nor yet my breath ſhould not be ſtopped by him; I am ſure they are my maſter's ſtockings.

Proſecutor. I am ſure they are my ſtockings, I know them by the mending.

PRISONER LEONARD's DEFENCE.

I have only to ſay, I know myſelf to be guilty of the fact; and as this is the firſt time I ever committed anything in my life, I hope your Lordſhip will grant me ſome mercy, and ſome little time to repent of my ſins.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. What way of life have you been in?——I have been a gentleman's ſervant.

—— FAIRBANK ſworn.

The priſoner has lived with a friend of mine, Mr. Meggiſon, in Hatton-Garden, I think upwards of two years, he behaved then very honeſt; he has been at my houſe I ſuppoſe 150 times; I told Mr. Meggiſon to come here, but he declined it; I looked in juſt by chance, and hearing that declaration from the priſoner, it had an effect on me. I believe he has left Mr. Meggiſon about ſix or ſeven months.

EDWARD SMITH, Eſq; *ſworn.

He was in my ſervice ſeven months lately, he left it the 1ſt of November; I have intruſted him with valuables in bank notes and other matters, and money; I had not any doubt of his honeſty till this circumſtance; I ſhould have given him the character of a perfect honeſt man; there ſeemed an indolence about him, which I attributed to his ſuffering in America; he ſuffered in his health, and he could not ride well, theſe are the reaſons for which I parted with him; but I kept him in my ſervice nearly two months after I wiſhed to part with him, becauſe I conceived him a worthy man, and that he ſhould not be turned out of ſervice at a time when the town was empty; and when he left my ſervice, I gave him permiſſion to come and take his victuals at my houſe till he got into ſervice.

What part of the town do you live in?—Charlotte-ſtreet, Portland-place; I had an equal good character of him from Mr. Meggiſon; and he has only ſerved two ſince his return from America, or in the Weſt-Indies; and he was an officer's ſervant in America, and has been ſerving in the navy; I underſtand he was led away by an improper connection after he left me.

Court to Priſoner Leonard. Was you enliſted in America?——No, my Lord, I was an officer's ſervant.

Court to Priſoner Wilſon. Have you any thing to ſay?—My maſter is gone abroad about two months; there was a gentleman ſaid he would come, but I believe he is not come.

BOTH GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

3. GEORGE DUNSTAN was indicted for feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Elizabeth Bagſhaw, widow, ſhe being therein, about the hour of twelve at noon, on the 24th of November laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein nine pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 54s. and ten pair of ribbed cotton ſtockings, value 30s. her property.

ELIZABETH BAGSHAW *ſworn.

I live in North Audley-ſtreet, Groſvenor-ſquare; I keep a hoſier's ſhop, I was at home the 24th of November laſt, I was in my parlour behind my ſhop, my ſhop door was faſtened, I was juſt got in from the ſhop into the parlour, to ſit down by the fire; this was about twelve at noon; the door was on the latch, it was not locked, it is a whole door, a folding door.

Court. The whole door was latched?—Yes; I heard mention of the door being open, I immediately roſe up and went into the ſhop, and I ſaw the priſoner with two of my bundles of ſtockings in his hand, juſt taken off the window; they contained what is mentioned in the indictment.

Court. What may be the value of the ſtockings?——Three pounds: I immediately ran to the door, and another man attempted to hinder me from coming out; I ſaid you raſcal, and ran out, and cried out ſtop thief; the boy was ſtopped with the ſtockings.

JANE LOW *ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner come out of the ſhop with the two bundles in his hand; I was on the area ſteps, I was going down from the area ſteps, I ſwear to the boy, I ſaw him run away with the bundle.

Priſoner. I never was in the ſhop, a man gave them to me to carry.

THOMAS RANNS *ſworn.

I was coming along North Audley-ſtreet, and I heard this gentlewoman halloo out, ſtop thief! and I followed him, and I took him with the ſtockings.

(The ſtockings produced and depoſed to.)

THOMAS WATERS *ſworn.

I ſaw the boy when the ſtockings were upon the ground: he was taken in the paſſage; that was the bundle; here are two bundles.

—— BUTCHER ſworn.

I heard the proſecutrix had been robbed, I came out of my own ſhop, and went into her's, and the priſoner was taken to the watch-houſe, with the bundles; and from thence to the rotation-office; he was ſearched in the watch-houſe, theſe are the bundles; the bundles were opened at the watch-houſe, about twelve at noon.

Court to Boy. How old are you?—Almoſt fourteen; my father had ſent me out with ſome work to ſell, and as I was coming along home up this ſtreet, a young fellow was at the door, and he had on a ſtriped coat, and he called me on one ſide, and he aſked me to carry them to the public-houſe at the corner, and ſtop for him; I was going along, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief; I never was in the ſhop.

THOMAS APLETREE ſworn.

I have known the priſoner upwards of three or four years.

What is his father?——A child's pump maker; I never knew any thing diſhoneſt of the boy in my life, I would truſt him with untold gold; I have truſted him at houſes where I have been at work; I take him to be fourteen or fifteen.

HENRY STEEL ſworn.

I have known him about eight or nine years, I always took him to be as pretty a boy as ever went of an errand, he worked for me; his father is a ſhoe-maker.

MARTIN JONES ſworn.

I have known him from a child, I never knew him guilty of a diſhoneſt thing in my life; he worked with his father.

What is his father's character?—A very honeſt man; he has lived in the place now thirty years.

SARAH ROUND ſworn.

I know him to be a very honeſt lad, I have known him ſeven or eight years, I am a child's pump maker.

MARY WILSON ſworn.

I have known him about five years, I never heard anything againſt him.

ELIZABETH APLETREE ſworn.

I have known him ever ſince he has been in petticoats, I remember when he was chriſtened; I always knew him to be a very honeſt lad, and worked very hard, and his parents are honeſt too.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury, and the Judge added on account of his age, and as it appeared that he acted at the inſtigation of another perſon.

4. THOMAS SCRIVENER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d day of December laſt, one warrant for the payment of money, ſigned under the hand of Godſchall Johnſon, dated the 28th of November, 1785, value 10l. 3s. 1d. by which he did direct George Preſcott, Geo. William Preſcott, Andrew Grote, George Grote, William Culverden, and John Hollingſworth, by the name of Meſſrs. Preſcott and Co. to pay to Mrs. Martha Young or bearer 16l. 3s. 1d. the ſaid warrant being the property of the ſaid William, and the ſame ſum payable and ſecured by the ſaid warrant being then due and unſatiſfied.

A ſecond Count, For ſtealing the ſame thing, only calling it a bill for payment of money inſtead of a warrant.

WILLIAM YOUNG ſworn.

I live in Holborn, I am a butcher, I loſt the draft mentioned in the indictment, I had it on the 2d of December, it was left on the compting-houſe table, I have ſeen the the bill ſince, Mr. Preſcott has it now.

HENRY CLAYTON ſworn.

I live with Meſſrs. Preſcott and Co. I have a draft of Mr. Johnſon's, it was brought to me on Saturday the 3d of this month.

Did you take it in?—I paid it.

Who brought it?——A woman.

You do not know her I ſuppoſe?——I cannot ſwear to her.

The bill read and examined with the indictment, ſigned Godſchall Johnſon, 28th November, 1785:

"Meſſrs. Preſcotts, Grotes, Culverden,
"and Hollingſworth, pay Mrs. Martha
"Young or bearer, 16l. 3s. 1d.

Court to Proſecutor. Look at the draft, is that the draft you loſt?——Yes.

You have not received any money for it?—No.

SARAH YOUNG ſworn.

Court. Look at that note?——I know this is the draft I received from Mr. Godſchall Johnſon's houſekeeper, on the 28th of laſt month, I put it into my pocket book, it remained there till the 2d of this month, and then I put it out of my pocket, to make a payment with other bills, as I keep a butchers ſhop, and I omitted putting it up again, I believe I laid it on the compting houſe table, it was between three and four, the compting-houſe is a little place out of the ſhop, I miſſed it on the Monday, I thought I had put it into my pocket book again, and looking for it to make a payment, I miſſed it on Monday the 5th, I ſent for a conſtable to take up all my ſervants, I ſuſpected the priſoner becauſe he came in to the day book, which was in the compting-houſe, ſome money was found upon him.

EDWARD LUCAS ſworn.

On the 5th of this month, Mr. Young ſent for me, and ſaid he had been robbed. I went to apprehend the priſoner, and I took him going up to the gallery in Drury-lane, Play-houſe; I brought him back and told him that his maſter had charged me to take him into cuſtody, I took him up on the 5th of this month, about eight; I brought him back to Mr. Young's, and I went up ſtairs to look over his box, and in his box I found three pair of new ſhoes, two pair of new buckles and other things, and he told me if I would ſend up for his miſtreſs, he would tell her the whole buſineſs, Mrs. Young came up, I was preſent, and when ſhe came up he ſaid——

Court. Before you tell this did you adviſe him to ſend for his miſtreſs?—I told him, ſays I, young man, all the ſervants at preſent have their characters at ſtake, they will all be diſcharged, and it is a pity they ſhould if you have the draft, and it looks very ſuſpicious.

Was that all you ſaid?——It was, I called up his miſtreſs, that was Mrs. Young that is here, and he told her he hoped it would be a warning to her, for leaving her draughts and her money about, that he had taken the draught and got the caſh for it, that he had ſent one Mad Jack to receive the money, a coachman; I then went and took the man into cuſtody that went to receive the money, and a woman that went with him; here is a ſmall bit of paper, where is put down how he expended a great deal of the money that was after he was apprehended, and the remainder, he ſaid, he had loſt at gambling, I found 1l. 8s. 2d. upon him.

Court to Mrs. Young. When you was ſent for, what did you ſay to him to induce him to tell you the truth of the matter?—I did not aſk him any queſtions, I made him no promiſes, he owned he had taken the money, and ſaid he hoped it would be a warning to me.

Priſoner to Lucas. Did not you promiſe me that if I would confeſs having the draft I ſhould be forgiven and nothing ſaid againſt my character?

Lucas. No, my Lord, I do not recollect ever ſaying any thing of that ſort to him, I only told him that the reſt of the ſervants characters ſtood at ſtake, as nigh as I can recollect; I told him this, that it was a pity, if he had taken it, that the other people ſhould loſe their characters, that they would all be turned away; then ſaid call up my miſtreſs, call up my miſtreſs.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. You ſay that you do not recollect that you made him any promiſes, are you ſure?—Yes, I am ſore, any further than what I have told you.

THOMAS TIBBS ſworn.

I ſaw Lucas take the priſoner, I came with him and the priſoner to Mrs. Young.

Did you hear what paſſed up in the garret?—Yes.

Tell us what it was.—We went up ſtairs, Mrs. Young deſired us to go up ſtairs to ſee if he had anything in his box, and Mr. Lucas told him, ſays he, young man, it is a ſad piece of work if you know anything of it, it is a ſad thing the other ſervants ſhould loſe their places; but as for making any promiſes, I heard none, he ſeemed a good deal confuſed, and ſaid, call my miſtreſs, and ſhe came up; and he ſaid, Mrs. Young, I beg you will take care of your caſh and drafts in future.

Priſoner. Was not you by when Mr. Lucas promiſed me that?—I did not hear it.

Did not you hear him ſay, if any body came after my character, my miſtreſs would take no notice?—No.

Court to Proſecutor. Is your ſhop a part of your houſe?—Yes.

JOHN BUN ſworn.

The priſoner aſked me to go to the bankers for him, I went, and going along I met with that young woman, and I aſked her to go with me; ſhe was to have fifteen guineas and eight ſhillings and one penny, I did not know whoſe draft it was.

Whoſe houſe did you go to? —A banker's in Threadneedle-ſtreet, on the left hand.

ELIZABETH THORP ſworn.

I am acquainted with John Bun, I knew him a very little while; on Saturday coming along I met him, he ſaid he was going to the bankers to change a note, he aſked me to read it; ſays he, I thought it had been a bit of paper, he told me what it was, I came and told the young man, he ſaid it is not much further, I went with him to the bankers in Threadneedle-ſtreet.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I found the note on Saturday evening between three o'clock and five, on the ſhop board; my miſtreſs's name is Sarah Young; this note was made payable to Martha Young; I was not poſitive, therefore, that it was hers; they promiſed me if I would tell where it was, they would forgive me.

Court to Mrs. Young. How long has he lived with you?—About three or four months.

Court to Lucas. I put it again to you, the man's life is at ſtake, did any thing paſs between you that could induce him to make this diſcovery?—Nothing more than what I have already told you.

Priſoner. Mr. Tibbs was by and heard it ſaid.

Tibbs. I never heard any ſuch thing.

Court to Mrs. Young. Is William Young your huſband?—Yes, my ſecond huſband; I have lived in that houſe ſeventeen years.

Court to Clayton. Do you know Mr. Johnſon's hand-writing?—Yes.

Have you ſeen him write?—Yes.

Mrs. Young. I have taken many of his drafts, and ſtood by while he has wrote them; that is his hand-writing.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

4. THOMAS HARRIS and THOMAS LAYTON were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of November laſt, five ewe ſheep, value 50s. and one wether ſheep, value 10s. the property of William Ginger the elder.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.)

WILLIAM GINGER, Jun. ſworn.

I live at Stanwell with my father, I counted the ſheep on the 6th of November, in the field, there were nine ſcore and four, I did not count them again till the 13th, then there were ten miſſing, ſeven ewes and three wether ſheep.

Have you ſeen any of theſe ſheep ſince they were miſſing?—Yes, I found them on Clapham Common, in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Lane, on the 7th of December.

How many did you ſee?—Seven, ſix ewes and one wether.

Were theſe ſheep that you ſaw on Clapham Common your father's ſheep?—They were, I knew them by their make and features.

Had they any ruddle mark?—Very little.

What country were they?—Some from Hounſlow, and two from the weſt country.

Court. Let us know a little how long you have been acquainted with the features of theſe ſheep, how long have you had them?—I bred them all but two, I bred five of them.

Do you keep your father's ſheep?—I follow them at all opportunities I have.

And out of nine ſcore and odd that you have, you can ſpeak with certainty to the features of particular ſheep that you have loſt?—Yes.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

Are there no marks to have known them by if you had not known their faces?—No.

HENRY FLY GINGER ſworn.

You uſed to attend theſe ſheep of your father's?—Yes, there were nine ſcore and four; I did not count them till the 13th, I miſſed ten, there were ſix ewes, two wethers, and two lambs.

You miſſed theſe on the 13th?—Yes.

How ſoon after did you ſee any of theſe?—Not till the 7th or 8th of December, I think the 8th, I ſaw them near Clapham Common, in the poſſeſſion of George Lane.

Did you know theſe ſheep again?—Yes.

Were they your father's ſheep?—Yes.

How did you know them?—I knew them by their countenances, by following them and attending them ever ſince they were lambed.

You have a perfect acquaintance with their faces and make?—Yes.

Have you any doubt now of their being ſome of your father's?—I am poſitive that they are.

Could you have picked them out of a flock of ſtrangers?—I have been uſed to ſheep theſe twenty years.

The fact is, that you are ſo well acquainted with their faces that you can ſwear to them any where?——Yes.

Court. There is one thing that I have obſerved both you and the laſt witneſs have ſaid, that you did not miſs them till the 13th, till you counted your ſheep?—No.

Now, if you had ſo perfect an acquaintance with the faces of all the ſheep, I ſhould have thought you might have miſſed them without counting them; as if a number of men come to a place every day, you might miſs two or three without counting them?——We do not ſo ſtrictly look over them every day as that.

Now for inſtance, a captain of a company who ſees all his men every day and knows all their faces, will miſs four or five of his men without counting them?——I was not conſtantly with them every day.

Were you with them between the 6th and the 13th?——Yes I was, but it was towards the duſk of the evening, a lad that we have to aſſiſt was with them, a little lad, ſo that I did not ſee them much within that time.

Do you know either of the priſoners?—Yes.

Who was Layton, did he live in your neighbourhood?——No, about four or five miles off, he was a labouring man; Harris lived at Staines, that may be two miles or better, he was a ſhepherd, I believe they kept ſheep of their own.

WILLIAM GINGER, Sen. ſworn.

I ſaw theſe ſheep that my ſons brought from Lane, I knew them, we have had them ſo long and put them up, I am poſitive they were the ſame ſheep, ſome of them were four teeth and ſome ſix teeth, I knew them to be my own, I have no doubt but they were my own.

GEORGE LANE ſworn.

Where did you get theſe ſheep that this good man found in your poſſeſſion?——I bought them at a public fair at Kingſton, on the 14th of November, of Layton, I turned them upon the common, I gave eight ſhillings and ſixpence apiece for them, I bought ſeven, and gave three pounds for the lot, which was ſix-pence over, he ſaid he brought them from Sunbury Common.

Did he tell you whoſe property they were?——No, I did not aſk him, I told him where I was going to bring them to; I have no other ſheep.

Did you ever keep any ſheep before?——I never kept but two before, and them I loſt; I am no great judge of ſheep, I dare ſay a great many people may know them, and many may not.

Was Iſaac Burbidge with you when you bought them?——Yes, I believe I was an hour a buying them, they ſtood ſo much on price, I paid the money to Layton.

ISAAC BURBIDGE ſworn.

What are you?—I am a labouring man, I ſaw Lane at the fair, I ſaw him about them, he bought ſeven, ſix ewes and a wether.

Who did he buy them of?——Thomas Layton, I helped to drive them out of the fair, that was on the 14th of November.

How far is Kingſton from Stanwell?——About nine miles.

Did you ſee Harris there?——Yes.

What was he doing?——He was about the penns, I heard him ſay nothing.

Have you ſeen the ſheep ſince?——Yes, at Stretham Common, I believe they are the ſame that Mr. Lane bought at the fair.

Are you much uſed to ſheep?——Yes.

You are a ſhepherd?——Yes.

Can you ſwear to the faces of your flock that you have bred?——Yes.

Is there any difficulty in knowing them?——Yes.

You would know your own ſheep better than you would know my face to-morrow, would not you?——Yes.

Court. This was at a public fair?—Yes.

There were plenty of people about the penns as well as Harris?——Yes.

Court to Lane. What became of theſe ſheep you bought of Layton?—They are gone home to Mr. Ginger's, I gave the youngeſt ſon and Burbidge leave to take them home; they were the ſame.

PRISONER LAYTON'S DEFENCE.

I had ſheep to fair, and this gentleman, the other priſoner, aſked me if I had any ſheep to fair; I told him I had ſome few of my own, and he ſaid he had a few, and he aſked me to ſell them for him, which I did, and gave him the money; I have evidence of it.

SARAH BURBIDGE ſworn.

I was at the fair at the time they were ſold, and before they were ſold; when I went to the fair, my brother or Mr. Layton had juſt ſold our ſheep; and there came up a gentleman and aſked the price of theſe ſeven ſheep, and Layton told him nine ſhillings; and Thomas Harris ſtood oppoſite to him, and he beckoned to him, and aſked the price; and he aſked him what he muſt take for them, and Harris ſaid eight ſhillings; and if he could not get that, they muſt go home again.

Do you know where they brought the ſheep from?——No.

Did you ſee any ſheep of Layton's there before?—None but what was my brother's and huſband's, there were three, I fancy he ſold them for my brother, he has ſold my huſband's ſeveral times, he has ſold for Mr. Collins, and Mr. Ballinger, the two capital farmers.

Mr. Garrow. Iſaac is your brother-in-law?——Yes, the ſheep were in different pens hurdled off, I ſaw the ſheep at Juſtice

Taylor's, I do not know who took them, I cannot ſay whether they are the ſame I ſaw at the fair, my brother helped to drive them away, I thought I knew them again, I think they were the ſame by looking at them, as I have been about among them.

A man who had bred them and tended them would be more likely to know them again than you, would not he?—Very like, Harris aſked Layton what the gentleman bid, and he told him nothing, then Layton aſked Harris what was the price if he ſold them, and he ſaid if he could not get eight ſhillings apiece he was to go home again.

PRISONER HARRIS's DEFENCE.

I bought them of a man, and this man took them to the fair for me, I had them of a young man in the neighbourhood this day five weeks, I know him, he brought them to me to have to the fair, but I was ſo lame I could not go with the ſheep, ſo I got Layton to ſell them for me.

Who was the man you took them for?——One Robert Merrick, he lives at Stanwell, I do not know where he is, I had nobody to go for him, Merrick was in cuſtody of the officer and got away.

Was he taken up on your information?——Yes.

Proſecutor. Harris ſaid he never ſent any to Layton to ſell, nor he knew nothing about them.

How came this other man to be taken up?——This other man went to Layton when he was in the Round-houſe, and ſaid to Layton, for God's ſake do not ſay where the ſheep are gone to, with that I ſuſpected him, and a warrant was ſent for to take him up, but they could not find him, he is got off, Harris ſaid he had not them of that man, he ſaid he knew nothing of the ſheep.

HENRY HORNE ſworn.

I was preſent when Harris was examined, he ſaid he knew nothing of the job.

THOMAS HARRIS, GUILTY, Death.
THOMAS LAYTON, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

6. THOMAS SHIPLEY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 27th day of November laſt, twelve pair ſilk ſtockings, value 7l. 4s. one tortoiſe-ſhell ſnuff box, mounted in gold, value 5l. one baſe metal ink caſe, mounted with gold, value 40s. and one reading glaſs, in a tortoiſe-ſhell caſe, value 20s. the property of Richard Warren, Doctor of Phyſic, in his dwelling houſe.

Dr. RICHARD WARREN ſworn.

Thomas Shipley, the priſoner at the bar, was formerly a ſervant of mine, he ſerved me in the capacity of footman, and after living with me, two years and twenty days, was diſmiſſed in the month of May, 1784, a little more than a year and a half ago; he was diſmiſſed for a fault, he went out in the evening and ſtaid till two in the morning, got over the iron rails, went into the area and rapped at the window where two ſervants lay, and was let in, when I was informed of this in the morning, I inſtantly ordered him to be diſmiſſed, and I never ſaw him after till I ſaw him a priſoner in Bow-ſtreet; during about five months in the year my family is abſent from Sackville-ſtreet, at a houſe I have at Chelſea, from which I came to town every day; during this time the houſe is under the care of a man and maid ſervant, who lay in the houſe, the man and maid are Henry Bradford and Anne Stockdale; on the 28th of November, in the evening, Mr. Atkins, an attendant at Sir Sampſon Wright's office, called upon me, and informed me that I had been robbed; and produced at the ſame time certain things which upon looking at, I ſuppoſed were my property, he produced one pair of ſilk ſtockings, a gold ink caſe beaten to pieces, and ſeveral things which I ſuppoſed to be mine, which are in Court; and at the ſame time produced two keys which he informed me, he had been informed by the priſoner would open my bureau, I tried the keys, and found they opened the locks, I then ſearched, and found I had loſt ſeveral things; I loſt twelve pair of new ſilk ſtockings, at 12s. a pair, a tortoiſe-ſhell ſnuff box, mounted in gold, they were in different drawers, of the value of five pounds; a baſe metal ink caſe, mounted in gold, a large reading glaſs, tortoiſe-ſhell caſe; I went directly to Sir Sampſon Wright's and gave my evidence.

Court. Priſoner, would you aſk Dr. Warren any queſtions?——No, my Lord.

JOHN ATKINS ſworn.

I am a keeper that attends Sir Sampſon Wright's, on Monday the 28th of November, Mr. Heather, a pawnbroker in Long-acre, ſent his ſervant down to the office in Bow-ſtreet for ſomebody to come up, for he had ſtopped a perſon, I went up to Mr. Heather's, and the priſoner was there in cuſtody of Mr. Heather and ſervants.

I am a pawnbroker in Long-acre.

Did you know the priſoner at the bar before he came to you this time?——No, my Lord, on the 28th of November, between five and ſix in the evening, he brought me four pair of ſilk ſtockings to pledge for two guineas, I aſked him whoſe property they were, he ſaid they were his own, I aſked him his name, he ſaid his name was Richard Woolley, the ſtockings were marked R. W. and No. 21, 22, 23, and 24.

Did he offer any thing elſe?——No, I aſked him how he came by them, he ſeemed very angry at my aſking the queſtion, and ſaid have you any ſuſpicion of me; I ſtopped him, and ſent down to Bow-ſtreet, I was very bad of the gout, and he knew I had ſent to Bow-ſtreet, and before the conſtable came he ran away, ſays he I cannot ſtay, I will go and fetch the owner of the ſtockings, a young lad an apprentice of mine, fifteen years of age, whoſe name is Thomas Lewis, ran after him and brought him back, and in about two or three minutes Atkins came back when the boy brought the priſoner back, I called another ſervant of mine into the ſhop, ſo that he could not get away, I never ſaw the priſoner before in my life to my knowledge; Atkins took the priſoner to Bow-ſtreet.

Did you receive the ſtockings from the priſoner, or was it one of your men?——When he firſt came into the ſhop I was in the parlour very bad with the gout, but I went into the ſhop and received the four pair from the priſoner, and this I am ſure is one of them, here are the other three pair, they have been in my houſe ever ſince, my ſervant produces them, he had them in his cuſtody.

Doctor Warren. I ordered two dozen, the firſt was marked 1, 2, 3, &c. the ſecond dozen was 13, 14, and ſo on; and not being wanted they were put into the drawer.

Court to John Atkins. After you had taken him with theſe ſtockings, at Mr. Heather's, you carried him to Bow-ſtreet, what happened then?—I ſearched him immediately, in Mr. Heather's ſhop, and in his pocket I found this letter, directed to Dr. Warren, that led me to ſuſpect he had robbed the Doctor; the other perſon that was with me took him down to the office, Mr. Heather deſired me to go to the Doctor's; on ſearching him I found this reading glaſs, this ink-ſtand, and two keys; the things were in different pockets.

Doctor Warren. Such a reading glaſs as this I certainly had, it had no particular mark upon it.

Do you think it to be your's?—I ſhould ſuppoſe it is.

Had you it frequently in uſe?——No, it lay in a drawer, it was bought a year or two ago for one of my ſons, for ſome optical experiments; this was an ink-caſe, made to hold two pens, and very curiouſly contrived to hold ink; here was a thing went with a hinge, and the bottom part is particularly made; inſtead of a cork for the ink; here is a piece of metal ſo contrived that you need not daub your fingers; theſe are ſuch particulars that I can ſwear it is mine; I can ſwear poſitively to this; this

I

I uſed to carry about with me continually, but went out of town the Saturday preceding the detection of this robbery a conſiderable journey from town; and not wanting it I left it a home.

What is the value of that?—Ten ſhillings, he ſold the gold of it for half a guinea.

Atkins. Here are two keys.

Doctor Warren. Mr. Atkins informed me theſe keys would open my drawers; I thought they would, I applied them to the locks, and found they opened the drawers; one opened the bureau, and the other the library; the ſtockings were in the bureau.

Where was this ink-caſe?—I left it laying upon the table.

You had not miſſed this till Mr. Atkins told you?——I had not been come home from this journey above ten minutes.

Atkins. I found three duplicates upon him, which led me to three pawnbrokers, where I found the ſilk ſtockings; I firſt went to Mr. Prieſtman, in Princes-ſtreet; I found two more pawned at Mr. Brown's, all white ſilk, but numbered differently; I retured to Bow-ſtreet, and when I came back to Bow-ſtreet the priſoner was crying, I told him the Doctor had miſſed a gold box, he told me he ſold it at a refiner's, in Long-acre, but he did not rightly know the place.

Did you make him any promiſes?——Nothing at all, he told me voluntarily; I found out where it was ſold, at Mr. Plank's, refiner, in Long-acre.

Priſoner. I am guilty of what is laid to my charge, I was very much diſtreſſed at the time, and only beg for mercy, I had been out of place a long time.

ISAAC COVERFLOW ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Plank, a gold-refiner, I know the priſoner, the firſt time I ever ſaw him was the 28th of November, about four in the afternoon, he came into our ſhop, and aſked me if I bought gold, I told him yes, he then pulled out ſome gold in a paper out of his pocket, which is a thin ſtuff; I looked at it, I took a piece out of the paper, and rubbed it on the touchſtone, to try whether it was gold, as it was rather a foggy afternoon, the priſoner replied to me as I was rubbing it on the touchſtone, I am ſure it is gold, for I have tried it in aquafortis.

I ſhould have thought this would have made you ſuſpect him?—I thought he was in the buſineſs; after which he ſays to me as I was trying the other, ſays he, I ſhould be glad if you will try this bit alſo, it looks like gold, I have had it ſome time by me; I tried that, and I told him that was gold; then I replied to him is this your own property, and did you come honeſtly by it? he ſaid it was his own property, and he came honeſtly by it; before I weighed it, I ſaid you are ſure you come honeſtly by it; I was very ſuſpicious from the circumſtances of theſe pieces; I aſked him, more than that, what it came from, and he told me it came from an old ivory ſnuff-box, after which he ſaid to me, pray what may be the value of that which came off the bottom of the ink-ſtand, I put it into the ſcale, and told him about five ſhillings or five and ſix-pence, it altogether weighed about nineteen pennyweights and eighteen grains, the value of all together was two pound fifteen; after which I told him what it came to, he told me is not it worth any more, I ſaid if you think you can make any more of it try it ſomewhere elſe, after which he ſaid, Sir, I ſuppoſe you will give me as much as it is worth, and you may have it, and I paid him two pound fifteen for it.

Dr. Warren. This bottom of the inkſtand fits exactly, theſe other pieces are part of the ornaments.

Court. I believe I need not trouble you priſoner, to aſk you whether you would aſk any queſtions of this man?——No, my Lord.

——— PRIESTMAN ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker in Princes-ſtreet, Soho, I remember the priſoner coming with ſome ſtockings to pawn, the 28th of October, he left two pair, and the 28th of November four pair, they were marked R. W. and ſome numbers, I am ſure it was the priſoner.

What may be the value of theſe ſtockings?—About nine ſhillings a pair, I remember now, he offered to me to ſell them at nine ſhillings a pair.

CHRISTOPHER GATELY ſworn.

I am foreman and journeyman to Bicknell and Co. the Doctor bought ſtockings of us, he had two dozen delivered at different times, the four laſt pair were delivered June the 4th; from May the 5th, to June the 2d, fourteen pair; they were marked with our ſhop mark (looks at the pair marked by Heather) this is our ſhop mark, theſe are all our ſhop marks, this is R. W. on the welt, and the figure of the No. under it, they were marked by my wife, I know they were marked before they were delivered.

What do you charge Dr. Warren for theſe?——Fifteen ſhillings a pair, there is never a hoſier in London, that can charge a reaſonabler profit for leſs.

ROBERT PAYNE ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Brown in the Strand, I never ſaw the priſoner before he pledged theſe ſtockings which was the 28th of November, at the duſk of the evening, he pawned two pair, I am ſure it was the priſoner, it was between four and five in the evening.

Gately. Thoſe are ours.

ANN STOCKDALE ſworn.

The priſoner is an acquaintance of mine, I lived fellow ſervant with him for two years with Dr. Warren, me and another ſervant named Henry Bradford, were left in care of the the Doctor's houſe, during the time we were in the houſe; the priſoner frequently called, I ſaw him on the 27th of November.

Court. Had he admiſſion into your maſter's rooms?—I always thought him ſtrictly honeſt, he laid a good deal out of place and I had compaſſion upon him, and gave him a bit of any thing I had, when I was upon board wages.

Had he acceſs to any room in the houſe?—Not that I know of, I knew nothing of any of the things being loſt.

Did this young man ever lay at the houſe?—Yes, he did.

GUILTY, Death.

7. BENJAMIN ROGERS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of James Hazledine, about the hour of ſix in the night, on the third day of December, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein twelve linen bed gowns, value 20s. his property.

JAMES HAZLEDINE ſworn.

I live oppoſite St. Clement's church, I keep a child-bed warehouſe, I keep a houſe there, and did ſo on the third of December laſt; about half paſt five, on Saturday the 3d of this month, the candles were lighted, and as we were drinking tea, I thought I heard the ſhop door open, I deſired my ſiſter-in-law, Hannah Davis, to ſee if the ſhop door was not opened, ſhe went three or four paces into the ſhop, and then I heard her cry ſtop thief, I went into the ſhop, and out into the ſtreet and over to the church-yard, there I ſaw the priſoner running, nobody was running but him, he was running directly oppoſite our door.

Court. Were the lamps lighted?—Yes, I called ſtop thief, and he cried ſtop thief! I took him oppoſite to St. Clement's Coffeehouſe, he run round the church, I was quick after him, I never loſt ſight of him, I brought him back, and aſked my ſiſter if the priſoner was the perſon that took the things, ſhe ſaid, he was; the neighbours gathered about me, and they knew him, I ſound nothing upon him.

Was your door ſhut ?——It was, I had been in the ſhop juſt before that to ſnuff the candles.

Did you go to your door at that time ?—I did, to ſee if it was ſafe.

What induced you to do that ?—— We generally make a point of doing that when we are at meals.

How long was this after ?——I ſuppoſe, about ten minutes.

Can you ſay with certainty that from the time you ſnuffed the candles, and ſaw the door to the time your ſiſter went into the ſhop, no perſon had been out of that door ?——Yes, I can.

Are you ſhure that no perſon had been into the ſhop ?——I am ſure of it.

How did you examine the door at this time ?——By ſeeing that the latch was ſafe, and the door was faſt.

Did you put your hand on the latch ?—Yes, I ſpeak upon certain recollection.

There was no faſtening but the latch ?—No; I took out my watch while I had the priſoner in the ſhop, and it was thirty five minutes paſt five; then he had been in the houſe about five minutes.

When you were out in the ſtreet, could you diſtinguiſh people at all, except by the light of the lamps ?——No, day-light was too far paſt.

You have no doubt about the boy's perſon ?——No, the priſoner is the perſon I brought back.

HANNAH DAVIS ſworn.

I am ſiſter-in-law to Mr. Hazledine, about half paſt five in the evening, it was thereabouts, I cannot ſay to five minutes, we were at tea in the back parlour, the candles were lighted, my brother ſaid he heard the door open, and deſired me to look into the ſhop, the door was open, and I ſaw the priſoner come into the ſhop, put his hand in the window, and take out two bundles of bedgowns.

Did he come completely into the ſhop ?——Yes, the bedgowns lay in the corner of the window, I ſaw them there half an hour before.

What may be the value of them ?——Twenty ſhillings.

Had they any mark upon them ?——Yes.

What mark ? —— They were marked with the ſhop mark.

Are you ſure you ſaw him take them ?—Yes, I was rather in the ſhop.

Did you ſay anything to him ?——No, nothing at all.

Were there any candles in the ſhop ?——Yes, there were ten candles in all, I ſaw his face, as ſoon as he was gone out of the ſhop, I called out ſtop thief.

Did you purſue him ?—No.

Did you ever find your property again ? A woman in the alms-houſes picked them up as they lay in the ſtreet, ſhe is not here, I ſaw him take them up from the window, he put his hands acroſs a wire into the window, and took them up, he was brought back in about five or ten minutes after.

When he was brought back to the ſhop, did you ſee him ?—Yes.

Are you ſure that the boy that was brought back to the ſhop, was the boy you ſaw in the ſhop ?—Yes.

Have you no doubt ?——Not the leaſt doubt, becauſe I ſaw his face, my brother ran after him immediately, I ſaw the property about ten minutes after; the woman that brought in the property did not ſee him drop them, and ſhe is a very elderly woman; I examined the property that was brought in, they are my brother's with the ſhop mark.

Priſoner. Did you ſee me open the door ?——No, I did not, he was juſt coming into the ſhop, he was partly in the ſhop with the door open.

Court. Do you know who went laſt out of the ſhop, before your brother went out ?—I do not.

Do you recollect your brother going to ſnuff the candles ?—Yes.

Had any body been in the ſhop after he ſnuffed the candles ?—I do not know.

MATTHEW SWIFT ſworn.

I am the conſtable that took him to the Juſtice's, the priſoner kicked and beat and fought and knocked one man down, and tried to knock me down, but I was too heavy for him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had been at Charing Croſs, with my father, he is a coachman, we had been with a fare into Fleet-ſtreet; I went back to him with his coach, he ſaid, you may go home, I was coming along the Strand by this gentleman's ſhop, when the woman was out at the door, and I ſaw two people run in the church yard; I run after them and cried ſtop thief! they turned the corner rather before I ſaw them, and the proſecutor came up and caught hold of me, and ſaid, as there is nobody elſe a running, you muſt certainly be the perſon; I have no witneſſes, my father has been here every day, and he did not expect I ſhould be tried to day, and he went away.

GUILTY, Death.

Proſecutor. I wiſh to recommend the priſoner to mercy.

8. CHARLES KING and THOMAS THOMPSON were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Packer, about the hour of three in the night on the 3d of December, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein two live fowls, value 4s. one gridiron, value 9d. five clouts, value 5d. one diſh-clout, value 1d. and one iron glue-pot, value 6d. the property of William Smith.

REBECCA SMITH ſworn.

I keep a little houſe of Mr. William Packer's, I went to bed about ten, I faſtened up the out-houſe between four and five, it is a waſh-houſe adjoining the back part of the dwelling-houſe.

Is there any door from the dwelling-houſe into it?—No, it opens into the yard.

How does the door faſten?—With a lock, I locked it on the outſide, and the windows were faſt, the next morning I got up about ſeven, and found the waſh-houſe door broke open, and the two fowls gone.

Did you go out that night after you faſtened the out-houſe?—Yes, I went out into the yard between ſeven and eight, and every thing was ſafe then, and the door ſhut, I got up next morning about ſeven, it was daylight then, I miſſed the two fowls, they had been there the night before; in the courſe of the day I miſſed the other things mentioned in the indictment.

About four o'clock on Sunday morning, the 4th inſtant, I heard one of the fowls make a noiſe, I got out of bed and went to the ſtair-caſe window, but I ſaw nobody. On Monday night I heard the men were taken on the morning before, and I went to St. Giles's watch-houſe on the Tueſday morning, and there I found the bag and the things mentioned in the indictment.

Were the two priſoners there?—No. (The glue-pot produced, and depoſed to.) I have had this nine or ten years, I had deſired my wife to put ſome water in it to clean it, and when I ſaw it at the watch-houſe, ſome of the water was in it, and the glue was turned into ſize, I know the pot, it is rather melted at the bottom.

Can you undertake poſitively to ſwear to it?——I can.

Should you have known it anywhere?——I ſhould; the other things I will not ſwear to.

THOMAS YOUNG ſworn.

I am a ſhoe-maker, between ſix and ſeven on the 4th of December, on Sunday morning, I was going through Bedford-ſquare with two watchmen, Philip Welch and John Bell, and we met the two priſoners with two bundles in Bedford ſquare, with grates, pokers, ſhovels, tongs, and other things, cups, ſaucers, and plates, and diſhes, I aſked them where they were going, it was hardly daylight, it was between ſix and ſeven.

Was it or was it not daylight?—Daylight was coming on very faſt.

Was it dawn of day?—Yes, they were before us, and we run after them, they did not run away from us, we aſked them what they had got, they appeared rather ſtruck, Thompſon, in about a minute, ſaid he came from Hampſtead, I aſked him where he got theſe things, and he ſaid his brother gave him them who lived at Hampſtead, I told him he muſt go to the round-houſe, I took him there as it was after watch hours, I ſearched them and took the bags, in Thompſon's bag I found the glue-pot, the gridiron, the five linen clouts, a diſh-clout, and the dead fowl, in the other bag I found the grate and the other things that are not ſworn to, and in King's apron I found the live fowl that is now produced here, and the window curtain, with other things.

What did they ſay for themſelves afterwards?—They ſaid they found the things.

PHILIP WELCH ſworn.

I was with the laſt witneſs, and what he has ſaid is true.

JOHN BELL ſworn.

I ſaw theſe things found on the priſoners about half an hour after ſix, it was not daylight.

PRISONER THOMPSON'S DEFENCE.

On Sunday morning between five and ſix we were going up to Highgate to call for a friend there, and between this and Mother Redcap's, in the fields, we ſaw this bag laying, we opened the bag and ſaw what was in it, and we ſtaid a bit by it, and nobody claimed it, and we returned home with the things, and were ſtopped.

Mrs. Smith. I can ſwear to the clouts, I made them myſelf out of ſome old ſhirts, and the gridiron I know; I know the fowl becauſe the left wing was cut, and it had a cropper crown.

PRISONER's KING's DEFENCE.

We found the things in a ditch.

The priſoner King called one witneſs to his character.

BOTH GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

9. JOHN BATEMAN and ABRAHAM BOYCE were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Richard Babington, on the 12th day of December, about the hour of ſix at night, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one linen ſhirt, value 2s. and one handkerchief, value 2d. his property.

I live in Ratcliff-row, on Monday night laſt I went out about five, I locked the door and took the key in my pocket, I was drinking a pint of beer about twelve minutes after ſix, and ſome neighbours informed me that the houſe was broke open, the neighbours accordingly went and found people in the houſe, when I got to my houſe I found the door open, and the back door open, and ſome of the neighbours in the yard, and a ſhirt and handkerchief were ſcattered about the floor in the middle of the room, the ſhirt was removed out of a box that ſtood at my bed's feet, below ſtairs; mine is an alms-houſe, the priſoners were both taken, I ſaw the priſoner Bateman behind the door in the houſe, Boyce was gone down the yard, I did not ſee him till he was brought back, I locked my door and the key was in my pocket, nobody lives in my houſe but myſelf.

Mr. Garrow, Counſel for Priſoner Bateman. How long have you had this houſe?—Seven years, the bolt of the lock was bent quite double, it was faſt when I went out.

Did you ſearch this poor boy?—No, but nothing was found upon him.

ISAAC SAMMES ſworn.

I was at this public houſe, and heard the proſecutor's houſe was broke open, I immediately with ſome others went over, there were three before me, I believe, and the old gentleman, I juſt ſet my foot on the ſtep, I looked before me, the back door was open, and I went to go backwards to ſee for them, ſuppoſing they were there, and I went to put the door to; and when I went backwards, there ſtood that young man, there was nothing found upon the priſoner Bateman.

WILLIAM PEACH ſworn.

I believe I was the firſt man that got there, the door was rather ſhut, and I puſhed it open, I ſaw the priſoner Boyce in the houſe, there was a little light of the fire, he was rather undetermined which way to go, he went to the back door, and I followed him into a little garden, that belongs to the proſecutor's apartment, and there he ſtood, and there I ſtood, and I ſaid to Thompſon, here is one, he made no reply he rather ſidled to the wall, he was going to get over the wall, I knew he could not get out there, he got over the wall, and I got over after him, then Thompſon followed me, and I run up to him, and he ſtood ſtill, and we took him in the peſt-ground, then we brought him back, ſays Thompſon, will you take hold of him, and I will ſee if there is another; I took hold of him, and ſaid, how could you be ſo cruel to break open that poor man's houſe? and he ſaid he did not, and I ſaid yes, upon my oath you did, for I ſaw you.

JOSEPH THOMPSON ſworn.

I went over this wall into the burial ground, and there I ſaw one of the priſoners, Boyce, I did not ſee him, till I got over the wall.

PRISONER BOYCE's DEFENCE.

I was going up to Iſlington, as I was coming by, theſe men were coming from the public houſe, and they ſaid, we will have the raſcals, we will have them; and I run along with them, and I ſaw a man go into the garden, I jumped over the wall after him, then they came and took me and brought me out of the ground, and they took and ſearched me, and found nothing.

Thompſon. I was the firſt in the houſe.

PRISONER BATEMAN's DEFENCE.

I went in there, a man ſaid he would give me ſome halfpence to carry a bundle, I went in and he ſhut the door.

Who called you in?——A tall man, he ran backwards.

The priſoner Bateman called three witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

The priſoner Boyce called three witneſſes who gave him a good character.

JOHN BATEMAN, GUILTY Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury and Proſecutor.

ABRAHAM BOYCE, GUILTY Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

10. WILLIAM SIMON BOWYER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th day of November laſt, one linen table-cloth, value 8s. one linen napkin, value 2s. the property of Naſh Maſon, Eſq; and two pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 20s. and three linen handkerchiefs, value 6s. the property of Thomas Sotherly, Eſq.

MARY VAUX ſworn.

I live at Mr. Maſon's, three pair of ſtockings were taken away, between the 19th of October and the 2d of November, they were taken from a drawer out of a room belonging to Mr. [illegible] house, in Queen's square; I have seen the stockings since they were stolen, they were Captain Sotherly's stockings; I have seen one pair after they were stolen at the pawnbroker's, and the other pair in possession of the constable.

—Do you know any thing of the prisoner? [illegible] the husband of a cook that lived in the family.

—Had he access to the house; have you seen him about the house?——I have.

Had you seen him about that time?——No.

Was you in town or out of town?—In town; I have one pair of stockings here; I do not know that the prisoner of my own knowledge took the stockings. (Looks at them.) I believe them to be Captain Sotherly's, to the best of my knowledge; the table cloth was my master's, here is the mark upon it, there are half a dozen of the same, I have it in my possession now, it was left in the housekeeper's room, which is my room; I do not recollect the day upon which it was left, I found this table cloth at the pawnbroker's.

ANN HOLMES ſworn.

Theſe ſtockings are Captain Sotherly's, I marked them myſelf for the Captain, and put them in a drawer in the houſekeeper's room in the evening; and the next morning miſſed them, on Wedneſday morning, the 2d of November; his name is Captain Thomas Sotherly, Eſq;

——— BARCLAY ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, ſervant to Mr. Dobey, in Holborn; this table-cloth was pledged for five ſhillings, about the 4th of November, by the priſoner, I am certain it was the priſoner, I did not know him before, I never ſaw him but that time.

How long was he in your ſhop?——He was there at two different times.

Was he dreſſed as he is now?—I think he was in the ſame clothes.

And you mean to ſpeak poſitively to him?——Yes, that is the man, he ſaid they were his own property, and he told me he lived in No. [illegible], in [illegible] ſtreet, he gave the the name of William Bowyer; about a week after he brought these ſtockings, and pawned them [illegible] things.

WILLIAM BLACKETTER ſworn.

I took up the priſoner on the [illegible] of November, in Southampton-court, at a public house, I ſearched him and found the duplicates of the table cloths and ſtockings, and I found a pair of ſtockings and three handkerchiefs inſide his breeches pocket [illegible].

(Theſe ſtockings and handkerchiefs produced and depoſed to by Mrs. Holmes as the property of Captain Sotherly.)

Mrs. Holmes. One of the handkerchiefs has the Captain's name, Sotherly, at full length upon it, but I did not mark that.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay.

GUILTY.

Transported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

11. RICHARD COLE otherwiſe ALLEN was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Todd, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 17th day of November laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, two ſilver tea-ſpoons, value 5s. three table cloths, value 20s. one diaper ditto, value 6s. one damaſk napkin, value 3s. three damaſk napkins, value 9s. one white Marſeilles petticoat flounced with muſlin, value 20s. two pair of white ſilk ſtockings, value 20s. one ſilk handkerchief, value 1s. and one linen cloth bag, value 6d. his property.

JOHN TODD ſworn.

On the 13th of November, on a Sunday, about two o'clock, I left the houſe, and double locked the door, I did not return till ten in the evening; I looked the door laſt, and I found a neighbour of mine at the door when I returned; I went in, and miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment, there were many table cloths of other people's property, which were put into that houſe under my care; I am a ſmith, and my wife keeps a mangle.

ELIZABETH TODD ſworn.

I live at No. 38, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, I keep a mangle, I came home about ten with my huſband, and was informed the door was found open.

Was any part of the houſe broke open? ——No, the lock was picked, and when I entered into the place, I miſſed the things in the indictment, and many more, they are produced by Edward Lucas.

EDWARD LUCAS ſworn.

I ſtopped the priſoner on Sunday night, the 13th of November, at the end of St. John's-ſtreet, near Smithfield with this bag and things, I ſuſpected another man that was with him; and he ran away, he had ſomething under his coat, the next was very nigh to him, I caught one, that was this priſoner; he had a large bundle under his arm, wrapped up in a ſilk handkerchief; I aſked him what he had, he ſaid, wearing apparel, clothes for himſelf, and he was going to carry them home to his lodging; I felt them, and I thought they felt heavy, I ſaid, I ſhall be glad to look at them, and aſked him who he was, and where he came from; he ſaid his name was Allen, and he lived in King's-ſtreet, Bloomſbury; and he was Allen's ſon the Bricklayer, who lived in that ſtreet, I ſaid, I know Mr. Allen very well; I took him to the Roſe-Inn, Smithfield, there I opened the handkerchief, and found it to contain theſe things. (Produced, and depoſed to.) I aſked him how he came to tell me they were clothes; then he ſaid he had been to fetch them from the mangler's, I aſked him if he had anything elſe in his pocket, he ſaid no, I ſearched him, and found two ſilver tea ſpoons in his pocket.

(The ſpoons depoſed to.)

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. Theſe tea ſpoons and the handkerchief are your property?—Yes.

Whoſe property are the other things?—Peoples that are here preſent, none are mine but the handkerchief and the tea ſpoons.

They were entirely under your care?—Entirely.

—Which of you went out laſt on the evening of this robbery?——I went out laſt, pretty near two o'clock in the afternoon, and was not at home till pretty near ten.

—And was not your wife?—No.

Was the houſe left entirely?—It was left entirely, only ſome lodgers up ſtairs.

Court. What may be the value of theſe things, what would you give for all theſe things?—About five pounds, as they are now.

JOHN ARNOLD ſworn.

About ſeven in this evening, I found the door of Mr. Todd's houſe open, and knowing them to be out, and my back window looking into their yard, I called aſſiſtance; a lodger came down, we went in and ſearched the houſe, we found nobody there, the lock was not damaged, and we ſhut the door on the ſpring, and left it.

Mr. Garrow. The lock was not broke?—Yes.

Whether it was picked or opened with a key that belonged to it, you cannot tell?—Yes, I ſaw it about ſeven.

GEORGE MECHAM ſworn.

I was with Lucas, and took the priſoner, I know no more than he did.

SARAH HEARTY ſworn.

My huſband's name is Benjamin, I know the priſoner, he has lodged in my houſe nine months, he is a plaiſterer, he is a very ſober honeſt young man, always kept very good hours, except the Sunday night he was taken, he never was out all day that

Sunday, till paſt eight at night, on the day he was taken, in November, I was at home the whole day, I am ſure he was not out, it had juſt ſtruck eight when he came down ſtairs, I heard St. Bride's clock ſtrike, I did not hear he was taken till paſt ten that night; when I heard he was taken up, I ſat myſelf to recollect what time he went out, and at ſeven I went to put my children to bed, and I ſaw him in his room; my huſband is ill, and incapable of coming.

Court. What day of the month was this?—I cannot really ſay, I did not take notice about that.

Where was he that morning?——He was up ſtairs, he was at home and at dinner, and he was at home all the afternoon; I ſaw him at ſix at night, and a little after eight.

Was he in bed?——No.

Who was with him?——There was his wife, and a woman that he has to attend his wife, that was Mary Conolly.

MARY CONOLLY ſworn.

I was a nurſe to this young man's wife, I remember the night he was taken up for theſe things, it was four weeks laſt Sunday night, I cannot ſay particularly to the time that he went out, but St. Bride's and St. Paul's had ſtruck eight; we heard of his being taken up about ten; I immediately recollected that he had not been gone out till paſt eight; Mr. Hearty is an ailing man, and very ſhort breathed; he has the gout, and has not been able to ſtir out this three weeks.

MICHAEL ALLEN ſworn.

I am a bricklayer and plaiſterer, the priſoner has worked for me till he was taken up, pretty nigh three months, on the Saturday night I gave him a guinea for his wages.

Court. What ſort of character does he bear?—A very good one, he is a very hard working young man, nor never was he known to go drink; as ſober, honeſt a young fellow, as ever was living on this earth.

Court to Lucas. Did he tell you he was Mr. Allen's ſon?—Yes.

Allen. I live in King's-ſtreet, Bloomſbury, when a man comes to work with us, we give him a nick name, and we called him Allen, by that I apprehend he preſumed to take my name, he is a very conſtant good workman.

Mrs. HUTCHINS ſworn.

I have known him about a year and a half, he was very good while he was with me, he lodged with me, and was an honeſt ſober man, and kept regular hours.

——— WELCH ſworn.

I work with Mr. Allen.

What is the name of the young man at the bar?—His name is Dick.

What is his nick name?——Allen; I cannot ſay how long he worked with my maſter, he is a ſober, honeſt, induſtrious young fellow.

JOHN PENDERGRAST ſworn.

I have known him about ſix weeks before he was taken, I knew nothing but what was good; I worked with him at Mr. Allen's, the men called him Allen ſometimes.

Court. Two of the witneſſes have ſworn to his not going out, till St. Bride's clock had ſtruck eight, and I am informed by an Alderman that ſits here, that St. Bride's has no clock.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

On Sunday night, I went out of my houſe a little after eight, and as ſoon as I came into St. John's-ſtreet, theſe two men were in purſuit of a man, and when they took hold of me, they aſked me what I had in the bundle, and I told them I did not know.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s. but not of the burglary.

Fined 1s. and impriſoned twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.]

12. WILLIAM WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 20th of November laſt, ſix plate coach glaſſes, value [illegible] the property of Daniel [illegible].

I am a groom, I look after the proſecutor's cattle, I receive money and pay bills for him; theſe ſix glaſſes were taken, four out of one chariot and two out of another chariot, which is Doctor Anderſon's, the proſecutor pays for them, the frames were left behind, I found them two days after at the conſtable's of the night, in Queen-ſtreet, I tried them with the frames and they fitted very well.

JEREMIAH BRAY ſworn.

I am a harneſs maker, I went with the proſecutor and tried the glaſſes, and they fitted; theſe glaſſes were in the chariots on Saturday, I ſaw every carriage in the range of coach-houſes, the glaſſes to the front were up, and I ſaw nothing project out.

PHILIP WELCH ſworn.

I ſtopped the priſoner, with ſix glaſſes, the 26th of laſt month, before twelve at night, in Holborn, they were not in frames, they were under his arm without the frames, he paſſed by me, and I looked at him and called him, he made me no anſwer, ſo I followed him and aſked him what he had, he ſaid glaſſes, he brought them from the grinders in Newtoner's-lane, he ſaid he was going to his maſter's, I aſked who was his maſter, and he refuſed to tell me, I aſked him his own name, and he refuſed to tell me; ſomebody paſſed by and looked at the glaſſes and ſaid they were old, and the priſoner ſaid what has that gentleman to do with it, nothing ſays I; and he aſked me if I would have a glaſs of gin, I ſaw no watchman, and I thought he would break them, ſo I ſaid I do not care if I do, ſo I took him into Feather's-court, and there was a watchman, and when he ſaw the lanthorn he would go no further, he offered me ſix-pence, and bid me ſpend it as I choſe, I called the watchman to my aſſiſtance, and I took care of the glaſſes.

SAMUEL SMITH ſworn.

I am watchman in Featherſtone buildings, the laſt witneſs and the priſoner came together, the witneſs called out Smith, and I took the priſoner into cuſtody with the glaſſes. The priſoner gave the glaſſes very quietly, and I took care of the glaſſes; he fell down and I fell down, he got up and ran down Featherſtone-buildings, I ran after him and he was taken, the priſoner ſaid the thief was gone down Feather's-court; the priſoner is the ſame man I had firſt in cuſtody with the glaſſes.

THOMAS WELCH ſworn.

I am the other watchman, I took him.

WILLIAM LOWE ſworn.

I am conſtable of the night, I know nothing more, I have had the glaſſes ever ſince.

(The glaſſes produced and depoſed to by Mr. Pickering.)

Mr. Bray. You may look about ten pounds worth before you find ſix fit as theſe do.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I kicked againſt the glaſſes and broke off one of the corners, and was taken with them, I told the watchman that I found them in Newtoner's-lane; they threw me down and beat me very much becauſe I ran away to ſave the blows.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

13. JOHN alias JAMES MURRAY was indicted for that he, well knowing that one William Lindſay deceaſed, had ſerved our Lord the King, as a ſeaman on board his majeſty's ſhip the Burford, and that certain wages and pay were due to him at the time of his death for ſuch ſervice done by him on board the ſaid ſhip, did appear before Doctor Ducarel, then ſurrogate of the worſhipful Peter Calvert, L. L. D. with a paper partly printed and partly written, with the mark of the ſaid William thereunto ſubſcribed, purporting to be his laſt will and teſtament, dated the 20th of March, 1784, and there unlawfully, willingly, knowingly, and feloniouſly did take a falſe oath that that paper writing contained the laſt will and teſtament of the ſaid William Lindſay, and that he was the executor of the ſaid William, the ſaid Doctor Ducarel having ſufficient power and lawful and competent authority to adminiſter ſuch oath in that behalf; whereas in truth and in fact the ſaid paper writing, partly printed and partly written, did not contain the laſt will and teſtament of the ſaid William Lindſay, which he well knew, and whereas he was not executor to the ſaid William, with intent to receive the wages and pay due from our Lord the King to the ſaid William Lindſay for ſuch ſervice.

A ſecond count, for that he, ſuppoſing William Lindſay deceaſed, had ſerved, &c.

HENRY HUNTER WILLIAMS ſworn.

(Produced the ſhip's books of the Burford.)

There appears to be wages due from January, 1779, to the 10th of February, 1784, at which time he died.

THOMAS FLETCHER ſworn.

This is the will of William Lindſay, I brought it from the Prerogative-Office.

JOSEPH SPECK ſworn.

At the tranſaction of this buſineſs, I was clerk to Meſſrs. Marſh and Abbot, Doctors Commons, they are proctors, I perfectly remember the priſoner coming into the office, in Auguſt, 1784, to prove this will, (looks at it) it is the very ſame, this is my hand-writing, I went with him before Dr. Ducarel, he was one of the ſurrogates belonging to the Prerogative-Court of Canterbury, the oath was adminiſtered to him, the nature of it is, he ſwears, that that paper contains the laſt will and teſtament of William Lindſay, and that he is the ſole executor therein named, I ſaw Dr. Ducarel ſign it.

(The will read.)

Court. Are you clear as to the terms of the oath?——I believe I am.

Repeat them again.——He ſwore that that paper contains the laſt will and teſtament of William Lindſay deceaſed, and that he is the ſole executor therein named, and that he will faithfully perform the truſt therein repoſed in him.

Does it ſay any thing of the value of the property?—No, it does not.

Did you aſk him any queſtions?——I do not recollect that I did, he only produced the will and I wrote the jurata upon it, I do not recollect that any queſtions paſſed either on one ſide or the other.

Priſoner. This gentleman took me up this time twelve-month for another falſe affair.

Court to Speck. How long was he with you?——About half an hour, I am very poſitive of it, there are a great many people come to me. He mentioned a circumſtance which I ſhould not have mentioned; I was under the diſagreeable neceſſity of appearing where I now am, and he ſtood where he now ſtands; I ſhould not have mentioned it otherwiſe, I do not wiſh to injure the priſoner; owing to the name being ſpelt wrong he got off.

Williams. I have examined the Burford's books from 1776 to the 19th of July, 1784, and find no other perſon but this man, William Lindſay, on board, and he died the 10th of February.

Look for the name of William Marſhall.—He does not appear to have been on board the ſhip at that time, for he was diſcharged the 5th of Auguſt, 1783, at which time he was invalided and did not return again; William Stock was diſcharged from the Monarque the 18th of March, 1783, and died in the Monarque.

Where was the Burford the 20th of March, 1784?——She appears to be in Table Bay.

Court. What means is there taken to aſcertain the accuracy of the dates of the ſhip's books at the time of the death of the parties?

Williams. This is the book from which the money is paid, and we look upon it a ſufficient authority for us to pay upon.

JAMES FINLEY ſworn.

I was ſurgeon on board the Burford, I knew Lindſay, I was on board when he died, I think he died before we arrived at Table Bay, I will not be poſitive, the ſhip arrived there about the middle of February, 1784.

Have you a diſtinct recollection of the time of his death?——I have not.

Then you cannot ſpeak with abſolute certainty whether it was before or after?—I cannot.

Are you ſure he died on board the ſhip?——I am ſure, becauſe I attended him in his laſt moments.

JAMES LOCKWOOD ſworn.

I was a ſeaman on board the Burford, I knew Lindſay, and I knew the priſoner James Murray; Lindſay and the priſoner did not meſs together as I knew of, Lindſay meſſed along with me, the priſoner did not meſs with me.

When did Lindſay die?——I cannot recollect, I think it was in the month of February.

Was it before or after you got to Table Bay?——I think it was before.

Was Murray on board the ſhip then?—Yes.

Did he know the time he died?——I cannot poſitively ſay.

Could Lindſay write?——No, he could not.

Did you know Marſhall when he was on board?——Yes.

When did he leave the ſhip?——I cannot poſitively ſay.

Was he on board when you left the Cape?——I believe he was, I cannot ſay.

Do you know Stock?——Yes.

Was he on board?—I cannot ſay.

Were they on board when Lindſay died?—I cannot ſay with certainty.

What ſize ſhip was ſhe?—A ſeventy gun.

Court to Finley. Were Marſhall and Stock on board?——One of them was invalided, Commodore King's ſquadron was there, Stock was on board the Monmouth, and he might by poſſibility have come on board our ſhip, the men in the ſquadron had liberty of viſiting different ſhips.

Lockwood. William Lindſay wanted to make a will and power to me.

Court to Speck. Look at that upper indorſement on the will, is that your handwriting?——Yes, it is.

Where did you take that information from?——From the priſoner.

How do you know that?——Becauſe theſe queſtions are always aſked, and theſe queſtions I did aſk him, this was taken from him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing at all of the will, I never produced it in my life, I deny that I am the perſon that produced the will.

Court to Williams. Has there ever been any other claimant?——It does not appear, the wages are ſtill unpaid.

Fletcher. The probate was revoked the 10th day of this month, and adminiſtration granted to the brother.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character, and Mr. Finley, the ſurgeon.

Guilty, Death.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

14. MICHAEL DRUITT was indicted for falſely and feloniouſly making, forging, and counterfeiting, and cauſing and procuring to be falſely and feloniouſly made, forged and counterfeited, and willingly acting and aſſiſting in the falſe making, forging, and counterfeiting, on the 16th day of April laſt, a certain order for the payment of money, with the name William Parſons thereunto ſubſcribed, dated the 16th day of April, 1785; directed to Meſſrs. Pybus, Dorſet, Cockhill, Pybus and Hale, for the payment of 15l. which ſaid falſe, forged, and counterfeited order for payment of money, was in the words and figures following, that is to ſay: No. 148, Bond-ſtreet, No. 17, London, April 16th, 1785. Meſſrs. Pybus and Co. pay Mr. Richards or bearer, 15l. William Parſons." With intention to defraud Mathew Stenſon.

A ſecond Count. For uttering the ſame with the like intention.

A third Count. For forging a like order for payment of money, with intention to defraud the ſaid Meſſrs. Pybus and Co.

A fourth Count. For uttering and publiſhing as true, a like order with the ſame intention.

(The Caſe was opened by Mr. Fielding.)

The witneſſes examined apart by the deſire of Mr. Garrow, Priſoners Counſel.

MATHEW STENSON ſworn.

Do you know the priſoner?——I do.

Tell my Lord and theſe gentlemen, when it was he came to your houſe at Kenſington, and what was the purpoſe of his coming there?——On Saturday the 16th day of April laſt, the priſoner came to my houſe between the hours of one and three, I cannot be certain as to the time; I keep a ſhop at Kenſington, he came with a pretext of taking a houſe of me which I had to let, for an old lady an acquaintance of his at Fulham; after a variety of converſation about this houſe, I told him I did not chuſe to come to a concluſion till I ſaw the lady, he told me in anſwer to that, that he would bring the lady over on Monday to ſee the houſe.

Had you curioſity at that time to aſk him his name?——Not immediately I did not, he then aſked me if I had Iriſh cloth, he ſaid, Sir, I ſhould be very glad to have a piece of Iriſh cloth of you, you can ſerve me as well any man in London; I ſaid, I ſhould be ſorry I could not, he then wanted ſome lawn for trimmings, I made him an account for five pounds, one or two ſhillings, he then preſented a draft for fifteen pounds, of Meſſrs. Pybus's, I looked very earneſtly at it, it was in the parlour, he followed me into the ſhop, and ſaid, Sir, you are very right to be careful, there are a great many bad drafts about and ſwindlers, I aſked who Mr. Richards was, he ſaid, that is myſelf; I live at Fulham, and Mr. Parſons the drawer lives at Fulham alſo, upon this I took the draft, and gave him the balance in caſh, the amount of it was fifteen pounds; it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, excepting a few days, I am very clar it is the ſame, I entered it in my bill book, and took particular notice of the number.

Did you mark that identical paper?——I did not.

Who did you part with it to?——To one Mr. Tate.

Do you think, Sir, you are able to ſay that is the ſame note?—I am poſitive ſure.

Are you ſure of that?——I am clear.

How much money did you give him in change?——Between nine and ten pounds.

What converſation continued between you?——He followed me from the parlour to the ſhop, and I examined the note very minutely, I had many cheeques from Mr. Pybus's houſe, he ſaid, I did very right to examine very minutely, that there were a great many bad notes about, but this was a very good one; I obſerved to him that I was ſorry he would not give me leave to ſend his goods home, I offered to ſend them home two or three different times, he only ſaid he was going to Fulham, and ſhould return on Monday with the lady to ſhew her the houſe.

Did he ſay where he was going before he went to Fulham?——No, he ſaid no more than that, but I rather concluded, he was going to the tavern.

Mr. Garrow. Do not tell us what you concluded; did he ſay he was going to the tavern?——No, I ſent this draft for payment, and it was not paid, I have no doubt but this is the very identical draft that was produced for payment.

You know it by compariſon with your book I ſuppoſe?—I took the particulars down.

Your book is not here?——No.

Looking at that without comparing it, what is there upon it that enables you to ſwear it is the ſame draft that was tendered by the priſoner?——No. 17.

Did you bear that in your memory, or did you take it from your book?——I bore it in my memory, it is written.

Any other paper that had ſeventeen wrote in it might impoſe itſelf upon you; if I was to make an accurate copy of that note how would you know one from the other?——Not only the number but the capital letter R ſtruck me.

What is there peculiar in the capital letter R by which you now recollect it?——Why there is no particular ſupport at the bottom to the return.

I will thank you for a ſight of it?——The laſt part of the letter.

This has as much the appearance of a P as an R?

Court. It is not a common R certainly.

Mr. Garrow. Now I take it you are not quite ſure it is an R?—It ſtrikes me as an R.

Now will you venture to ſwear the name on that draft is not Prichard?——There are not letters enough.

I ſay that which you call a capital R, is a capital P?——I cannot venture to ſwear that it is.

When did you for the firſt time, make that obſervation on the ſuppoſed R?——I entered it down as an R in the copy.

When for the firſt time did you take any particular notice, or make any particular obſervation on that letter?——In the courſe of about five days.

Then before you had made that obſervation, it had paſſed out of your hands?—No, Sir.

Yes, you had ſent it out for payment, you did not carry it yourſelf?——No.

Then you ſee I was right?——It was in the hands of my nephew and ſervant David Stenſon.

He brought it back again?——He did, then I entered it.

Your book is not here?——No, then I put it in my pocket-book, and then I received this letter.

Put that letter into your pocket-book again, did you communicate your obſervations on the letter R to any body?——I did not.

Then it reſted for ſome months I think, 'till Mr. Tate came to you?—Yes, it was.

When did you again ſee the priſoner at the bar?——Not before the 23d of November, Mr. Tate had been with me prior to that, and told me that my name was put into the body of a draft to Meſſrs. Hankey's houſe, the man was at liberty when he came to aſk me if I knew any thing of that draft.

When you firſt ſaw the priſoner you knew he was then in cuſtody upon a charge of forgery?——Yes, I underſtood ſo.

You was called upon to identify the priſoner's perſon?——Yes.

Other people could not identifie him?——I do not know.

The priſoner ſtood there as a party accuſed, as a priſoner?——Undoubtedly.

Probably with irons on?——Not that I know of.

That was the firſt time you ſaw him after he came to your houſe at Kenſington?——Yes.

At the diſtance of ſix months?—Yes.

How long might the perſon that bought the lawn and the Iriſh ſtay with you?——I ſuppoſe about twenty minutes or half an hour.

You have told us the whole converſation that paſſed between you?—Yes.

There was nothing elſe that paſſed between you?—Nothing.

You are ſure of that?—Yes.

Mr. Fielding. Have you any doubt in the world of that being the man that came to your ſhop?—Not the leaſt doubt in the world.

Have you any doubt in your mind that that is the note?——Not any, I aſked him if his name was Richards, and he ſaid it was.

Court. When did you part with this note out of your hands to Tate?—It was about ſix weeks ago, he had it about a fortnight or three weeks; he came down to me, to aſk me if my name was Stenſon, about a draught on Hankey's houſe, I then compared it, and found it was the ſame hand writing.

For what purpoſe did you give it to Mr. Tate?——For the purpoſe of comparing hands.

Did it never occur to you, that it would be a better method to put ſome mark of your own hand writing upon it, than to enter it upon your book?—It being a bankers draught I did not.

Suppoſe, now, any perſon had been at the pains after you had parted with this note to take another checque of Pybus and Co. and upon that to make an exact copy and imitation of the note; I do not mean a common copy, but a copy profeſſing to imitate the hand-writing, ſhould you know the one from the other?——Some people are very ingenious in copying to be ſure, but Mr. Tate put his mark upon it.

Court. Then let him be called, although the belief of this witneſs would be evidence certainly to be left to the Jury.

——— TATE ſworn.

I am clerk to Meſſrs. Hankey's houſe, I received a note from Mr. Stenſon, that was the ſame that I returned.

Stenſon. This is the ſame note that I received from Mr. Tate.

Mr. Garrow to Tate. Did you keep it in your own cuſtody, or was it left in the ſhop?——In my own cuſtody always.

(The note read and compared with the Indictment.)

“ No. 148, Bond-ſtreet, No. 17, London,
“ April 16th, 1785: Meſſrs. Pybus, Dor“ ſet, Cockell, Pybus and Hale, pay Mr.
“ Richards or bearer fifteen pounds.”

I am nephew to Mr. Stenſon, I know the priſoner, I was in the ſhop when he came into it, he enquired to know whether the houſe was to let, I am very poſitive he is the man, my uncle gave me a note to carry to Mr. Pybus, which I did, this is the note, I carried it to Mr. Pybus's, and there it was refuſed payment; I carried it back to my uncle's, and never parted with it, till I delivered it at Mr. Pybus's, then I gave it back to my uncle.

Mr. Garrow. When you carried it, you had no ſuſpicion of its being a forgery?——No, therefore I tendered it for payment, I delivered it to one of the clerks, he did not carry it out of my ſight at all.

THOMAS DENNISON ſworn.

I am clerk to Meſſrs. Pybus and Co.

Mention the gentlemen's names that were partners in April, 1785?——John Pybus, John Hale, John Pybus, Jun. and Paggen Haley.

Look at that man, the priſoner, do you know him?——I know him by the name of Thomas Price.

What do you know of him by that name?

Mr. Garrow. I object to that, unleſs it is connected with this charge.

Mr. Silveſter. Did he tell you his name was Price?——He received in that name and gave his direction, No. 2, Greſſe-ſtreet, Rathbone-place.

Did he open an account at your houſe?——He opened an account the 5th of October, 1784, under the name of Thomas Price.

Did he ſay that was his name, or did he come in the name of that perſon to open an account?——I underſtood him that he ſaid his name was Thomas Price.

Look at the note?—This is a draught of one of the checques of the old houſe, Pybus, Dorſet, and Co.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know of your own knowledge, except by the books of Mr. Pybus's, that they had no account with Mr. Parſons?——Yes, I know it by my own knowledge, without the books, on the 16th of April, 1785, there was no perſon of the name of William Parſons, had any caſh at our houſe; the firm of Dorſet, Pybus, and Co. expired the 31ſt of December, 1784; then the next day commenced the firm of Pybus, Hale, and Co.

Then in April, 1785, he was not a partner?——He was, but Dorſet and Cockell were not.

Court. Should you have paid upon the checque of the old firm, if it had been from a cuſtomer?——Yes, I ſhould, we ſhould have taken a pen and made it right.

I ſuppoſe all the out ſtanding draughts of the old partnerſhip Pybus, Hale and Co. would have been paid?——Yes, unleſs one of thoſe transferred to Sir Herbert Mackworth and Co.

Was it after that partnerſhip was formed, ever known by the deſcription of Pybus, Call, Dorſet, Pybus, and Hayley?—No, Sir.

In 1784, the partners were Pybus, Dorſet, Cockell, Pybus the younger, and Haley; in January, 1785, Dorſet and Cockell went out, and Call and Grant came in.

Was the partnerſhip of Pybus, Call, Pybus, Grant and Haley, that partnerſhip firm in 1785, was it ever known by the old firm of Pybus, Dorſet, Cockell, Pybus and Haley?—I do not know that it was.

Do you know one way or the other, anſwer the plain queſtion without endeavouring to find out the conſequences of it, whether the new partnerſhip was ever know by the old firm?——No, I do not believe it was.

Mr. Silveſter. If any perſon was poſſeſſed of any of your old checques, and kept caſh there, though it was directed to Meſſrs. Pybus, Dorſet, Cockell, Pybus and Haley, yet the new partnerſhip will pay it?——They would.

Mr. Garrow. Was not the reaſon of that draught being ſo anſwered, that it was properly addreſſed to the old firm, being one of the draughts of the old firm, of a remaining balance of Pybus, Dorſet, and Co?——It was.

Have you had one ſingle inſtance of this, that a cuſtomer of the new firm, not a cuſtomer of the old houſe, has drawn a draught upon the old checque, and that it has been paid?——We have not.

Court. Then you mean the draught of a cuſtomer who had come from the old firm?

Mr. Garrow. If by any miſtake a new cuſtomer had written on a checque in the old firm and drawn?—We have had an inſtance of that kind: Mr. Cuthbert arrived from the Eaſt Indies ſince January, and drew a draft, on the new houſe, upon an old checque, and it was honoured; he had no account at all with the old houſe.

Does Mr. William Parſons keep any account with Mr. Dorſett's new houſe?—I do not know.

Will you ſwear that this houſe was not intended for the houſe of Mackworth, Dorſet, and Co. by the deſcription of Pybus and Co.—I cannot ſay to be ſure.

Court. In fact Dorſett is a partner with Sir Herbert Mackworth and others; if any cuſtomer of yours at the new houſe, keeping an account and drawing upon the houſe, had, by accident, indorſed the name of Mackworth upon one of his checques, would you have paid it?—Certainly not.

Suppoſe a cuſtomer of yours had, by accident, added to your firm the name of Johnſon, would you have refuſed his draft on that account?——We have not an inſtance of it.

Mr. Garrow. What do you think?—Aye, that's my opinion.

You told us juſt now that Mr. Parſons has no account at the houſe of Meſſrs. Pybus and Co.—No, he has not, I know it of my own knowledge, I am the third clerk in the houſe.

An in-door clerk?——No, I go a little out.

In what way is it that you know who keeps accounts there except from the books?—Becauſe I write the caſh book.

Is it impoſſible that this thing might happen, that on Saturday an account was entered at Mr. Pybus's which has not yet come to your knowledge?—Without examining the books I know there is no ſuch name.

Could you recite all the cuſtomers of the houſe from your memory?—No.

May there not be in theſe books an agent of the name of William Parſons, and you not know it?——There is no ſuch cuſtomer.

Mr. Silveſter. Is my friend Mr. Garrow a cuſtomer of yours?——No, Sir, I have ſeen his brother's name paſs there, but not his.

Court. It is very poſſible a man may be able to ſay upon memory that a man is not a cuſtomer, though he cannot tell all that are.

Where doth Sir Herbert Mackworth live?—In Bond-ſtreet, No. 168.

JOHN PARSONS ſworn.

I live in Fulham, I have lived there eighteen years, I know nobody of the name of William Parſons there, nor have I within that eighteen years.

Do you know moſt of the people that live there?—I cannot ſay I do.

Mr. Silveſter. We have done.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I ſubmit, there is no evidence that this inſtrument is a forgery, and that it is not a good inſtrument of Mr. William Parſons, whoſe name it bears, I am ſure your Lordſhip attended to Mr. Silveſter's opening, he ſaid he would call a Mr. John Parſons, to whom he ſuppoſed a repreſentation of the priſoner to allude, there is no evidence that the priſoner made any ſuch repreſentation to Mr. Stenſon, I aſked him over and over again, and though the opening was made in his hearing, he does not know of any; therefore, their calling this Mr. John Parſons is not only idle but abſurd, for it is not pretended that this is the draft of Mr. John Parſons of Fulham, but I was provided for that caſe if proved; for I take it to be perfectly clear, that if the priſoner had repreſented this to be the draft of a Mr. Parſons at Fulham, unleſs they had clearly ſhewn that no other perſon reſided there, it could not be let in to aid them in the preſent proſecution; I ſtate that, as the determination of the Cour of King's Bench, on a caſe that is in Douglaſs's Reports, argued by Mr. Fielding, "The King againſt Jones otherwiſe Perrott," he offered him in payment a note reſembling in ſize, and every other reſpect, a bank of England note, but inſtead of ſaying for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the printed note ſaid for my Governor and Company of my Bank in England; it was in evidence the perſon offering it ſaid, this was a good note, and I remember Mr. Fielding ſaid that might be let in after the word purporting, aſſiſted by the collateral repreſentation to be a Bank of England note: the caſe firſt came in the ſhape of an indictment of a fraud before Mr. Juſtice Blackſtone, he was of opinion, if it was any thing, it muſt be a forgery; it was afterwards tried before Lord Mansfield, who reſerved the caſe, it was afterwards argued; the Court ſaid the purporting muſt be on the face of the inſtrument itſelf, that every man that looks at it may be able to ſay, this purports to be ſuch a draft; here, therefore, they muſt ſhew it is not the draft of Mr. Parſons; now how have they attempted to ſhew that? why by calling Mr. John Parſons to tell your Lordſhip no other fact but that he lives at Fulham; they have given no evidence that this is not the draft of Mr. William Parſons, living at York; my Lord, I beg leave to ſay there is no repreſentation againſt the priſoner at all, but if there was, that caſe of the King and Jones is in point, for the jury muſt look on the draft itſelf; now evidence is not affected to be given to them, that it is not the note of Mr. William Parſons of Fulham, and therefore it is impoſſible that they can find the priſoner guilty.

Court to Proſecutor's Councel. You ſhould have uſed all due diligence to have ſhewn that there was no ſuch perſon of that name at Fulham, or if there was, it was not his hand-writing: you might have conſulted the pariſh books, you might have conſulted the pariſh rates, you might have ſhewn no ſuch perſon was there; the priſoner is not anſwerable for that repreſentation which is upon the face of the draft, and he might have taken this either of a perſon of the name of William Parſons, or of a ſtranger.

Mr. Silveſter. My Lord, you ſee this man ſays my name is Richards, and the note is made payable to him, it is within his knowledge who repreſents it, the note is not taken on the credit of the priſoner, it is taken on the credit of Parſons having caſh at Pybus's houſe: I have known a great many convictions, I have known men ſuffer upon no other evidence before the Court than merely this, there was evidence at the banker's that no ſuch perſon exiſted that kept caſh at that banker's: it is a fact within the priſoner's power to become acquainted with.

Court. The law is not to accommodate itſelf to particular caſes, or to the particular conduct of perſons; where you charge a forgery, it is incumbent upon you to give ſome evidence that it is a forged inſtrument, be the inſtrument what it may; if a perſon takes the draft or note of a ſtranger, it is not very uſual to take it upon a man's ſaying it is Mr. Such-a-one's, who lives in London or any where elſe, but people enquire a little more particularly; the party uttering the note is bound down by the deſcription that he gives, and the law will not permit him afterwards to ſay that there is another man of this name who really wrote the note of another deſcription; but where a man takes a note without any deſcription, or with very little deſcription, he takes it at his riſk: In the preſent caſe, you are not to convict a man becauſe he cannot prove his innocence, but you muſt firſt give reaſonable evidence of his guilt; the matter in doubt at preſent is this, this draft is the draft of a William Parſons, whom the priſoner repreſents as living at Fulham, it is taken with the deſcription of locality, and you ſhould have uſed all due diligence to have ſhewn there was no ſuch perſon living there.

Mr. Fielding. My Lord, although it is not a very pleaſant employ to exert one's-ſelf in aid of a proſecution, where the event of it, if it obtains, will be certain death, yet I muſt ſay a word: my learned friend has ſtated a caſe out of Douglaſs, that does not ſeem to me to apply: if I charge that an inſtrument purports what it does not, that charge falls to the ground: purport will equally apply to repreſentation, viva voce, that repreſents matter of evidence from the mouth of a witneſs, the evidence muſt altogether ariſe from the inſtrument itſelf, here it does not ſeem to me that my learned friend took any objection to the inſtrument, but to the evidence: the purporting is here delivered to the Court, upon which there can be no miſtake: the man tells him, that this is a draught drawn by a Mr. Parſons of Fulham, upon Pybus and Co. and that he is Mr. Richards, the very man in whoſe favour the draught is drawn; now ſuppoſe in this caſe, the evidence had ſtopped ſhort, and he had not aſſumed the name of Richards, the evidence would be compleat as to this forgery; but when you have it in evidence, that a man aſſumes that his name is Richards, which is a manifeſt falſehood, that would form a ſubject for a ſerious deliberation, there would be ſufficient to leave it to the Jury, but I do conceive there is ſomething in this, that he being the perſon in whoſe favour the draught is made, it is incumbent upon him to know ſomething of the firm of the houſe, before he receives the draught on the drawer; he therefore takes upon himſelf to receive the draught, and profeſſes that this man keeps caſh at Pybus's, and when the fact comes out that there is no ſuch perſon as this William Parſons, it is another circumſtance of preſumption, that the whole is a fabrication from beginning to end: as to the putting it to us to ſearch through Fulham, this ſeems to be putting upon us the proof of the negative: I agree with your Lordſhip, that the juſtice and the humanity of the law of this country is, that no man ſhould be called to defend himſelf, till ſome guilt is proved, but there are degrees of proof, it hardly ever in forgery amounts to demonſtration; therefore, as in this caſe, it depends upon the degrees of probability.

Court. I ſhall leave the evidence to the Jury.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I was told from the Bench a day or two ago, which I own was news to me, that I was entitled to a reply.

Court. In ſtating your objection, you are entitled to a reply, I think ſo, clearly in all caſes.

Mr. Gurrow. It has not been uſually, I believe, the way with us here.

Court. It is a conſtant practice in all interlocutory matters.

Mr. Garrow. I have very often fallen into the error of ſuppoſing I had no right to reply, becauſe the objections I have had the honour of ſtating, have generally been ſo ſtrong, that they have not ſtood in need of a reply: the gentlemen on the part of the proſecution have obſerved pretty ſtrongly, and pretty much at large upon the facts of the caſe: that certainly is not the province of the Counſel; but that is all that Mr. Fielding has done, and Mr. Silveſter ſuppoſes that there was ſomething more in this repreſentation, than he is warranted by the evidence to ſuppoſe; becauſe as it ſtands at preſent, it is a naked repreſentation of this fact, that he was the Mr. Richards to whom it was payable, and that William Parſons lived at Fulham; but ſays Mr. Silveſter, there is this further repreſentation, that William Parſons kept caſh at Pybus's, and if we negative that fact, we have done enough for the preſent proſecution; but God forbid that a falſehood ſhould convict a man of the offence of forgery. Now with reſpect to this Mr. Parſons that they have called, is he the only man of the name of Parſons, or is he the man who beſt knows? I am entitled to aſſume that it is in the knowledge of the perſon that inſtructs my learned friends that there is a William Parſons, the true drawer of this draught, and that he lives at Fulham; I know it would be a perfectly good defence if I could produce a bricklayers labourer of the name living there; they ought to produce the pariſh officers, they ought to produce the rate books, and the fact on which they rely, being that this is not the hand writing of William Parſons, it would be a great deal too much for the Jury to truſt their conſciences with ſaying, and it would be too much for your Lordſhip to ſay, there is no William Parſons living at Fulham, when perhaps to-morrow the very man that drew the bill may ſtand up.

Court. I think this caſe by far the ſhorteſt in point of evidence, that I ever remember to have heard of, or to have read of; there are two ſorts of forgeries; one is the forgery of known and defined perſon, in that caſe it is neceſſary to prove that the party did define that perſon, if he is not ſufficiently defined on the face of the inſtrument, which, in the caſe of an acceptor he may not be; but in the caſe of a drawer he rarely can: it will be neceſſary to prove, that the party having the draft, did, by his deſcription, limit it to be the inſtrument of that perſon whoſe it is charged to be; and then you are bound to prove by the beſt evidence the negative, that is not the hand writing of that perſon. There is another kind of forgery more difficult of proof; where a draft is drawn in the name of a man who did not exiſt, or rather in the name of a man not known, for perhaps there cannot be contrived a draft in the name of any perſon who did not exiſt; (for draw a draft in any name, there are perosns of the ſame name;) but who do not exiſt for the purpoſes of that draft, that caſe is moſt difficult of proof; but it does not follow becauſe a caſe is difficult of proof, that the law does not call for it to be proved; the parties muſt always uſe due caution, and due diligence: here is the deſignation of a place which ſeemed to be capable of being aſcertained with due diligence, now Fulham is not a place of that extent, but it might have been aſcertained; if therefore, this caſe ſtood merely ſo, I ſhould not be inclined to leave the evidence to the Jury, but ſhould give them my opinion, that there was not evidence of this being a forged draft, which is a neceſſary queſtion before they can enquire whether the priſoner forged it; but there is one circumſtance that inclines me to leave this evidence to the Jury, which is, that the priſoner profeſſed to be the payee of the draft; now I do not agree with the learned gentleman, that his ſaying his name was Richards, when it was not, is a circumſtance of the guilt imputed to him by the indictment; for tho' that argues a conſciouſneſs of guilt of ſome kind or other, yet it may equally refer to twenty other kinds of guilt, and I think it would have the ſame effect, as to this queſtion, if his name really had been Richards, and if that part of his repreſentation had been true; it is not therefore becauſe he gave a falſe repreſentation, that I think that helps the evidence for the proſecution, but becauſe by ſtating himſelf to be the payee of the note whether true or not, he takes upon himſelf the knowledge of who is the drawer; that circumſtance weighs on my mind, to leave the evidence to the Jury, and tho' a party ſhould not be called on to prove his innocence till his guilt is eſtabliſhed, yet a perſon who takes upon himſelf the knowledge of the drawer ſhould be called upon to ſhew who is that perſon: at the ſame time, the proſecutor has not uſed due diligence to lay the beſt evidence before the Court; they might have called the pariſh officers and have proved that they knew the pariſh, and had gone round to collect the rates, and that they knew of no perſon whatever of the name of William Parſons; I ſhall therefore leave the evidence to the Jury.

Priſoner. I wiſh to ſay nothing but what the learned gentleman has ſaid.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, it is neceſſary it ſhould be proved in this caſe, that this is a forged order, not of the hand writing of William Parſons, and that the priſoner forged it, or uttered it knowing it to be forged; if this was the draft of any William Parſons living at Fulham, it would be no forgery, becauſe the priſoner added no other deſcription of him, but his living at Fulham; on this the evidence for the proſecution is very ſhort, they might have produced better evidence, yet they manifeſtly thought ſome evidence was neceſſary, by that ſhadow of evidence they did produce.

Jury. We think it neceſſary that the priſoner ſhould ſay who this William Parſons is?

Court. You are to judge that, he is ſilent on the ſubject; but the firſt queſtion is, whether you have evidence enough on the part of the proſecution that the fact is ſo, receiving no anſwer from the priſoner.

The Jury retired for ſome time, and returned with a Verdict

Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

15. The ſaid MICHAEL DRUITT was again indicted for falſely and feloniouſly making, forging, and counterfeiting, on the 1ſt day of November laſt, a certain order for the payment of money, with the name G. Holmes thereunto ſubſcribed, dated 29th of October, 1785, addreſſed to Thomas Hankey, Joſeph Chaplin Hankey, Stephen Hall, Robert Hankey, and Richard Hankey of London, Bankers and partners; by the name and deſcription of Meſſrs. Hankey and Co. for the payment of 10l. 12s. to Mr. Stenſon or bearer, the tenor of which note is as follows: "October 29th, "1785. Meſſrs. Hankey and Co. pay "Mr. Stenſon or bearer, ten pounds "twelve ſhillings, G. Holmes." With intention to defraud Iſaac Brown.

A ſecond Count, For uttering the ſame knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

A third Count, For forging a like order for payment of 10l. 12s. with intention to defraud Thomas Hankey, Joſeph Chaplin

Hankey, Stephen Hall, Robert Hankey, and Richard Hankey.

A fourth Count, For uttering the ſame knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

The witneſſes for the Proſecution examined apart.

ISAAC BROWN ſworn.

I live in the Strand, I keep a haberdaſhers ſhop, and have done for nineteen years; I remember a man coming to me on the 1ſt of November, about four o'clock in the afternoon; I am very preciſe in reſpect to time, my men were at dinner, I was ſitting in the parlour by the ſhop, a man opened the door, I aſked him what he wanted, he ſaid, ſome mode; I aſked how wide, which is a very common queſtion, he ſaid, without giving me any direct anſwer, I believe I have a minute of it, he took out his pocket-book, and read, or pretended to read, four yards three quarters mode, at four ſhillings and ſixpence, a ſquare of yard-wide ditto, no price particular; ſays he, it is for an old lady, who deſired me to buy it; I ſuppoſe you ſerve me as well as other people; upon which I went round to the other ſide of the ſhop, and the yard-wide mode preſenting itſelf firſt to my view, I took hold of it, it was about ſix ſhillings, I ſaid, I ſhould think that would do very well; yes, ſays the man, I ſhould think it would, I opened it, and ſhewed it him; ſays he, I am no judge myſelf, ſo I took my ſciſſars out of my pocket, and was juſt in the act of making an inciſion, and he ſtopped me ſhort, before you cut it I ſhould like to know what they come to; he read four yards of black ribbon, at ten pence, and twelve yards of nett lace, at about fourteen pence per yard; and I ſhould be glad to know what they come to, before you cut them off; I ſaid, I am pretty accurate in calculation, and if you will repeat the articles I will tell you without pen and ink, he did ſo, and I reckoned them up to two pound three; he put his hand in his pocket and pulled out ſome money, I think there was half-a-guinea and ſome ſilver, as far as mymemory ſerves, ſays he, I cannot pay for them unleſs I can get change for a note, he did not ſay, unleſs you can change me a note, ſays I what note is it? ſays he, here it is, and he took it out of his pocket, I took the note and ſeeing G. Holmes at the bottom, I ſaid who is G. Holmes, ſays he, he is a private gentleman that lives at Kenſington, and I aſked him whereabouts at Kenſington, he ſaid, at Stones-end, going to Hammerſmith; and he ſaid, yes, ſays I, then who is Mr. Stenſon, ſays he, that is the perſon who the things are for; now from that moment his having firſt told me it was an old lady, and I ſeeing the name created ſuſpicion, for Mr. Stenſon could not be an old lady at any rate, I caught at the expreſſion directly, ſays I, you told me juſt now, it was an old lady that wanted theſe things, O ſays he, I ſuppoſe in the hurry of drawing the draught, they omitted the S; I never aſked the old lady's name, nor aſked the man his name, I went and called my man from dinner and beckoned him to go into the parlour, and told him there was a perſon in the ſhop who I did not know, and he came in ſuch a ſort of queſtionable ſhape, I did not know what to make of it, and I ſent him to Meſſrs. Hankey's; that was the only proof to aſcertain whether it was ſound or unſound. After my man was gone I went into the ſhop, and entered into converſation with the perſon, and he ſaid he had ſome little buſineſs at Mr. Conſtable's, and I ſaid the man will not be long; ſo we were talking about the new tea-warehouſe, and who were the proprietors and ſuch like: whether the priſoner's ſituation grew uneaſy or not I cannot ſay; but, ſays he, as your man is not returned I think I will go to Mr. Conſtable's, and I will be back in about ten minutes, very well, Sir, ſays I, if he brings the money I will ſend him to you; the priſoner never returned, and in about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes my man and Meſſrs. Hankey's clerk both returned, the moment I ſaw a new face I was convinced that my ſuſpicions were well founded, and that I was right: I ſaid to my young man, you know where Mr. Conſtable lives, go and ſee whether he is there or no, ſo I believe they did, they did not come into the ſhop, they returned and ſaid the priſoner had not been there.

Have you the note?—No, Mr. Tate has it, and Mr. Tate then ſaid he ſuſpected it was Druitt.

Do you know the man?—Yes, I am ſure it is the ſame man.

It was not candle-light?—No, Sir, it was not.

Are you quite ſure as to the day?—Yes, I think I am quite ſure.

Mr. Garrow. When a man ſays I think, I apprehend it imports a doubt.—It may, Sir; I am quite ſure.

When did you ſee the priſoner after?—I never ſaw him till he was taken, which I believe was three weeks or a month, but I received a letter from Mr. Tate, informing me that Druitt was in cuſtody, at the Rotation-Office, at Hick's-Hall, I found him in cuſtody, charged with the offence.

Do you recollect whether you mentioned the day at the Rotation-Office?—Yes, I did, I am perfectly ſure.

He inſtructs me that he preſſed you to fix the time, that he might ſhew where he was at that time.—I ſaid it was Tueſday the 1ſt of November, ſays Mr. Webſter it is not material about the day, ſays this unfortunate young man, I wiſh the gentleman would be preciſe as to the day; before that I had conſulted my wife and the man altogether.

You did ſtate it was uncertain, to which Mr. Webſter ſaid it was not material, was it ſo ſtated in the preſence of the priſoner?—Yes, it was.

I obſerve in the whole account you gave to my friend, you very conſtantly and very properly ſaid, the man, you did not name the priſoner; are you able to ſay now, with certainty, whether he is the man?—I do think he is the man.

Is it a matter about which concurring circumſtances, and the opinion of other men have induced you to believe that he is the man?—I am not governed by other men at all.

I am afraid the beſt men are governed by other men.—If I could have any doubt of it, I ſhould be happy to catch your idea.

Abſtracted from every thing you have heard from others, from all you have ſeen, from all compariſons of hand-writings, are you able, at the diſtance of a month, to ſay that is the man; if you have a particle of a doubt, I am ſure you will ſay ſo?—I really do think he is the man, but I am not infallible, he very much reſembles the man, but never having ſeen him before, and it was four o'clock in the month of November, and it was rather dark.

You ſpeak very much to your honour; then you ſay that you cannot ſpeak to him poſitively, from the circumſtances of never having ſeen him before, ſeeing him in the month of November, and ſeeing him rather in the dark, do not you think you may fairly ſuſpect your own recollection?—Sir, in general I do not.

Have you any doubt about him, go up to him?—I think it is the ſame man.

Have you any doubt, Sir?—When I ſay I think he is the ſame man, that does not imply much doubt, but to ſay with certainty that he is the ſame man, I cannot.

In ſhort, you do not ſwear with the ſame poſitiveneſs that I do that this is Mr. Silveſter, I ſwear this is Mr. Silveſter.

Continuation of the Trial of Michael Dewitt.

Court. Abſtracted from the poſſibility of being miſtaken, which there certainly is to you in common with all mankind, have you at this time any doubt in your own mind that this is the man?——Certainly not, I certainly think he is the ſame man.

Court. I will put it to you in a different way, I am ſure you will not go any further than the truth; ſuppoſing you had never heard any thing about this man from the time he left your ſhop, and that you had met him a month after in the ſtreet, ſhould you have known him to be the ſame man that offered you the note?——I do not ſay that I ſhould, I did not take a great deal of notice of the man, I think he is the ſame man, but to ſwear poſitively that he is the ſame man, I cannot; if I had met the man at a diſtance of time, I ſhould not have ſaid to a friend, that is the man that offered me the forged draft.

But now from all the circumſtances you ſtrongly believe him to be the ſame man?——I thought when I ſaw him at Hicks's-Hall he reſembled the man very much, he ſeemed to me much the ſame ſort of man.

Mr. Garrow. Do you recollect a Mr. Ripley of Wapping attending the examination?——Yes, ſo I found.

The draft you gave to Mr. Tate was the ſame draft you received from the priſoner?——I do not recollect whether I ſaw it at that time.

Did you mark it?——No, there was no mark upon it, I ſent it by my man.

THOMAS HILL ſworn.

I am a ſervant to Mr. Brown, I received the draft from Mr. Brown, and carried it to Meſſrs. Hankey's houſe, I carried it there, and gave it to Mr. Tate, the ſame draft I received from my maſter; I juſt ſaw the man in the ſhop as I came along, but I cannot ſay.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know what day that was?——I am ſure it was on Tueſday, I believe it was the 3d.

Had you been to Hankey's on other occaſions for your maſter?—Never.

TATE ſworn.

I am clerk to Meſſrs. Hankey and Co. the names of the preſent firm are Thomas Hankey, Joſeph Chaplin Hankey, Stephen Hall, Robert Hankey, and Richard Hankey.

Was that the firm in October laſt?——Yes.

Do you know of any draught brought to your houſe in November laſt?—I believe it was on Tueſday the 1ſt of November this draught came to our houſe for payment.

Who brought it?——A young man who ſaid he was clerk or ſhopman to Mr. Brown in the Strand, he preſented it to a fellow teller of mine, who aſked me whoſe writing it was.

Have you any cuſtomers of that name?——Not of G. Holmes, I ſaid it was not any of our cuſtomers, and I took it and looked at it, and ſaid I believe it is Mr. Druitt's writing.

Mr. Garrow. Did you ever ſee him write?——Yes, I believe this to be the priſoner's writing, I ſpoke to Mr. Hankey and Mr. Hall, and went to Mr. Brown's, but before we could arrive, the gentleman who brought this draught was gone, this is the draught I had from Mr. Brown's clerk, I have had it in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, I gave it to Mr. Brown to preſent it to our Solicitor.

Mr. Brown. I have had it to ſhew to Mr. Chetham.

Court. Let the draught be read.

Tate. We have three cuſtomers of the name of Holmes; Owen Holmes, Edward Holmes, and Sarah Holmes.

Are you acquainted with the hand-writing of Sarah?——Perfectly, Sir, ſhe always writes her name full Sarah.

Mr. Garrow. That looks as much like an S. as a G.

(The draught read and examined by the indictment by Mr. Garrow.)

MATTHEW STENSON ſworn.

I live at Kenſington, and have done ſo twenty years, I know moſt of the inhabitants there, yet I know none of the name of Stenſon, but my wife, and ſhe is not an old woman; I know one Jeffery Holmes, at Kenſington.

Is there any perſon of the name of George or Gerrard, or anything of that, that you know of?——Not one that I know of.

If there was any one of that name, ſhould you have known it?——If they were entered as pariſhoners I ſhould.

Court. Do you know the Stones-end?——I know a private gentleman of fortune of the name of J. Holmes, about the center of the Town, but at the Stones-end, going out to Hammerſmith, there is none of the name of Holmes.

Mr. Garrow. Kenſington, if I do not miſtake, is a place that changes its inhabitants pretty much?——Frequently in regard to lodgers, not with reſpect to pariſhoners.

It is, we all know, a faſhionable village, and the boarders and lodgers change their abode frequently; you do not mean to ſwear that there is no perſon of the name of Stenſon but your wife?——As an old lady I will.

Will you ſwear there is no old lady of that name, lodged in Church-row?——Yes, I am very ſure I ſhould have been acquainted with it if there had.

Now I give you a ſmall ſpot, Church-court, will you venture to ſwear there was not an old lady who lodged there in November laſt, of the name of Stenſon?——Yes, I can.

Why can you venture to do that?——I never knew one of my own name except one, I do not know any perſon of the name except my wife.

Mr. Silveſter to Mr. Tate. You know Mr. J. Holmes?——Yes.

Does he ſign his name with a G?——No, with a J. that is not at all like his hand writing; I have ſeen him write fifteen years ago, and down to four years, ſince which time he became a private gentleman.

THOMAS COLCROFT ſworn.

I live at the Gravel-pits, at Kenſington, I know the Stones-end.

Do you know ſuch a man as G. Holmes living at the Stones-end?—No ſuch man.

If there had ſhould you have known him?——Undoubtedly; Mr. Jeffery Holmes, I know extremely well, I have ſeen him ſign his name J. not G.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I have nothing to ſay, only with reſpect to Mr. Ripley, that was called up at the examination before the Juſtice when this man was called upon, he ſaid, there was a draught for ten pounds, he believed about the time the 1ſt of November, and this draught was on the ſame banker; the Magiſtrate aſked him, if he ſaw the perſon, he was aſked if I was the perſon, he ſaid, I was not; Mr. Ripley was not brought up, there is a gentleman in Court, that can prove what he ſaid.

Court. Why did not you, Mr. Druitt, ſubpœna Mr. Ripley?——I thought my trial would be put off till tomorrow.

Have you any witneſſes?——No, my Lord.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

16. THOMAS BALLARD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of November, ſix pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 3l. a pair of ſilk ſhoes, value 5s. a pair of ſattin ſhoes, value 5s. a ſilk ſkirt, value 10s. three pair of leather gloves, value 3s. the property of Hannah Capadoce, ſpinſter, in the dwelling-houſe of William Nelſon.

THOMAS DUNN ſworn.

I am one of the patrol, I was preſent at the fire at Mr. Nelſon's, I ſaw the priſoner ſtand at the door at Mr. Nelſon's, with three others, the adjoining houſe was then on fire, they went up ſtairs and I followed them to the fore room up two pair of ſtairs, I am ſure the priſoner was one, it was between ten and eleven at night.

Was there a candle?—There was a light from the flames, and I plainly perceived the priſoner, and I ſaw a ſailor, that was in company with the priſoner take a poker, and attempt to break open a lock, but they did not, the priſoner reached the poker to the ſailor, the priſoner then went into the adjoining room, where there was a bed, and there ſtood a cheſt upon cheſt of drawers, and I ſaw them both, the priſoner and the ſailor, break open the drawers, and I ſaw the priſoner take ſeveral things out, and put ſeveral things in his pocket.

Where were the family at this time?—That I do not know.

Did you ſee any part of the family in that apartment?—I did not, I ſaw the priſoner put ſome of the things into his pocket, I could not ſee what ſort of things they were, he took them out of the drawers, ſoon after I came down there was a great ſuffocation in the room, I told my partner, and ſoon after I ſaw the priſoner hanging out of the two pair of ſtairs window by his left hand, they are both front rooms, I ſuppoſe he might hang five minutes, and waving his right hand as if in diſtreſs, which excited the compaſſion of every one thereabouts, they ſuppoſed him to be one of the family.

How did he come down?—He fell from there on the leads of the one pair of ſtairs over the private door of the houſe, and was aſſiſted down from thoſe leads which broke his fall, many people offered to aſſiſt him as one of the family, then he went in again at the ſame door that he firſt went in at, that was the private door, I did not hear him ſay any thing, he went up again to the ſame chamber, me and my partner followed him very cloſe, he then came down ſtairs directly, we came after him cloſe to his heels, we followed him, he went through the crowd into Surry-ſtreet, I followed him there and ſtopped him, I aſked him where he was going to, he ſaid he lived at Charing-croſs, I ſaid that was quite the contrary way, he was going from Charing-croſs; I aſked him what he had upon him, having ſeen him take the things before, His pockets were pretty well loaded, he ſaid what he had was his own property, I told him I doubted that, he ſaid he was poſitive it was, I told him he ſhould come down with me if he pleaſed, and I would take him to the officer of the night, he came very quietly, I delivered him to my partner and the conſtable of the night.

Have you any ſort of doubt that this is the man that you ſaw go into the apartment?—I have no doubt of it, becauſe he was in my ſight, I loſt ſight of him about five minutes.

Mr. Silveſter, Priſoner's Councel. When this man came down you was not near him I believe?—Yes, I was at the door when the priſoner was taken off the leads.

What was ſaid at that time?—Nothing that I heard, there were a great many people about.

Were there not a great many people aſſiſting, and others telling them where to carry the things?——I did not hear any.

Where did the people belonging to the goods carry them?—I do not know.

Was not this man following ſomebody with goods?—There was not a creature going before him with goods.

Why did not you take him into cuſtody up ſtairs?—Becauſe I thought it was better to take him as private as poſſible.

How many people were at the door at that time?——I did not number them.

Were not there a great many?—Yes, there were beyond a doubt, I never ſaw the priſoner with my eyes before, he went with me immediately, I heard nobody enquire where the goods were carried to; I did not hear whether he was hurt by his fall, ſome people compaſſionated him, as he appeared much hurt.

Mr. Garrow. Did he pretend at all that he was carrying any thing away for the benefit of the ſufferers?——He did ſay ſo at the watch-houſe, but in the ſtreet he ſaid it was his own property, at the watch-houſe he could not tell the name of any one perſon in the houſe.

RICHARD WOOLLET ſworn.

This account is true, I did not ſee the priſoner at the drawers, but I am ſure he is the man that went up ſtairs, and that me and my partner followed, I ſaw him afterwards hanging out of the window; my partner ſaid we will let him go out of the mob, and then we will follow him, we let him go into Surry-ſtreet, my partner aſked him where he was going, I was cloſe by him, he ſaid he was going home, he ſaid he lived at Charing-croſs, and my partner told him that was not the way to Charing-croſs, and he ſaid what have you about you, he ſaid he had nothing but what was his own property, we took him to the officer of the night, I ſaw him ſearched at the watch-houſe, here are ſeveral pair of ſilk ſtockings and the things in the indictment; they were all found in his pockets, and many of them were found in the inſide of his breeches, and then he ſaid he was carrying them away for the benefit of the ſufferers, the officer of the night aſked him who the family conſiſted of, and he could not mention any one perſon that lived in the houſe.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you hear any converſation in the ſtreet?—No.

———— LEARY ſworn.

I am the conſtable of the night, the priſoner was ſearched and theſe things were found upon him, they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, I took a ſilk ſkirt out of his breeches, there were ſeveral pair of ſilk ſtockings taken out of his breeches; I aſked him who lived in the houſe, he could not tell their names; he ſaid he was a ſpectacle-maker, and lived in Johnſton's-court, Charing-croſs.

SARAH HOLMES ſworn.

I am ſervant to Miſs Hannah Capadoce, ſhe had an apartment at Mr. William Nelſon's, No. 170, in the Strand; this ſkirt appears to me to be the ſkirt I made for Miſs Capadoce.

Do you know where that was on the evening of the fire in the Strand?—It was next to the drawer where theſe things were taken out, in the bed room, in the cheſt upon cheſt, I have not ſeen it very lately; theſe ſhoes appear to be the property of my miſtreſs, her name is in the black ſhoes, I have no doubt of their being her property.

Where were they kept on the night of the fire?—In the top drawer in the ſame cheſt, I do not know the ſtockings, they are not marked, ſhe had ſome of that ſort and ſome gloves of that ſort, her name is not in the gloves, the ſilk ſkirt has my own mark on it.

Court to Holmes. What do you take the value of that ſkirt to be?——Four ſhillings.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had no intention to take theſe things, I went up ſtairs into the two pair of ſtairs room certainly, I was coming home with my wife from over the water from my ſiſter's to Charing-croſs, and I called at a public-houſe in Devereux-court, which Mr. Davis, a neighbour, kept, that kept a public-houſe in St. Martin's-lane, juſt by where I live, I ſent my wife home, and told her I would call in to ſee this Mr. Davis, I went and ſpoke to him, I had a pint of beer, he told me to go up ſtairs, and ſaid there was a ſociety above ſtairs, and if you go up ſtairs you may ſit more comfortably, I went up ſtairs and had one pint of beer, and all of a ſudden he came running into the room and ſaid, there is a great fire juſt by, accordingly every body almoſt ran out of the room, and I unfortunately went among the reſt.

Court. How far is Davis's from the fire?——Davis's houſe is almoſt by St. Clement's church, accordingly I went to the fire, I had drank a little more than uſual, I ſaw ſeveral people go into this houſe, and I went into the two pair of ſtairs, when I came in I ſaw that gentleman there, and ſeveral more people were in this bed room, the drawers were all laying about the floor, and them things, they went out, and there was a large round hat box laying on the ground, I took hold of it and I filled it full of things, when I had ſo done I went to lift it on my head, ſo then theſe things dropped, and one of my pockets was full of lemons, accordingly I ſtooped and picked them up, what they were I did not know till I ſaw them in the watch-houſe, I had rather a looſe waiſtcoat on, and I put ſomethings into my waiſtcoat boſom, and they dropped out again, and unfortunately I put them into my breeches, I came to the room door with the hat box on my head, I could ſee nobody and I called out are you all gone, nobody anſwered, I went to the room door and the door was ſhut, I pulled it open, as ſoon as I did ſo the ſmoke at that door daſhed into my face, and I thought the whole place was in flames, I directly threw the hat-box off my head and ran to the window, and in my fright I did not take the things from about me, I hung with my hand by the window, at laſt I dropped on the leads, and from there into the ſtreet where the people caught hold of me, they aſked me if I was hurt, I told them I thanked God, I did not feel myſelf much hurt, but I had ſome property about me, which had broke my fall, meaning the things in my breeches, I aſked them where the goods were carried, that belonged to the houſe, and they ſaid they did not know; I went into the houſe again, as far as the firſt pair of ſtairs, I never went up three ſtairs, there were a parcel of men ſtanding there, I aſked them where the goods were carried belonging to the houſe, ſome of them ſaid into the next ſtreet; then I came out again, and the people gathered round me again, I told them I had ſome property about me, they told me the goods were gone into the next ſtreet; I went directly to the next ſtreet, and there were three girls ſtanding at one door, whether the firſt ſecond or third, I cannot ſay; and I went up to them, and ſaid, does the goods come here, my girls, and one of them ſaid no, no, they fell a laughing, and ſaid lower down; then I came from that door, and there was a man to the beſt of my knowledge had ſomething on his head; I was following him, and the patrol caught me, and aſked me where I was going, ſays I, I am going to where the goods is carried, then he ſaid I ſhould go with him, for I had ſome property about me; I ſaid, I have ſome property upon me, let me go and deliver that firſt; and he ſaid, what property you took you ſhall deliver to me, I ſaid, I would; I went along with him directly to the watch-houſe, I ſhewed him where the watch-houſe was, and when we got there, I told them I had ſome property about me, I went to give them the things and they took them away from me, then they ſearched me, the gentleman aſked me my name, I told him and where I lived; if he had let me gone to the bottom of the ſtreet, he would have been convinced where I was going.

Mr. Sheriff Watſon. I attended the fire, and the goods in general were carried into Surry-ſtreet; I put a party of the guards there, and after clearing away, I deſired an officer to ſend a party more to keep thoſe goods from being plundered.

(The priſoner called five witneſſes who gave him a very good character.)

NOT GUILTY.

21. ELIZABETH ALDRIDGE (wife of Harry Aldridge) was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 21ſt of November laſt, a pint pewter pot, value 10d. the property of Henry Aſſcroft.

HENRY ASSCROFT ſworn.

I keep the Crown, in Red-croſs-ſtreet, on Monday night the 21ſt of November, I loſt a pint pot, and I went to the apartment of the priſoner, between nine and ten in the evening, ſhe had been a cuſtomer, I rapped at her door, and told her I wanted to ſpeak to her, I inſiſted ſhe had taken a pint pot from the tap room, ſhe denied it, the woman was at that time in the room, I told her if ſhe did not give me the pint pot, I would get a warrant, and ſearch the room, upon which I ſent for a conſtable, there was another woman there, and I heard ſomething fall into a pail, and afterwards I ſaw ſome metal in a pail of water, I did not ſee who did it, nor what it was till the conſtable came.

Did you ſee what it was they poured into the pail?—I did not, I could not, the priſoner had the frying-pan in her hand, the conſtable took the metal out of the pail, and has had it ever ſince; I am ſure it was not the priſoner that put it in the pail, the priſoner opened the door to me, I had no ſuſpicion of her.

You did not know there was any pot miſſing?—Not till I was told.

Was ſhe at your houſe that day?——Frequently.

Had ſhe a pot at home that day?——I cannot ſay, ſhe might.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. My Lord, it was only two drunken women taking a little gin out of the pot.

Court. The Jury muſt be ſatisfied whether it was taken in a felonious way, or only taken with ſome liquor.

Mr. Garrow. Do not you think this pot was melted by warming a drop of comfort?——It is poſſible, we have frequently been ſerved ſo.

Court. Have you ever ſeen a pot at your own houſe melted?—I have.

Jury. I have ſeen them run by heat down the middle, but never ſaw one melted in this way.

THOMAS EDWARDS ſworn.

I am a brewer's ſervant, I ſaw the priſoner take the pot out of the tap-room, on Monday the 21ſt of November.

What was it?—A pewter pint pot from off one of the tables, there was nobody in the room, but me, the priſoner, and the proſecutor's daughter, who was going to ſerve her with ſome liquor.

Did ſhe ſee you?—She did.

What did you think ſhe was going to do with the pot?—She put it under her apron and had ſome liquor and went away.

Mr. Garrow. What liquor had ſhe?—I do not know.

Did ſhe drink it, or was it put in a bottle?——I ſaw it put in a bottle, and ſhe took it home.

Did the young woman give her leave to take the pot home?——Not in my hearing.

JOHN EDWARDS ſworn.

I am conſtable, the proſecutor came to my houſe, I went with him to the priſoner's door, and knocked at the door, ſhe would not open the door, I forced open the door, the proſecutor charged the priſoner with ſtealing the pots, and I found the metal very hot, in a pail of water juſt by the fire.

What did you ſee?——I ſaw the metal that is now here, except what ſtuck to the frying pan, ſome is on it now. (The metal produced as picked out of the pail, being part of two pint pots.) The two women interceded for mercy.

The priſoner called eight witneſſes who had known her ſeveral years, all of whom gave her a very good character, and ſaid ſhe was not a woman likely to ſteal pots to melt, but that ſhe was given to drinking.

Court to Edwards. Did the priſoner appear to be in liquor when ſhe came into the houſe?——I did not take notice, ſhe might or might not.

Proſecutor. She was generally intoxicated, I wiſh lenity to be ſhewn her, they begged mercy from me when the conſtable came to the door.

GUILTY.

Impriſoned one month in Newgate.

(DAVID LEVY ſworn an Interpreter.)

THOMAS WOOLSLEY ſworn.

I was going to the King's-Arms, Leadenhall-ſtreet, about eight or half after eight in the evening, on the 15th of November; I ſtopped to hear ſome people quarrelling, the priſoner laid hold of me and joſtled me againſt the wall, the corner of a paſſage; I had a ſtick in my hand, I was almoſt incapable of taking care of myſelf, ſhe fumbled about me, and uſed me roughly; I miſſed my purſe.

Was it by your conſent ſhe fumbled you about?——No, I ſhoved her away from me.

Where was your purſe?——In my right-hand breeches pocket; as ſoon as ſhe left me I put my hand to my pocket, and miſſed my purſe; ſhe went from me about five yards, and I called out ſhe had robbed me; I laid hold of her arm, and took her to the public-houſe; I ſaid I was robbed, and ſent for a conſtable; who took her to the watch-houſe and ſtripped her naked, and ſearched her, and found the two bags of brimſtone under her arm.

Was any thing elſe found?——No.

Was you in the croud?——I was not.

WILLIAM COOK ſworn.

I am conſtable, I was ſent for to ſearch the woman, Mr. Perrot ſaid, let me ſearch her; ſhe ſtripped, and I found the two bags of brimſtone under her arm.

———— PERROT ſworn.

Under her arm I found the two bags of brimſtone, I then ſent for a woman to ſearch her further, the proſecutor was in liquor.

PRISONER'S DEFENCE.

I was going of an errand, and a little girl dropped the two bags, and I picked them up and put them under my arm.

Court to Woolſey. Did you loſe a pocket-book?——I did out of my coat pocket.

GUILTY.

JOHN PRATER ſworn.

I only know the lead to belong to the proſecutor, that was taken off the ciſtern.

JOHN KERNES ſworn.

I was walking round the buildings belonging to Mr. Leiceſter, in Bridge-ſtreet, Black-friars; I heard ſomething fall very heavy, it was about ſeven o'clock in the evening, I ſaw the priſoner folding up the lead, I aſked him what he was going to do with it, he ſaid he would be glad I would help him to put it ſomewhere, where it would be ſafe, I ſaid I would take care of him, and he ſhould be ſafe; I went to fetch ſomebody from the public-houſe to [illegible] one of the [illegible] the watchmen to the [illegible] the patrol came to my aſſiſtance and took him.

—— CLEMENTS ſworn.

I am one of the patrol, we were ſix of us together, facing the New-buildings, oppoſite [illegible], and John Kernes ſaid he wanted a conſtable, and I took the man.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

24. JOHN WILLIAMS was indicted for ſtealing, on the 9th day of November laſt, ſome linen ſheets, value 20s. two linen pillow caſes, value 5s. and one check apron, value 1s. the property of William Aſhton.

ELEANOR ASHTON ſworn.

I am wife to William Aſhton, I live in Princes-ſtreet, Weſtminſter; on the 9th of laſt month, about half paſt three in the afternoon, I went acroſs the way, and returned home immediately, and found the priſoner in a little room adjoining my ſhop in a great paſſion, he ſaid he wanted change for ſixpence; I miſſed the ſheets from a large table, where they lay when I went out, and [illegible] ſide of him on a little round table, I found a bundle wrapped up in a coloured apron, which he had taken off a chair; I rather undid the bundle, and ſaw my ſheets; I laid hold of the priſoner, and called for aſſiſtance; he ſaid he had taken nothing.

THOMAS WHITE ſworn.

I was called by the laſt witneſs, and found the priſoner in the room.

Mrs. ASHTON ſworn.

Theſe are the things that were delivered to me, I gave them to my huſband.

(William Aſhton produced the things, which were depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went to Weſtminſter on Lord Mayor's day with another young man, and we went to a public-houſe to have ſomething to drink, and he ſaid, let us have ſomething to eat; I went acroſs the way to this gentlewoman's ſhop, there was nobody there, I went into the parlour and knocked with my foot, and called out; at laſt I turned myſelf round, ſhe came acroſs the way, and aſked me what I wanted; I ſaid an halfpenny worth of onions, ſhe looked round, and ſaid you are a thief, what have you got in your pockets; I never touched the things.

—— JONES ſworn.

When I was taking him before the face of Juſtice, he turned round to another man, and ſaid, you get off, for when you ſee me bound, it is time for you to get away.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

25. THOMAS

26. THOMAS WILKIE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of October laſt, one leather pocket-book, value 3s. 6d. four other leather pocket-books, value 3s. one New Teſtament, value 1s. 6d. one Spelling Dictionary, value 2s. one Compleat Letter-writer, value 1s. 6d. one Hervey's Meditations, value 2s. one Tragedy of Zara, value 1s. 6d. the property of Henry Fourdrinier, William Bloxham, and Joſeph Walker.

HENRY FOURDRINIER, Sen. ſworn.

I am a ſtationer in Lombard-ſtreet.

Who are your partners?——William Bloxham, and Joſeph Walker; and were ſo on the 16th of October laſt.

Did your porter Wilkie live with you at that time?——Yes.

Did he abſcond?——He did on the 17th about eleven o'clock, and he returned no more; I firſt of all went to a public-houſe and ſaw him, I think in company with one How; I ſaid to him, you are in company with that gentleman; he ſaid no; then I went to his houſe in May's-pond, in the Borough; Robert Marſh, my foreman knew his houſe.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. How long has the priſoner lived with you?——Many years.

You ſuppoſed him to be an honeſt man?——I did.

JAMES IVES ſworn.

You went to ſearch this man's lodgings with Ward?——Yes.

What did you find there?——Theſe pocket-books.

Where did you find them?——In the bed-room, theſe three pocket-books were found tied up in his wife's ſtays, ſome in a coat pocket, and ſome in a cupboard.

ROBERT MARSH ſworn.

I am ſervant to Bloxham and Co. I know the priſoner, he lived at No. 7, I believe in May's-pond, Southwark; I had been at his houſe that day that he abſconded, the 17th day of October.

Mr. Garrow. Was you ever in company with the priſoner?—Yes, Sir, I have many a time, and I have been there when he was ill, I always underſtood him to be a married man; I have ſeen the perſon that paſſed for his wife.

Mr. Garrow to Henry Fourdrinier. You have paid ſomebody ſome money, by whoſe direction was it?——The priſoner directed me to pay it for him, for rent.

To Mr. Fourdrinier, Jun. Do you know of your own knowledge what houſe thoſe people ſearched?——I had been there ſeveral times, I was there with Ives.

Then was the houſe that you was at with Fourdrinier the Elder, the houſe that you ſearched?——Yes, (The books depoſed to.) When he was before the Magiſtrate, I took this book.

Mr. Garrow. Was his examination taken down?——I believe it was, I am not poſitive.

Marſh. I took this book in my hand, and ſaid, Wilkie, you cannot deny that you took this book from our houſe, meaning the houſe of Fourdrinier and Co. he replied, that he could not; I was preſent when he was apprehended, they denied his being there, and he was found in the cock-loft; he afterwards told me, that hearing my voice, he got up into a cock-loft; I ſwear to this book by a private mark, and I have no doubt of the other.

Ives. I took the priſoner at Buckingham-gate, in a cock-loft.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

In 1770 I took a houſe in Tooley-ſtreet, and made it into a ſhop, to ſell butter, cheeſe, and bacon; then I went into another way, and ſold paper, pens, and ink, and other things; I have people here in Court to teſtify the ſame; having no family I went to live with Mr. Fourdrinier, I kept the ſhop a year.

Mr. Silveſter to Proſecutor. Have you ſince that time altered your ſhop mark?——Yes.

Is that the altered mark?——Yes, when we part with ſervants who know our marks, I think it very right to alter them.

Priſoner. Some of theſe things are what remained of that ſtock, but ſeparate books, one or two I may have bought ſince elſewhere.

Court to Priſoner. Can you give any explanation of what you ſaid to young Mr. Fourdrinier, that you could not deny but you took the book from their houſe?——I do not recollect it.

The priſoner called nine witneſſes who gave him an exceeding good character.

GUILTY.

He was recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

28. JOHN RICE was indicted for felonioufly ſtealing on the 28th day of November laſt, one linen handkerchief, value 2s. the property of Louis Jacques, privily from his perſon.

LOUIS JACQUES ſworn.

The 28th of November, I was ſtanding in the Court of King's Bench, I was inſide the Court, it was very crouded and full, I came out again; a gentleman came out, who was clerk to another attorney, he ſaid he had loſt his handkerchief, I felt in my pocket, and I ſaid I had loſt my handkerchief. About five minutes after the priſoner was brought out of the Court by the proſecutor on the next indictment, I put my hand in his pocket, and pulled out ſeveral handkerchiefs, and among the reſt, my own handkerchief.

Have you ſeen him ſince you was in Court?——I ſaw him cloſe to me in Court, but I did not take the leaſt notice of him; he was brought into Court, and I was bound over to proſecute him, the handkerchief I have here is my handkerchief, I bought it at a ſale, it is marked with an E.

What is the value of that handkerchief?—They have laid the value at 2s. but I do not think it worth ſo much.

How much value do you put upon it?—I do not think it worth above 8d. or 9d. the priſoner's wife called at my houſe with two children, and told me her huſband had a good character, I took the trouble, and went to enquire at different places in the neighbourhood, and he had a very good character.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner in Weſtminſter Hall, and in a minute my handkerchief was picked out of my pocket, I came out of Court, went in again, and I ſaw him picking another gentleman's pocket; ſeeing him do that, I took him by the collar, and hauled him out from under the green curtains; and I ſaid, if you picked that gentleman's pocket, you picked mine;

I wanted to go away and get my handkerchief, which was in his pocket, with three or four more, and I was hauled into Court to proſecute this man.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I had been at work all day, and carried home a pair of ſhoes, and I went into the Hall, and there was a croud, and I went to ſee what was the matter, and the handkerchiefs were all ſtrewed about the Hall, and I picked up ſome.

GUILTY, 10d.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

29. The ſaid JOHN RICE was again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 28th day of November laſt, one linen handkerchief, value 14d. the property of John Armſtrong, privily from his perſon.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I ſaw him pick another perſon's pocket, and I ſeized him, ſays I, you thief, give me my handkerchief, you have picked my pocket; I put my hand into his pocket and found my own handkerchief and three or four more; I know my handkerchief by a hole in the corner, it is the value of 14d. or more.

GUILTY, 10d.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

30. JOHN CROPPER and JOHN BARFORD were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 1ſt day of November laſt, one hair trunk, value 12d. four ſilk gowns, value 40s. one ſilk apron, value 2s. ſix linen ruffled ſhirts, value 30s. one plain linen ditto, value 3s. ſix frocks, value 6s. a ſilk cloak trimmed with fur, value 5s. two linen gowns, value 20s. one petticoat, value 4s. ſix children's nightgowns, value 5s. a yard of printed cotton, value [illegible] two linen table-cloths, value 10s. one child's linen clout, value 12d. one ſilk petticoat, value 5s. a counterpane, value 10s. ſix pillow-caſes, value 12d. a pair of ſtays, value 4s. one box iron, value 12d. a pair of ſteel ſnuffers, value 12d. a ſnuffer-ſtand, value 6d. a blanket, value 6d. ſix yards of ſilk ribbon, value 12d. one gauze cap, value 1d. the property of William Spencer.

I am one of the proprietors of the Goſport waggon; I know nothing of the matter.

GEORGE HOLDAWAY ſworn.

I was driving the Goſport waggon to London, Mr. Spencer is one of the proprietors; I ſtopped to put down four pockets of hops at Brentford, and a man overtook me, and fell into diſcourſe with me, what countryman I was, and I told him; the man was on foot, he ſaid it was very bad wet weather, and at Turnham Green he would treat me with two pints of beer, and we came to Hammerſmith, and between Hammerſmith and London the waggon was robbed; I do not know how I was robbed, I miſſed two large boxes and a hat box, and more articles, I cannot tell what the reſt was; the man that joined me came about a mile and half, he left me on this ſide of Turnham Green, I could not tell the direction of the boxes; I put up at the New Inn in the Old Bailey; there were two boxes and a hat box, I ſaw the boxes the next day, I did not ſee them put in the waggon, I ſaw them in the waggon, but I miſſed two of them; the two boxes I miſſed were put in the fore part of the waggon; I ſaw them there, and the hat box in the fore part of the waggon.

Did the man that joined company with you go into the waggon at all?—Not that I ſaw, I ſaw the boxes the next day at Bow-ſtreet.

Do you know the man that joined company with you?——No, I do not.

JOHN WHITE ſworn.

I live at the Coach and Horſes this ſide Turnham-Green, Cropper was the man that treated the waggoner at my maſter's houſe, I am ſure he was the man, I took notice of him, they ſtaid about a quarter of an hour, they went off together, nobody elſe was with them.

JOHN GARFIELD ſworn.

I live at the coach and horſes, I am hoſtler, the priſoner Cropper came over and called for a pint of hot, and the waggoner brought it acroſs the road, I ſaid waggoner where is your hay, he ſaid in the waggon, I ſaid I do not chuſe to get into any body's waggon, they walked together about one hundred yards, then I ſaw the priſoner Cropper leave the waggoner and leap into the fore part of the waggon.

Could not the waggoner ſee him?——I do not know that.

How far was you off?——About one hundred yards.

The waggoner and he were together?——Yes.

What became of the waggoner?——As ſoon as ever he got into the waggon, the waggoner croſſed the tail of the waggon and went on the right ſide of the horſes.

Was it poſſible that the waggoner could not ſee that?——I ſhould think he muſt have ſeen it.

Was the waggoner drunk or ſober?——As he was a little elevated in liquor, I bid him take care of himſelf and the waggon.

Priſoner Cropper. At Bow-ſtreet this man ſaid upon his oath, he could not ſwear whether I was the man or not, and the Juſtice ſaid if he did not ſwear to me he would commit him too, and he ſaid then that is the man to the beſt of my knowledge.

Court to Garfield. Are you ſure now he is the man?——Yes, I am clear he is the man.

PETER THOMAS ſworn.

I am one of Sir Sampſon's patrol, near Kenſington turnpike, I have theſe things which I produce; on Tueſday the 1ſt of November, between ſix and ſeven, we met three men about five or ſix lamp poſts on this ſide of Kenſington turnpike, the two firſt men paſſed us, I wiſhed them a good night, and I paſſed Cropper, who had this box on his head, I turned round and caught him by the collar and ſaid what have you there, he ſaid a box, I ſaid, where did you bring it from? he ſaid, from the other end of Hammerſmith, and ſaid the two men that were before him had hired him to carry it, the other two men ran off as faſt as poſſible; I detained Cropper, I kept him ſome time, I ſearched him and found theſe two child's clouts in his coat pocket, one in each pocket, this cap and blanket were in his breeches, and a woman's cap and ſome pieces of ribbon, ſome in his breeches and ſome in his pocket, and a knife; in the courſe of this time one of my brother patrol's brought the other priſoner Barford, I aſked Cropper if he knew him, he ſaid he never ſaw him before, I ſaid, did not you tell me the two men that were before you hired you to carry it? then he ſaid it was the other man with the cockade in his hat that hired him to carry it, which man is not apprehended; I took him to the three tons at Kenſington, and put him into a back room, and while I was in the room the priſoner Barford ſays to Cropper, ſtick to that, and that will do, I then tied him, the things I took from him I delivered to Mr. Maynard.

SAMUEL MAYNARD ſworn.

I was along with Thomas, I followed the priſoner Barford into a garden two or three hundred yards off, when Cropper was taken with the box, the two men that were before ſaid to one another, run on you b——r, we are done; they jumped over a wide ditch into a field, and ran ſome diſtance and parted, and the little one ſtooped under a gooſeberry-buſh, I aſked him what made him run away, but he would not give me any anſwer; I have had the things in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, they are the ſame things.

JOHN JEFFRIES ſworn.

All that I know is, that this is the identical trunk that was loaded in the waggon at Goſport.

Was there any direction upon it?—Yes, it was directed for Colonel Cheval, there is no direction upon it now, it is torn off; I took particular notice, there were other articles for the Colonel beſides theſe, I know it by the cording, when I firſt ſaw it in Bow-ſtreet one corner of the card was on, there was enough for me to read, (looks at it) there is not enough of it on now to be legible, but when it was at Bow-ſtreet there were ſeveral bits on then, I am quite ſure it is the ſame box; there were two deal boxes, this hair trunk, one little box covered with a mat, and a clock in a caſe, and two lead weights, all directed to the Colonel, and a three-cornered wainſcot hat-box, directed to the Colonel, that is not found.

Maynard. The other man that got away had a gentleman's hat with a cockade in it; Barford, when I apprehended him, had two hats on.

Can any body prove the property any further?—No, the lady that the property belonged to came to the office and ſaw the box opened.

Court to Jeffries. You do not know of courſe what the trunk contained at Goſport?——I do not, but I am certain ſure that is the trunk.

PRISONER CROPPER's DEFENCE.

I was coming up to town to ſee for work, and juſt by Hammerſmith I ſaw theſe petticoats and that little thing laying, I put them into my pockets and into my breeches a little further, there was a man and he employed me to carry that box, and promiſed to give me two ſhillings and ſome beer, he ſaid, take up the box and follow me, I did ſo, and through the town I went, and this man came up to me, and being a wet night, they bid me a good night, and he went to the man that was before me, and we met the patrole, they gave the man the time of the night, and they came up to me, ſays they what is here, ſays I, I cannot tell, it is that gentleman's in the cocked hat before me, that gentleman he ran away, and I ran after him; I took up the box again and carried it again, I was very glad of the money, I had but one ſhilling and one halfpenny when they ſearched me, I came from Cheſhire about three months ſince.

PRISONER BARFORD's DEFENCE.

I live at Stains, I had left my place and was coming up to town, and this gentleman, juſt as I was coming paſt, ſtopped me with the trunk, and I did not know who they were, and I ran to ſave my money.

Both Guilty, 39s.

31. ROBERT HANSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the [illegible] of December laſt, [illegible] dead fowls, value [illegible] two dead geeſe, [illegible] dead ducks, value 18d. and one pound weight of ſauſages, value 2d. the property of William Haſlar.

WILLIAM HASLAR ſworn.

I live in Oxford Market, I am a poulterer; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment on the [illegible] of December, and on the [illegible] of December I ſaw the priſoner at the watch-houſe with the dead fowls, which he ſaid he bought at a ſhilling apiece, I found nothing elſe.

THOMAS BALL ſworn.

I am a higler, I come from Hanwell-heath, heath. I ſold the proſecutor twelve fowls, the 1ſt of this month, they were picked and fit for ſale, and they were the very fowls that I ſold Mr. Hallar. I am ſure of it, I killed them and picked them myſelf, and I can ſwear to my fowls in every poulterer's ſhop in London; I do not pick them like other people, I have a different way of picking them, there are different ways of dreſſing a fowl; I know my fowls, and I know the fowls of another man that lives by me.

Court to Proſecutor. Can every higler ſwear to his own fowls?——The countries differ, and this man ſets his fowls fuller than moſt.

Do you know this man's fowls that you bought of him?——They had been thrown in the dirt, and very much diſfigured, or elſe I could have ſworn to them.

Court to Ball. Were they clean when you ſaw them?——No.

[illegible]TON ſworn.

I am the proſecutor's journeyman, when I came to the ſhop, [illegible] of this month, about eight in the morning, I found the ſtaple [illegible] and the padlock gone, and twenty-[illegible] large fowls, two large geeſe, and two large ducks miſſing; I ſaw the dead fowls with the priſoner, I cannot ſwear to them, but I am ſure they are my maſter's.

Counſel. Then why cannot you ſwear to them?——Becauſe I would not wiſh to ſwear to them.

Proſecutor. This man is only a porter, he is not a poulterer.

THOMAS YOUNG ſworn.

I and Philip Welch took the priſoner, the 9th of December, in Holborn, with ſix fowls; he ſaid, he had ſome things of his own, and I might go home with him if I liked; he would not let me ſee them, nor have them at firſt, after that he ſays, damn your eyes! take them; the fowls lay in the mud a few minutes, they were in a handkerchief not tied; going along I aſked him where he got them, and he ſaid, he knew better than to tell me, I gave information of every public-houſe, and the proſecutor heard of it.

PHILIP WELCH ſworn.

Confirmed the above account.

Court to Ball. Were the heads on the fowls?——Yes.

Is it by the heads you ſwear to them?——No, I cannot form any idea to you, but by what I have in my own breaſt.

Jury to Ball. Did you ſell any other perſon in the ſame trade, fowls of the ſame ſort, as thoſe you ſold to the proſecutor that day?——No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I bought ſix fowls for ſix ſhillings, I told the men ſo that took me.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

GEORGE RAWLINSON was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting John Biſhop on the King's highway, on the 9th day of December, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, one gold laced hat, value 18s. the property of Charles Dawes.

JOHN BISHOP ſworn.

I am 13, I know the nature of an oath, if I take a falſe oath, I am in danger of hell fire, and to be puniſhed by the law of my country. I was going into Jermyn-ſtreet laſt Friday night, I cannot juſtly ſay the time, but ſome time about 7 in the evening; I was going along Queen-ſtreet, and I ſaw the priſoner, I thought he was gone on before, but he croſſed the way and came behind me, and ſnatched the hat off my head, and almoſt pulled me down; he ſaid nothing to me, nor offered any other violence; he ran away, and I cried ſtop thief, and he was taken; I am ſure the perſon that the gentleman took was the ſame that ſnatched my hat, I did not know him before.

JOHN FISHER ſworn.

I took the priſoner, who was running very hard; on the cry of ſtop thief, he dropped the hat, and I took it up; I ſhewed the boy the hat, and he owned it.

(The hat depoſed to.)

Biſhop. I live with Mr. Charles Dawes, Apothecary, in Newman-Street.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

Guilty

Of ſtealing, but not of the robbery.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

32. JAMES SMITH was indicted for burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Ann Arnold, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 1ſt day of November laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one cotton gown, value 10s. one petticoat, value 10s. the property of Robert Wright.

ELIZABETH WRIGHT ſworn.

I gave a cotton gown and petticoat to Mrs. Clarke to waſh.

ELIZABETH CLARKE ſworn.

I take in waſhing, I had a gown and petticoat from Mrs. Wright to waſh on the 24th of October; I live at No. 101, Fetter-lane, the houſe of Ann Arnold; I ſent the gown and petticoat to be mangled, to Mrs. King, No. 6, Magpye-alley, and when it was brought to my apartment I was out at work, and I never ſaw it after 'till I ſaw it at the Rotation Office.

A bundle was brought from the mangler by Mrs. Clarke's daughter, into my ſhop, the 1ſt of November; I told her when ſhe came into the ſhop, to carry it into a little room adjoining my ſhop, which ſhe did, and ſhe put it on the drawers under the window, and when I came to look for it in the ſpace of ten minutes, the window was up, and the gown and petticoat gone.

Had the window been ſhut before?——Yes, I am ſure of that, quite cloſe down, but not faſtened.

Where did the window look into?——Into the Raven paſſage, it was the ground floor.

When had you ſeen the window before?——About a quarter of an hour before, I am ſure it was then ſhut, it is a lifting up ſaſh.

Did you ſee Mrs. Clarke's daughter put the gown there?——I was very buſy, I did not ſee where ſhe put it.

ELIZABETH KING ſworn.

I gave this child a gown and coat to take home, a ſtriped cotton one.

JOHN GIBBONS ſworn.

On the 1ſt of November, between eight and nine at night, I was ſtanding at the end of the paſſage, and I ſaw the priſoner and another ſtand oppoſite to Mrs. Arnold's ſhop for the ſpace of ten minutes, then they went through the Raven paſſage, and the priſoner went in at the other ſide there, and looked at it.

On the 1ſt of November, about nine, I was going down Holborn with one John Webſter, and juſt beyond Southampton buildings I met the priſoner with one William Kendrick, and one of them ſaid, there goes Meecham, I turned round, knowing them, and they both ran away, and I obſerved the priſoner with a bundle under his arm in this old handkerchief, I purſued him beyond the grotto, and I ſaw him throw the bundle over into the area of one Mr. Knight's; I left Webſter there, and purſued after him about ten yards, and he fell down, and I took him, I knew him before; Kendrick ran acroſs Holborn; then I brought him to the door of Mr. Knight's, and I knocked at the door, and the bundle was given to me by a woman out of the area, the ſame bundle that I ſaw him throw over; I immediately took him to the Juſtice, and he ſaid he found the gown and petticoat the bottom of Holborn Hill: the property was advertiſed from the office, and was claimed by Mrs. Wright.

Priſoner. Aſk Mr. Meecham if he had not a warrant againſt me for an aſſault at that time?——Yes, I had.

I was in company with Meecham between eight and nine, and I met the priſoner and another, I ſaw him have a bundle under his arm, I ſaw him throw it down an area, I ſaw it handed up, that was from the ſame area.

Meecham. Mrs. Wright deſcribed the property as ſoon as ever ſhe ſaw it at the Juſtices.

(Depoſed to by Mrs. Wright.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I found the bundle in a court, I ſtopped to buy a halfpenny worth of apples, and I ſaw Meecham, and I knew he had a warrant againſt me, and I ran away; the man he ſays was Kendrick, was a man that lodges with me; ſeeing Meecham follow me, I careleſsly threw the bundle away; I have been fifteen years at ſea, nine years in the Weſt Indies, and all my friends are dead.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not of the burglary.

34. JOHN OLDFIELD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th of December, two hundred pounds weight of lead, value 50s. the property of William Lloyd.

And HUGH COOPER was indicted for feloniouſly receiving part and parcel of the ſaid lead, knowing it to be ſtolen.

On Sunday ſe'nnight about half paſt eight I came home from a chapel that I always go to, and news was brought me that ſome of my lead was ſtolen; accordingly I went to the Croſs-keys, in Bulſtrode-mews, for there is a coach-maker's ſhop belonging to me, which I was going to cover with lead, and I found a piece of lead in the public-houſe.

Was there anything by which you could know that lead?——Very well, becauſe there had been three pieces of lead in the ſhop, which weighed two hundred and a half; the coach-maker's man is here, that locked the door.

JOSEPH ENGLISH ſworn.

On Saturday in the afternoon, Oldfield came to the ſhop, and abuſed his father very much, who was at work there, in ſlating; I reprimanded him for ſo doing, and he came into the loft, and ſtaid ſometime, he then went up another ladder to another different part of the loft, and took a ſurvey of the roofs all round, he ſtaid up about a quarter of an hour, and came down, and I ſaw him no more then.

Where was the lead laying?——In the loft, right by where I worked; after taking a ſurvey of the premiſes, and going up to the roof a ſecond time, he came down and went off; he did not take anything away with him then, I am poſitive; I ſhut up ſhop after that, the door was locked by the apprentice; and on the Monday morning, we watched for him, at a muffin maker's, in Barret's-court, his name was Wilmot, when we got a ſearch warrant, we went up ſtairs, and found the priſoner Oldfield there, and the lead over in a loft; there was a woman the wife of the priſoner, Hugh Cooper rents the room, here is a piece of the lead.

Do you know whoſe lead that is?——I cannot ſay, it was cut to pieces.

Lloyd. I am confident it was my piece of lead, there have been four pieces originally, each of theſe pieces was fourteen inches wide, and ſixteen feet and a half long, all the four pieces were cut out of one ſheet, and all alike, one was put in this place, the other three were taken away.

DANIEL NEWSON ſworn.

I am conſtable of the pariſh, and I apprehended Oldfield in Cooper's apartments, and we found the lead hid over a ſort of a cockloſt; we took it down, and took the priſoner to the Rotation-office; Cooper was out, and he came in before I went away with Oldfield; I took Oldfield, I had no warrant againſt Cooper, but he went to clear himſelf, and was committed from the Rotation-office; he and his wife both went, and they proved their marriage, otherwiſe they would both have been committed.

What did Cooper ſay about it?——He ſaid he knew nothing at all about it, I know nothing to the contrary.

THOMAS HODGSON ſworn.

I was going down to the ſtable about half after ſeven, and I met Oldfield, I aſked him what he had, ſays I, have not you lead there? no, ſays he, let me go; ſays I you ſhall not go this time, I caught hold of him, and he flung down the lead and ran away; this is part of the lead, it was weighed the next morning, and it weighed about five ſcore and five pounds.

Lloyd. There were four pieces in all, three were found, two at Hugh Cooper's apartment, and one piece this laſt witneſs detected him with; theſe two pieces that were found at Cooper's were cut into twelve pieces, I put them twelve pieces together, and they all matched.

What length did they make amongſt them?—They made juſt two pieces of ſixteen feet ſix inches and a half over, they had not the half-inch originally; the piece that was dropped by the ſtables was not tried by me or by any witneſs here.

Court to Engliſh. The piece of lead that you produced was one of the twelve pieces?——It was.

Court to Lloyd. From this circumſtance you believe the lead to be your's?——I have not a doubt about it.

PRISONER OLDFIELD'S DEFENCE.

I went on Sunday evening into the Mews, by the Croſs-Keys, I found this lead and I picked it up on a dunghill, I took one of the pieces and brought it on my ſhoulder to Hugh Cooper's houſe, and I came back for the other piece, and I met this gentleman, and he ſaid he would have it, I told him I found it, he went to take it off and it tumbled down.

Court. Do you know of any connection between the two priſoners?—No.

The Priſoner Cooper called one witneſs, who gave him a good character.

JOHN OLDFIELD, GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

HUGH COOPER, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

35. ROBERT PARRY was indicted for that he, on the 13th day of December, thirty pieces of falſe and counterfeited money, made and counterfeited to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of the good, legal, and current copper money of this realm called an halfpenny, not being melted down and cut in pieces, unlawfully did ſell, pay, and put off to one James Jolly, at a lower rate than they were denominated for, to wit, for the ſum of one ſhilling, againſt the ſtatute.

Another count for ſelling the ſame at the ſame rate.

(The caſe opened by Mr. [illegible].)

JOSHUA PARISH ſworn.

I keep the Swan in Roſemary-lane, I was at home when the priſoner came in firſt, he had a pint of beer after. He came in, he gave me two-pence, ſoon after he had another pint, I obſerved the halfpence were all bad and of one make, I thought it had a bad look with it, and one of the perſons preſent, ſays, have you any more about you, will you ſell me a ſhilling's worth? yes, ſays he; how many will you ſell for a ſhilling? ſays he, I ſell fifteen pence for a ſhilling; he was telling out the halfpence, and we took him and ſearched him, and found eight ſhillings worth more about him; the priſoner wanted to take up the ſhilling, and I would not let him; Mr. Jolly ſaid, am not I juſtified in taking this man before a magiſtrate? yes, ſays I, certainly, and we did ſo; the halfpence are two different makes.

——— JOLLY ſworn.

I was at Mr. Pariſh's about ſix, and the priſoner was there, and I felt ſomething hit againſt me, ſays I ſell me a ſhilling's worth ſo he tendered the money, I laid down the ſhilling, he wanted to take it up, Mr. Pariſh would not let him.

JOHN NICHOLLS ſworn.

I am one of the moniers of the Mint, theſe halfpence were not made at the Tower lawfully.

Are they Government halfpence? —— They are not.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had been paying four and ſixpence, and theſe halfpence were picked out of them, Pariſh aſked me to give him a ſhilling's worth of halfpence in change, I laid them down and aſked for a ſhilling, and they ſaid we will not give you the ſhilling without you give us another three-pence, ſo rather than go without my ſhilling I put down three-pence more; Mr. Pariſh gave me the ſhilling, Jolly had no hand in that at all; I deal in cloaths, but in no diſhoneſt way.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

GUILTY.

To be whipped and impriſoned twelve months in Newgate.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

36. WILLIAM SHAFTO and SOLEY WRIGHT were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of November laſt, one hundred and fourteen pounds weight of logwood, value 8s. the property of James Potts.

A ſecond count, laying it to be the property of perſons unknown.

And THOMAS CLARKE was indicted for feloniouſly receiving the ſame knowing it to be ſtolen.

There being no evidence to affect the priſoners, they were

ALL THREE ACQUITTED.

THE WHOLE # PROCEEDINGS
UPON THE
KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

37. WILLIAM SNOWDEN, was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Thomas Hindes, on the King's highway, on the 22d day of October laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſilver watch, value 40s. a ſteel chain, value 2d. a braſs watch-key, value 2d. a ſtone ſeal ſet in gold, value 5s. his property.

THOMAS HINDES ſworn.

This boy ran againſt me with violence, as far as his ſtrength could, he rather overpowered me with his head and ſhoulders, and my watch was gone in an inſtant, ſo he made a retreat rather, and I purſued him and ſeized him about three yards off.

Did he take your watch or any body elſe?——That very boy.

You ſaw him take your watch?——Yes, he dropt the watch, a gentleman preſent ſaw him drop it, and he put it into his pocket, it was between eleven and twelve o'clock, in Roſemary-Lane.

JOHN COURT ſworn.

I ſaw this tranſaction, and he had not gone far before I got hold of him, I ſaw the chain in his hand, with the watch hanging out.

Was the ſtreet crouded?——No, I was alongſide of Mr. Hindes walking with him, and the boy was taking into cuſtody.

(The watch produced and depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEENCE.

I ſaw a great mob, I ran up to it, and I ſaw two boys; one ran one way, and one ran another, and this gentleman laid hold of me directly, and ſaid I was the lad; I know no more of it than the child unborn.

Proſecutor. There was no boy nearer than him, I am ſure that is the boy; I believe he robbed me once before.

Court. How old is the boy?—Fifteen.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not of the robbery.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

38. JOHN WELDON was indicted for feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Joſeph Young, about the hour of four in the afternoon, on the 15th day of November laſt, no perſon being therein, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one linen ſhirt, value 2s. a linen gown, value 11s. two aprons, value 2s. a cloth cloak, value 2s. four caps, value 1s. a handkerchief, value 9d. a ſilk hat, value 3s. a man's hat, value 2s. eight ſheets, value 24s. two pillow-caſes, value 1s. fourteen clouts, value 2s. one ſhift, value 3s. three caps, value 6d. one ſhirt, value 6d. one bedgown, value 6d. one blanket, value 1s. one linen petticoat, value 6d. one trunk, value 3d. his property.

I live on Saffron-hill, I am a carpet weaver; my houſe was broke open on the 15th of November laſt, it is my dwelling-houſe; I left it about four o'clock, I returned about twenty minutes after four, upon hearing the cry of ſtop thief in my yard; I work juſt by it; when I left my houſe, my door was double locked; I am ſure the windows were ſhut down, and pegged down in every part of the houſe; I have but one window, in what I call the front; I can ſay with certainty, when I left the houſe, that every part was faſt and firm; I always examine the windows, becauſe I have been robbed before; when I came back to the houſe, the door was faſt as it was when I left it, and my window was burſted out; I did not perceive that from without, I did not go round.

Which window was this that you found burſted out?——That in the yard, the back of the houſe was burſted open, and the pegs were broke off; they were pegged down with wooden pegs, I am ſure I left the windows firm and faſt; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, I ſaw them at the Juſtices's half an hour after; I did not know what I had loſt before, ſome were taken out in my preſence; the trunk was mine, there was no mark on it; I have no ſervant, I had ſuch a trunk as that ſtood under the window, that was burſt open; there was a door between the two rooms, it was not locked, it was thrown open; the lid of the trunk was broke, and the trunk I ſaw at the Juſtices's had the lid broke; I can ſwear to all the things that were taken, my wife was gone to work with me, and my children were with her.

HENRY HALLIMAN ſworn.

I am a carpet weaver by trade, on Thurſday evening, the 15th of November laſt, I was in my own houſe, next door to the proſecutor's, between four and five in the evening; and I was alarmed by one Elizabeth Powell, who had hold of the ſkirt of the priſoner's coat; and ſaid he was a thief! I ſeized him, and he had ſome mortar on his coat; there is a partition wall in my yard, which had been repaired a day or two before; I took him to my door, and he refuſed to go in it; we puſhed him in, and there lay a large bundle tied up in a coarſe ſheet; the back door is within two yards of wall, the things were found about ſix or ſeven yards from the wall; I took the priſoner in the ſtreet, about twelve yards from the things.

MARY CAVE ſworn.

I am a married woman, I lodge in Mr. Young's houſe; on the 15th of November, I was going into the yard, and ſaw the priſoner ſtanding by the door of theſe rooms; it was between four and five in the evening, I aſked the priſoner his buſineſs there; he ſaid nothing at all, he immediately jumped over the wall, which parts the yards of Mr. Young and the laſt witneſs; he jumped out of that yard into the other; when he got to the other ſide of the wall, he ſtood ſtooping; I left him, and met with Elizabeth Powell, and bid her watch the door; I got further aſſiſtance, I ſaw nothing about him when he jumped over the wall; I ſaw the things when they were brought out of the paſſage, but not before.

Was it light at this time?——It was duſkiſh, nobody was in Mr. Young's houſe.

Could you diſtinguiſh people very well?——Yes.

Have you any doubt about the man?——No.

ELIZABETH POWELL ſworn.

The laſt witneſs bid me watch, and I ſaw the priſoner coming out of the paſſage; and caught at him, and held him till the proſecutor and Halliman came up; the priſoner was about half a yard from the property, he made no reſiſtance, tho' he had a ſtick in his hand.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had been ſick, and came out for a little air; I ſtopped between theſe two doors, and they took me, and puſhed me into the paſſage.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing to the value of 10d. but not of the burglary.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

40. PETER FITZGERALD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of December, one hundred and twenty pounds weight of lead, value 10s. belonging to William White, Eſq; and then and there fixed to a certain out-houſe and ſtable of the ſaid William againſt the ſtatute.

JOSEPH ERRINGTON ſworn.

On Saturday morning laſt, the 10th of December, I was coming from my houſe at Kilburn to Paddington, I ſaw a man on the foot path before me, I ſaw him ſtooping down by the ſide of the ditch, and there was a baſket; when I came to him, he was buttoning his breeches; I aſked him if that baſket belonged to him, he ſaid it did, I aſked him what was in it, he ſaid, he dealt in oranges and lemons, and travelled in the country with them, and on his return home he gathered old flints and phials; I ſaid, I will help you up with your load, I found it was very heavy, ſays I, when you are tired of it, I will eaſe you with it: I aſked a man that I met, to aſſiſt me in looking at this; ſays he, who are you? ſays I, I live at Kilburn Wells; I and the priſoner lifted down the baſket, and then he ſaid he had got lead, and he hoped I would not hurt him; he ſaid, he never ſtole any in his life, I aſked him how he came by it, he ſaid he had bought it of two bricklayers in the Edgware-road, I aſked him what he gave for it, he ſaid ſix ſhillings and a pot of beer; I took the priſoner into cuſtody; the lead is here.

STEPHEN MALLARD ſworn.

I fitted the lead to the gutter, and it matched.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am a poor man that goes about the country with lemons and oranges, and coming along I met two men, and bought this lead of them; they ſaid it was no hurt, I gave them ſix ſhillings and ſeven-pence, becauſe there was no perſon near.

GUILTY.

To be impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

41. EDWARD DENNIS was indicted for felpniouſly ſtealing, on the 26th day of November laſt, two pair of velveret breeches value 20s. the property of John Stranger.

JOHN STRANGER ſworn.

I loſt two pair of breeches, on the 26th of November, out of my paſſage in Bear-yard: I keep a ſhop in Bear-yard, Lincoln's Inn Fields; it was about ten in the morning, they had not hung up two minutes before they were taken.

——— SHARP ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner taken, running down Bear-yard, between ten and eleven or thereabouts; I went to my own ſhop, and I purſued the priſoner, and found him with another boy in Stanhope-ſtreet, he had one pair of breeches under his coat, he ſaid, he had bought them, and that that boy would go with me to ſhew me, I told him he ſhould go with me, and when we went a few yards together, he threw away the breeches and run away, he was taken, I loſt ſight of him, I am ſure he is the ſame.

(The breeches depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The breeches were given to me, I live with my ſiſter, ſhe ſings ballads.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

42. JAMES WANT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th day of November laſt, one truck, made of wood and iron, value 40s. and four thouſand eight hundred copper halfpence, value 10l. the property of Elias Hibbs and William Bacon.

I am a rum and brandy merchant, my partner's name is Elias Hibbs: the priſoner was hired the 15th of November laſt to accompany our porter with a truck, and two caſks of liquor, from Monument-yard to Paddington, they went from our houſe between two and three: a truck is a ſmall carriage drawn by hands; I waited till paſt ten, and was alarmed the porter did not return, having ſomething particular for him to do the next morning: I apprehended the priſoner, and he declared he knew nothing of the matter, he told his ſerjeant that he was knocked down in Tottenham-court-road, and was robbed of ten pounds worth of halfpence; I told him it was very extraordinary that he did not immediately apply to us on his being knocked down to receive his wages, he ſaid, he was ſo frightened, he did not know what he did, that was every reply I could get from him.

I am ſervant to the proſecutors, I went with the priſoner to Mr. Kettle's at Paddington, and delivered the liquors, and Mr. Kettle gave me ten pounds worth of halfpence to take back with me, I put them in a ſack, and put them on the truck, we came along Tottenham-court-road, and almoſt at the bottom, I ſtepped on one ſide, and deſired the priſoner to take care of the truck, and the halfpence, and while I was out of the way the priſoner went off with the truck and halfpence and all.

How long were you before you miſſed it?——Not a minute, I ran down to St. Giles's as faſt as I could, and could ſee nothing of him, then I returned to the place where I left him, then I went home and he was not there, and then I went to St. James's and found out his quarters, I got his name and likewiſe his Colonel's name, I went to the Park next morning, which was a field day, and found him in the ranks, he ſaid he was knocked down, and the truck taken away from him.

Was there time for that to have happened while you was abſent?—No, there was not.

Was you perfectly ſober?—I was very ſober.

You are ſure this is the man?—I am ſure this is the man.

ELIZABETH JONES ſworn.

I live in Dyot-ſtreet, the priſoner lived with me, and when I came home he was at home in my room, I believe it was nigh eleven; I ſaw this money, it was tied up in parcels, I took it down to Weſtminſter, I never ſaw what was in it.

Who tied it up in parcels?—Me and another woman.

Where was it?—It was looſe upon the floor in a corner of the room, I firſt ſaw it when I went home at night, it was upon the floor, it was halfpence, but I did not know the quantity; I went with the priſoner to one of his comrade's wife's houſe with it, and in five minutes after, two ſerjeants came up and took the money from us; the truck was found on the 10th, in Bambridge-ſtreet among a parcel of rags, I ſaw H. B. on it.

On the 16th in the morning we had a field-day, and the two proſecutors and this old porter came and challenged the priſoner, and they went to get a warrant for him, I was ordered to confine him, we went and took the priſoner, and we went to a houſe in Weſtminſter, where one of our men lodged, and there I found three women, two about the money, and they threw their cloaks over it, and I took the money and brought it away, and I ſearched the two women and found a great many halfpence in their pockets.

ANN ALTON ſworn.

I went over and my huſband brought me the key, and in five minutes the two ſerjeants came up and took the money, it was in my room, we brought it to our room, this Elizabeth Jones and another.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, this porter hired me to go down to Paddington to carry ſome liquors, accordingly I did, and the people gave him ſomething to bring away, but what it was I cannot ſay, the porter ſaid it was ten pounds worth of halfpence, ſo he put them upon the truck, and away we came acroſs the fields; coming through Tottenham-court-road the porter ſays to me, I muſt ſtop here awhile, and you go forward, I will ſoon overtake you, and he had not left me very little while, but three men came up to me and knocked me down and took away the truck and what was upon it; and they ſaid if I made any violence or reſiſtance, they would take my life, and I never ſaw the truck nor what was upon it any more, that night.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

43. JANE LLOYD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of November, a copper tea-kettle, value 4s. the property of William Luſty.

ELIZABETH TARRANT ſworn,

Depoſed that ſhe ſaw the priſoner take the kettle out of the proſecutor's ſhop: the priſoner was purſued and taken with the kettle.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am not the woman, I know nothing of it; I have nobody to give me a character, I have not given any body any trouble, I was aſhamed of being in gaol, but I will give myſelf a character as well as I can.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

44. JOHN HOGAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 26th day of October laſt, five linen ſheets, value 20s. the property of Henry Hitchcock.

HENRY HITCHCOCK ſworn.

I keep a public-houſe in East-Smithfield, and between eight and nine in the evening I was ſtanding in the bar, and I ſaw the priſoner go out with a bundle under his arm, he had been about our houſe backwards and forwards for a fortnight, as he went out of doors he turned his face to me, and I ſaw it was the ſame man; in the morning at ſeven he came again, and I ſtopped him, my wife having miſſed the ſheets off three of the beds after he was gone; he denied it at firſt, and when he was at the Juſtice's he owned it; before I took him up I told him, if he would tell me where the ſheets were, I would forgive him, he would not do that till he came before the Juſtice.

Was there any promiſe after you brought the officer? —— Not afterwards.

CHARLES BROOME ſworn.

I live at No. 8, Park-ſtreet, Borough; the priſoner pawned two ſheets with my wife, I was preſent, he had five and ſixpence on them, he ſaid they were his own; preſently after a girl came that uſed to go of errands for him and his wife, the priſoner's wife is a genteel woman that nobody could ſuſpect any thing, ſhe wanted five and ſixpence upon the other two, we lent her three ſhillings upon them,

(Depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

What I have to ſay, Maſſa, is, ſend me to my country, to Bengal, and God bleſs you.

Court. You ſhould have taken care to have gone there honeſtly.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

45. MARY SCARBOROUGH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt of November laſt, a ſilk hat, value 3s. the property of Elizabeth Gurney.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

46. WILLIAM FRANCIS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 26th day of November laſt, one printed book, entitled, a Summary Account of the Flouriſhing State of the Iſland of Tobago, value 12d. and one other printed book, value 12d. the property of Robert Melville, Eſq.

GENERAL ROBERT MELVILLE ſworn.

I hired the priſoner about a year and a half ago, he remained in my houſe about three months, I was going out of town, I had no further occaſion for him, and I told him ſo, my opinion of him was ſo good that I told him he might remain in my houſe till he was otherways employed; I was out of town between three and four months, when I returned to town he was gone to a place, I miſſed ſome of my clothes and ſome of my books, but none of them were found but the two books in the indictment, which will be produced; I came home on the 18th of laſt month, and by information I took up the priſoner; I found that the drawer in the mahogany table, where I keep money, had been violently broke open, I alſo miſſed two bank notes, and the next morning I took all the common methods, the two books were afterwards found in ſearch. The priſoner was apprehended in Long-alley, Moorfields, and upon being ſearched nothing was found but the two books; Mr. Oldham, a gentleman, who went on my account, and Mr. Armſtrong, who took charge of the priſoner, were preſent.

JOHN OLDHAM, Eſq; ſworn.

I went, when the priſoner was apprehended, with the officers, he was apprehended in Long-alley; as I was naturally very anxious to find what he had ſtolen from the General, in a box which he owned to be his, I obſerved two books, and they were indorſed by the General, whoſe hand I knew perfectly well; I did not find any thing that I could ſay was the General's property, but I found ſome new tea-ſpoons, ſtamped ſince the act has taken place, and when I went in to the priſoner, as I had known him for four years, I ſaid let me ſee what money you have, he immediately took out a ſixpence out of his breeches pocket, and one of the men ſaid keep your hand out of your pocket, and ſeven guineas were found in his pocket.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I found theſe two books in the priſoner's pocket.

(Depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went into the gentleman's houſe one evening, and I went down ſtairs, I came up ſtairs again and came out and ſhut the ſtreet door, as I thought, behind me: after this robbery was committed, Mr. Oldham and two of the runners came where I lodged, and they aſked me what money I had, and I ſaid ſixpence, and in the confuſion I did not recollect the ſeven guineas.

How did theſe two books come into your box?—When I was there in the laſt ſummer, I was duſting the books and putting them away, and I got theſe two books and was reading them, I was teaching myſelf to read, and in a very great miſtake I put them into my box: here is a perſon here that I lent one of them to, I told him at the ſame time that the book was General Melville's.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

37. WILLIAM TILL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d of November laſt, three linen gowns, value 5l. a ſilk gown, value 40s. three pair of ſheets, value 50s. a ſilk cloak, value 20s. fourteen linen handkerchiefs, value 20s. nine yards of thread lace, value 40s. the property of John Henly, in the dwelling houſe of William Beach.

DOROTHY HENLY ſworn.

I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, it was ſeven weeks next Wedneſday ſince this man robbed me, it was on a Wedneſday, between three and four o'clock, on the 10th of November, I was gone out about three quarters of an hour; I went out about a quarter after two, I am a lodger, I left nobody in my apartment at all; when I returned, my door was broke open, and I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment; I never found any of the things again; the priſoner was the man that took care of my place, and he always profeſſed to take care of it, and took money for me, and took meſſages, and I left him at home; I told him I was going out.

Had he the key of your room?—No, I had it in my pocket.

Then it is for neglect of duty you charge him, for not taking better care?—No, Sir, it is no ſuch thing; when I came back, I aſked him if any body was looking for me, and he aſked me why I did not ſtay at home and take care of my place, and he ſpoke a very wicked barbarous word, I could not tell the meaning of it; I have a little boy, and I ſays to him, light a fire for me; ſays my little boy, this Till will pay all the money he owes in Leather-lane; about a quarter after nine I miſſed my things, I did not miſs them when I came home.

When you found your door was broke open, did not you look?—No, Sir, I did not, he has gone into my place very often before.

Did he ever break your door open before?—Never to my knowledge, only when my little boy would open it, when I was not at home, ſometimes he would puſh back the lock, the lock was now puſhed back.

That was a common thing?——The little boy uſed to do it, and I aſked the little boy if he broke the door open, and he ſaid he did not; the reaſon I have for ſuſpecting the priſoner, is, I have a fox dog, and he makes a great noiſe, and he barked and barked at a quarter paſt nine; I went to the loft door with a candle, and I ſaw this priſoner, and I called to him, and he had a great bundle of cloaths, but I do not know that they were my things; he made no anſwer then; in half an hour he came, and I told him I was robbed, and he d—ned me, and ſwore in a moſt ſad manner; I aſked him if he knew any thing of my little boy, and he ſaid he had ſent him of an errand; I ſaw nothing, but to the beſt of my knowledge and opinion, I ſaw my own yellow gown, I am poſitive ſure that it was my gown.

Do you ſwear that you ſaw your gown in his poſſeſſion?——To the beſt of my opinion, it was in that room lapped up in the ſheets, there was a ſleeve hung out, and I ſaw a robbin to it, I hallowed to him, but he did not come back, he went on, he was cloſe to me, he was going by the ſtable door.

Why did not you lay hold of him?——I was up ſtairs, and I had no opinion of his robbing me, he was under me, he was on the ground, I was on a flight of ſtairs; there is a hatch door, and I held down a candle to ſee who it was, and it was this man, this was four hours after I was robbed, it was nine o'clock, and I was at my own room by four o'clock at the furtheſt.

And can you ſwear, in that ſituation, that you ſaw your gown?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was my gown, I have no other witneſſes, I have nothing more to ſay.

Mr. Silveſter, Priſoner's Council. What is become of your witneſſes?——There was a young man that was apprentice to my ſon-in-law, but they would not let him come; it is ſeven weeks next Wedneſday; I went to Juſtice Blackborough the day after the robbery, and I did not get a warrant 'till the Friday.

Was not this man before the Juſtice on the ninth?——No, Sir, not to my knowledge; it is ſeven weeks next Wedneſday, I am ſure it was on a Wedneſday in the afternoon.

When did you go to the Juſtice's?——On Friday.

Mr. Silveſter. Is not your name Grey?——No, Sir, my other huſband's name was Grey, but he is dead, and I have been married to John Henley ſince that; I never was in this court but once, that is above twelve years ago, I have not been lately in this court by the name of Grey, nor as a witneſs.

Is Henley alive?——Yes, he does not live with me; I came home a little before four, and from that time I did not go out 'till paſt nine, then I went into Mr. Wolfe's, the public houſe, to look for this man, he was there, and ſat againſt the wall.

Did you charge him then with the robbery?——No, Sir, but I aſked him if he knew any thing about it, and he blaſphemed moſt ſadly.

Did you tell this man of the robbery at all, when you went to Wolfe's?——I aſked him if he knew what was come of my little boy; I had a ſuſpicion in my conſcience that he robbed me, I did not tell him ſo.

Why ſo?——Becauſe I thought he took my things to fetch them back again.

Then you did not think he robbed you?——Yes, I had a very great ſuſpicion he robbed me.

When you was in company at the public-houſe, did you ſay to him, that you had any ſuſpicion of him?——I aſked him why he did not take better care of my things; Mrs. Wolfe was preſent, and many more people that I do not know; ſhe heard me ſaying that I had loſt all my things.

When did you ſee this yellow gown of yours?—On the Wedneſday morning I ſaw it, that I was robbed; I ſaw it in the poſſeſſion of this man that ſame night, I ſaw him go out with a bundle of clothes, and afterwards I ſaw him at the public-houſe.

How came you not to charge him with it then?——I went up to this houſe in a little ſpace of time after, he was ſitting; and I aſked him, did you ſee my little boy; he damned me, I told him, O William, I am robbed of every thing in the world.

Did you tell him ſo?——Yes.

Why did not you charge him with it?——I did not.

How long after did you take out a warrant?——On Friday from Juſtice Blackborough's, he was taken up on the Saturday following.

Was not the reaſon that you did not take him up before, becauſe you and your friends, John Chambers and Hacking, had not laid your heads together, and concerted this plan?——We did not lay our heads together, they did not adviſe me to do any thing.

Did not you conſult with them?——No, I did not conſult with them neither.

Had you any converſation with them about it?——I aſked them to go with me before the Juſtice, I went to no ale-houſe; I met them in the ſtreet.

Where did you talk together before you went to the Juſtice?——In the ſtreet, going along I told them I was going to the Juſtice, againſt a man that robbed me.

What did they ſay?——I cannot tell, but they ſaid, if he had robbed me, he ſhould be puniſhed for it.

Do you know Bagſter that keeps the Sun?——Yes.

Was not you there in a back-room with Chambers, and Hacking?—Yes, but not in the morning before I went to the Juſtice, I will ſwear that, and ſwear it again.

You ſwear that you was not at Bagſter's, that keeps the Sun in Turnmill-ſtreet, that morning before you went to the Juſtice's?——No, I was at the Juſtice's before, and got a warrant.

When was you at the Sun in Turnmill-ſtreet, with theſe two people?——The Saturday after I was robbed; the man was taken up long before that, and gone down to the Juſtice's.

Why was not you there with Hancock?——No, he was not there till after the priſoner was committed to gaol.

Did not you make the poor boy drink?——No, Sir, I did not.

Not any body elſe?——No, no, Sir, that is very falſe.

Mr. Silveſter. Did Hancock go before the Juſtice with you?——Yes, Sir, he did.

For what purpoſe?——For the purpoſe as he ſaw him take my clothes out of the houſe; his maſter would not let him come; his maſter's name is John Millington.

This is a room over the ſtable?——Yes.

Who lives in this ſtable?——Nobody but the cattle.

What has Mr. Beach to do with it?——Why, becauſe he keeps his coach-horſes there.

Mr. Beach does not live there?——No, only his coach-horſes.

Court. Did you give Hancock any notice to attend?——No, Sir, I went there laſt week, and I aſked Mr. Millington and Mrs. Millington to be ſo kind as to let this lad come, and he ſaid he would not.

Why would not he let him come?——Becauſe, I ſuppoſe they would not let him come without money; and I had not money to employ any body, they aſked me what money I had, I told them I no money.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you tell this Hancock that you brought him before the Juſtice, and he muſt ſtand it?——I never did in my life.

Did you never inſtruct this boy what to ſwear, upon your oath?——No, never in my life, his maſter is my ſon-in-law, and yet he would not let him come.

The Juſtice took bail, did not he?——Yes, Sir, it was with my conſent that he took bail.

What are you?——An old clothes woman.

Court. Was any examination of her's returned?——No.

WILLIIAM HANCOCK ſworn.

What age are you?——About eighteen, I live in Mint-ſtreet, No. 14, with Mr. Millington; this woman brought me up when I was a child; my maſter is the ſon-in-law of this woman, he maried her daughter.

Who brought you here to-day?——Mr. Ruſſel.

Who is Mr. Ruſſel?——A coachman in Robinhood yard.

Who applied to you to come here?——He, himſelf.

What connection has he with the proſecutrix or the priſoner?——He came to me, and told me I was to come here and ſpeak the truth.

Then take care you do?——I know nothing at all about it, ſhe brought down a ſummons to me at night, on Tueſday night, which Lord Mayor's day was on Wedneſday, and told me I muſt come to her houſe to breakfaſt on Wedneſday.

What ſummons did ſhe bring you?——A ſummons from Juſtice Blackborough.

Did you go?——Yes, I went, then we had a breakfaſt; then ſhe ſent me out for a quartern of gin, I drank a part of it with her, then ſhe got ready to go away; and going down Saffron-hill we had part of another quartern; and when we had done there, we went to Turnmill-ſtreet, to Mr. Chambers, and there we had another quartern; and with that ſhe told me I was to take this falſe oath, to ſay that I ſaw this young man take theſe clothes, in a ſheet under his arm.

Upon your oath, did ſhe tell you to ſay ſo?——Yes, your Worſhip, ſhe did.

What elſe did ſhe tell you to ſwear?——To ſwear that I ſaw him take them out of a white ſheet, and take them up to the ſtable that was in the corner; ſhe ſaid to take that oath before the Juſtice, and that would commit him to gaol.

Did ſhe bid you ſay nothing elſe?——No, ſhe told me to ſtand to that.

Was that all?——Yes.

Recollect yourſelf again as well as you can, whether ſhe told you any thing elſe?——No, ſhe told me nothing elſe that I can remember, but I was very much in liquor when I came away from the Juſtice's; that I could hardly tell what I ſaid, or did.

Who was preſent when this converſation paſſed?——Nobody, but herſelf, and me.

Where was Mr. Chambers?——He was not come into the room at that time.

How came ſhe to pick you out for this particular buſineſs?—Becauſe ſhe thought I was one that ſhe reared up, and ſhe thought I would do, or ſwear any thing in the world for her; and ſhe took it upon that circumſtance, ſhe thought I would ſwear any thing for her.

Had you been at her place the day that ſhe loſt her things, at all?——No, I had not.

Upon your oath you had not?——Upon my oath I had not.

You are ſure of that?——I am certain ſure of that.

Did you never tell her that you had, before this time?——No, Sir, never.

You never told her that you had been there, or had ſeen any thing about it?——No.

Upon your oath, young man?——Upon my oath.

Court. Is there any body here from Mr. Blackborough's?

(Mr. Blackborough's clerk was ſent for.)

Hancock. I really aſk the Court's pardon with all my heart for what I have done, and will never do the like again; but it was very wrong in her to take an apprentice, and one that hardly knows a letter in a book.

Mr. Silveſter. If there is any doubt about the caſe, I will call two witneſſes.

Court to Hancock. Did your maſter keep you at home?——He could not ſpare me.

Court. Is any body here from Mr. Blackborough's, this is a very black buſineſs on the one ſide or on the other, and I am determined to get to the bottom of it.

WILLIAM BRACHNEY ſworn.

I belong to Mr. Blackborough's office, I can-

I cannot poſitively ſay whether I was at the office at the time of the examination; but I know ſomething of the buſineſs: this lad came with the proſecutrix, I do not recollect any body elſe; he had got a good ſtory when he did come, I believe it was the morning of Lord Mayor's day, I am not poſitive; I believe they were together before they went into the Juſtice's, and had been drinking at the public-houſe; the firſt I knew about the buſineſs, Mr. Iſaacs and I had a warrant to apprehend the priſoner; we went to look for him the firſt time, and could not find him; then the man came, Iſaacs took him, I was not by; he came before Mr. Blackborough, and they took his maſter's word to bring him the next day; then they got a ſummons for this lad, it was either the day that the priſoner came to Mr. Blackborough's, or the day before; when he came before Mr. Blackborough, he ſeemed to tell a very good ſtory; but to the beſt of my opinion, I think, he was learned that ſtory firſt; becauſe, I thought the woman was a very bad woman; I heard no converſation between the woman and the boy, before they went into the Juſtice's, I was in the office when they came in; I cannot pretend to ſay particularly, whether any body particular ſtood by the boy; when the woman went in, the boy ſeemed to be ſober, but ſhe was rather in liquor, for ſhe was full of jaw.

Then the boy was not ſo drunk, as not to know what he ſaid, or did?——I do not believe he was ſo drunk.

Who took the examination?—His clerk.

What is his name?——Edward Lavender; I believe the boy went in after this examination, to have his examination taken, but I cannot be poſitive.

Mr. Silveſter. Was Chambers there?—Yes, he was concerned in the buſineſs, he was concerned for this, he came with them, and was with them I believe before they came in.

Court. You do not think the boy was drunk?——I do not think he was, he did not ſeem drunk, I never ſaw him till he was brought in by Mr. Chambers and the woman, I never ſaw the woman before I went with her to ſerve a warrant on the priſoner, my reaſon for ſaying he was inſtructed is, I thought there was ſome people with them that might give them a little education, you know as well as I do, I do not like to mention people's names, but I thought ſo I aſſure you.

You thought this woman had got into bad hands in plain Engliſh?—I thought ſhe had got into hands that would give her a good leſſon; but this I am ſure, the place where Hancock ſaid he ſaw the man, it is impoſſible he ſhould ſee the lock broke off, for it is in a hay loft, and you are obliged to look down, he ſaid he had been in ſleep in this hay loft or ſtraw loft, but they are obliged to ſtand and look as if they were looking underneath this deſk, it is a place ſo dark, in my opinion, that it is impoſſible to ſee the door without leaning over.

Could he, in the hay loft, ſee the door without leaning over?—He could not, I am ſure of that, becauſe I was in the hay loft, it is the ſame as ſtanding at this bench and leaning over to look under it; at the time he was examined I think, to the beſt of my remembrance, it was ſaid, that it was a thing impoſſible that a man could ſee the lock brok open with a knife or any thing of that kind.

Court. Step for Lavender; and in the mean time examine the priſoner's witneſſes apart.

MARY WOLFE ſworn.

I keep a public-houſe in Leather-lane, the Robinhood and Black-boy, I have known the priſoner theſe three years, he lives in the yard adjoining to the houſe, that is, he works in the yard, Mr. Beach keeps coaches in the yard; on Wedneſday, the 2d of November, I very well remember the priſoner coming to my houſe about ten minutes before two, he was not out till five, the old-clothes woman came in at nine in the evening, and ſaid ſhe had been robbed, ſhe ſaid nothing to him about it, [illegible] was in the houſe at the time.

Did he make uſe of any improper language to her?——None at all, he never ſpoke to her nor ſhe to him, I know the old woman by living in the yard, it is an open yard, the priſoner is a very good honeſt man, I never knew any harm of him, he has uſed my houſe every day for three years, breakfaſt, dinner, and ſupper; the proſecutrix on the evening complained of being robbed, ſhe ſaid nothing to this man nor he to her, ſhe ſaid ſhe had been robbed, ſomebody had broke open her door, and taken a great quantity of things, ſhe run on with a great deal of it; I am ſure that day ſhe came to complain at my houſe, the priſoner came in at a quarter before two, and did not go out till five.

JOSEPH RICHARDSON ſworn.

I am a coachman, I know the priſoner, I ſaw him the 2d of November, at Mrs. Wolfe's, I went there a few minutes before one, he came a little before two, then we dined together, and he fell aſleep, and ſlept till his maſter came with the coach, till paſt four; I knew him very well, and I knew the old-clothes woman, I have ſeen Hancock before, but I never ſpoke to him, I ſaw him about two months before that in the yard, I never did ſee him above three times in my life, I did not ſee him at all that day.

Do you remember Hancock's coming to your office to be examined?——Yes, my Lord, it was on Lord-Mayor's day I believe; this information was taken by me from his mouth.

What ſituation did he appear to be in, drunk or ſober?——The time I examined him he appeared to have a good deal of terror upon him, and ſweat very much, and as he ſigned his name he could ſcarcely do it, he ſhook in ſuch a manner.

Did he appear drunk or ſober?——I believe he was perfectly ſober, I think ſo.

Who was with him when he was examined?——Mrs. Henley and young Mr. Chambers, and I think Mr. Hacking was in the office at the ſame time.

Had you an opportunity of paying any attention to him before he was examined?——No, my Lord, I had not.

You did not obſerve whether he converſed with her?——No.

On the firſt examination of Till, this lad was never mentioned by the woman?——I cannot tell when the firſt examination was, I believe it might be on Friday the 4th of November, nothing was mentioned of this lad then, the conſtable brought the priſoner on a warrant, and ſhe ſeemed to have ſo good an opinion of him, that ſhe deſired he might go; two or three days after he came himſelf, he was at liberty.

When was the firſt mention of this lad?——On the ſecond time that he came.

Court. Let the proſecutrix withdraw out of court.

Lavender. The firſt time that ſhe came, Mr. Blackborough told her that unleſs ſhe had more evidence than what ſhe had related herſelf, he could not think of committing him; when ſhe came again ſhe was attended by Mr. Chambers and Hacking, then ſhe ſaid ſhe had this Hancock, who could prove that he ſaw him take the things and break open the door, and deſired Mr. Blackborough to grant a ſummons, for his maſter would not let him come without, the ſummons was granted of courſe.

When was that?——I cannot recollect, but I am ſure it was a day or two before the ſecond examination.

Court to Hancock. Where were you, in truth, on the 2d of November, the day this robbery was committed?——I was at home at work, my maſter was very bad in bed, he could not get out of bed, he is a coach ſpring maker and tire ſmith; I was at work that day, on making an axletree; my maſter has four children, his wife is living; he has another journeyman beſides me, his name is Harper, I do not know his other name, but he was not at work with us at that time, we had another man at work with us that day, Robert Sellers.

Where is Sellers, now?——I do not know, I heard that he worked in Red-croſs-ſtreet, with a cart-wheel-wright.

Did you go to Mr. Henley's at any time between that Wedneſday the 2d of November, and the Tueſday following?—Yes, I believe, I went one night before ſhe brought the ſummons to me, to ſee her home.

How often had ſhe been at your maſter's after the 2d of November?——Not above twice.

When did ſhe come firſt?——I cannot rightly ſay, but I believe it was two or three days after ſhe was robbed; then ſhe ſaid, I have been robbed; ſays I, how comes that about? ſhe ſaid, I believe it was William Till that robbed me, but ſhe ſaid nothing to me that night about my giving evidence at all; ſhe ſaid ſhe ſuſpected Till, and would get a warrant to take him up on ſuſpicion, that was two or three nights before ſhe brought the ſummons; ſhe came to my maſter's afterwards, before ſhe brought the ſummons; ſhe did not ſpeak to me, I was at work, and ſhe did not offer to come into the ſhop.

When ſhe brought the ſummons, and deſired you to come to her the next morning, did ſhe tell you what it was for?—No, not before I had my breakfaſt.

Court. Call in Mrs. Henley. This lad Hancock lives with your ſon-in-law?——Yes, I knew him a great while.

How ſoon after the robbery, did you go to your ſon-in-law?——I went there the day after the robbery.

Did you ſee this lad then?——Yes, and I told my daughter that I was robbed.

Millington is your ſon-in-law's name?——Yes.

Was Hancock, the boy, preſent?—Yes, I believe he was.

Did you ſay anything to him in particular?——Nothing in particular; but he ſaid, he knew the man that robbed me, a ſhort man that takes care of the cattle, he told me that the day after the robbery, indeed he did.

Was your daughter preſent when he told you ſo?——I cannot tell indeed, I do not know indeed.

Did you go alone to talk with this lad?——I do not know whether my daughter was within or no.

Why, you told me this minute, that you told her of the robbery?—I told her of the robbery, and then I think the boy came in out of the ſhop, and I was crying ſadly, he ſaid, what do you cry for, I ſaid, I am robbed of all I have in the world; then ſays he, I know the man that robbed you.

He told you who it was then?——Yes, he told me ſo.

Did he tell you how he had ſeen him?—Yes, he did, he told me he was up ſtairs in the loft.

Was not your daughter there, or was ſhe gone?—I think ſhe was gone.

How came ſhe to leave you alone?——I do not know, ſhe had her family to mind.

Was your ſon-in-law at home?—No, I did not ſee him.

This was before you went to the Juſtice?——Now, really I do not know, I cannot tell, I do not recollect, I believe it was; I did not go to the Juſtice till the Friday in the afternoon, this was the Thurſday, the day after the robbery; it was the day before I went to the Juſtice's, and my daughter, Millington's wife, went with me to the Juſtice.

Did you tell your daughter what Hancock had ſaid?——I do not know, I was crying, and breaking my heart; I ſaid, I ſhall be obliged to come to the pariſh.

Then do you mean to ſay that you have any doubt whether you told your daughter, what the boy had ſaid to you?——No, my Lord, I did not, I believe, tell her; I do not think I did, for I had a very great ſuſpicion that he would hide the things, and fetch them back again; I did not tell my daughter what the boy had ſaid that day, I did not mind to tell her of it, I did not indeed think much of it, I was both crying and breaking my heart, I did not think much of it, and I did not know what to tell her, I thought he only took them away to frighten me like, and fetch them back again, I thought all this was a joke.

Then how came you to be ſo very uneaſy?

—Becauſe, I aſked him whether he knew anything about my things.

Why did not you tell the Juſtice of this other witneſs?—So I did, when I went again.

Why this was before the firſt time you went to the Juſtice?—Yes.

You did not tell him ſo at firſt?—No, I did not.

But why not?—I did not think nothing at all about it.

Why, the Juſtice told you he could not commit him without there was more evidence.

Court. Gentlemen, this laſt examination of this woman ſeems to put the matter out of doubt.

Jury. Certainly, my Lord.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, your opinion upon the evidence at preſent is, that there is ſtrong grounds to ſuſpect this woman with her confederates.

Jury. Certainly.

Court. Then I ſhall order her to be committed on the charge of ſubornation of perjury.

Mr. Silveſter. This is a poor man, I take it up out of charity; I will be at the expence of the proſecution.

Court. The Court will relieve you, Mr. Silveſter, by ordering a proſecution.

80. RICHARD WATTS and JOHN MALING were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Peter Fernhead, on the King's highway, on the 5th day of December laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one waggoner's whip, value 4s. 6d. the property of Richard Knowell.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.)

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of Mr. Peatt, priſoner's councel.

PETER FERNHEAD ſworn.

I was guard to Mr. Clarke's waggon, of Leiceſter, I went with the waggon through Barnet, the clock ſtruck ſeven as I was going through Barnet, when I came on Hadley-Green, I ſaw a man cutting the ropes of the off ſide of the waggon; that was Watts; I ſtruck him with my whip, and immediately three men came up, I ſtruggled as long as I could, and they wrenched the whip out of my hand; one of them had ſome inſtrument that looked like a bill-hook, then Maling came up, and one of them ſaid damn him murder him, then Maling ſtruck me with the bill-hook.

Are you ſure they are the perſons?——I am as clear as that I hope to eat or drink.

Are you quite ſure of it?——I am quite poſitive of it, then I hallooed out murder, and fell down on this arm, and immediately ſomebody ſtruck me on the ſhoulder, I cannot tell who it was, I was quite diſtracted before, a waggoner who was before me returned at my not coming along, and he came back to me, they ran away and left me in that condition, I ſearched for my whip, but could not find it, that was wrenched from me by one of the perſons, I ſtood as long as I could; I ſaw them at Juſtice Blackborough's, and knew them among a number of people.

Did you ſingle theſe two men out from all the reſt?——I did.

Had you then or have you now any doubt of them?——Not in the leaſt; my hat was cut through.

Court. I very much doubt whether this is ſuch an offence as in point of law is called a robbery, therefore my opinion is, that another indictment ſhould be filed againſt them for a miſdemeanor; you might indict them for an aſſault with intent to rob upon a ſpecial count, and another for aſſaulting and wounding.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Court. Let them be detained for the purpoſe of an indictment, and referred to Mr. Blackborough, who committed them, to take good bail.

83. SAMUEL THOMAS CHARLES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of December laſt, a man's hat, value 4s. and three ounces of black taw, value 6d. the property of Alexander Flaherty.

The proſecutor detected the priſoner, who was his ſhopman, going out of the ſhop with one of his hats in his breeches, which he depoſed to.

Priſoner. It is my own hat, one I had to dreſs and clean, and I wanted to conceal it; I have a licence to deal in hats.

Proſecutor. I am ſure it was my hat.

GUILTY.

Court. Priſoner, your defence is a very great aggravation of your crime, for nothing can be more ſuſpicious or improper, than for a journeyman to deal in the ſame commodity which his maſter does on his own account; therefore, under all the circumſtances of this caſe, I think I ſhould not do my duty if I was not to order you to be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

The priſoner was taken on the bed in the proſecutor's room, having removed the things mentioned in the indictment, from the place where they had been left hanging; and as ſhe was taking before the Juſtice, ſhe knocked down four people, and behaved exceeding ill.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

85. MARY JACKSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 3d day of November laſt, one pair of leather ſhoes, value 5s. the property of Stephen Maile.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

86. GEORGE HOOKER and THOMAS BATES were indicted for that they, on the 6th of November laſt, on the King's highway, with certain offenſive weapons called cutlaſſes, which they in their right hands had and held, unlawfully and feloniouſly did aſſault David Richards, and did then and there demand his monies, goods, and chattles, with a felonious intent his monies, goods, and chattles, feloniouſly and violently to ſteal.

On the the 6th of November laſt, about twenty minutes paſt ſix in the evening, it was about twenty minutes as near as could be, it was not half an hour after ſix, it was in Well-ſtreet, near Alderſgate-ſtreet, I was walking through Well-ſtreet and the priſoner Bates came up to me and ſtopped me, to the beſt of my knowledge he followed me, he was on the other ſide and croſſed the way to me, and he caught hold of my coat and told me to ſtop, and when I aſked him what he wanted with me, he ſwore d—n your eyes you muſt deliver to me all you have, or elſe you will be a dead man, and he held a cutlaſs in his right hand juſt againſt my breaſt naked, I looked in his face and caught hold of the cutlaſs with this hand, the right hand, and almoſt cut my hand off with it; I caught hold of his collar, and we wreſtled into the ſtreet, and the priſoner Hooker came up and cut me over the ſhoulder with another cutlaſs, then I began to cry out murder, I thought I ſhould be a dead man, and directly as Hooker cut me acroſs the ſhoulder then Bates got at liberty, I was was obliged to let him go, then they both got cutting me.

Did they wound you at all?——Yes, acroſs my face, they cut my eye, they cut me acroſs my forehead, and I cut my hand almoſt off, they cut my throat here, and ſtabbed me in my breaſt, then I cried out as hard as I could for aſſiſtance, then they made off, and another gentleman came up to me and aſked me what was the matter, I was almoſt killed, bleeding like any thing; they were not purſued and taken immediately, but one of them the week following, and the other the next week.

They did not take any thing from you at all?——No, they knocked my hat into the dirt, and took my watch almoſt out, but not quite, they had tried ſeveral times at it, the watch was almoſt drawn out, ſo that you might ſee part of the watch, but they did not get it quite away.

Did they take your hat off?——No, they did not take it away, they were obliged to go away on people coming up.

Did they take it off your head or knock it off with their blows?——I cannot tell that.

Did you know the priſoners before this time at all?——I have ſeen one of them paſs by two or three times, he lives near where I live in Whitecroſs-ſtreet, I cannot ſay I knew Hooker before, or whether I ever ſaw him before I cannot ſay.

What ſort of a night was it?——It was a fine night, and the lamps were lighted; they took me between two lamps.

It was not moon-light?——It was quite light, I was with my back juſt againſt a lamp, and their faces near a lamp that I could ſee them very plain, I was within a very few yards of a lamp.

Had you an opportunity of ſeeing their faces well?—I had.

Had you an opportunity of ſeeing Hooker, who came up the laſt, diſtinctly?—Yes, he came up facing the lamp with his face towards me, and gave me a blow on my ſhoulders.

In the ſtruggle with Bates had you ſufficient poſſeſſion of yourſelf to ſee Hooker ſo as to know him again?—Yes, I had, and I did know him again, I am very ſure theſe are both the men, I have no doubt of it in the leaſt.

Mr. Knowles, Councel for the Priſoner Bates. The firſt perſon that came up to you was the man that you ſuppoſe to be Bates?—Yes, it was Bates.

Before the other man reached you, you had been cut by the cutlaſs?—Yes.

You felt at that time the pain in your hand?——No, I felt no pain at all, till I was taken to the ſurgeon's.

Before this other man came up, you cloſed with Bates, and you was ſtruggling with him?——I was in the middle of the ſtreet.

You was ſtruggling with Bates before?—Yes.

When were the two priſoners taken?—Hooker was taken the Saturday following, and to the beſt of my knowledge, Bates was taken the Wedneſday after that.

Who did you receive the information from, that Hooker was taken?—I gave information againſt them to the patrols, and after they had taken him, they came and told me, Newman took him; I did not know him before.

When you gave the information, you did not know the names of theſe perſons?——No, but I gave a deſcription of their perſons, and I went to ſee whether they were the perſons I ſuſpected; Hooker was taken on Saturday, and I ſaw him at Guildhall on Monday, I did not ſee him before, I knew him directly, before he came near me, he was ſo perfectly in my knowledge; I firſt ſaw Bates at Guildhall the ſecond day after he was taken, I think it was on the Thurſday or Friday.

Did you know him directly?——Yes.

Was you preſent at Hooker's examination?——I was.

Did he ſay anything in his own defence?——I do not recollect, he ſaid, he was innocent.

Did he ſay that he could ſhew where he was that evening?——No, I did not hear, to the beſt of my knowledge, he ſaid at Guildhall, he could bring ſomebody to prove where he was that evening.

He ſaid ſo, did he?—He ſaid ſomething like it.

Do you recollect that he ſaid where it was that he was?——No, he only ſaid generally, that he would bring ſomebody to ſhew where he was.

Did Bates ſet up any defence of that kind, when he was examined?—No, he did not; theſe are the clothes I had on then.

(Produces a hat cut through, and a coat cut through the ſhoulder, and a waiſtcoat cut through, and the handkerchief that he had about his neck cut through, and ſhirt cut through all bloody.)

JOHN NEWMAN ſworn.

I know no more than taking the priſoner Hooker, he was under examination before Mr. Alderman Wilkes, along with one Dunſtan, who was caſt for death laſt Friday; and I laid a detainer againſt him, there was an information came down out of Old-ſtreet, that he was concerned in ill treating a man in Brick-lane, of which he was acquitted the other evening, by the proſecutor's not attending.

Mr. Knowles. Had you any converſation with Richards before the examination before the Magiſtrate?—No, Hooker ſaid he knew nothing about it, Mr. Alderman Wilkes remanded him back till the young man came to ſee him, I was preſent at his examination.

Did he ſay where he was the evening that this happened?——I think he ſaid he was at home.

Recollect yourſelf?——Yes, he ſaid he was at home, I am ſure; I found nothing upon Hooker.

Did Hooker mention where he lived?—No, Sir.

ROBERT LISLE ſworn.

I know nothing more than I apprehended Bates, Mr. Harriſon and me were two or three nights after him, we took him in Long-lane, Smithfield, talking with a woman and two more men; my brother officer ſays, Mr. Bates, we want you, I laid hold of him directly, and pulled him up Barbican; he came along half way, then ſays he, by G—d, it is not watch hours, and I will not go with you; he denied his name, we found a duplicate in his pocket of the name of Bates, we took him to the King's-head oppoſite to Wood-ſtreet Compter, and from thence to the Compter, to be ſure whether he was the man, I ſaid, pray are not you out on bail, he ſaid, yes, I am.

Did you find anything elſe particular?——Nothing at all, at his examination he acknowledged his name was Bates, he ſaid he was not guilty of it, he ſaid he was at home.

I was at the taking of Bates with Liſle, I had information of him, we took him in Long-lane, in company with one or two more, and a young woman or two, when I firſt apprehended him; he went with me, I told him oppoſite the watch, his name was Bates, and he denied it was; I found a duplicate in his pocket, with the name of Bates, I was preſent when he was examined, he did not ſay where he was on the evening of the robbery, that I recollect.

Priſoner Bates. Did not I tell him that I was in priſon at the time this was done?—He mentioned ſomething, but I cannot particularly ſay, that he ſaid he was in cuſtody.

THOMAS CROWDER ſworn.

I keep a public houſe in Well ſtreet, at about twenty minutes paſt ſix, as nigh as I can judge, I will not be poſitive to a minute or two I was ſitting in my parlour, and another young man with me, I ran down the ſtreet, and found the proſecutor laying in the kennel bleeding; as for the priſoners, I know nothing about them; there was ſomebody running before, there was a watch half out of his pocket, which I took out, I took him up, and took him to Mr. Withy's.

Priſoner Hooker. I can prove that I was at another place at the time.

Priſoner Bates. I can prove where I was at the time.

THOMAS BELL ſworn.

I live by Old-ſtreet-ſquare, I was a victualler at the time of this accuſation in Hatwell-ſtreet, Goſwell-ſtreet, I am no buſineſs now, I wait for a place, I expect to go to Cambridge to be bed-maker to the College; on Sunday the 6th of November, being the day after the gunpowder treaſon, George Hooker came into my houſe, about twenty minutes or a quarter after five, and called for ſome porter.

Any body with him?——Not at that time to my recollection, in the courſe of about half an hour, came in two young men, and a young woman, apparently acquaintances of Hooker's, who aſked each other how they did when they came in.

Do you know the name of either of theſe young men?——I never ſaw them in my life before.

How long did Hooker ſtay in your houſe?——Till within about five or ten minutes of ſeven, I am not ſure to a few minutes, but I will give you a reaſon (give me leave to expreſs the matter that happened during this time) after theſe two young men and the young woman came, they called for ſome crank, which is gin and water, and not being warm enough, they put it on the bar which belongs to the tap-room grate, where we put a pot or pint of beer to take the chill off; about five minutes after ſix my wife came into the tap-room, and ſaid ſhe expected her ſiſter, whoſe name is Foſkett, and lives near Covent Garden, to tea, but ſhe ſaid ſhe would go to tea, for it was five minutes paſt ſix, and paſſed the compliment to two or three people that were there, and aſked them if they choſe to drink a diſh of tea; Hooker ſaid, he did not care if he had one, and he went to tea in the parlour with her, and returned in about ten minutes, the parlour joins to the tap-room.

Did you drink tea with them?——I very ſeldom drink tea, but I did that afternoon, and ſaw him in the room.

Who elſe drank tea?——No perſon but my wife and Hooker, I took one diſh without ſitting down, Hooker and my wife ſat down, nobody elſe, I do not imagine there was any other perſon in the place; the two young men, and the young woman went out of the tap-room, and came in again in about five minutes, where they were I do not know, that was before Hooker went to tea, that was not when Hooker was at tea; while Hooker was at tea, they were in the tap room.

Court. What had they with their tea?——Toaſt, my Lord, that I recollect particularly well, becauſe Mr. Hooker took a piece, and the ſervant girl that was there was rather jocular with him, and ſaid he would take all the toaſt.

Who made the toaſt?—I do not know.

What had the young men and the young woman while you was drinking this tea?—Nothing but the crank, I ſaw them have nothing to eat, Hooker was at tea about ten minutes.

What became of him after tea?——He came into the tap-room after he had been in the parlour to tea.

Did he drink any thing in the tap-room?——He might, I do not remember.

What time did he go away?——About five minutes before ſeven, the reckoning was paid, I do not know which paid it.

Did they go out together?——I do not recollect whether they went out together or not, a neighbour of mine, one Mr. Taylor, a box-maker, was ſitting with him, and looked at the clock and ſaid it was almoſt ſeven, and he would go home to ſupper, he ſat on the right-hand ſide of the firſt box in the tap-room, Hooker ſat the right-hand ſide fronting him.

You have a dial in the tap-room?——Yes.

Did he go away firſt or Hooker and his company?——Our dial was right, it is a good dial, Miller came in about a quarter or twenty minutes after five, Hooker came in before five: Miller had two or three pints of beer, nothing but beer, except ſome tobacco, I ſmoaked half a pipe with him and drank with him, nobody elſe was in that company but Mr. Miller and me, Hooker and theſe people ſat oppoſite, I do know whether they talked.

Were there any other companies?——There might be people, but I do not recollect; the box is long, and there is a ſeat at that end, and a ſeat by the fire place, Hooker ſat at the corner which is at the table: I have known the family of Hooker a great many years, but have only known the priſoner by ſight.

Mr. Knowles. Your dial was a good going dial?——Yes.

You had had no complaints of it that day?——No.

How far is your houſe from Well-ſtreet?——I ſuppoſe it is about a quarter of a mile.

From the time that the priſoner Hooker came into your houſe to the time he went out of it after Mr. Miller, was he abſent at all?——He was not abſent to my knowledge out of the tap-room, only to go to drink his tea, he might go out for a minute, but nothing more, for I ſtaid in diſcourſe with Miller; Hooker's father is a man of very good character, the ſon is his apprentice, as to his character I know nothing of him good or bad, I believe he is a wild boy, but I never heard any harm of him.

What converſation paſſed?——The day preceding the Sunday was the 5th of November, and there were a great many effigies about the ſtreets, in the repreſentation of Guy Vaux, and ſome unlucky hands had taken from the ninepin-ground behind my houſe one of the four-corner pins, which we call ninepins, and had burnt it in the fire, and he and me were laughing and talking of the impudence of the boy in burning the ninepin before the door.

Mr. Knowles. Are you going ſoon to college?——I expect a letter up every day.

Court. Did you join in converſation with Hooker and his company?——No, not particularly, I might, but I do not recollect any thing particular but this diſcourſe.

ANN BELL ſworn.

Court. Let Mr. Bell withdraw out of the other ſide of the court.

What is your name?——Ann Bell.

Do you know the priſoner Hooker?——Yes.

Do you remember his being at your houſe on Sunday the 6th of November?—Yes, the day after gunpowder treaſon.

Tell us what you know of it.——He came into my houſe about a quarter before five, it was before candles were lighted, I went in afterwards to my parlour adjoining my bar, and ſometime after I went into the tap-room, and I expected my ſiſter to come to tea, and I ſaid, bleſs me, it is late, I do not think my ſiſter will come, for it is paſt ſix o'clock, and I concluded to go to tea by myſelf, as ſhe did not come; and returning out of the tap-room I ſaw young Mr. Hooker, and going out, I ſaid, George will you have a cup of tea with me, and he ſaid, I do not care if I do, Mrs. Bell, and I believe he did drink two or three cups of tea, and then he went into the tap-room again, and afterwards he went away, I do not know whether it was five minutes after or before ſeven, but I ſaw our hour-hand near to ſeven; ours is a very good dial, it was not wrong that day, there was one Mr. Miller, a neighbour of ours, a very good man, and of good family, was there; I know the priſoner's parents, they are very honeſt people, they bear a good character, the priſoner's employment is weaving or ſomething in that way, I believe he works for his father, but I cannot particularly ſay, I am ſure the dial was very right, it is ſaid to be a very good dial.

Court. What time did the priſoner Hooker go away?—I ſaw him there pretty near ſeven, I do not know what time he went away, I went into my fore room, I only went into the tap-room to carry the candles.

Who was the young woman that was with Hooker?——I do not know, I ſaw a young woman and two young men; there were no young men drank tea with me but Hooker and my huſband, I believe my huſband might drink a cup of tea, I believe he did, he is not very fond of tea.

Did you and Hooker and he ſet down to tea together?——I cannot tell particularly whether my huſband ſat down, but Hooker did.

Did Miller drink any tea?——No, he was the next door neighbour, I cannot ſay what time Miller went away, after tea I ſaw Mr. Miller there, my ſiſter's name is Foſkett, No. 31, Ruſſel-ſtreet, Covent-Garden.

Did you eat any thing with your tea?—Mr. Hooker eat a bit of toaſt, I very ſeldom eat any thing in an afternoon.

Was it toaſt or bread and butter?——It was toaſt.

JOHN MILLER ſworn.

I am a box-maker, I live at No. 6, in Hatwell-ſtreet, Goſwell-ſtreet.

Do you remember being at Mr. Bell's houſe on Sunday after gunpowder plot?—Yes.

Who were there?—George Hooker was there.

Court. What time did you go in?——I went in about half after five.

How ſoon after that did Hooker come in?—He was there when I went in.

Was any body with him?—There was one young man with him, but I do not know him.

Were there many other people beſides him and his companion at the time?—Nobody but Mr. Bell and me drinking, to the beſt of my knowledge, I do not recollect any body elſe at the time when I went in.

How long did that young man ſtay there that was with Hooker?——It was ſeven o'clock before that young man went away.

Did Hooker go with him?—No, he did not go with him, he was in the houſe when I went away, they were both there when I went away, I do not know what time that young man went away, it was ſeven o'clock before I went away.

How much after ſeven?——It was gone ſeven, it might be five minutes before or after, I do not recollect, it was about ſeven but whether before or after I do not recollect.

Do you recollect any other people coming in after you came in?——I do not recollect in particular any other perſon.

Then you do not recollect any other company in particular beſides Hooker, yourſelf, and the landlord?—No.

Did you join company with Hooker and his companion?—No, Sir, Mr. Bell and I had four pints of beer together, and a paper of tobacco, and after we had drank that I paid my reckoning and went in doors.

Did Hooker and his friends ſmoak with you?—No.

Did they drink any of your beer?——No.

What had they?—They were drinking ſomething, I think it was crank.

Who drank with them, do you recollect?——The young man that was with him, nobody elſe that I recollect.

Now recollect as well as you can, whether you are ſure that there were none of the other company drink with him?—I do not recollect that I ſaw any body.

Should you have recollected if there had?——If I had ſeen them, I ſhould; there was Hooker and one other, but who that other was I do not know, I ſaw nobody elſe; that was all that was in his company.

Who was that young woman that drank tea with Mrs. Bell?—I ſaw no young woman drink tea with Mrs. Bell; ſhe came and paſſed a compliment in the tap-room to George Hooker, and aſked him to have a diſh of tea with her, and he went out of the room and was gone ten minutes, or it might not be ſo much.

Did his friend go with him?—No, the young man that was with him never was out, he ſtopped in the tap-room.

Alone all the time?—Mr. Bell and me were together.

Then you kept the young man company while his friend was drinking tea?—No, I never kept any body's company but Mr. Bell's, he was in one box and I in another, and he ſat in the box he was in all the time that George Hooker was gone to tea, I did not ſee the young woman that drank tea with Mrs. Bell.

Did you ſee any young woman in the tap-room?—Not to the beſt of my knowledge, I do not know that I ſaw any young woman.

How long might Hooker be abſent when he went to drink tea?—Ten minutes, I dare ſay he was.

How long was he out any other time while you ſtaid?—I do not know, to the beſt of my knowledge I never ſaw him out after that time, not that I took any notice off.

Where was Mr. Bell while Hooker went to tea?—Mr. Bell was drinking in the tap-room.

With you?—Yes.

What were Mr. Bell and you drinking?—Porter.

Neither he nor you liked tea?—No, Sir, I do not recollect that ſhe aſked me particularly, but I did not take any notice.

Did Mr. Bell go to drink tea?—No, to the beſt of my knowledge, I do not recollect that he did go and leave me, without it was to draw a pint of beer or ſo.

Do you recollect what your converſation turned upon with Mr. Bell?——We were talking about one thing or another, I do not recollect any thing particular, I know it was the day after the 5th of November, but I do not recollect that we talked any thing about it, I do not remember any particular circumſtance being mentioned that had happened the day before.

Had the boys had any bonfire before your door the day before?—Yes, they had; I do not recollect that they had any Guy Vaux.

Do you recollect talking how the boys had made their bonfire, and what they had put in it?——No.

Then you do not recollect talking about what the boys had the impudence to burn the day before?——Yes, he ſaid they took a ſkettle out of his ſkettle ground, but I thought nothing of that, that was all I heard him ſay, I cannot ſay how many ſkettles.

Did you ſay anything when you went away?——I wiſhed Mr. Bell a good night, and the company that was there; I took notice that it was near ſeven when I went into my houſe, it might be five minutes before or five minutes after, I do not know, I ſaid, I was going home to bed, I wiſhed them all a good night and I went to bed.

Did you ſup at Bell's?——No, I did not eat any thing after my dinner.

Then you did not ſay it was almoſt ſeven o'clock, and time for you to go home to ſupper?——No.

How long have you known Hooker?—I have known him about a fortnight or three weeks, only ſeen him three or four times at Mr. Bell's; I did not know the lad that was with him, I am ſure I left them both there when I came away; I ſaw nobody drink with them; they were both there when I came in.

Jury. Do you know Mr. Bell's parlour at all?——I have drank in the parlour.

Is it a fore room or a back room?——It is a front room.

How many doors into it?—Two doors, one out from the bar, and one from the paſſage.

Court. Can you be particular how long Mrs. Bell and Hooker were at tea?——I cannot tell how long they were at tea, he was wanting about ten minutes, I do not think it was more than that.

Do you know Well-ſtreet?——I do not know that I do.

Do you know Jewin-ſtreet?——Yes.

How far is Jewin-ſtreet from your houſe?——I think it is half a mile.

Liſle. This Bell kept an exceeding bad houſe.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. What may you be?——I am a carpenter.

Is that your only buſineſs now?—No, I was at the apprehending Bates.

Who was it that you would have been bail for at Clerkenwell the other day?——One Mr. Connelly.

You are a maſter carpenter?——Yes.

Do you keep any men?——No, Sir.

Where is your ſhop?——My ſhop is No. 45, White-croſs-ſtreet; I am conſtable of Cripplegate ward.

Appointed by whom?——I ſerved in my right twelve months to-morrow.

You keep your deals and things at No. 45?—No, Sir, I do not keep them all there, ſome at Mr. Smith's in Beech-lane, I have dealt with him lately.

Is Mr. Bell's houſe within your juriſdiction?——It is very little diſtance.

Have you made any preſentment of this houſe?——I dare not go to his houſe, it is not in my ward.

Have you to the officers of the ward?—I did not trouble my head about it.

Mr. Bell. It is whiſpered that my houſe has loſt it's licenſe, but it was a ſixth or ſeventh licenſe granted without a ſingle objection, the laſt licenſing day it was granted; there is not a conſtable belonging to the diviſion, that can ſay they were ever ill uſed, when they viſited my houſe; they came in many times, and never took a man out.

Who is your landlord?—Mr. Meukes.

Is your houſe in London or Middleſex?—It is in Middleſex.

Court. How long was Hooker and your wife at tea in the parlour?—About twenty minutes, as near as I can recollect.

Did the two young men and the young woman that were in company with Hooker, ſtay all the time that he ſtayed?——They went out and came in again, but that to the beſt of my remembrance was before he went to tea.

Then while he was at tea, the two young men and young woman were together in the tap-room?——Not together, becauſe the benches were apart, and not both together, in the ſame room.

Do you mean all this time only to ſay that the two young men and young woman were in the room, were they or were they not part of his company?——Yes, they aſked one another how they did.

Did you and Mr. Miller mix any converſation?——No converſation that I recollect, a word might paſs, we ſat no nearer than as the tables I repreſent; and they are near enough to ſpeak.

What ſort of young woman was this that was in company?——I cannot recollect the young woman, I never ſaw her or the two men before.

Was ſhe tall or ſhort?——She was rather ſhortiſh, much about the ſize of my wife, ſhe might be taller or ſhorter, I do not recollect.

Tolerably decently dreſſed?——No ways tawdry.

Then you do not recollect the converſation that paſſed between the woman and Miller?——I do not recollect any, if they ſpoke it was while I went backwards and forwards out of the room, Bates was not in my houſe, nor had not been for a fortnight or three weeks.

Court to John Clarke. I ſee you are here accidentally: do you know Mr. Bell's houſe?——No, my Lord, I never was in the houſe, but there were once ſome coiners taken out of this houſe.

Bell. The ſtair-caſe goes at the back of the ſtreet door, and a man gave a woman a bad half guinea to lie with her all night, the man was taken up for tendering this bad half guinea to the woman; and Mr. Silveſter was counſel, and I there appeared like a man to proſecute; there never was a man for a felony in any reſpect, taken out of my houſe; I have never been convicted of any gaming, or ſerving in ſervice time, or any thing of the kind.

(For the Priſoner Bates.)

DANIEL JENKINS ſworn.

I live with Mr. Davis, the keeper of the Borough compter; I am the turnkey, I know the priſoner Bates.

Have you ever had him in cuſtody?—No.

What do you come here to prove?—He came to ſee a priſoner at our priſon, in the duſk of the evening, on the 6th of November, which happened to be on a Sunday evening.

How came you to remember the day?—That day he had a noſegay in his boſom, and Mr. Davis himſelf ſaw him come in; ſays he, this is not a day to wear a noſegay, it is next Thurſday, we had loſt a priſoner juſt before, and were very particular in perſons coming in and going out.

Why was he to wear a noſegay next Thurſday?——I ſuppoſe his meaning was becauſe it was hanging day.

What time did the priſoner come to the compter?—Between four and five o'clock, I cannot poſitively ſay to a minute.

When did he go away?—I cannot poſſitively ſay the time he went away, he ſtayed there ſome conſiderable time and had ſeveral pots of beer, he went away by candle-light, it might be ſeven o'clock, but I cannot undertake to ſay when it was.

Can you venture to ſwear it was ſix o'clock?—No, I cannot ſwear that; I cannot ſwear to any time particular.

Do you know any thing more?—Not at preſent.

SUSANNAH HUMPHRYS ſworn.

I am a milliner, I live in Eaſt-Smithfield.

Do you keep any ſhop?—No, Sir.

A chamber milliner?—Yes.

Are you married or ſingle?——No, Sir, I am not married.

What do you come here to prove?——I went over the water to ſee a young man that was in the Borough compter, on the 6th of November.

What day of the week?—On a Sunday, and while I was there, the priſoner Bates came in to ſee the ſame young man that I went to ſee.

Did you know the priſoner before?—I never ſaw him before.

What time did he come?——About five o'clock, as nigh as I can recollect.

What time did he go away?—About a quarter after ſeven, or ten minutes, I cannot tell to a minute.

How did you know the time?—There was a gentleman with me, one Mr. Kelly, who is gone to to ſea; and I aſked him the time, and he ſaid, it wanted five minutes of ſeven.

How came you to aſk him what o'clock it was, when the priſoner went away whom you never ſaw before?—The priſoner was there then, when I aſked the gentlemen what o'clock it was; the priſoner had another pot of beer after that.

You did not know the priſoner before this?——I never ſaw him before.

Did you know his name at that time?—No.

Had you and he any converſation together?——No further than drinking with the perſon he went to ſee.

Did he or you go away firſt?——He went away firſt, it was very nigh eight o'clock when I went away; I never ſaw him before, and did not know him, nor he me.

Did he call you by your name?—No.

Then how came he to fetch you here?——His mother came to me, the young man who was in the Borough compter knew my name.

Who is that young man?—His name is William Bradley.

Is he there now?———No.

Where is he?———I do not know.

Court to Jenkins. What is become of Bradley?—My Lord, he was at our houſe at that time for an aſſault, and diſcharged the next morning.

Do you remember this woman being there?——Yes, very well, and the young man that was with her, which I let out at eight o'clock; for we turn out all the ſtrangers at eight o'clock.

Suſannah Humphrys. I was ſubpœnaed by Bates this day week as near as I can recollect.

Court to Mr. Akerman. What day was there an execution?——It was the day after Lord Mayor's day.

The Jury withdrew about ten minutes, and returned with their verdict,

BOTH GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years to Africa.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

88. BENJAMIN SPICE was indicted for that he, and John Page, and divers others, to the number of three perſons and more, on the 24th day of April laſt, at Maidſtone, in the county of Kent, being armed with offenſive weapons, to wit, divers bludgeons, clubs, ſticks, and hop-poles, unlawfully, riotouſly, routouſly and feloniouſly, did aſſiſt in reſcuing and taking away from Thomas Brock, one of the officers of Exciſe, four gallons of geneva, being uncuſtomed goods, and goods liable to pay duties, which had not been paid or ſecured, after ſeizure of them by the ſaid Thomas Brock.

A ſecond Count, For that he, together with the ſaid John Page and the other perſons, on the ſame day, and at the ſame place, being ſo armed as aforeſaid, unlawfully, riotouſly, routouſly, and feloniouſly, did aſſemble, and being ſo aſſembled and ſo armed, did aid and aſſiſt certain perſons, whoſe names to the Jurors are unknown, in reſcuing and taking away from the ſaid Thomas Brock, then being ſuch officer of Exciſe, four gallons of foreign geneva, being uncuſtomed goods, and goods liable to pay duties, which were not paid or ſecured, after ſeizure by the ſaid Thomas Brock.

A third Count, For that Thomas Brock being officer of Exciſe, on the ſame day, and at the ſame place, did duly ſeize four gallons of geneva, being uncuſtomed goods, and that he, together with the ſaid John Page and other perſons, on the ſame day, being armed with divers large ſticks, bludgeons, clubs, and hop-poles, unlawfully, riotouſly, routouſly, and feloniouſly, did aſſemble, and being ſo aſſembled, and being then and there ſo armed, they unlawfully, riotouſly, and routouſly, were aiding and aſſiſting, in reſcuing and taking away, the ſaid laſt mentioned geneva after ſeizure thereof by the ſaid Thomas Brock, againſt the ſtatute.

The Caſe opened by Mr. Attorney General.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. This is a proſecution againſt the priſoner, for an offence againſt an act of parliament, that has been paſſed ſo long ſince as the 19th of Geo. II. and Gentlemen, it is a lamentable conſideration, that it has been neceſſary for the legiſlature of this country, from time to time, to make laws more and more ſevere, againſt thoſe perſons who openly, and violently reſiſt the laws of their country, and reſiſt them in a manner which calls for reſiſtance again, even to the riſque of the lives of the perſons employed in collecting his Majeſty's revenue: Gentlemen, I am extremely ſorry that ever theſe laws were neceſſary, I am much more ſorry that it has of late been ſo frequently neceſſary to call for their execution, it is now come to ſuch a paſs, that if the law will not protect the officer, nothing but ill-will, and everlaſting battles muſt enſue, between the officers of the revenue, and thoſe that are concerned in defrauding it: you have heard of many of theſe affrays, moſt of them have been attended with bloodſhed, and if the laws already enacted are not ſufficient, it will become neceſſary to have recourſe to force, and the laws muſt be put into execution by that which every civilized ſtate would wiſh to avoid: it is to avoid that horrid alternative, that theſe proſecutions have been begun againſt perſons acting in this outrageous and tumultuous manner: it is to ſave the lives of perſons of his own deſcription, and hereafter to protect the lives of his Majeſty's officers, and to preſerve the laws that were originally made, that this priſoner is now brought to the bar: Gentlemen, I do not expect you will convict the priſoner under theſe laws, unleſs upon the evidence adduced, he clearly falls within the guilt of breaking thoſe laws: I will ſtate to you very briefly, and very fairly the evidence I have to offer, I will ſtate to you the act of parliament, the meaning and conſtruction of which, in point of law, you will receive from the Bench; you will take this into conſideration carefully, together with the facts that will be given in evidence, and coupling the facts with the law, you will decide whether the priſoner falls within it; that is your province; it is mine to ſtate the law, as I humbly conceive it to be: I am inſtructed that he certainly is guilty of the offence deſcribed in the indictment, which is ſtated as the offence of being tumultuouſly aſſembled with others to the number of three or more, armed with offenſive weapons for the purpoſe of reſcuing and taking away from the officers of the Exciſe ſeveral goods, the duties of which had not been paid or ſecured; it is likewiſe charged not only that he was aſſembled for that purpoſe, but that he likewiſe, with three other perſons ſo armed, actually did reſcue from the offigers of Exciſe ſuch kind of goods. Gentlemen, the act of parliament of the 19th of the late King, begins with reciting "that whereas divers diſſolute perſons have aſſociated themſelves, and entered into confederacies, &c. to the loſs of the public revenue, and whereas ſeveral ſeveral officers of the Exciſe," &c. for remedy of theſe evils, it enacts "that after the 24th of July, 1746, any perſons to the number of three or more, armed with fire arms or other offenſive weapons, who ſhall be aiding or aſſiſting, &c. every ſuch perſon ſhall be guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy;" ſo that you ſee the offence deſcribed in this act of parliament, is that of being aſſembled to the number of three or more armed with fire arms, and reſcuing, or endeavouring to reſcue, ſuch goods as are deſcribed in the indictment: this being the law, I will now ſtate the facts: it will appear to you, Gentlemen, that on the 24th of April laſt, one Thomas Brock, an officer of the Exciſe, called to his aſſiſtance two other officers, named Burdett and Carter, and they planted themſelves in an orchard, near to the Roebuck, where the goods were to paſs by: Brock remained in the lane, the two others went into the orchard; they had not been long there, before Carter ſaw two men come out of a cottage that joined the Robuck, and come into the orchard loaded with tubs that were ſlung in ſuch a manner, as the witneſſes will deſcribe, which I underſtand is the uſual way they carry geneva or other liquors, for the convenience of throwing them over horſes or over their ſhoulders; he immediately called out, throw down your tubs; Brock called to them, one of the men run away, and the other attempted to ſecure them; however, he was more than a match for them, and he eſcaped, and they ſecured the two tubs; upon this they went with the two tubs into the lane, and there Carter ſeeing ſix or ſeven men in the lane, he was ordered by Brock, to go and ſee if they had anything with them; he went, and they had not; he heard a whiſtle, and coming back from theſe men he found Brock engaged with eighteen men, of whom the priſoner was at the head, with large ſticks, ſuch as the handle of a fork that is uſed in ſtables, and hop-poles, and at the head of them, the priſoner, who was at that time levelling a blow at Brock, he did not ſtrike with one hand, but was ſeen ſtriking at him with both; the priſoner called out, it is Brock and his crew; upon which the officer told them they ſhould not have the tubs, to which the priſoner replied you may be d—d, and ſwore if they did not leave the tubs, they would murder them; upon this a ſcuffle enſued, and the officers of Exciſe found the ſmugglers were more than a match for them, after conſiderable ſtruggles, and ſeveral blows had been aimed at the officers of Exciſe by ſome men, Carter and Brock who had got fire arms with them, told them, that if they did not deſiſt, they muſt fire, and he ſaid they might fire and be d—d; upon which he gave orders to thoſe men to fire, and that man did fire, which is a ſtrong circumſtance to ſhew how active the priſoner was; the only perſon wounded by that ſhot was the priſoner, who will appear to you to have been very much wounded; they at laſt took the reſolution of abandoning the tubs, and only ſtaved one, and taſted it to know what it was, they went away: Gentlemen, this is the evidence; it is neceſſary firſt of all, to prove that they were aſſembled to the number of of three or more; next that they were armed with fire arms, or other offenſive weapons; and my Lord will tell you his meaning reſpecting the words of the act of parliament, concerning offenſive weapons, it is impoſſible to give any definition what ſhould conſtitute an offenſive weapon within this act of parliament; I humbly contend, and, I think, contend with the concurrence of the learned Judges, who have tried theſe kind of cauſes, that the meaning is ſuch a kind of inſtruments as were peculiarly proper for reſiſtance and aſſault, and ſuch as men engaged in the ordinary buſineſs of life, ought not, and would not take along with them, ſuch as they had for the purpoſe of reſiſtance, ſuch as was proper for it; it ſeemed to be the unanimous opinion of a learned Judge lately on the Bench, that that was the meaning of this act of parliament; that if a man had but a common walking-ſtick, or a common whip, ſuch as men ordinarily carry, though he might accidentally, or though they might be made uſe of to the degree of offence, yet in conſidering this act of parliament, thoſe were not the kind of weapons, and it was neceſſary they ſhould be ſuch as were uſed for the purpoſe of offence: now, Gentlemen, it will appear that by much the greateſt part were armed with what could not be uſed for any other purpoſe than offenſive weapons, and that the priſoner had himſelf (though it would have been ſufficient if he had been with three other perſons at the ſame time, for I ſhould have thought it would have been carrying it a long way, to have ſaid in ſuch a caſe, that he himſelf was not ſo armed) but he himſelf had a weapon of the nature which is deſcribed; I cannot produce to you the weapon itſelf, but there will be produced to you, a weapon of the ſame nature, which the witneſs had from ſmugglers, and which is the ſame ſort of weapon uſed by them: It is not that ſort of ſtick which men uſually carry, becauſe the method of uſing it required two hands to uſe it: Gentlemen, this will be the evidence that will be laid before you, if the priſoner does fall within the act of parliament, and I prove this caſe, as I am inſtructed I ſhall, it will be your duty to find him guilty: I ſhould be moſt happy to find theſe offences were not committed at all, but as they are, I ſhould be happy if the examples made might prevent that dreadful ſcene which I am affraid will happen, if theſe laws are not protected: I am ſure you will give it that attention you ought to do, I am ſure you ſtand indifferent to both parties, and I am ſure to both you will diſcharge your duty.

THOMAS BROCK ſworn.

(Examined by Mr. Solicitor General.)

What was your employment in April laſt?——An Exciſe officer, at Maidſtone outſide.

Was you in the execution of your duty, on the 24th of April laſt?——I was.

Who was in company with you in the execution of your duty on that day?——Gabriel Joſeph Carter, and Godfrey Burdett were with me.

Are they officers too?——One of them was a diſtiller's aſſiſtant at Maidſtone, at that time, the other was a perſon on a viſit at my houſe at the time, an officer's ſon.

What happened to you in the courſe of your duty on that day?——On the 24th of April in the afternoon, they were both at my houſe, and I requeſted their aſſiſtance to go with me on that day, as I expected ſome goods would come on the road towards the Roebuck; we arrived in an orchard adjoining the Roebuck about nine at night, Mr. Carter and we were all in the orchard together, Mr. Carter was on that ſide of the orchard that the Roebuck was on, when he came to the bottom of the orchard he diſcovered ſome people, I was at the bottom of the orchard alſo, and I went to the road, and I heard ſome people in the road, the orchard was cloſe to the road adjoining, I heard ſome people in the road, and I thought it was Mr. Carter, which cauſed me to go into the road, then I heard Mr. Carter ſay, lay down your tubs, or down with your tubs, at the ſame time Mr. Carter called out Brock, I was with him as ſoon as he could ſpeak, and caught a man hold by the collar, who ſtood near to the tubs.

How many tubs were there?—Two.

What are tubs?——They are four gallon caſks.

What ſort of appearance have they?——There were ſling cords upon them, which is a ſmall cord, a three braided cord to carry theſe tubs; in the ſcuffle he broke looſe from me, he ſlipped under the rail, I had hold of his frock, and he being too ſtrong for me, jammed my hand againſt the rail, and I was obliged to quit my hold; before I heard Carter call out Brock, I heard theſe people, that I took for Carter.

Did thoſe perſons ſay or do anything that you miſtook for Carter?—Not then, after the man made his eſcape from me, I took the tubs over into the road, and Mr. Carter immediately followed me; I aſked Carter and Burdett to go up the road in ſearch of more goods, and they went up nearer to the Roebuck, and left me with the tubs, and they ſoon after returned back with ſome people following them, who ſwore they ſhould not have the tubs.

How many people might there be that followed Carter and Burdett when they came down to you, thoſe people that were following them?—Why, there were, I believe, eighteen or twenty, and thoſe perſons that were following them at firſt, there were eight or ten, they increaſed directly, then I left the tubs ten or a dozen yards off, and joined Carter and Burdett, apprehending that there would be a riot.

Did you hear anything particular before theſe people came up to Carter and Burdett?——I heard a noiſe in a houſe, it was but a ſmall diſtance, the Roebuck is by the ſide of the road.

Between the time that this man eſcaped from you, and the coming up of theſe eighteen or twenty perſons, did you hear anything particular that ſtruck you at the time?—I heard ſomebody ſay it was Brock and his men.

Did you hear any further expreſſion, or anything elſe at the time?—I heard ſomebody ſay, it is Brock and his men, d—n their eyes, they ſhall not have the tubs; when I was in the orchard, I heard ſomebody make a ſoft kind of a whiſtle, and I thought it was Mr. Carter.

Was it before or after you ſaw the men, that you heard this whiſtle?——I had ſeen nobody when I heard this whiſtle.

Then when was it that you heard theſe expreſſions?——When they were following Mr. Carter, and coming down the road.

When theſe men came up, and you had an opportunity to ſee them, had they any thing with them?——Great ſticks, large ſticks.

What number of them had large ſticks?—About five or ſix, the nigheſt compariſon that I can make of the ſticks, is I believe, they may be about four or five feet long, and ſomething ſmaller than a pitchfork ſhaft.

What did they then do?—They began to threaten, and ſwear that we ſhould not have the things, repeating that it was Brock and his men, and d—d their eyes, that we ſhould not have the tubs; and they d—d their eyes, if they cut them, they would murder them.

Did you know any of theſe perſons?—I know but one, the priſoner Benjamin Spice, he had a large ſtick, which I fended off with a ſword that I had in my hand, it was ſimilar to the fork ſhaft, I verily believe it was four feet and a half; I warded it off.

How did he uſe this ſtick?—He uſed it with both his hands, it was a ſtick of that length that he could not uſe it with one hand.

In what manner did he uſe is?—He ſtruck at me, but I kept it off with my ſword, and Mr. Carter he fell upon him very rapidly with a ſhort ſtick, it might be ſomething bigger than this ſtick I have in my hand, (a common walking ſtick); the ſticks the other perſons had were conſiderably bigger, after Mr. Carter had knocked him rather down on the ſide of the bank next the Roebuck orchard, I told him then, if they did not deſiſt we would fire upon them.

What did you and Carter and Burdett do with the tubs after this?——Spice, after he got up, retreated back in amongſt the reſt that were behind, and they went into the hop-yard after that, and got ſome hop-poles, I am not able to ſay how many.

How many might they amount to before they retreated into the hop-yard?——I believe there might be about eighteen or twenty, they were all aſſembled.

What number of them were prepared with ſticks by ſuch time as theſe went into the hop-yard?——I believe about five or ſix, and I heard the others break off the poles to provide themſelves with ſticks, then we returned back to the tubs in the road, which were not above ten or twelve yards off, I took them up, and I adviſed Carter and Burdett to ſtave one of the tubs, as I told them I thought it impracticable to carry them off, and I wanted to ſee what ſort of liquor it was.

Did you ſo ſtave the tubs?—Burdett cut the hoops aſunder, and I took hold of the tub, and it ran all down my breeches.

What was this liquor?——Holland geneva.

You taſted it?——I did.

What happened after the ſtaving the tub?—They ſtill purſued upon us very rapidly, and I told them the conſequence would be, if they did not deſiſt, I would fire upon them.

How were they armed then?——With theſe ſticks that they got out of the hop-yard, and thoſe they had before, I believe they all had ſticks, I cannot particularly ſpeak to every man.

Was the priſoner among thoſe who ſo came among you the ſecond time?—He was.

Did they uſe any expreſſions this ſecond time?—They cried we might fire and be d—d, we uſed every effort to get away before we fired, but we found it impracticable.

Court. How near might they be to you at this time?—Some of them about a dozen or fourteen yards off, ſome more.

What paſſed afterwards?——They ſtill kept threatening us, I ordered Burdett and Carter to fire.

How did they threaten you?—Swearing they would be d—d if they would not kill us, and that we ſhould not carry the goods off.

Did the priſoner at the bar uſe any of thoſe expreſſions that you ſpeak of?——I cannot ſay whether he did at that time, it appeared to be all in one voice, and they all joined, we could not diſtinguiſh one man from another, but the firſt time Spicer ſaid himſelf, we ſhould not have it, he ſaid he would be d—d if we ſhould take off the goods, that was at the firſt time; judging it impracticable to get away, I ordered Carter and Burdett to turn about and fire upon them.

Were they following you at the time you were running in the manner you deſcribe?—Yes; accordingly they both fired at them with piſtols.

What was the conſequence of this firing?—They did not ſeem to ſtop, they ſtill purſued us, and Carter called out to me why do not you fire? and I immediately fired.

What was the effect of your firing?——The effect of my firing ſeemed to ſtop them, I heard ſomebody cry out when I fired; I cannot pretend to ſay who it was; I have heard ſince that when I fired, I ſhot Spice, then we all three made our eſcape, and they kept throwing their ſticks at us.

How ſoon after this did you ſee the priſoner?——The next day.

Was any one of the name of John Page there?—I cannot ſpeak to him, I only knew the priſoner at the bar, I ſaw the priſoner the day after at the Roebuck; there were ſome people in the houſe and they exclaimed againſt me for my cruelty for ſhooting, and Spice himſelf complained and ſhewed me his wound.

Where was that wound?——Somewhere about the lower part of his belly, it appeared to be a ſide ſhot.

What it had ſlanted along the lower part of the belly?——Yes, he told me he was ſhot in the foot too, but I did not ſee that, he was ſet on a bench eaſing his foot, and at that time I gave him ſixpence.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. What ſort of a night was this?—Rather cloudy, the moon was at full.

Five or ſix perſons when you firſt ſaw the body had ſticks?—Yes.

What ſort of ſticks, were not ſome of them common walking ſticks?—I never ſaw farmers walk with ſuch ſticks to my knowledge.

Had you an opportunity in the darkneſs of the night and the violence of the affray to make the diſtinction?—I do not remember that ever I ſaw a farmer walk with ſuch ſticks.

Were the whole of the five or or ſix like the ſtick that is to be produced?——I think ſo.

The retiring into the hop-ground and getting the hop-poles was a concluſion of the ſame buſineſs?——Yes.

You was at that time in the ſervice of the revenue?——Yes.

How ſoon after was you diſcharged?——In July.

Upon what account pray?—Why I was diſcharged when the act took place, the act for ſtaving of liquors, there were no goods ſold to produce any money for the officers, and thoſe that were at great expences, as I was, were very much diſtreſſed, and neceſſity, which was the mother of all inventions, obliged me to part with ſome part of the goods, which I ought to have ſtaved, and for that I was diſcharged.

Now this is a very moderate way of ſtating that you had defrauded the Revenue?—I had no orders to ſtave the goods, although the proviſion of the act is, that they ſhould be ſtaved, they are not ſtaved.

It was for bad practices in your duty as an officer.

Court. He has told you the fact.

How ſoon afterwards was you reſtored?——I have not been reſtored.

Did you not apply to be reſtored on convicting this priſoner?——I never did any ſuch thing, nor never made any application, if I can get any employment in the Revenue, I ſhall be very happy to have it.

Upon your oath, do not you hope it?—I cannot foreſee.

I aſk you what you expect and hope?—I believe this, whether he is caſt or whether he is not, that neither one thing nor the other will be in favour of me.

Did not you give the information in hopes of being reſtored to your office?——I gave the information the day after the tranſaction, before I was diſcharged; I acquainted my ſuperviſor with it that very night.

Did you charge the priſoner by name on that very day?—I did not, I did not know the priſoner's name although I knew his perſon, I only knew him by living with a miller.

How ſoon did you acquire the pleaſure of knowing his name?—The day but one after, it might be two days, I told the ſuperviſor about two or three days after, I told him I knew he was a ſervant to a miller.

You had learned his name then?——As ſoon as ever I had learned his name I acquainted the ſuperviſor, when I firſt told my ſtory I did not know his name.

Theſe men were engaged in battle with you who had a ſuperior force?—Yes.

Did any of theſe people attempt to lay hold of the goods?—I did not ſee them.

They were beating you, but not attempting to lay hold of the goods?——I did not ſee them at all lay hold of the goods themſelves.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you deſcribe this man to your ſuperviſor the next day as well as you could, that is, that he was a miller's ſervant?—I gave all the information that lay in my power.

Then as ſoon as you learned his name, you communicated that alſo?——Yes, the board was acquainted with it in the courſe of three or four days.

Had you any reaſon to fear you ſhould be diſmiſſed at that time?——No.

Mr. Attorney General. There is an act of parliament that gave to the officers an half of all that was ſeized, and laſt ſeſſion but one an act paſſed, that all the ſpirits which the officers were entitled to, ſhould be ſtaved after condemnation, the act has not been hitherto executed, but the officers have hitherto been kept out of any reward at all.

What is the meaning of having them ſtaved?—To prevent the introduction of foreign ſpirits, and to encourage real ones; not one ſeizing officer has got any thing this year and a half.

Mr. Garrow. I wiſh the jury to recollect that this man, for offending an act of parliament, and a very modern one, was turned out of his office.

GODFREY BURDETT ſworn.

I was on a viſit to Mr. Brock in April laſt, at his houſe, I am an officer's ſon, not an officer; on the 24th of April laſt, we went to the bottom of the orchard, and when we came to the cottage houſe I heard Carter ſay, down with your tubs, I directly retreated to the bottom of the orchard, I ſaw Carter and Brock have hold of a man, and Brock came back and ſaid, there are ſome more men in the road, Carter and me went up to the Roebuck and turned back, and a man followed Carter and us, ſome blows paſſed between Carter and Brock and the man got away into the road, I did not rightly ſee him, then we went into the road, and Carter and I directly went up towards the Roebuck, thinking to meet more as we ſaw ſome men up the road, I cannot tell the number that were there then, more gathered together after to the amount of eighteen or twenty, a man followed Mr. Carter and I down, he ſwore we ſhould not have the tubs, I cannot tell who he was, there were more men behind him that were up the road, ſome blows paſſed between Carter and the foremoſt man, and then they directly cried out, it is only Brock and his men, and they directly jumped into a hop-garden and broke down the poles, and came over into the road again.

Had theſe people you ſaw when you firſt went up, or had they not any ſticks before they went into the orchard?——They had ſticks, very large ſticks, ſuch as the footpads walk with.

What ſize might they be?——About the bigneſs of a fork ſtave.

Do you know how many people you ſaw at firſt?——I do not.

Were there more than three?——Yes, ſix or ſeven.

How many of theſe ſix or ſeven were armed with ſticks?—I cannot tell, more than three or four had ſticks, one man came rather before the reſt, ſwearing we ſhould not have the tubs; and he ſtruck with a ſtick at Mr. Carter, and Mr. Brock; and Mr. Carter knocked that man down, whoever he was, on the bank; I did not know any of the men, I was quite a ſtranger to the country; after that they ſaid it was only Brock with his men.

What did they do then?——They went into the hop-yard for the poles, then they came into the road again, and cried d——n their eyes murder them; and then Brock ſaid he would fire on them, and they ſaid, fire on, and be d——d; directly Mr. Brock ordered to fire, and we did fire; my piſtols were loaded with ſlugs, and the others with balls, and they cried fire on, and be d——d; after that Mr. Brock turned and fired his piſtol, then we were forced to retreat, and they threw their ſticks at us, and one of them hit me on the arm and leg.

Mr. Garrow. There had been a ſcuffle between the officers and men, who were carrying the caſks?——Yes, when I came down, that was in the orchard of the Roebuck.

How many yards off the houſe?—About ten or twenty yards.

Did you make a great deal of buſtle in that ſcuffle?——No, not much, I was not down at firſt; I heard Carter ſay, down with your tubs.

GABRIEL JOSEPH CARTER ſworn.

I was in company with theſe witneſſes.

How were theſe men armed?——Theſe are in general the ſticks they carry with them.

(Produces a ſtick five feet in length, and about four inches round, with a ſpike at the end.)

Were the ſticks of this ſize?——Yes, ſimilar to that.

You will not ſwear they had ſpikes?—I cannot poſſibly ſwear to the ſpikes.

In what manner was he ſtriking?——With both hands, when I cloſed in upon him.

Are you ſure that was the man?—Yes, I know the man perfectly well, he was by himſelf at that preſent time, but there were ſome more coming down the road, they ſwore at us pretty roundly, they d——d my eyes and limbs, and ſaid I ſhould not have the goods.

What were the goods?——Tubs, one with Hollands geneva.

Mr. Garrow. It is my duty to ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that the priſoner ought not to be called on for any defence. The firſt Count in the indictment ſtates, that the priſoners, together with other perſons, to the number of three or more, did aſſemble themſelves together, with intent to reſcue the goods, and that being aſſembled, they did reſcue; now every other aſſembling, except that with intent to reſcue the goods, I take to be clearly bad; the firſt objection I would make to your Lordſhip is, that there is no proof in this caſe, of that which is a neceſſary ingredient in it, namely, aſſembling with intent to reſcue; I ſtate the authority of Mr. Baron Eyre, who laid down this law, that though it appeared that the parties did aſſemble, if they came together without a preconcerted deſign, that would not ſatisfy that indictment; now here it is manifeſt that theſe men, of whom the priſoner is taken to be one, were drawn out of ſome place at which they were not aſſembled with any ſuch preconcerted deſign or intent: in the two other counts, they have not charged any aſſembling with ſuch intention: I have another objection ſtill leſs capable of anſwer; this charge is not for aſſaulting revenue officers in the diſcharge of their duty, this is a charge of aſſembling with an intent to be aſſiſting in the reſcuing of goods, and aſſiſting in that reſcue, and in every count of it, it goes on to ſtate this, which the act of parliament renders indiſpenſably neceſſary "uncuſtomed goods liable to pay duties, &c." I aſk with great deference, what proof there is of this fact? it is not becauſe ſome liquors are carrying, upon which perhaps the duties were paid, and carrying without permit; that will not ſatisfy this act of parliament; but the Crown muſt prove to the ſatisfaction of the Jury, that theſe goods neither had paid the duties, nor have the duties been paid: in all the caſes hitherto, there has been a ſentence of the condemnation from the Exchequer, wherever we have been called upon for a defence: you muſt be ſatisfied plainly and indiſputably; it is clear from the nature of the thing, the defendant is ſuppoſed not to be one of the perſons carrying the goods, but he is ſuppoſed to be one of the perſons coming in for the purpoſe of the reſcue; perhaps it may be ſaid, you are calling for what is impoſſible; to this I anſwer, that if the officers had acted with that firmneſs, which the law preſumes he will act, backed by that force which the law calls into his aid, theſe goods might have been ſtopped and condemned, and the proof of that condemnation ready; but ſtanding as this caſe does, the act of parliament requiring, and the indictment alledging, that they muſt be uncuſtomed goods, I ſubmit it is impoſſible that the indictment ſhould be ſupported: in the other two counts, it is not laid to be with intent to reſcue.

Mr. Attorney General. I ſubmit this is a caſe to be left to the Jury, on the firſt point, the firſt part of the act is, if any perſon ſhall be aiding or aſſiſting, in the reſcuing and taking goods, or in caſe any perſon ſo armed as aforeſaid, ſhall be aiding and aſſiſting, therefore it is firſt charged that they aſſembled in order to be ſo aiding and aſſiſting; then the ſecond count is, that being ſo armed, they aſſembled for ſo doing; then the third count is, that they did ſo; now Mr. Garrow ſays, theſe perſons were not aſſembled with that view, but that accidentally they did it; it is to be ſure a matter of fact for the Jury, whether two men with theſe goods, which afterwards proved to be Hollands geneva, which goods are afterwards taken from them by the officers of Exciſe, there being ſome whiſtle immediately afterwards, and more people made their appearance, ſix or ſeven men with the priſoner at their head, and crying out it is Brock and his men; and ſwearing by God, they would have the goods; if that is not evidence to be left to the Jury, I profeſs I do not know what is; I think it is very ſtrong evidence; then with reſpect to the other point, it is aſtoniſhing it ſhould be ſaid, that in all caſes, we muſt prove the condemnation: why, if the goods are reſcued, you cannot prove the condemnation, wherever they can be condemned we would recur to it: the evidence is, here were two tubs, that they found it not in their power to reſcue from the Exciſe officers, and that they deſtroyed one in order to taſte it.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. Mr. Garrow has taken two objections to the firſt count of this indictment, and a general objection to the ſecond and third count; firſt he ſays, it will be neceſſary in order to convict the priſoner, that this aſſembling together muſt appear to be with intent or in order to reſcue the goods; he thinks there is not ſufficient evidence of intention; I admit his law that there muſt be ſufficient evidence, but it is to be left to the jury whether there is ſuch intention: now it does not appear to me to be caſual meeting, but it muſt now be left to the conſideration of the jury, whether under all the circumſtances of the caſe, they ſhould or ſhould not be of opinion that this was for the purpoſe of reſcuing the goods: now from the number of people, the arms they made uſe of, their threats, their execrations on the ſubject, that is a matter to be left to the jury, whether they did aſſemble to reſcue theſe goods, agreeing with his law, that there muſt be proof of aſſembling to reſcue theſe goods; again he ſays, there is no proof of their being uncuſtomed goods, there could be no condemnation, you cannot be put upon that cannot be given: as to the other point, I think that is to be left to the Jury, how far theſe appear to be uncuſtomed goods, for which no duties were to be paid; for you ſee theſe are the ſort of tubs uſed by ſmugglers; therefore I leave it to the Jury.

MARY MAKTIN ſworn.

Mr. Silveſter. Have you been in Court all the time?—No, juſt now called in: I live at Maidſtone, I keep the Roebuck, which is almoſt a quarter of a mile from the town, I remember Spice being at my houſe on the 24th of April, betwen the hours of ſeven and eleven.

Mr. Garrow. In what condition was he as to dreſs?—I do not remember particularly, he was in a riding frock.

What was he doing in the houſe before he went out?——Nothing, Sir, he was ſitting by the fire.

Do you remember the time that he went out?——Between nine and ten.

What took him out?—Hearing a noiſe.

Did you hear a noiſe?——Yes, he went out, I ſaw him go out.

Had he any thing in his hands?——Nothing at all.

Had he ſuch a ſtick as this in his hand?—No, Sir, he had nothing at all, I ſaw him get out of the chair, and go out.

Had he boots on?—He had half boots on, I ſaw him ſit by the fire before he went out, with his boots unlaced, he lodged at our houſe almoſt twelve months.

What time does he uſually go to bed?—About ten.

Was there anything particular that kept him up later than uſual?—I had been up at the town, and I had carried away the key of the wicket, which led to his room, he ſeemed when I came back, as if he was rather ſleepy, I came home near ten, we heard a noiſe, and went out after it, we went as far as the door, and we heard the report of a piſtol, that very much alarmed me indeed, and in leſs than five minutes Benjamin Spice returned ſhot in the foot.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part which will be publiſhed in few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of Benjamin Spice.

Do you remember ſeeing Brock the officer the next day?—Yes, he came into my houſe.

What did he do there?——He came and had ſome gin, he gave ſome to the priſoner.

What buſineſs is the priſoner?—A huſbandry man.

What character does he bear?—A very good one.

Is he an inoffenſive, harmleſs man?—Yes.

During that time, has he been one of a gang of ſmugglers or not?——Not that I know of, I think I ſhould know of it if it was ſo, he kept very good hours.

Mr. Attorney General. I ſuppoſe you do not know of any ſmugglers that came to your houſe?——No, Sir, not that I know off.

How often had people been ſtopped about your houſe, in this orchard?——There never was any that I know of.

Who were the two men that had the tubs?——I do not know, I did not know they were there, they did not come from my houſe, I cannot tell where they came from.

Remember you are upon your oath?—I am.

How many men were at your houſe at that time?——I cannot tell.

Was it full of people?——No.

Was there ten people?—I do not know.

Was not there twenty at the time he went out?——There were not, nor yet ten, I think I can ſafely ſwear there were not ten.

Do not you know there were more on the road near your houſe?——No, Sir, I did not, I heard a noiſe and went out, we were very whiſt, and we heard a noiſe all in a minute.

Who was in the houſe at the time with the priſoner?—There was a boy.

What is his name?——Robert Hyde, there was the maid, ſhe is here now, and a little boy of mine about eight years of age; there was one gentlemen that is here, Mr. Munn, I do not recollect any body elſe, I ſwear there was not a great many; I heard no noiſe in the orchard, I ſaw nothing as I came home, I heard nothing of any gin that was to come that way.

Will you ſwear that when you came home that night, there was not a great many men about your houſe and orchard?——I will ſwear it.

Then you went out?—Yes, the priſoner might be about twenty roods off, when the piſtol went off, I heard a talking, I ſaw no more, then I went out from the houſe, I did not ſee him, but in a very few minutes he returned back ſhot; there is a hop garden oppoſite, I heard nobody go into that, I do not know any body went in, I heard the noiſe of ſeveral people.

Did any of them come back?—Nobody came back with him, he returned alone, he had no ſtick when he went out, nor when he came in; I ſaw nobody come back that night, when I looked into the road, I neither ſaw him nor any body elſe.

Had you any ſuch ſtick as that in your houſe at the time?—No.

How many piſtols did you hear?——I think there were three; I think I muſt have heard any body that went into the hop garden, I ſaw no more at all that night.

ELIZABETH CHEAVERS ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mrs. Martin, and was ſo on the day that Spice was ſhot; in the courſe of that evening, he came in very early, and enquired for the key of the wicket to go to bed, I went to look for it, but my miſtreſs was gone to town, and ſhe took it with her, he continued till my miſtreſs came home, and went into the bar-room with ſome other company; I was alarmed at ſome noiſe in the road, and I went out, and he went after me, it was ſome time after my miſtreſs came in, and I was met by Mr. Thomas Brock, the priſoner had unlaced his half boots, and pulled his garters off; when Brock came to the door, he ſhoved me on the left ſhoulder with one hand, and hit me on the left ſhoulder with a ſword, and ſaid, d---n your eyes come out, he then took his hand off my ſhoulder, and forced open the door, he ſet one one foot in, and ſaid, d---n your eyes come out; Spice was in the paſſage at the time; then Brock run out and Spice followed him, I was ſitting on the ſteps at the ſame time.

Had Spice any ſtick in his hand when he went out?——He had no weapon when he went out, nor yet when he came in; he went out with his garters in his hand, and his boots unlaced, and in leſs than three minutes, I ſaw the flaſh of three piſtols, and in three minutes after I heard no noiſe.

Did any number of people go out with them?——None went out with them, but the gentlemen that were there were going out, but returned back at the hearing of piſtols; he ſaid, he fancied he was done, and I aſked him what was the matter, and he ſaid he was ſhot, when he pulled up his ſhirt, I ſaw a piece ſhot off his belly, he ſaid that was not of much conſequence, then he took off his ſhoe, and took out the ball.

If this man had been able to have got to his bed, do you upon your oath, believe he would have been in his bed before this time?——I do.

Could he get over the wicket?——He could not if he had tried, the next morning I ſaw Mr. Brock and two more, they gave him ſome liquor, and gave me ſome, ſomebody in the room ſaid, there is a poor young fellow, Mr. Brock, are not you ſorry, to which the words he made uſe of were, d---n my eyes, people would never have broils, if they did not buy them.

Court. How comes this man not to be tried before, when the matter happened ſo long ago as April laſt.

Mr. Attorney General. Theſe are always reported to the Board of Exciſe, they report a caſe, and they ſtate it, and theſe are indictments that I ſhould be very ſorry to bring, without they are very well conſidered, and it is not always determined to proſecute capitally.

Mr. Garrow. When was the priſoner taken into cuſtody?—In September.

Did he continue to lodge in the ſame place?——Yes.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. You ſee we are in a caſe where a man's life is at ſtake, and wounded in the belly and in the foot, and what this man has already ſuffered, all circumſtances conſidered, I own I ſhould recommend it to the crown to conſent to his acquittal.

Mr. Attorney General. Then I am ſure I ſhall, if your Lordſhip thinks that public juſtice will be anſwered, and that the circumſtances of this caſe, conſidering what he has ſuffered, and the behaviour of the officer after, will prevent a repetition of this offence, I had much rather than by the execution of the man; I have brought him here only for the ſake of putting a ſtop to theſe practices for the future, I am ſure I ſhall be much better ſatisfied if it may be only underſtood, let it be well underſtood before this is given up, that the law is not ſuch a law as never can or will be executed.

Mr. Baron Hotham. There is nobody, Mr. Attorney General, who has heard any thing of theſe trials, but muſt feel for your ſituation; I think you have given every ſatiſfaction and every honourable anſwer to the delay that ariſes in theſe caſes, but the fact is, that it is of the utmoſt neceſſity that theſe crimes ſhould be puniſhed where a proper ſubject ſhould be found, ſo it is for the honour of the crown that when it turns out that the priſoner is not a fit ſubject of ſeverity, that the proſecution ſhould be given up.

Court. It is conſented, under all the circumſtances of this caſe, not to throw it out to the world that theſe are not proper proſecutions, but the Attorney General, on the part of the crown, has conſented to his acquittal.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

Court to Priſoner. You are acquitted, not becauſe you are not guilty of the offence charged, but the crown out of that lenity and moderation, which has always honoured them, have conſented to your acquittal; but at the ſame time you ought to return to your country, and follow your honeſt trade with induſtry and attention, and endeavour to avoid theſe practices yourſelf for the future, and alſo endeavour to perſuade your fellow-countrymen to avoid the ſame by your example, as it will not only bring yourſelf but them into ruin and diſgrace.

89. JAMES HILL was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of James Clarke, about the hour of ſeven at night, on the 21ſt day of October laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein one wooden till, value 4d. five ſhillings, and two hundred and thirty-five pieces of copper money, called halfpence, the property of the ſaid James Clarke.

I keep a chandler's ſhop, No. 6, in Adam and Eve court, Tottenham-court-road; on Friday the 21ſt of October, between ſix and ſeven in the evening, I was ſerving ſome perſon in my ſhop, and when they went out they did not ſhut the door after them, I went round and put it too, it goes with a ſpring lock and braſs knob on each ſide the door; and my wife was calling me to tea in the parlour, which is about fifteen feet from the ſhop door, I had juſt ſat down in the parlour, I turned my head round and ſaw the priſoner throw himſelf upon the counter with his feet off the ground and his body a top of the counter, I ran to catch hold of him in that poſition, but I fell over a tub of coals that ſtood in my ſhop, but I ſaw the priſoner go out at the door with the till and money in it, he was purſued and brought back by William Smith, who is here, and William Triplet, whom I have not ſeen here this morning.

Court. You were called by your wife in a hurry to tea?—Yes.

Then you contented yourſelf with putting the door to?—Yes.

You did not pull it to ſee that it was faſt?—I puſhed it to, it goes with a ſpring lock.

How could you be ſure the ſpring went?——It has a ſpring latch above the lock, I know it was faſt.

Did you try whether it was faſt?——I did not try by pulling, I puſhed it with my fingers againſt the door, and I ſhut it, but I did not try it afterwards.

Did you hear the ſpring lock go at all?——No, I did not.

WILLIAM SMITH ſworn.

As I was going up Adam and Eve court I met the priſoner juſt coming out of the ſhop with the till, he dropped the till, I overtook him and brought him back, I was cloſe to him all the while, he was never out of my ſight, I did not ſee him come out of the ſhop; the proſecutor found four ſhillings, and two and ſixpence, and nine and nine-pence halfpenny in halfpence.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had been into Hedge-lane, and going along a gentleman got hold of me, and ſaid I had got the till, and took me back to this ſhop; I was ſo ill I thought I ſhould not have taken my trial; I live at Marybone with my ſiſter, ſhe keeps a green ſhop, I ſell ſhoemaker's things.

Is your ſiſter married?—No, Sir, ſhe is not.

Why did not ſhe come here to ſpeak for you?—I did not think it would have been of any ſervice, nor ſhe neither, and ſhe has nobody to mind her ſhop; my father was a ſhoemaker when he was alive, he and my mother have been dead theſe four years, I ſhall be thirteen the 14th of October next, I went to ſchool before they died and ſince for half a year, I uſed to make the wax for my ſiſter, and go of errands.

Court to Mr. Clarke. Do you recollect exactly what time in the evening it was?——Between the hours of ſix and ſeven on Monday the 21ſt of October.

Was day-light quite gone?——It was too dark to do any thing.

Court to Smith. Was day-light quite gone?——I cannot ſwear to that with certainty.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

SOLOMON SHAW ſworn.

I call myſelf a tripe dreſſer, I ſent a man with four cags of tripe to Mr. Robinſon's, Fleet-ſtreet, and one was loſt.

Robert Hollitt, ſervant to Mr. Shaw, depoſed to carrying the tripe in a cart, and he miſſed one of the cags while he was unloading, which was brought back in half an hour after to the ſhop, with the priſoner.

Francis Dunn, a patrol, took the priſoner with the cag, and brought him to Mr. Robinſon's.

(Depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I found the cag in Fleet-ſtreet.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

95. JOHN BAILLE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th day of November laſt, one linen handkerchief, value 10d. the property of David Cole.

The proſecutor ſaw the priſoner take his handkerchief; and the priſoner pleaded that the proſecutor kicked him violently over the private parts, which the proſecutor on his oath denied; but Mr. Akerman informing the Court that the priſoner was (as he appeared) very bad from ſome hurt he had received from ſome one; the Court in compaſſion to his ſituation, ordered him to be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Mr. Akerman. My Lord, after the Seſſions I muſt take him up to my Lord Mayor, and get him ſent to the hoſpital.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

100. GEORGE BAILLIE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of December, one vaſe glaſs lamp and ſhade with furniture thereto, value 10s. the property of Paul Le Meſurier, Eſq.

I keep the new London tavern in Cheapſide, the priſoner brought this lamp to my houſe, and offered to ſell it for three half crowns, it was on Tueſday the 13th of December, he ſaid Mrs. Phillips had ſent him with it, which was the perſon that formerly kept the houſe, I then ſuſpected him, and ſent one of my ſervants to enquire of her, and upon her anſwer I ſtopped the priſoner, and ſent my ſervant with the priſoner to Mrs. Phillips, he came back again with my ſervant, and my ſervant ſaid in the preſence of the priſoner, that the priſoner had acknowledged he had told a falſity.

What did the priſoner ſay to that?—He ſaid nothing, I ſent for a conſtable, when the conſtable came, he ſaid he brought it from Chelſea, he was taken into cuſtody.

GEORGE PIERPOINT ſworn.

On the 13th day of December, between four and five, Mr. Lewis ſent for me; I went there and aſked the priſoner how he came by the lamp, he told me he brought it from his father's houſe at Chelſea, I told him the lamp was not his it was his father's, he ſaid his father was dead; he went to the Compter, and the next day was taken before the Alderman; I advertiſed the lamp on the 16th of December, and, in conſequence of that, Alderman Le Meſurier's ſervant came and claimed it; the priſoner owned before the Magiſtrate that he picked it up in a court.

I am ſure Alderman Le Meſurier's lamp was loſt from his houſe on Tueſday the 13th of this month, about twelve I went into the country, and the lamp was hanging in the paſſage, I came home about five in the evening, and the lamp was gone, it was the paſſage lamp; the other witneſs Rouviere was in town, I knew the lamp, this burner was broke before, and I broke off one of theſe knobs about a fortnight or three weeks before, upon the whole I am very certain this muſt be the lamp.

JOHN FREDERICK ROUVIER ſworn.

I am a clerk to Mr. Le Meſurier, coming to the compting-houſe at my uſual time, about four o'clock, I ſaw a man in the paſſage taking down the lamp, I had no ſuſpicion he was a thief, I did not take particular notice of him, I paſſed by and went to the compting-houſe about my buſineſs, I did not aſk any queſtions, I know nothing further.

Do you know the man again?——No, it was rather dark and I could not diſtinguiſh the man, I thought it was ſomebody taking it down to mend or clean it, there was another clerk in the houſe, and the maid.

How did the man get in?——The ſtreet door which goes to the compting-houſe is always open.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

On Tueſday evening, about half paſt three or four, I was coming from Shoreditch, I had been to ſee an old ſhopmate of mine, and coming through a paſſage near Wood-ſtreet, a man was running in a white coat, on his ſeeing me a man laid down the lamp upon ſome dirt, it is true that I ſuſpected it to be ſtolen, and that gentleman, the clerk, he declared before the Alderman that it was a man in a white coat genteely dreſſed that he ſaw take the lamp, and he ſaid I was not the perſon.

Court to Lewis. What time did the priſoner bring the lamp to your houſe?—At a little after four.

Priſoner. Aſk Mr. Rouviere the queſtion.

Rouviere. The man that I ſaw taking down the lamp had on a light-coloured coat, and appeared to me rather taller than the priſoner.

Court to Lewis. What cloaths had the priſoner on when he came to you?—The ſame he has on now, a dark-coloured cloth coat.

Court to Rouviere. Can you ſay with any degree of certainty whether the man you ſaw was or was not the priſoner?——He was not to the beſt of my knowledge.

Priſoner. I have one more thing to ſay, with your permiſſion, when Mr. Lewis ſent his ſervant to Mrs. Philips, I followed the ſervant two or three minutes after, and I left the ſervant at Mrs. Philips's, and returned to Mr. Lewis, to deſire I might have the property ſince there was no owner to it, and I had not ſtole it.

Court to Lewis. If I underſtand you, your ſervant and him went together?—He followed my ſervant, and came back by himſelf directly, when he came back, he ſaid the lamp was his property, and if I did not pay him the ſeven ſhillings and ſixpence, he would take it.

Court to Priſoner. How came you to contrive this falſe ſtory?—I beg your pardon, my Lord.

Court to Rouviere. You did not ſee any other perſon, but the one that was taking down the lamp in the paſſage?—I did not.

And you rather think, that the perſon that was taking down the lamp, was not the priſoner?——I do.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the priſoner tells theſe different ſtories, none of which are ſupported by evidence, and they ſeem to leave little or no doubt whether he came honeſtly by it, but the queſtion is, whether he has committed the fact mentioned in the indictment, he is charged with ſtealing it, but yet if he ſtole it, he muſt be actually preſent at the time; for if he received it from the perſon that ſtole it afterwards, though guilty, he is not guilty of the crime charged in this indictment; now Mr. Rouviere ſaw the perſon take down the lamp, whoever that perſon was, that was the perſon that ſtole it; I am affraid therefore, that you have no evidence that he was the man that committed the fact, though he came diſhoneſtly by this lamp.

NOT GUILTY.

Court. Let him be detained by order of the Court, for receiving the lamp knowing it to be ſtolen by a perſon unknown, and let the ſame witneſſes be bound over to proſecute, and let him be referred for Bail to the Right Honourable Lord Mayor, giving forty-eight hours notice.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

101. MALACHI PORTER was indicted for that he, on the 11th Day of November laſt, on the King's highway, with a certain offenſive inſtrument and weapon called a cutlaſs, upon John Young, in the peace of God and our Lord the King, then and there being, unlawfully, maliciouſly, and feloniouſly, did make an aſſault, with intent his monies from his perſon and againſt his will feloniouſly to ſteal, againſt the ſtatute.

I am a labouring man, I live at Barnett, on the 11th of November I was coming home over the fields, about a quarter after five, it was in the ſecond field, belonging to Mr. Taylor, I met two men, one of them I knew very well, that is the priſoner, I bid them good night, they made me no anſwer, I kept on while I came to the next field, and juſt going through there, the other man ſtruck at me with a hedge-ſtake which he had in his hand when I met him, and knocked me down, he aſked me for my money, I told him I had no money, the priſoner at the bar was with him, at the time, I ſaid I was a poor day-labouring man, I told them I had no money, and I hoped they would not miſuſe me, the priſoner rifled my pockets with a cutlaſs in his hand, which he had in his hand when he firſt came up to me, with that the priſoner at the bar ſtruck me over the face with a cutlaſs or a hanger, I cannot ſay which, and the priſoner aſked me if Mr. Bethell's family was at home, I would not reſolve him, I ſaid nothing to him, with that he ſaid you know Bethell's houſe as well as I do or better, and if you do not tell me I will ſtab you to the heart, with that he ſtruck me again with a cutlaſs or a hanger on the ſide of the cheek, by ſaying he would ſtab me to the heart I got up to get away, and he cut me with a cutlaſs by the ear, then he held my head under his arm, and ſwore if I did not tell him he would ſtab me to the heart, the other man held me by the collar, this priſoner ran away firſt, and I held the other by the ſmock-frock, and he got away, and then I went up to Hadley, to one Mr. Gibbs that lives at the Three Tuns, he is my brother, I told him what had happened and came back again, and two more men came with me the ſame evening, I told what had happened, I ſaid I knew the man very well that had done it, I did not know his name then, I have known him five or ſix years; he was taken up on Friday by four o'clock, I knew him again, I am ſure he is the man that ſtruck me with the cutlaſs.

Court. The priſoner, I think, did not aſk you for any money, it was the other man?——Yes, I told him I had none.

When was it that the priſoner firſt came up to you with the cutlaſs?——When I ſaid I had no money, then he ſtruck me with a cutlaſs.

What did he ſay when he ſtruck you with the cutlaſs?——He aſked me if Mr. Bethell's family were at home or not.

Did he ſay any thing to you about your own money?——No.

Then the attempt to rob you ſeemed to be over before he aſked you that; did he do any thing with the cutlaſs before he rifled your pockets?——No.

After he ſtruck you with the cutlaſs he made no more attempts to rob you, but aſked you about Mr. Bethell's houſe?——Yes.

Who came up to you firſt?——The other man knocked me down firſt, and this man came up next.

Did he come up to you with the cutlaſs drawn?——I never ſaw it till he ſtruck me.

Mr. Garrow to Young. You had ſeen theſe two perſons together in the firſt inſtance, when they did not aſſault you?——Yes.

Did they come up to you afterwards when the other man knocked you down?——The one knocked me down and the other came up to me directly.

Were they pretty cloſe together?——Yes.

Did they appear to be of the ſame company and of the ſame deſign?——Yes, this man came up immediately to rifle my pockets after the other had knocked me down.

Did this man ſay any thing to you about your money before he ſtruck you?——No, they both of them aſked me for my money before I was knocked down.

What did the priſoner ſay about your money?——He ſaid d—n you, you raſcal, I want your money, that was before he ſtruck me, I ſaid I was a poor labouring man, he made no anſwer but ſearched my pockets immediately, he ſtruck me before ever he talked of ſtabbing me.

Court. After he ſtruck you the firſt time with the cutlaſs was there any thing ſaid by either of them about having any money from you?——No, Sir.

WILLIAM COPE ſworn.

I live at Potter's Bar, I apprehended the priſoner the 13th of November, at the Green Man, at Potter's Bar.

Did you ſearch his houſe?——He had a lodging, I ſearched that, I took him upon ſuſpicion of breaking open a houſe, there was a cutlaſs found, and I took a knife from the priſoner, I never heard the priſoner ſay a word.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I came from Waltham, in Eſſex, that morning, I went from thence to Hertford, there was no work; from thence to Wetſtone, there was none; then I came back to Hertford again, then I heard of ſome at Endfield Chaſe, and I got a lodging at Potter's Bar; I am very innocent of the crime, I never had a cutlaſs in my hand in my life, nor neither was I in the place, I lodged at Mrs. Duck's, at Potter's Bar, and ſhe locked me in over night, between ſix and ſeven, and let me out at eight in the morning.

MARY DUCK ſworn.

I know the priſoner, if I ſee him, he came to my houſe the 11th of November, at night, between ſix and ſeven, which is at Potter's Bar, he ſtaid at my houſe till morning, the man behaved very well at my houſe.

Mr. Garrow. He was a ſtranger to you was not he?——Yes, I never ſaw the man but twice before, he had nothing with him but his ſmock-frock wrapped up as if tied up.

How far is your houſe from Mr. Bethell's?——A mile and a half, he came in and opened the door, and ſaid, Miſtreſs, can I lay here, I looked at him, ſays I, you are Malachi Porter; I do not know that he eat a bit of victuals, but drank two draughts of water, I do not know whether he had walked much, he went to bed a little before eight.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, it is my duty to tell you that the evidence does not ſeem to meet the indictment, for the indictment is that he made an aſſault with the cutlaſs with intent to rob.

NOT GUILTY.

Court. Let him be remanded by order of the Court to Newgate, to be proſecuted on another indictment, for an aſſault, with an intent to murder, and for a common aſſault, and referred to Mr. Blackborough, the Magiſtrate, to take bail, with forty-eight hours notice to Mr. Chetham, the proſecutor's attorney, and the Court recommend it to Mr. Blackborough to take ſufficient bail that the priſoner may not eſcape juſtice.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

102. RICHARD KNOWLAN and MARY MURPHY otherwiſe WOOD otherwiſe TYLER were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 30th of September laſt, two hundred yards of printed cotton, value 30l. and two hundred yards of callico, value 30l. the property of Thomas Brown.

THOMAS BROWN ſworn.

I live at Northampton, I loſt my property at Iſlington, I know nothing of the robbery, I am proprietor of the Northampton waggon, I have no partners.

JOSEPH COOPER ſworn.

I am a linen draper, Holborn-hill, I ſold a great quantity of callicos to Mr. Richard Marriot, on the 26th of September.

Were the goods mentioned in the indictment, the ſame you ſold to Mr. Marriot?——They were, they conſiſted of callicoes, and there might be ſome cottons, and they amounted to a hundred pounds and upwards; Mr. Marriot lives at Northampton, he is ſhopman to Mr. Staples.

I am ſhopman to Mr. James Staples, at Northampton; on the 26th of September laſt, I bought a quantity of printed cottons, and callicoes, to the amount of one hundred pounds and upwards of Mr. Cooper, with ſome white muſlin; Mr. Cooper is a linen-draper, on Holborn-hill, I put a mark on them, they were directed to Mr. Staples, Northampton, and ſent by Mr. Brown's waggon, they never came to hand; I always reſide with Mr. Staples, and he never received any, I am ſure it was the 26th or 27th, I arrived at Northampton the Monday morning following, they were the things mentioned in the indictment, the parcel that was to go was valued at forty-nine pounds twelve ſhillings and four pence.

How many were there of the cottons?—There were upwards of two hundred yards of the callicoes, they are worth nineteen pounds; I ſaw them at Sir Sampſon Wright's about ſeven weeks ago, I cannot ſay the day; I know them, they have my marks on, they were in the hands of the conſtable, and part in the hands of the pawnbroker.

I was a ſervant to Mr. Cooper at the time theſe goods were loſt, I delivered them to the waggoner on Thurſday the 29th of September.

Do you know Mr. Brown's name?——Only as I have heard it here.

To whom did you deliver them there?—The man is here, I did not know his name, I think his name is Edward Falkner, the bill was packed up with the goods, I believe that is what we generally do, I do not know whether Mr. Marriot took a bill of parcels into the country, I am ſure there were callicoes, and printed cottons among them, as to the quantity I cannot ſay, by what I ſaw in the journal, the amount might be a hundred pounds, I cannot ſay particularly, they were in three bales, and a ſmall paper parcel containing one piece of print; I know that Mr. Marriot ſent two letters that he had not received the goods he ordered, and I went to enquire about it, and I heard the waggon had been robbed; I delivered theſe bales in the morning by nine o'clock, I am ſure.

I am a porter at the Ram Inn, Smithfield, I received three truſſes and a paper parcel the 29th of September; I put them in the warehouſe, they were directed for James Staples, Northampton; I loaded them ſame truſſes and paper parcel on the waggon, with my own hands, on the ſame day; I did not ſee the waggon ſet off, it ſets off about half after four in the morning, I laſt ſaw it at eleven in the evening, and every thing appeared ſafe.

Priſoner. Did they advertiſe theſe things when they loſt them?—I did not.

FRANCIS THOMPSON ſworn.

I am book-keeper to Mr. Brown's waggon, I can only ſpeak to the entry of the goods, three truſſes and a parcel, I examined the books before I came here to day, and the ſame morning that I heard the waggon was robbed.

What was miſſing?—Two truſſes, there were more goods for Mr. Staples, beſides Mr. Cooper's, therefore it is impoſſible for me to diſtinguiſh which were his, and which were not, I ſaw the goods loaded in the waggon.

How many truſſes did you ſee loaded?——Four, there were others beſides Mr. Cooper's, I made the entries myſelf, four truſſes and a parcel, the things were brought to the waggon the 29th of September, and the waggon ſet out the ſame day.

DAVID MURPHY ſworn.

I am a labourer, I live at Iſlington, I bought part of the goods from the priſoner, I keep no ſhop, I have lived in Iſlington three years, I am a lodger of the priſoner Knowlan's; I bought ſeven yards of linen, and eight yards of cotton, I do not know what callico is, it was either Thurſday or Friday, I cannot tell the month, I ſuppoſe it is eight or nine weeks, as nigh as I can gueſs; I gave it to one Mrs. Bucknell, and as I heard the report I took the linen from her houſe, and carried them to the Juſtices; I cannot tell the month, nor the day of the month, it is about ſix or ſeven weeks ago, I gave the property to the Conſtable, he has had it ever ſince, I bought this at Iſlington, and gave one ſhilling a yard for the linen, and two ſhillings a yard for the printed cotton, I knew the priſoner before, he is a labourer.

THOMAS STAIR ſworn.

I am porter to Mr. Brown's waggon, Mr. Brown's waggoner had left him, and he got me to come up on the journey to London, I ſet off on Thurſday from Northampton, and took back the ſame waggon freſh loaded from London, I ſet off on the Monday morning from town, I went on very well till I got to Holloway turnpike, I do not know how many miles it is from London, we paſſed through Iſlington, I ſtopped to give my horſes a bit of hay, and I perceived the rope cut, and the ſheet likewiſe, I ſearched and found ſomething was miſſing, we purſued our journey to Northampton.

RICHARD WATSON ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Purſe, pawnbroker, in the Strand; I know the priſoner Knowlan, he pawned this piece of cotton, on the 18th of October, I ſaw him after at Bow-ſtreet; I can ſpeak to the perſon of the man, he might be in the ſhop about three minutes.

WILLIAM JORDAN ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. John Cooper, pawnbroker, in Fleet-ſtreet, Temple-bar; I have kept this printed cotton ever ſince I lent the priſoner eight ſhillings upon it, he ſaid he bought it for his wife, I ſingled out the priſoner in the ſtrong room.

JOSHUA DALY ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Cowper, pawnbroker, in Wild-ſtreet, I received this piece of cotton of the priſoner Knowlan, I lent him eight ſhillings upon it, on the 18th of October, here are ſix yards, I have never ſeen him before, I aſked him no particular queſtions, he told me he bought it to make his wife a gown; Mr. King, the conſtable, brought ſome duplicates to our houſe, and one in the name of Richard Knowlan, belonged to this cotton.

WILLIAM WILDMAN ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker at Iſlington, the priſoner, Mary Murphy, lives juſt by me, ſhe milks cows, and keeps a little houſe in the neighbourhood, I know the other priſoner, he did watch by our door, he had been ſometime a watchman, he was a bricklayer's labourer, and watched at night.

Does this man and woman live together?——According to the accounts of the conſtable, he lodged with the woman, ſhe aſked me to lend her half a guinea, on eight yards of printed callico, on the 3d of October, in the name of Tyler, which ſhe always uſed at my ſhop, ſhe ſaid it was her property, ſhe went by the name of Wood, ſhe had uſed my ſhop for eight or ten years, and always uſed it by the name of Tyler, ſhe brought it on the 3d of October, I have kept it ever ſince Mr. King the conſtable found me out; here is another piece which ſhe brought on the 8th, and ſaid it belonged to her lodger, containing ſix yards, it was the ſame pattern, and ſaid her lodger and her had got a gown apiece of the ſame cotton; ſhe told me her lodger's name, but I forgot it, I put it down in her own name, I lent her half a guinea upon it; on the 17th ſhe brought one yard of printed cotton, upon which I lent her one ſhilling, ſhe ſaid it was her own property, ſhe bought it to make her child a gown.

Did this man and woman live together as man and wife?——No, I never knew he lodged with her.

THOMAS TRING ſworn.

I belong to Sir Sampſon Wright, on the 18th of October, information came to Sir Sampſon Wright's of this robbery; when we came to the priſoner's houſe, we waited there three hours, I told Knowlan, I muſt ſearch your houſe, it is in Pierpoint-rents, facing the Three Hats, Iſlington: two more of our people were there, I went up ſtairs, and ſearching about the room, I ſaw two boxes, and one of them the priſoner Knowlan ſaid was his, and there were theſe things, and a purſe of money, five pounds eight ſhillings, they were printed callicoes and printed cottons, and twenty-two ſhillings I took out of his breeches pockets, and three duplicates of things that were pawned that day the 28th, that we took him, then I aſked who the other box belonged to, and Mary Murphy ſaid, it was her box, that was the leſſer box; then I deſired her to open it, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would not; and ſhe told me at my peril to ſearch it if I dared; then ſays I, I will break it open, and I took the poker and broke it open, and took this bundle out, theſe are all printed callicoes, and I found this duplicate in her box, and a printed cotton bed gown, the proſecutor ſaw theſe things at Bow-ſtreet, and he ſwore to the marks.

(Depoſed to by Mr. Marriot.)

Can you venture to ſwear from any circumſtance about that linen without a mark that they were your linen?——There is a mark upon theſe, this is a bit of Montroſs linen, the pattern is the ſame of what was marked.

Is there on any part of the printed cottons or callicoes any mark that you can judge they were your's?——No, this piece of callico has my mark on, here is a piece of plain white cotton that has my mark on. (The mark ſhewn to the Jury.) Theſe are the things that were found in the man's box, here is a mark on this piece, it is the ſame piece that the bed gown is made off, here is a ſmall bit of printed cotton without a mark.

(The different pawnbrokers ſhewed to Mr. Marriot the things they took in of the two priſoners; ſome of the things depoſed to.)

WILLIAM BARKER ſworn.

I live in Shoreditch, this piece of printed callico was brought to me by a man I do not know, in the name of Richard Knowlan, I gave him a duplicate, which I ſaw to day in the hands of Thomas Brown.

Brown. This is my waggon, I have no partners, it goes to Northampton, from the Ram Inn, Smithfield.

Priſoner Knowlan. In the firſt place, there being duplicates found upon me, they did not find them upon me, I produced them in my own name.

The priſoner Knowlan delivered in a written defence which was read by the Clerk of the Arraigns, as follows.

I am a watchman of Clerkenwell pariſh, about ſix o'clock in the morning, after crying the hour in White-lion-row, going to the back road, Iſlington, where I likewiſe cry the hour, in croſſing the fields near the ſheep-pens, I picked up two parcels, one of which upon examination, contained a quantity of callico, the other a quantity of linen and cotton, but the quantity of either I do not know; unacquainted with the ſtrict duty of my office, I took them to my lodging, inſtead of, as I ſince learned I ſhould have done, carrying them to the watch-houſe; they remained about three weeks in the cuſtody of the other priſoner Murphy, we both lodged together; unfortunately not being able to read, I had no poſſibility of ſeeing by the newſpapers, if they were advertized, but I did all that was in my power, that was making known the circumſtance of my having found them, and requeſted ſeveral of my acquaintance to learn if they could, who had loſt ſuch property, and if I could find to whom they belonged, upon due proof of the property, I would deliver them up: three weeks havelapſed, and no claimant, I was perſuaded and thought myſelf warranted to diſpoſe of them, which I did from no idea of guilt whatever; when the conſtables came to me, enquiring if I had found ſuch property, I readily told them I did, and that what remained undiſpoſed of I would give up to them, with the duplicates and pawnbrokers directions for ſuch parts as were pledged: I have always ſupported a good character as a labouring man.

PRISONER MURPHY'S DEFENCE.

This priſoner lodged in my place, I have three fatherleſs children, he was recommended to me as an honeſt man, I was not able to pay the rent myſelf, but how he came by the things I do not know; what things they were, I do not know.

Tring. I found the duplicates in her pocket.

JOSEPH COLLIER ſworn.

I am a houſe keeper, in White-Lion-row, the priſoner worked with a neighbour of mine, one Mr. Garrard, about two years and a half, I have employed Mr. Garrard, and this man has worked with him at my houſe; he is a very induſtrious man, I never heard before this any harm of him, he was ſo induſtrious that I remarked him a year ago.

SUSANNAH GARRARD ſworn.

I have known Knowlan almoſt theſe three years, I am a houſe-keeper in White-lion-row, he bore a good character, my huſband employed him two years and a half in the labouring way, he has always been very juſt and honeſt, we have truſted him with money many times, and if he is diſcharged my huſband will have no objection to employing him directly.

WILLIAM WOOLNORTH ſworn.

I live in White-lion-row, I have known the priſoner between two or three years, he always appeared to me to be a very honeſt induſtrious man, this is the firſt that I ever have heard to the contrary, and as a watchman till this happened, I never thought him otherwiſe than an honeſt man, I am a near neighbour to his maſter.

JOSEPH SPENCER ſworn.

I have known him about two years, he is a very honeſt man for anything I ever heard.

Priſoner Murphy. I have no friend here, I muſt truſt to providence.

RICHARD KNOWLAN, GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

MARY MURPHY, GUILTY.

To be confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

103. JAMES THOMAS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of November laſt, one pair of man's ſilk ſtockings, value 4s. 10d. the property of John Baggalley.

JOHN BAGGALLEY ſworn.

I live at No. 115, Fleet-ſtreet, I keep a hoſier's ſhop; on Wedneſday the 24th of November, about eight in the evening, I being abſent, one of my ſhop-men ſent for me, and I found the priſoner in cuſtody of the ſhopman, he accuſed him of ſtealing a pair of ſilk hoſe.

JOHN COLEMAN ſworn.

I am ſhopman to the proſecutor; the priſoner, on the 24th of November, came into Mr. Baggally's ſhop, and aſked me to let him ſee ſome dark ſpun ſilk-ſtockings, nobody elſe was in the ſhop, I ſhewed him a pair of the pattern, but they would not do, I then told him I had ſome ſilk that would come very low, which I would let him ſee, and I went to look for them, and I ſaw a pair of ſtockings concealed in his hand, I collared him and began ſhaking him, and he threw down the ſtockings on the counter, and in his defence he ſaid he had got nothing, he only threw down the ſtockings, there were other ſtockings laying on the paper which I opened to ſhew him, he threw them among the others, and I inſtantly ſeparated them.

The priſoner called three witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutor.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

104. JOHN WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Michael Daley on the King's highway, on the 22d day of September laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, two linen ſhirts, value 40s. three ſtocks, value 3s. five handkerchiefs, value 5s. one pair of worſted ſtockings, value 2s. and one baſket, value 2d. the property of Mary Daley.

MICHAEL DALEY ſworn.

I ſhall be thirteen the 12th of next April, I was examined on the former trial, my mother is a waſher-woman, No. 4, Bond-ſtreet, Rathbone-place; on the 24th of September laſt, I was going to Mr. Carr's in Norfolk-ſtreet, I had the linen with me, I was going along, and I got to the door, I had knocked, and my mammy told me, before I went, to hold the things very tight becauſe ſhe had a dread upon her, as ſhe was adviſed not to ſend me, I knocked once and I was going to knock a ſecond time, and ſomebody came behind me (my face was towards the door) and ſnatched my bundle off my head, I turned round and took hold of him, and he had the handkerchief.

Court. Had he got the bundle completely from you when you took hold of him?——Yes, Sir, and when I took hold of him, he dropped the bundle.

What became of him then?——He fell down in the kennel, and I fell down too, and he took and hit me over the arm, and took the bundle of linen from my head.

Should you know either of theſe men again if you ſaw them?——No, Sir, I ſhould not, I cannot tell either of them.

How many men were there?—But two, then I followed the man that had got my baſket of linen, and I hallooed out ſtop thief, and he was ſtopped going down a paſſage, the clothes were in a baſket.

THOMAS WALDEN ſworn.

I was in a houſe in Arundel-ſtreet, with a few friends, hearing a great noiſe I liſtened a little while, I heard the alarm of ſtop thief, I immediately ran out of the door, and ſaw one Tranter, who had been tried and acquitted here, run out of the corner of the gate-way, and I ran after him, juſt as he got out of the gate-way he fell down, he immediately jumped up again, and I purſued him and had like to have fallen down myſelf, I caught him round the waiſt, he wanted to eſcape, but I held him ſo tight that he could not, I deſired him to come along, he wanted ſadly to get away but I would not let him, juſt as I got hold of him a young man came and aſſiſted me, and we got him into Arundel-ſtreet, and he was taken to the round-houſe, and there he was till Monday morning.

Had he any thing in his poſſeſſion when you took him?——Nothing at all.

——— SAYER ſworn.

I apprehended Williams at the Jolly Sailors in Drury-lane, when he came to Bow-ſtreet I told him he was apprehended for robbing a boy of a bundle.

Did you tell him what boy or where the robbery was committed?——No, my Lord.

Did you ſay no more than that?——No, my Lord; when he was firſt charged, he ſent Mr. Gee out to me to know if he could not be admitted as an evidence, he lives in Drury-lane, I went to him and told him I did not know, I would ſpeak to Sir Sampſon, I went over the way and ſpoke to Mr. Addington, and Mr. Addington referred it to Sir Sampſon, he had heard the matter before the next day, Sir Sampſon ſaw him, and Sir Sampſon admitted him as an evidence.

Was there any information given againſt him upon oath before he was admitted as an evidence?——No, my Lord.

Court to Jury. There being no evidence againſt this priſoner but what he ſaid himſelf when he was admitted an evidence for the Crown, on the trial of two men for the ſame robbery, who were acquitted; although he denying all the evidence he gave before the Juſtice, when he came before the Court as an evidence, and was therefore committed to priſon, and indicted as a principal, yet there being no other evidence againſt him, he muſt be

CHARLES ATWELL ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. What is your name?——Charles Atwell.

Where did you come from?——From Doctor Stence in Drury-lane.

How long have you been out of priſon?——What priſon?

Have not you been in Clerkenwell priſon lately?——Not very lately.

What did you go there for?——Muſt I tell you?

Yes, you muſt; was it not for a ſod——l attempt?——No, Sir, it was not, I was wrongfully accuſed.

Was not you convicted before a Jury?——No, Sir, I was not, I was acquitted from this place.

Oh, then you have been tried here beſides?——I was tried without doubt in this place, and was acquitted; the perſon that proſecuted me about that was the boy's father.

I aſk you, Sir, have you never been in cuſtody, under confinement?——Since that time?

No, I mean then.——I believe that was four or five years ago.

Somebody did think of committing you wrongfully; do you mean to ſwear that you was not convicted of that offence?——I do not underſtand you.

Was you never found guilty before a Jury?——No, acquitted.

Was you never tried any where elſe but here?——No, never.

Was you never tried at Clerkenwell?——No, Sir, not tried at Clerkenwell.

Come, look at that honeſt gentleman a little; upon your oath, was you never tried at Clerkenwell?——I was tried here and honourably acquitted.

Mr. Chetham. He was tried here for the actual crime, and acquitted.——I was not guilty of it, Sir.

I did not aſk you whether you was guilty; was not you tried for the offence itſelf, the capital offence?——I think I was.

Court. Tell us what you have to ſay againſt the priſoners?——I live with Doctor Stence, a ſurgeon and apothecary, in Drury-lane, I have lived with him ſome time.

In what capacity?——As ſhopman, I had been down at Weſtminſter about ſix, it was in October, I believe it was the 30th, as near as I can recollect, I went to ſee a friend, they were not at home, I was going to the upper end of Mount-ſtreet, to Storey's-gate, I went through the Park, I heard the gate fall too, I had not the key of the gate, I met a young man whoſe name is Charles Brown, I aſked him if he had got a key of the Park, he ſaid he had not, four young men came up from the path way, and they ſtopped and aſked ſome queſtions, but I cannot tell what.

Who did they aſk queſtions of?—Both of us, we were ſide by ſide, then they came to the front of us, and aſked me if I had got any money or ſomething to that purpoſe.

What gate was it you heard fall too?—That that goes into Piccadilly, oppoſite to Clarges-ſtreet.

What gate was you at before the four young men came up?——I was near to the lodge gate, they put their hands into my breeches pocket, and took out four ſhillings and two ſixpences, and a ſteel watch-chain and a ſteel key which I had not put to my watch, they were neither of them the priſoners at the bar that robbed me.

Have you any thing elſe to ſay againſt the priſoners?——The priſoners were in company with the two that robbed me.

Did the two priſoners at the bar come in company with the two that robbed you?—There were only four of them.

Were the two priſoners at the bar either of thoſe four?—Yes, I was robbed by the pond.

You were robbed by two men?——Yes.

Were the priſoners at the bar either of theſe two?——No, Sir.

You never had but four people come up?——No, theſe two were [illegible] believe in company, but they were not the men that robbed me, the other two eſcaped.

Do you mean to ſay that theſe men laid hands on you?—No, Sir, but they were preſent with thoſe that did, I believe ſo, I have not ſworn to them.

Mr. Garrow. Was it you or Charles Brown that loſt the paint?—I never uſed any in my life.

Why do you ſuppoſe I meant to aſk you if you did, was it you or Brown that loſt the paint?——It was Brown.

CHRISTOPHER CREEDLY ſworn.

I am one of the patrol belonging to Sir Sampſon Wright, and on the 30th of October, at half paſt ſeven in the evening, in St. George's-row, I met three men, I paſſed two which was one that run away and Darby, and the laſt man that came up was Smith, I laid hold of him and my partner laid hold of Darby, the other ran away as faſt as he could, I ſearched Smith and found this piſtol loaded with ball and powder, and this knife and this box and nine ſhillings in ſilver, which is an ivory box, I deſired my partner to hold Smith while I ſearched Darby, we found upon him a piſtol loaded.

WILLIAM BRANDISH ſworn.

I was with Creedly, I took away ſome piſtols and other things from theſe men, I took no watch, nor key, nor money.

Court to Atwell. I underſtood you could not ſwear to the priſoners?—I believe them to be the men that robbed Charles Browne in company with them that robbed me, it was not very light.

Is there any lamp in the place?——No, Sir, there is none there.

Do you wiſh Brown to be called, you have a right to call him if you chooſe it.—I wiſh him to ſpeak the truth, and I dare ſay he will, reſpecting my robbery.

CHARLES BROWN ſworn.

Where do you live?—I live in Butcher-row, I am out of place.

What is your buſineſs?——I am of no buſineſs, I was not an apprentice, I was in a jewellers and perfumers ſhop, I ſerved as ſhopman.

Mention his name?——Pelligree and Hopkins; I was in the Park on Sunday, the 30th of October, I was coming to the gate, and Charles Atwell aſked me if I had the key of the gate, I told him I had not, the gate was ajar when I came through.

Is it a gate that falls with a ſpring lock?—Yes.

Which way did Atwell come?——He came up from St. James's way, and ſaid he wanted to go through.

What paſſed after this?——There was nothing paſſed between us, four men came up to us.

Were the priſoners at the bar the men? Yes, I think they were, the one that ſtands up was.

Can you be ſure they were?——That one, I cannot be ſure of the other, but as to clothes, the one that ſtands up that is the priſoner Smith, I can be ſure of him, I knew him immediately at Sir Sampſon Wright's.

Was there any lamp in the neighbourhood near you?—No, Sir, but it was quite ſtar-light.

No moon?—No, Sir, they were rather cloſe to me.

Was there no moon?——I do not recollect that there was.

What did the priſoner Smith do?—He aſked us a queſtion, what we were, or ſomething, he pulled out a piſtol and aſked me if I had any money, I told him I had but very little.

Did Smith do any thing to Atwell?——No.

After he pulled out the piſtol what did he do to Atwell?——I cannot ſay, I heard one of the others aſk Atwell if he had a watch, and he ſaid he had.

Did theſe men all come up together?—Yes.

Did you hear them converſe together at all?—No, no further than that.

What did the others do to Atwell?——The other ſaid he has a watch, and one of the priſoners ſaid rip him up then, and I ſaw them take a watch from his fob.

What elſe was taken from him?——I could not ſee any thing elſe.

Mr. Garrow. How long might they be there?—A very ſhort time.

Did you ſee them do any thing beſides take the watch?—No, I did not.

Had they time to take any thing but the watch?——Yes, they had, we were both together, I ſaw them have their hands in his pocket, but I cannot tell.

Can you deſcribe the time at all?—No, I cannot, it was in the Park.

Could you ſee the face of Smith?——Yes.

Have you ever ſeen him before?—Never, I never ſaw him before, I could not diſtinguiſh the colour of his dreſs.

Had he a hat on?——Yes.

A round hat?——Yes.

How long might they be there altogether?—I cannot tell how long.

Can you make a gueſs?—I cannot.

Were they there a minute?—I ſuppoſe they were, I cannot tell exactly.

Now, can you ſafely venture to ſwear to the man's face by ſtar light, no lamp nor other light, and with a round hat on, who was not with you above a minute?——When I went to Sir Sampſon's, I ſaid, Smith was the man.

Was it a metal watch?—I take it to be ſilver, it was light enough to ſee it was ſilver.

O, I forgot, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Atwell?—I never ſaw him before.

So you are a young gentleman living upon your perſonal fortune?—I muſt live by what I work for.

That comes to the ſame thing in your way of trade; you was taking an airing in the Park in the evening?——I was going through the Park, I was going to St. James's.

You viſit at the palace perhaps?—I viſit a ſiſter that lives there.

You was by the pond?—Yes.

There are ſome ſeats there?—Yes.

What they ca[illegible]ooing places, I believe?—I never heard them called ſo.

Was it a lady you was going to at the palace?—A young woman a ſervant.

Does ſhe paint her face?——Not to my knowledge.

You had the misfortune to loſe a box of paint this night?—No, Sir.

Will you ſwear that now?—I had a box of lip ſalve for my ſiſter.

You are a ſingle man, I think, Mr. Brown?—Yes, Sir.

How long may you have lodged in Butcher-row?—Not long, I lodged in Oxford-ſtreet, at Mr. Ward's, a druggiſt, before.

You was coming in from Piccadilly into the Park?—I was, I had been into Piccadilly.

With whom?——At a public houſe, I had been drinking tea.

You never take any more vulgar liquors than tea?——Sometimes.

What age may you be?——Seventeen laſt May.

Is that the way you uſually dreſs?—Yes.

So Mr. Atwell aſked you if you had a key of the park?—Yes.

So then you entered into a little confab.?——We had no diſcourſe at all only that he wanted the key.

Are there not lamps at the gates of the park?—I do not know.

No, why you know the gates of the park, as well as any body knows the pump at Aldgate?——I do not know that there are lamps.

So you truſted you pretty perſon in the dark, and made this happy acquaintance?—No happy acquaintance at all.

Have you enquired at all who he is?—No, Sir, he is nothing to me.

When did you ſpend the evening with him laſt?——I have not ſpent the evening with him at all, I have not been in the Park ſince.

The Park is a good pleaſant place in the evenings?——It was not ſo pleaſant to me.

It was quite light enough to ſee a man's face?——I was immediately by the man, Smith was robbing me, I do not know that he touched Atwell, I have a letter in my pocket now that came from my uncle, which was found upon him.

Pray may I aſk you, as you have but ſmall wages, though I tell you before hand, you have a right to refuſe anſwering me, how you have ſupported yourſelf, what way of living have you had?—I had my money that I took in Bond-ſtreet, I lived there near ſeven months, my wages were ſmall for the place to find every thing.

(Charles Atwell called again.)

Did you ever find any of your things that you loſt?—No.

Did you ſee any body elſe when the four men came up?—No, I was ſpeaking to Charles Brown.

When did you firſt ſee Charles Brown?——Near the gate.

Which gate?—That that leads into Piccadilly, I never ſaw him before in my life, nor I did not know where he lived, I aſked him for the key of the gate.

How many men came up?——Four.

Had they their hats on?——I believe they had.

What did they do?—They came up, and aſked whether we had got any money or ſomething, there was ſomebody ſpoke before, but what it was I cannot ſay, they clapped a piſtol to my cheek, and another to my breaſt, I ſaw only two piſtols, then they aſked me if I had got any money, I told them no, one of them put his hand into my right hand breeches pocket, and took my money.

Which of them was it?—I think Smith was one of them that robbed Charles Brown, I was ſo near I could very well diſcern.

Continuation of the Trial of George Darby and Matthew Smith.

You do not ſpeak with certainty to theſe two men ?——I verily believe they are the men, I deſcribed one of them to Sir Sampſon, one looked like a dirty looking fellow, with looſe hair.

Was that the one you ſuppoſed robbed you ?—No, Sir, one of them that was robbing Brown.

Mr. Garrow. You and Mr. Charles Brown were quite ſtrangers to each other ?—Intirely ſo.

After you were robbed, you jogged on together I ſuppoſe, and exchanged addreſſes ?—Exchanged what ?

Addreſſes, directions ?——He went one way, and I went another.

You met the next evening in the Park, I ſuppoſe ?—We had no occaſion to meet the next evening in the Park.

You did not loſe any paint ?—I ſuppoſe if I had, I might have loſt it.

Did you loſe any ?——No.

When did you ſee Charles Brown again ?—On Thurſday evening, I ſaw him coming from Covent Garden.

Stumbled upon him juſt by accident ?—That is a queſtion I cannot anſwer, I did not meet him by appointment.

Then you ſtumbled upon him by accident, will you ſwear that, now ?——I did not meet him by appointment.

Then it was accidental ?—It was ſo.

Where might you be going ?—Carrying out things.

What might you be carrying out ?——I cannot recollect.

What part of Covent Garden ?——The ſtreet that leads from Covent Garden:

Has it any name ?—Yes, Ruſſel-ſtreet.

Was it broad day light ?—Yes, I believe he had been at Bow-ſtreet, I am not ſure.

You had not been to Bow-ſtreet ?—They fetched me to Bow-ſtreet:

You told me you never was tried at Clerkenwell ?—I do not know that ever I was tried there, I had nothing to do there.

Was you never tried there ?——Do you mean being before the gentlemen ?

Aye, being before the gentlemen ?—No, Sir, I can truly ſay I was not.

Was you never tried ſince you was tried here ?—No, Sir.

Have you never been in cuſtody, now, Sir, for taking an evening's walk in the Park, or ſome ſuch matter ?—No, never, no man can lay ſuch a thing to my charge.

Whereabouts in the Park, did you meet Mr. Charles Brown?—Juſt by the water, the water ſurrounds the place.

Are there not ſome lamps that lead from the Green Park-gate to St. James's?——Yes, but not on that ſide where I was.

You and your friend Mr. Charles Brown who were quite ſtrangers, had got into the dark?—Sir!

Why you know you were by the pond, and there are no lights there; now, upon your oath, was that the direct road for you?—I have often gone that road.

I dare ſay every night of your life, when you are at leiſure, but I aſk you, Sir, is that the direct road for any fair honeſt married man to go?——I do not know, there are many misfortunes happen to people, as well as myſelf.

Is that the direct path from the Green Park or to it?——I thought ſo.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, you will not call theſe men on their defence.

Court. I believe I need not have the trouble in ſuch a caſe as this is, to ſum it up.

Jury. We are unanimouſly of that opinion, my Lord.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

112. The ſaid GEORGE DARBY, alias BROWN, and MATTHEW SMITH alias TODD, were again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Charles Brown on the King's highway, on the 30th day of October laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, one red morocco pocket-book, value 6d. one handkerchief, value 6d. one pen-knife, value 1d. one ſmall wooden box, containing a quantity of lip-ſalve, value 1d. a bottle, with a quantity of hartſhorn, value 2d. two counterfeit ſhillings, value 2d. one ſixpence, and ten halfpence, his property.

I am one of the patrols, I apprehended the two priſoners in George's-row, the other ſide of Tyburn turnpike; I found one of theſe piſtols loaded, and this box, and nine ſhillings in ſilver, and this little knife, and a comb; and I deſired my partner to take hold of him, while I ſearched Darby, and on Darby I found another piſtol, and this letter, and five pence in halfpence; (the letter handed up) here is a bit of white paint, and ſome lip-ſalve, this handkerchief and knife, and three keys.

Court. Did they ſay any thing when they were apprehended?——No, only they were very angry with the others when they run away, they ſaid d——n their eyes, if it was not too far, I ſhould have had them.

Mr. Garrow. I believe they told you they picked up theſe things in the park?—I heard them tell Sir Sampſon that they found them, but not where.

Whether theſe things were taken from any body by robbery, or whether the perſons that had them, had been put to the ſcout, you cannot tell?—No.

Court to Brown. Look at theſe things.——The three keys, the handkerchief, and the box are mine.

Mr. Garrow. You told me juſt now this was your ſiſter's lip-ſalve?——It was for her.

Is that your white paint?—That is none of mine.

Will you ſwear that?——Yes, I will: I lived with Mr. Montague, in Portman-ſquare, as under footman.

Where do your friends live?——I have no father or mother, I have wrote to my friend, where that letter came from juſt before.

Where did you meet Atwell firſt, on this night after the robbery?—I met him as I was coming from Sir Sampſon Wright's, he was going the other way.

How happened it that you had got out of the high-road where there were lamps, to the place where there was none?——I was going through there.

Was that your direct road to St. James's palace?——It was the way I was going.

Is that the way that you uſually go?—It is the way I went then, I never went that way before, the other way is further round; I was going that way, becauſe I thought it was neareſt.

Was that the neareſt way from Storer's-gate to Mount-ſtreet?—That is as any body chooſes.

Is that the direct path that honeſt men go?—I ſuppoſe if they were not honeſt men they would be ſtopped.

Is it the direct path, are there lights and a foot-way?—It is a place that people do paſs through.

That I know very well, people of a certain deſcription.—I was going through there.

Is that the direct path to Storer's-gate from Mount-ſtreet?—I cannot tell that, I never was that way.

So by accident, you two gentlemen met in this dark place?—Yes.

Foreman of the Jury. Where was you coming from?—Out of Piccadilly.

What part of Piccadilly had you been in?—The upper part, the end next Hyde-park.

Court. Then ſurely you had no buſineſs to come to that private gate, when the gate of Hyde-park is open, and the road lighted.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Court to Jury. The total diſcredit you have ſhewn to the evidence of ſuch witneſſes, is a very proper puniſhment for thoſe, who by their conduct, bring themſelves into diſcredit; it might probably have been very well for the public, if there had been any reputable witneſſes againſt theſe men.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

113. CHARLES YOUNG and JOHN POWER were indicted, for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th of September laſt, 2092 pounds weight of wood, called Red Sanders wood, value 20l. the property of the Eaſt-India company.

A ſecond Count. For ſtealing the ſame, the property of perſons unknown.

(The Caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

——— WISSETT ſworn.

I am an officer in the ſervice of the Eaſt-India Company, I am clerk to one of the warehouſes; a witneſs attends with ſome of the wood; this is red ſanders wood, it is imported from Bengal.

Have the Company loſt any of that wood lately?—Yes, as appears from the report, I can know no otherwiſe.

Court. It is impoſſible to prove this belongs to the Eaſt-India Company?—It is ſo, my Lord, for it is put up to ſale very ſoon after it arrives, and it is impoſſible to ſay whether this has paſſed the ſale.

Court. You muſt go upon the count, as the property of perſons unknown.

ANDREW BRODISON ſworn.

I am a cuſtom-houſe waterman, I know the priſoner Young extremely well; on the 17th of September laſt I ſaw him in company with three other people at Ratcliffe-croſs, they were landing red wood or logwood, I do not know which.

Where did they carry it?—To one Mr. Bottlebold juſt below Ratcliffe-croſs.

Was Satchfield with you?—Yes, it was between five and ſix in the morning, as nigh as I can gueſs.

Mr. Garrow. This was at the public plying place?—Yes.

I take it that ſort of lumber is not ſuch ſtuff as one could carry in one's pocket?—It was carried publicly.

As a baker carries his baſket?——Yes, I ſaw them carry ſome pieces, to the beſt of my recollection.

WILLIAM SATCHFIELD ſworn.

I was at this landing place on the 17th of September laſt, I ſaw the priſoner Young there, I cannot ſay to the other man; he came on ſhore with ſome wood, I do not know what wood it was, it was a kind of red wood, he took it to Mr. Bottlebold's wharf.

JUDAH BOTTLEBOLD ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Mr. Bottlebold you come here about ſomething called red wood, you know that?—Yes.

You was charged alſo with receiving it, knowing it to be ſtolen, you know that too; nay, tell us, why you are an honeſt Jew; what, have you loſt your voice?—Yes, Sir.

You was charged with receiving it?—Yes.

Why ſpeak out, it has happened to many of your tribe before?—It never happened to me.

Mr. Garrow. My objection is, that Mr. Bottlebold being applied to, is to transfer that which is prima facie evidence againſt him as the thief, and put himſelf into a leſs diſagreeable ſituation.

Gourt. Having called the two witneſſes, they have proved enough of this man's evidence to go to the Jury, for there is no objection to the competency of the accomplice, he is at all times liable to be examined, but the objection is to his credit.

Mr. Garrow. There is no evidence at all againſt Power, for whom I am concerned, therefore your Lordſhip will not let him ſay any thing againſt Power.

Court. I muſt hear what he ſays, but I ſhall direct the Jury, that what he ſays againſt Power alone, is not evidence.

Mr. Silveſter. Where do you live?—I did live in Narrow-ſtreet, Ratcliffe.

On the 17th of September laſt, did you receive any thing?—Yes, on the 17th day of September, between two and three in the morning, Charles Young and four other perſons knocked at the door, and my partner Levy Phillips went down ſtairs and opened the door; they informed us, they had a parcel of red wood, they aſked us what we would give them for it, and we agreed to give them half a guinea a hundred, it weighed fourteen hundred weight, they brought it in between three and four in the morning; after that, we went up ſtairs, and my partner gave Charles Young ſeven guineas for the wood; after they were gone, between five and ſix, I went to Mr. John Henry Ford, No. 17, in Broad-ſtreet, Old Gravel-lane; Mr. Ford aſked us, what we would have for it, I aſked him 18s. he offered 16s. when I returned, I found eight logs more of the ſame wood; ſoon after Charles Young and another perſon came in, and the ſaid wood was weighed, and it weighed two hundred weight; I believe Power was there.

Do you know whether Power was there or not?——I rather think he was.

Can you ſwear poſitively that he was?——I think he was there poſitively.

Court. How came you to ſay then it was Young and other people; will you ſwear poſitively that Power was there?—He was; my partner agreed to give them a guinea, we was to call on Mr. Ford for payment.

What did you do with the logs of wood?——Mr. Ford took it away in a cart, and going home it was ſeized.

Who is the carman that took it away?—He lives in Nightingale-lane.

What is his name?——Horſeman.

Was the wood in the cart, the ſame wood that was in your houſe?—Yes, it was put into Horſeman's cart, to be carried to Ford's.

Is that part of the wood?——It is like it.

Mr. Garrow. What trade are you?—I am a dry-ſalter, and ſell drugs.

Is this an article of dry ſaltery goods?—Yes.

Do you uſually buy your wood at two o'clock in the morning?——I never did before.

Are you obliged to ſell it by ſix, it is a periſhable article, I ſuppoſe?——I took the earlieſt opportunity, my partner wiſhed me to ſell it.

How long was you in gaol about the goods ?—One day.

What did they ſend you to gaol for ?——For receiving ſtolen goods.

Did you ſwear poſitively to Power at the office ?——I ſaid I was almoſt ſure, I was quite ſure, he had a different jacket on, he was ordered to put another jacket on, and then I knew him; I did not poſitively know him before.

Have you never doubted about it ?—No, never.

How came you to ſay you believed it, and you thought it, if you had never doubted it ?——Becauſe his dreſs was altered very much, when I ſaw him.

Was not you from home a week after this happened, to hide yourſelf from the officers ?——I was in the city, at my brother's, for a few days, it was holiday time, and there was an account that Charles Young was taken.

Was you from home for that cauſe, or any other ?—I had no other cauſe but that.

But what ?——But Charles Young's being taken.

Court. You were quite ſure at the Juſtices, when the jacket was put on, that Power was the other man ?——Yes.

Did you tell the Juſtice ſo ?—Yes.

You did ?——Yes.

Then you ſaid before the Juſtice, that Power was one of the men that was with Young ?—Yes.

Now, take care what you ſay, for I have your examination before me, upon your oath, did you ſay one ſyllable about Power, or was his name ever mentioned ?——The Juſtice aſked me whether I knew him, I told him, yes.

You did, you ſwear that ?——Yes.

Now, read his examination. How long after this man brought them to you, was it, that you went to the Juſtice's ?—The ſame morning.

Court. Now obſerve, in two particulars, that he ſtates that he ſwore before the Juſtice, that he was ſure of Power.

(The examination read.)

“ Middleſex. The voluntary confeſſion
“ and examination of Judah Bottlehold,
“ admitted an evidence on his Majeſty's
“ behalf, taken the 11th of October, 1785,
“ who on his oath ſays, that about five “ weeks ago, he took a houſe in Narrow“ ſtreet, Limehouſe, and the firſt act they “ did, after taking the houſe, was receiving
“ a quantity of red wood from Charles
“ Young and four others, which confeſſant “ agreed with Charles Young and “ his four companions, for half a guinea
“ a hundred; that on the 17th ult. at four
“ in the morning, this Charles Young and “ four others, brought fourteen hundred “ weight; at ſix, the ſaid Young and “ black Joſeph brought eight ſticks, “ weighing two hundred weight, for which “ they agreed to pay him one guinea, but
“ not having money at home, the wood
“ was left in the back kitchen; that the “ next morning, the informant and John “ Phillips, went to John Henry Ford,
“ No. 17, Broad-ſtreet, and told him
“ that he had a parcel of ſanders wood to “ ſell, who being then in bed, he got up, “ dreſſed himſelf, and told Phillips and
“ the informant he would get a cart, and “ come and take it away; that about
“ ſeven the ſame morning, the ſaid Ford
“ brought a cart down, and the ſaid wood
“ was put into it by the driver thereof,
“ ſaid Ford, this informant, and his partner
“ Phillips; that the agreement Ford
“ and Phillips made for ſaid wood, was “ 16l. per ton, that at the time of landing,
“ he had no bill of parcels, nor did he aſk
“ for any, but that when they went down
“ for the money, Ford told them that the “ wood was ſtopped, and he was to be at
“ the Juſtice's by ten; that informant gave “ him a bill of parcels for the ſaid wood,
“ at 24l. a ton: that informant received
“ from ſaid Young and his companions, a “ quantity of hemp, and ſeven bags of “ hops, which he is confident were ſtolen.

Mr. Silveſter. Who was preſent at that firſt examination ?——Nobody was preſent.

Mr. Garrow. What charge was you in cuſtody for?—I was charged for buying hops.

And for buying ſome hemp too?—— Yes.

The ſecond examination read, dated the 12th of October, 1785; alſo, a third and fourth examination.

Court. In all theſe examinations, the name of Power is not mentioned; he mentions him in a fifth examination, as he does now to-day. There is no other witneſs that ſpeaks to Power, but this accomplice, whoſe evidence can have no effect againſt Power.

BENJAMIN PAYNE ſworn.

I know Bottlebold, he did live in Narrow-ſtreet on the 17th of September, I ſaw a cart load of wood come to his wharf, there were forty-two pieces of ſanders wood as they called it, I call it log wood; I put it into the office at Shadwell, William Elby took it there.

WILLIAM NICHOLS ſworn.

On the 17th of September, I believe I was coming to the water ſide, between ſix and ſeven in the morning, I come up Narrow-ſtreet, Mr. Payne met me, and told me Mr. Saunderſon and him were looking for me, to ſtop a cart-load of wood, I did ſtop it, it was carried to the public office, Shadwell; I do not know what became of it after.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

I was ſent for on the 17th of September, on a Saturday, I took the wood out of the cart, and aſſiſted Nichols to put it into the office.

SAMUEL BARNES ſworn.

I was at the office at Shadwell, I received this parcel of wood, containing forty-two pieces, this is a part of it, it has been in the cuſtom-houſe ever ſince.

Mr. Garrow. Under whoſe care?—Mine, and my brother officers.

You have the key of it?——I have.

You are ſure that is a part of it?—Yes, it came in on the firſt of October, and had a tally on it.

You ſeized it, as uncuſtomed goods not as ſtolen goods?—I do not know that we ſeized it properly, but the Juſtice ſaid there would be a proſecution, and we took it.

Priſoner Young. I was taken up for this before and was diſcharged, ſuch wood as this comes from Guinea, I did not carry any ſuch wood to Bottlebold's, I am a waterman, I dare not aſk a gentleman how he comes by any thing.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

114. The ſaid CHARLES YOUNG was again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of October laſt, ſeven hempen bags, value 7s. and two thouſand one hundred and eighty pound weight of hops, value 70l. the property of William Skirrow, being in a certain boat in the navigable river of Thames.

A ſecond count, for ſtealing the ſame quantity of hops, laying them to be the property of David Wilton, then being in a certain other boat, called a lug-boat, on the navigable river of Thames.

There being no evidence to carry the matter further than on the laſt trial, the priſoner was again

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

115. The ſaid CHARLES YOUNG and JOHN POWER were again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th of October laſt, five hundred and ſixty-five pounds weight of wood called ſapen-wood, value 14l. the property of the Eaſt-India Company.

A ſecond count, laying it to be the property of perſons unknown.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel.

I am clerk to ſome of the warehouſes of the Eaſt-India Company; the Eaſt-India Company have loſt a conſiderable quantity of ſapen-wood.

Mr. Garrow. You know nothing but by the reports you had from the Company?—No, Sir.

Court. I think it is general evidence that they have loſt ſome, though it would not be to any particular parcel.

Wiſſet. This is ſapen-wood, a ſpecies of wood which is uſed in dying, and this is the firſt ſeaſon in which it has been imported; it is a red dye.

ROBERT BRIANT ſworn.

I am a watchman at Paul's wharf, I ſaw two men, but I cannot tell the day of the month, it was on a Tueſday morning, it was a full moon, it may be two months ago, it was a ſpring tide, it was very light, a little after two in the morning, they came and ſtopped ſome time by the ſtairs, I ſaw them come by water to the wharf, with a boat loaded with wood, which I thought was log-wood, they ſtopped there ſome time, and began to land it, I called to the watchman, and they came to my aſſiſtance, he and three men came, I knew Charles Young, I had ſeen him there before, he ſhoved his boat on round by our wharf, I ſpoke to him, I have no doubt but it was Young, I am ſure he was one of the perſons, I do not know the other.

I am a watchman of Caſtle Baynard ward, on Tueſday morning, the 18th of October, I was crying the hour half after two, I ſaw two men unloading ſome wood the bottom of Paul's wharf, and I ſpoke to one of my partners, and ſaid here is ſomething clandeſtine, let us go down and examine them, when we went down they ſignified they were cuſtom-houſe officers, and that we had no buſineſs to meddle by water, becauſe we were land watchmen and not water watchmen.

Mr. Garrow. Who ſaid ſo?——The two men that were in the boat, they both ſpoke, I told them our orders were to watch the water as well as the land, and, ſays I, I am afraid it is ſomething clandeſtine, or you would not land it at this time in the morning; I aſked them what it was, and inſiſted that they ſhould not land any more, they had unloaded about a third, we ſent for Calladine and the conſtable of the night, and they did not know what to do, and one of them went to adviſe with one of our common councilmen, the boat was detained all the while, and they ſaid they would go on ſhore and have ſomething to drink, ſo they went up to the middle of the wharf and laid their heads together and came back and looſened the boat, and rather ſhoved it off, and one of them took up a ſcull and ſaid, he wiſhed it was a piſtol, he would blow our brains out, they left the wood they had landed on ſhore, I know Young, he was one of them, I cannot be poſitive to the other.

Mr. Garrow. You was there all the time that Newman was there?—No, Sir, I went up for the conſtable.

I am another watchman of this ward; on the 18th of October, between two and three, Commander gave me a ſignal, and when I came up there were two more of our watchmen and him and me, and we went down to Paul's wharf ſtairs, and there was ſome wood laid on ſhore, and there was a good deal of wood in a boat, and the two priſoners were trying to ſhove the boat on ſhore, and we aſked them what they were about, they ſaid what was it to us, we were watchmen on land and not by water; and I left them there and went to fetch the patrol, and when he came he was as ignorant of the affair as ourſelves, he ſent for the conſtable; Young was one of the men, and he ſaid the wood belonged to one Mr. Harriſon, of Spittalfields, who was coming there with his cart for it; there was a cart drove along Thames-ſtreet to the end of Paul's wharf, and ſome men came down, and Young aſked them if Mr. Harriſon was coming, and one man ſaid he was, and another man ſaid, what Mr. Harriſon? then he ſaid he was coming; that man not knowing the name of Harriſon gave us a ſuſpicion, then Young ſaid we will go and get ſomething to drink, and Power came back and followed them, and Young ſaid they may keep the wood and be d—d, it will not fetch them above three ſhillings, they will not let a man get a ſhilling, I know both the priſoners, they were both the men that were there; Young took up one of his ſculls and ſaid he knew him very well, and he would take the number of his head wherever he met him, and he ſaid, d—n you, I wiſh this was a piſtol, I would blow your brains out, they puſhed off their boat, and away they went, and we took the wood to the watch-houſe, here is ſome of the wood.

Mr. Wiſſet. This is ſapen-wood, which is worth fifty-eight ſhillings per hundred, a very ſmall quantity was ſold at the ſale, being a new article.

Mr. Garrow. How long might all this converſation take up?—About an hour.

What all you watchmen left your ſtands to hold this converſation, which has been told here in two minutes, and it took up an hour; was you acquainted with Power before?——No, Sir, I was not.

This was the 18th of October, when did you ſee Power again?——I think the 11th of laſt month, it was three weeks and a few days.

When did you ſee him the next time?—At the Juſtice's, at Shadwell, at the bar with Young.

They told you that he was one of the parties that had been robbing on the Thames?——No, Sir.

Did not Nicholls tell you ſo?——I do not know Nicholls.

How happened it, that you are ſo much more able to ſwear to this man, than any body elſe that was there?——I am here to ſpeak the truth.

What cauſe of knowledge have you ſuperior to all the reſt of your fellows that were there?——I ſtood and looked at ſome wood all the time.

Do you know that this man's life is at ſtake?—He was dreſſed in a brown jacket, and a round hat, it did not flap down much, it was up on the ſides, it did not hide his ears nor his eyes; I ſwear to him by taking notice of him, and when I ſaw him again, I knew him.

Had you given any deſcription of him to any body?——No, do not you think I could ſwear to him as well as I could to Young.

What reward do the Eaſt India Company give upon the conviction of theſe perſons, that are ſuſpected of robbing them?——I cannot tell.

Have you never heard?—No.

Do you know what reward is to be got, if theſe men are caſt?——I am not a thief catcher.

You ſeem to be a better trade, a thief fixer?—I am ſure he is the man, I am quite ſure and poſitive of it.

JOHN CALLADINE ſworn.

What are you?——I am a houſe-man, and patrole of Caſtle Baynard ward, I know one of the priſoners, that is Young, but I am not poſitive to the other, whether he was there or not I cannot ſay.

Mr. Garrow. I believe they were a little angry with you, before the Juſtice, that you would not be poſitive to the other?—Who was?

Was not there a little miſunderſtanding?—A perſon aſked me whether I did not know him, I ſaid I had not ſo much converſation with him as with the other.

Who aſked you that?—Newman.

He was a little diſpleaſed?——No.

He argued with you a little?——Only three words, there was another man there, and after that came more down.

Did you weigh the wood?——Yes, there was five hundred and five pounds.

DENNIS MOUNTAIN ſworn.

I am one of the watchmen, I know Young very well, but the other, I cannot ſay I know him ſo well.

Mr. Garrow. You do not mean to ſay that he was there?——I do not mean to ſay that he was not, but I cannot ſafely ſay he was.

PRISONER YOUNG's DEFENCE.

I am a waterman, this wood is log-wood, it is not ſapen wood, if there is any man that is a judge of it, he will ſay ſo.

Court to Wiſſett. Are you ſo compleat a judge, as to tell us, this is not log wood?——I am not a judge of log wood, I cannot tell whether this is log wood.

The Priſoner Young called two witneſſes to his character.

PRISONER POWER's DEFENCE.

I am quite innocent of the matter.

The priſoner Power called four witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

BOTH GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

116. RICHARD BURTON was indicted, for that he, on the 10th of December, about five in the morning, unlawfully did enter into a certain nurſery ground, of and belonging to one Matthew Burchel, and forty ſhrubs, called yew trees, the value of 6l. his property, from and out of the ſame, without his conſent, unlawfully, wilfully, and feloniouſly, did break, ſpoil, and carry away, againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, For entering the ſame, and ſpoiling, taking, and carrying away, forty plants called yew trees his property.

A third count, For feloniouſly breaking and ſpoiling and deſtroying forty ſhrubs.

A fourth count, For feloniouſly breaking ſpoiling, and deſtroying forty plants.

MATTHEW BURCHILL ſworn.

I live at Fulham, I was informed by one of my men, that he had found a great many of my trees cut in my nurſery, but he had not been round to ſee, I went directly and found that they had been cut for the purpoſe of ſticks, by cutting out only the middles of them, they are fan yews, as ſoon as I found that was the caſe, I took my horſe and came to London, and ſearched almoſt all the ſtick ſhops, and whip ſhops, I had been all round, and I went to Mr. Clarke's ſhop in Exeter-change, and found ſome ſticks there, which I did not look at there, but they were afterwards produced, they are now in Court, and on Sunday morning we compared the ſtumps of theſe ſticks with thoſe that remained in the ground, and they exactly matched, we have three to ſhew, we had ſeveral more, but we thought that was a ſufficient quantity; I ſaw the priſoner at Sir Sampſon Wright's, nothing paſſed there, he made no defence, he confeſſed the fact.

Mr. Silveſter. Before we read that confeſſion, was any thing ſaid to him, to induce him to confeſs?——Nothing in the world, from any body living.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know whether Mr. Clark's apprentice had ſaid any thing to him before?——No.

What is the value of theſe trees?—They are fan yews, and ſold at ſix ſhilling or ſeven ſhillings apiece, but they are worth three ſhillings a piece of an average, I think the value about ſix pounds.

Mr. Garrow. There were ſeveral of theſe trees cut?—Yes.

What was the age of the trees?—Some of them are twenty years old.

Does yew ever grow to timber?——It grows a very large tree.

Is it a timber tree?—No, it is not.

Upon your oath, is it not a ſhrub?——It certainly is, I will anſwer for it to be a ſhrub.

I believe it is a yew tree, do you call a yew tree that is twenty years old, a yew ſhrub?—Yes.

Would you call an oak of twenty years growth, if it was put in a ſhrubbery, a ſhrub?—No.

You would however call a yew tree if it found its way into a ſhrubbery, a ſhrub?——Yes, if it found its way into a ſhrubbery.

Court. I will tell you my idea, I rather think I am correct, I conceive that the deſcription of the act of parliament is meant to comprehend all poſſible caſes; firſt it diſcribes the particular ſpecies of trees that are uſually denominated timber trees, and leſt that denomination ſhould not be likely to be compleat, it ſays, any timber tree, or tree likely to become timber; by the word ſhrub, I underſtand that which is of a nature that never would grow to a timber tree; by the word plant, I underſtand that which is in its infancy, as an oak plant, a beech plant, an elm plant; if they ever would grow up to trees, they are plants; if they would not they are ſhrubs.

Court to Proſecutor. Were theſe trees ſpoiled by theſe ſticks being cut out?——They were.

Mr. Garrow. They were fan yews?—They were.

You ſay yew is not timber?——I do not know that it is.

If you had found a fan yew, in a church yard, you would call it a tree; if you found it in a ſhrubbery, you would call it a ſhrub; now, ſuppoſe by accident, you had found a yew tree upon a waſte or common, what would you call it there?—There, it might by called a plant.

Have you any fourth name for it?——I do not know but they may, they certainly are deſcribed under all theſe names, a yew tree, a yew plant, a yew ſhrub.

But not at the age of twenty years?——They are.

Mr. Silveſter. A ſhrub is what I underſtand, to be a tree cut down for gardening.

THOMAS HAMLIN ſworn.

I am a ſervant to Mr. Clark, I know the priſoner perfectly well, he came to my maſter's on Saturday morning, that this gentleman came about theſe trees, he came to ſell me ſome yew ſticks, he brought them, and laid them down in the ſhop; he ſaid, I have been waiting ſometime for you, here are ſome yew ſticks for you, if you have a mind to buy them.

What morning was this?——Saturday morning the 12th of December, I purchaſed them of him, I gave him fifteen ſhillings, this is the piece that matched, I ſaw them matched, and cut off by Mr. Burchel's gardener, they matched exactly.

Was you preſent before the Magiſtrate?—I was.

Was any thing ſaid to him, as a promiſe of favour to tell the truth?—No, all the words that I heard him ſay were, I did cut them.

The Confeſſion read, ſigned Richard Button, it was ſigned by Sir Sampſon Wright and read over to the priſoner before he ſigned it.

"The examination of Richard Burton,
"charged with felony, at Fulham, in the "county of Middleſex, taken before Sir
"Sampſon Wright: who confeſſes that
"about eight in the evening, on Friday laſt,
"he went to Fulham, and laid down in a
"field till five o'clock, when he went into
"Mr. Burchel's nurſery ground, where he "cut down with a knife, five dozen and
"upwards of yew plants, which he carried
"away, and carried them about ſeven
"the next morning, to Thomas Clark's
"ſtick ſhop, and ſold them for fifteen
"ſhillings.

Mr. Garrow objected that the evidence did not reach the act of parliament, and that there was no word in the act of parliament, that authorized his Lordſhip to ſay that the cutting part or any of the ſhrubs, was that felony deſcribed by the act of parliament.

Court. I ſhall leave it to the Jury, whether they are of opinion, that the plants and ſhrubs in this nurſery ground had been broke or ſpoiled, if they are, I ſhall direct them, that in point of law, that is ſufficient to ſupport the indictment.

The Priſoner called two witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

To be impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

117. JAMES FREWEN and ROBERT SIMMONDS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th day of November laſt, one black gelding, price 10l. the property of Watkin Felwell.

WATKIN FELWELL ſworn.

I loſt a horſe in the night between the 3d and 4th of November, a black horſe, I had it, I believe, between four and five months, I knew the horſe as ſoon as I ſaw him, I loſt him from my ſtable, which is diſtant from my houſe about twenty or thirty yards, in conſequence of being informed the horſe was gone, I had two advertiſements made out, and ſent one to Oxford, and the other to Reading, on the Saturday I had it cried by the common crier, at Wallingford; on Monday following I went to London on private buſineſs, not on account of the horſe, I had given it over for loſt; I went to Bow-ſtreet and requeſted to ſee the horſe, as ſoon as I ſaw it, I knew it directly, it was ſhewn me at a ſtable near to Bow-ſtreet, one of the men belonging to the office ſhewed it me, I know nothing of the priſoner of my own knowledge.

Mr. Garrow. Did not you know one of the priſoners before?——I underſtand there is one of them lived in the town of Wallingford, that is Simmonds, but I did dot know him.

Was you preſent at the firſt examination in Bow-ſtreet?——Yes, Sir, he ſaid, he was on Friday, and Saturday, and Sunday, at Wallingford, and he referred us to ſeveral perſons whom he was ſhaving, I went down to ſeveral perſons, and enquired of them, and they ſaid, they had been ſhaved by him on thoſe days.

Did you loſe a ſaddle and bridle?——No, Sir.

Did you find the horſe with a bridle and a ſaddle?——The people that took the the horſe up, ſaid, there was a ſaddle and bridle.

Frewen told you he found the horſe on Clapham-common?——Yes.

That he had found it with a bridle and ſaddle, and ſuſpected it had thrown its rider, and brought it to town to be owned?——I believe he did, I loſt the horſe the 4th of November, the next time I ſaw him was in Bow-ſtreet.

Court to Carpmeal. What ſtable was the horſe at, it was at one Froome's ſtable, in Hart-ſtreet, I brought the horſe there on the 8th of November, on a Tueſday, I brought him from a ſtable of one Mr. Weſt in White-croſs-ſtreet.

Is the horſe that Mr. Felwell ſaw the horſe that you brought from Weſt's?——Yes.

Mr. Garrow. As you are one of the officers, of courſe you are acquainted with Mr. Worley Walmſlay?——I never knew him tried, he informed me where the horſe was.

I keep ſtables in White-croſs-ſtreet, to let out ſaddle horſes, I remember the horſe that Carpmeal took from my ſtables, on the 8th of November, the priſoner Frewen brought him to my ſtable.

When did he bring him there?——On the 4th day of November, about three in the afternoon; he aſked me if I could take care of him, and I ſaid, yes, he begged I would give him a maſh, I told him I was very buſy and begged he would aſſiſt, and he ſtaid and aſſiſted to give him a maſh, he left him there, and I was admiring the good ſhape of the horſe, and I told him I ſhould like to buy him, if he was for ſale.

What anſwer did he make to that?——He ſaid, he was not for ſale. I more than once told him, I ſhould like to give thirteen guineas for him, which I thought was his full value, he refuſed it.

Do you think that was his value?—That was more than the gentleman himſelf gave for him, as I found ſince; Frewen came there every morning.

Where was Frewen when the officer from Bow-ſtreet came?——I believe they had got him in cuſtody then.

Did he at any time ſay how he came by the horſe?—I was under ſome apprehenſions that there was ſomething of a note or money mentioned, as I told the Juſtice, but I do not diſtinctly recollect.

Mr. Garrow. It had a bridle and ſaddle?——Yes.

JOSEPH HALL ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor; about half after ſix on the 30th of November, I was at the ſtable, I locked the door, the horſe was miſſed, the next morning when I went, the door was open, and I could track the horſe round the back way about three furlongs into the road, then I loſt the track.

WORLEY WALMSLAY ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Are you acquainted with Mr. Richard Taylor the younger?——Sir, I have ſeen him before.

Where did you ſee him laſt?——Here, I believe.

That was when you was convicted, was not it?—Yes, I was convicted, and burnt the hand.

Court. Then there is an end of your objection.

Walmſlay. On the 17th of laſt month, I ſaw Frewen up in Alderſgate-ſtreet, he told me he had got a nice horſe, I aſked him where he had him, he told me he ſtole him out of a gentleman's ſtable in the country, I deſired him to let me look at him.

Mr. Garrow to Short-hand Writer. Did you obſerve this witneſs when he was ſworn?——No, Sir.

Mr. Garrow. I beg your Lordſhip will direct this witneſs to be re-ſworn, in order that Mr. Hodgſon may ſee him ſworn, that he may be able to prove it on a future day.

(The witneſs was re-ſworn)

Mr. Recorder to Walmſlay. You was ſworn before?——Yes.

You aſked him if he would let you look at him?——Yes, and he told me if I would come in the morning I ſhould ſee him, he told me to come up to Simmons's Inn, in Alderſgate-ſtreet, which is a china ſhop, where he lodges, I went there, but he was gone out, and I went down Beech-lane, and at the corner of Beech-lane, I met him and the priſoner Robert Simmons together, to the beſt of my remembrance it was the Tueſday after, I firſt met him on the Monday, I aſked him to let me look at him, he told me he durſt not let me look at him, for Simmons was come up to give the gentleman information, or to put him in the papers; he told me Simmons had put him up where to get him, and he durſt not let me look at him.

What do you mean by put him up where to get him?—To the ſtable where he was, I underſtood him he told him where he was, and he was to take him out of it.

What that Simmons had told him?——Yes.

That was what he told you, was it?——Yes.

Then Frewen did not know where he was himſelf?——He told me not, but the other had told him, he did not know himſelf, he ſaid, 'till Simmons told him, and he told me; he went and undid the ſtable door, and took him out.

When did he ſay this had happened?——He told me he got him a night or two before, but juſtly, I cannot ſay; that Simmons had told him where he was in the country to ſteal him, and he had gone and undone the ſtable door, and taken him out, as he told me; I aſked him where the horſe was, and he told me, the horſe was down in Weſt's ſtables; we went and had ſomething to drink together, and he told me after that, he and Simmons were going down to the Pitt's Head in the Old Bailey, and I went and told Mr. Carpmeal and Jealous of it; I went to Bow-ſtreet, and gave information.

Then, though this man was afraid to ſhew you the horſe, he was not afraid to tell you he had ſtole him?——He ſaid that Simmons was come up to ſell him; that the gentleman was come to town.

Mr. Garrow. Was you an intimate acquaintance of Frewen's?——Not much acquainted, only drinking with him ſeveral times; he told me in Beech-lane, that Simmons was come up, to let him know, that the gentleman was come to town.

Look towards the Jury, and tell them who you are?——Yes.

Where have you been, ſince you was convicted here, what have you been doing ſince?—I have been hard at work, I ſuppoſe.

What ſort of work?—Several ſorts.

Name ſome of the honeſt work you have done?——I have been hard at work almoſt every day.

Tell me one honeſt day's work you have done?—I could tell you ſeveral, if you go to Mr. Spencer's, the horſe-dealers, he will tell you, I have been at work there moſt of my time at Spencer's ſtables until laſt fortnight, when I hurt my leg.

Which Spencer?—Robert Spencer.

—Why he has been dead this twelve months?——Then it was his ſon; I worked in the garden at Hampſtead.

Do you know any body of the name of Allen?—I do not know much about him.

I mean the man that was tried this ſeſſions?—I do not know any thing about it.

Upon your oath, did not you give information againſt John or William Allen?—No, never.

You never gave information againſt any man of the name of Allen?——No.

You did not, upon your oath, you know we have ſworn you twice, that that gentleman, Mr. Hodgſon, might prove it?——No, not as I know of, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Will you ſwear that you did not, honeſty?—Yes, I will ſwear that I did not.

You did not tell the traps that they might get him in Hertfordſhire?—No, I did not.

Did not you go down with them?—I did not.

Have you been in Hertfordſhire lately?—I have not.

Did not you go with Carpmeal to take Allen?—I did not.

Do you know any body of the name of Landon?——No.

You gave no information againſt him?—No.

Nor againſt Glover?—No.

Now ſwear that?—I do.

What do you ſay of John Henry Aickles?—I was not the cauſe of his apprehenſion.

How much blood money have you had ſince, my friend?—I never had none in my life.

You deny giving any information againſt the others?—Yes, I will.

Court. Did Frewen tell you what he intended to do with this horſe?—He did not tell me any thing about it, whether he was for ſale or not.

Then he ſpoke to you merely for the purpoſe of informing you, that he had ſtole the horſe?—I do not kuow for what purpoſe it was, I was to ſee him in the morning.

For what purpoſe, did you conceive, that he told you he had this horſe?—I cannot tell.

You have no idea of what reaſon he had for telling you that he had ſtolen this horſe, unleſs he wanted to diſpoſe of the horſe!—I do not know.

PRISONER FREWEN's DEFENCE.

I was in Gracechurch-ſtreet, I heard of a coachman's place, I went to Clapham-common, after the place, there I ſaw a horſe with a bridle and ſaddle on the common and nobody near him, I ſuppoſed him to have thrown his rider, I brought him into the road, I perceived he was a little lame, he had one ſhoe on, I rode him gently to town, and brought to Spencer, I aſked him to give him a maſh, I ſtood and helped him, I left the horſe in his care.

122. JOHN HOGAN was indicted, for that he, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the devil, on the 26th day of June laſt, with force and arms, in the pariſh of St. Mary-le-bon, upon Ann Hunt, ſpinſter, in the peace of God and our Lord the King then and there being, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an aſſault, and that he, with a certain large wooden inſtrument, called a houſe broom, which he in both his hands then and there had and held, her the ſaid Ann Hunt, in and upon the head of the ſaid Ann Hunt, did violently ſtrike and beat; and with a certain razor, value 6d. her the ſaid Ann Hunt, in and upon the neck and throat of the ſaid Ann Hunt, then and there, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did violently ſtrike, penetrate, and cut, giving to the ſaid Ann Hunt, by means of the ſaid ſtriking and beating with the wooden inſtrument aforeſaid, called a houſe broom, one mortal fracture, and by means of the ſaid ſtriking, penetrating, and cutting with the ſaid razor, in and upon the neck and throat of the ſaid Ann Hunt, one mortal wound, of the length of three inches, and of the depth of one inch, of which ſaid mortal fracture and wound, ſhe the ſaid Ann Hunt for the ſpace of eight hours did languiſh, and languiſhing did live, and on the ſaid 26th day of June, ſhe the ſaid Ann Hunt, of the mortal fracture and wound aforeſaid, did die; and ſo the jurors ſay, that her the ſaid Ann Hunt, he the ſaid John Hogan did kill and murder, againſt his Majeſty's peace.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.)

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: It becomes my duty to ſtate to you as ſhortly as poſſible, the circumſtances of this caſe. Gentlemen, you have collected from the indictment, which has been diſtinctly read to you, that the charge againſt the priſoner is that of a murder, committed by a violence almoſt unexampled; this unfortunate young woman was ſervant to Mr. Orrell, an attorney, by whoſe activity and ability which is very ſingular, the priſoner is now brought before you; the priſoner was a porter to Mr. Chapman, a cabinet maker; in April laſt he had occaſion in that capacity, to go to the houſe of Mr. Orrell with chairs; it appears ſince from the converſation of the deceaſed, that the priſoner aſked her for ſomething to drink, for ſome water or ſmall beer, this was the firſt converſation he had with her, ſhe then good naturedly gave him ſome, he thanked her, and told her he would bring her a ribbon, he accordingly brought her one, and he apologiſed that it was not quite ſo good as he wiſhed, but that on ſome other day he would bring her a better; this cauſed a degree of intimacy, and in ſhort it appears, that upon every Sunday from that time, to the time of the poor woman's death, this man conſtantly watched an opportunity of viſiting this unfortunate ſervant in the abſence of Mr. and Mrs. Orrell: on the Sunday of the death, Mr. and Mrs. Orrell having dined at home, they afterwards went out to take a walk in the fields, they were not gone very long, not quite an hour, they left the young woman at home, apparently in very good health and ſpirits, ſhe had done part of the buſineſs of the day, and was left at home to go on with the remainder; when they returned they knocked at the door, nobody anſwered; they knocked again repeatedly, and loudly, but ſtill nobody anſwering they went to church, when they came back they could not get in then, and they were quite aſtoniſhed, as the girl was a careful honeſt ſober perſon; however, Mr. Orrell went to the next door, and aſked them to let him get in over the leads, he then came and let in Mrs. Orrell, and ſhe had the misfortune firſt to go down into the kitchen, and there a ſpectacle, as dreadful as ever preſented itſelf to the human eye, appeared before her: this young woman was ſitting on the floor, reclining on the two corner walls of the kitchen; Mrs. Orrell was much affrighted, and inſtantly ran to inform her huſband; on his going down he will deſcribe the miſerable object he beheld; this unfortunate young woman had her throat cut from ear to ear, her breaſt cut in many places, one of her arms broke, and one of her fingers broke, and a dreadful fracture upon her ſcull; in ſhort, the moſt miſerable object that can be conceived: Gentlemen, the firſt ſuſpicion was that this poor woman muſt have deſtroyed herſelf, however that could not poſſibly conſiſt with all the circumſtances I have now ſtated to you, and they found in the houſe a houſe broom, which appeared to be bloody, it was ſprinkled with blood, they concluded that from that the fracture of the head had come; they found on the next day the blade of a razor which had been thrown on the fire, and in a tub in the kitchen they found one of the ſilver ſpoons, which the perſon who had committed the murder had ſtolen, but had left it there, having waſhed his hands. The poor woman was not dead, ſhe appeared to have ſome remains of ſenſe; but indeed if her ſenſe had enabled her to make any repreſentation, my Lord will tell you, you would not much rely upon it, in the ſtate in which her mind was: Mr. Orrell immediately inſiſted on an enquiry how this could poſſibly happen, and then he was for the firſt time acquainted with thoſe viſits, and it was diſcovered that a man of the complexion of the priſoner at the bar, had been ſeen in the ſtreet about the time of Mr. Orrell's leaving his houſe, he had been laying about in the ſtreet, and a milkman will deſcribe to you ſome very particular obſervations that he made upon him; but I muſt draw your attention to one: Gentlemen, in circumſtantial caſes very often, very ſmall and trifling events, as they ſeem when they ſtand alone, become a vaſt body of evidence when connected with others; the milkman obſerved that this black fellow had a large noſegay compoſed of cabbage roſes, and in the kitchen where this poor woman was found murdered was ſuch a noſegay: Gentlemen, the priſoner on this and ſome other circumſtances, was apprehended, he was examined before a magiſtrate, and he was diſcharged; he afterwards came to this bar to be tried for a felony, and he was ſentenced to be tranſported; and Mr. Orrell, whoſe attention has been awake from the moment of the murder to this time, he examined the Seſſions Paper, and he found that the evidence againſt him, was that of a pawnbroker, who received ſome of the goods that he had ſtolen; he went to that pawnbroker, and in his cuſtody he found a cloak of Mrs. Orrell's, that had been ſtolen at the time of the murder, which theſe people had received from a woman on the Monday morning after the robbery and murder, who lived with the priſoner at the bar, of courſe that woman was applied to, and the ſtory ſhe told, was that ſhe received that cloak from the priſoner on the morning after the murder, he took it from under the bed, and told her he had bought it, and was to pay for it by weekly payments; ſhe likewiſe ſaid that when he came home on the Sunday evening, after having juſt been out the ſpace of time ſufficient to have committed the murder, he deſired her to get him a kettle of water, for he wanted to waſh his coat, it was bloody, he told her he had been fighting, and ſhe waſhed it; when he was firſt apprehended there was ſome marks of blood on his waiſtcoat, the fingers of his right hand were cut: when he was before the magiſtrate, as it was ſuſpected that this poor woman had made a very ſtrong reſiſtance, and this man's fingers had been cut with a razor; he was aſked how his fingers came to be ſo cut, and he ſaid it was done by a knife in the trimming of chairs; now it turns out that the knife with which they trim the chairs muſt of neceſſity be blunt, for it is only to take off the glue; but Mr. Orrell, whoſe ingenuity upon the occaſion cannot be too much applauded, gave him a knife out of his pocket, and deſired him to ſhew him how it happened; the man took the knife in his right hand, he being a right handed man, and could not therefore cut his hand in that way, he ſaid he had had theſe wounds a fortnight, but upon the examination of the ſurgeon, it was found that theſe wounds bled afreſh, and had been very lately received: Gentlemen, theſe are a part of the circumſtances, and a part only to bring the guilt of this murder home to the priſoner at the bar: I have ſtated theſe things to you, becauſe as there is a confeſſion to be proved to you, by a perſon who knowing of the murder afterwards, had concealed it for ſome time, it is neceſſary that ſhe ſhould be confirmed by other circumſtances; if ſhe is believed, there can be no queſtion of the guilt of the priſoner: Gentlemen, to this woman the priſoner has confeſſed the murder, ſhe has loſt ſome degree of credit moſt certainly, but ſhe will be reſtored, if you find her confirmed by other witneſſes of credit and reputation. The circumſtances that will be proved before you are theſe; to ſhew that this man was acquainted with the deceaſed, and viſited her for a conſiderable length of time, in the abſence of the family, and on that very Sunday, he was ſeen in this neighbourhood; on the very day after, in the morning, the cloak ſtolen by the perſon committing the murder, together with other things, was pledged by a hand carrying it from the priſoner: Theſe are ſome of the circumſtances of the caſe; but I had rather you ſhould hear the whole caſe from the witneſſes; and if you are ſatisfied with the evidence, it is your duty, without paſſion and without prejudice, to find the priſoner guilty; but unleſs you are ſatisfied he committed the murder, however atrocious, however ſhocking it was, it certainly ought not to be charged to him; if, on the other hand, you are convinced that he is guilty, it will be very fortunate that ſociety ſhould be rid of a man ſo perfectly deſtitute of all humanity, and whoſe conduct has been the moſt barbarous that ever came before a Court of Juſtice for their enquiry.

Mr. ORRELL ſworn.

The unfortunate deceaſed woman was my ſervant, ſhe behaved very well, and there was nothing to impeach her character: on the 26th day of April laſt, being Sunday, I dined at home with Mrs. Orrell, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon; after dinner, about three, we walked out in the fields, near to Charlotte-ſtreet; we left the deceaſed to dine, and to do the buſineſs of the houſe, in good health and ſpirits, we left her, as we ſuppoſed, alone; we walked for about an hour, and then returned; on our return, which was about four o'clock, we knocked at the door ſeveral times, and nobody anſwered; I looked from the area acroſs the front kitchen, but could ſee nobody; we left the door, after remaining there for about ten minutes, and we walked towards the bottom of the ſtreet, and then returned, perhaps, in the ſpace of ſix or eight minutes, knocking again at the door, and not getting admiſſion, we ſuppoſed that the ſervant was gone out, or that ſhe was fallen aſleep, as ſhe had received inſtructions from her miſtreſs to put clean linen on the bed; we ſauntered about near the houſe for a few minutes longer, and then went to church, to Fitzroy chapel, the ſervice begins there about five in the afternoon, we were in the church, I think about half an hour before the ſervice began; on our return home from church, I again knocked loudly at the door, that was a little before ſeven; knocking loudly at the door, and not getting admiſſion, I was alarmed; I went to Mr. Stephenſon's, the adjoining houſe, I went through their houſe, and got over the wall to my houſe, and ſo opened the door, and let in Mrs. Orrell.

Mr. Garrow. Were both theſe doors in their uſual ſtate?—Yes.

Unbroken?—Yes.

Court. How did you open your back door?—It was on the latch, it was not bolted, Mrs. Orrell came in, and ſaid to me in the paſſage, I will go into the kitchen, and ſee what is become of the girl, ſhe went down ſtairs, and ſhrieked out immediately on getting to the bottom of the ſtairs, and ſhe ran up again, her expreſſion was, O dear! ſomething very bad has happened in the middle kitchen, I am afraid the poor girl is dead: I ran down immediately into the middle kitchen, which is at the foot of the ſtairs, but the floor was covered over with blood; the deceaſed was ſitting in the further corner reclined againſt the two walls, a moſt ſhocking ſpectacle ſhe appeared indeed; her head dreſs was laying on the floor, appearing to have been torn off her head; her gown was likewiſe on the floor, and it appeared as if it had been rolled in blood, the woman appeared to me then to be moſt exceedingly cut and mangled, and my concluſion was, that ſhe had cut her own throat.

Court. Did not thoſe parts of her dreſs being torn and ſeparated about, cauſe you to ſuppoſe ſomething elſe?——Not then, my Lord; I ſaw ſhe was alive, and I ſaid to her, good God! Nanny, what is it you have been doing? Finding ſhe could not articulate, though ſhe attempted it, I immediately ran up ſtairs, and beckoned to an oppoſite neighbour, who was ſitting at an oppoſite window of their houſe, Mr. Oliver, who is not here, and is indiſpoſed; I ran immediately for a ſurgeon, a Mr. Pooley, a gentleman who lives at the top of the ſtreet, and in five minutes, I brought him to my houſe, he looked at her, and ſaid, ſhe certainly cannot ſurvive, ſhe is moſt exceedingly mangled, but the kitchen being dark, we could ſcarcely ſee in what ſtate ſhe was; Mr. Pooley then took hold of the deceaſed, and I believe I gave him aſſiſtance to remove her to the middle of the kitchen, to give a better light, we then ſaw ſhe had her throat cut very much in ſeveral places, the throat and neck were cut very much, and a wound on the head over her left eye; Mr. Pooley then adviſed me immediately to get her to the Middleſex hoſpital, by reaſon that there we ſhould have more aſſiſtance to ſave her life, if poſſible; I had her removed to the hoſpital, and I ſuppoſe in twenty-five minutes from the finding, I had her placed in a bed at the hoſpital; on being examined by the ſurgeons and Mr. Pooley, we found a large fracture on the ſcull over the left eye, the eye was ſwelled and ſtood out in a manner that was ſhocking, the bones of the face and the cheek bone were broke, and ſeveral deep cuts on the left ſide of the neck, the throat and windpipe were cut in ſeveral places, ſeveral gaſhes or ſtabs were on the breaſt, particularly a large circular cut under the breaſt, the cheek and chin had ſeveral deep cuts, the left arm was broke, a compound fracture, above and below, the elbow ſhattered to pieces, the right arm was cut, and the right hand very much cut on the back of the fingers, as we then ſuppoſed by guarding her throat; the fourth finger on the right hand appeared to me to be broken, but the ſurgeon ſaid it was not, but it was a leader had ſtarted; upon finding that the woman was cut and abuſed in this manner, which appeared to be done with a ſharp inſtrument, or with a razor, it was immediately concluded ſhe could not do it herſelf, we then ſuppoſed ſome perſon had been in the houſe, and that ſhe was murdered by ſuch perſon: there is a little circumſtance I have omitted, Mr. Pooley took up from the middle of the floor, the handle of a razor, I ſaw him pick it up, it was broke, and appeared to be broke by violence, as if laid hold on by another hand, and twiſted off.

Mr. Garrow. Were the inſide of the girl's hands cut?—They were both inſide and outſide cut on the right hand; finding this part of the handle of the razor, we examined to find a blade to it, but did not then; I immediately returned with Mr. Pooley to the houſe, and upon coming to the houſe, I ſearched to ſee what was loſt, and the firſt thing that I miſſed was a ſilk mode cloak of Mrs. Orrell's, and which I knew ſhe hung on the back parlour door; upon further ſearch, I miſſed eight ſilver ſpoons, a large table cloth that had gone down at dinner time, and other articles that I did not miſs at firſt: Mr. Pooley with myſelf ſearched the houſe, and examined all the chimnies, under the beds, and every room and cloſet in the houſe, ſuppoſing we might meet with the murderer concealed, we did not meet with any perſon; there were ſome ſuſpicions raiſed in my mind of a mulatto man, from what I had gathered, and I immediately applied to Sir Sampſon Wright the ſame evening, and communicated to him my ſuſpicions, and we immediately went and diſtributed a printed handbill, which I have a copy of, this was on the Sunday night, a few minutes after nine; I was told of ſome ſuſpicions of the priſoner, who was a porter to Mr. Chapman, and I went to Mr. Chapman, he is a chair maker in Peter-ſtreet, Saffron-hill, from whoſe warehouſe I had purchaſed ſome chairs.

Mr. Garrow. Were theſe chairs brought to you after Ann Hunt came to your ſervice?—They were.

Court. Do you know whether theſe chairs were brought home by the priſoner?—I do not know, I endeavoured to apprehend that man that night, but I could not, but we took three houſebreakers that night; on the Tueſday morning the priſoner was apprehended, and brought to the houſe where I then was, which was at Mr. Hodgſon's in Charles-ſtreet.

Mr. Garrow. Now tell us what you obſerved?—Upon the man being brought to me, I looked earneſtly at him, I did not recollect him, but upon the right ſide of his waiſtcoat I obſerved two or three ſpots of blood, there were a few other marks upon the waiſtcoat, which appeared to me to have been done with ſtain from chairs, they were red, but it was eaſy to diſtinguiſh between theſe red ſtain marks, and the marks of blood; I likewiſe then obſerved that an upper ſurtout coat which he had on, had been waſhed recently, as if it had been dirtied a day or two before; I then took the man in the coach up to Charlotte-ſtreet, that thoſe who had ſaid they had ſeen him, might recognize him.

Court. Now before we leave this part of the caſe, will you examine the impreſſions of your own mind, whether you recollect the obſervation of the coat at the time, aroſe from what you obſerved then, or from what has occurred to your recollection ſince?——It inſtantly ſtruck me at the firſt ſight of him, at the moment I ſaw him it ſtruck me.

Court. You underſtand the diſtinction? ——I do, it was at that time that it ſtruck me, and I mentioned it even then to the people that were about me.

Mr. Garrow. Did the coat appear to be partially waſhed, or wholly ſo?—Wholly waſhed, but the ſleeves appeared lighter, but whether it was from further wear, or whether it had been more waſhed I cannot tell; I then took him down to Bow-ſtreet, I took one of the officers with me into the Borough, to enquire out from intelligence that I had, where this man's lodgings were, and with ſome difficulty I found out his lodgings.

Mr. Garrow. I believe you at a ſubſequent time found him in thoſe lodgings?—Yes, at a ſubſequent time, I took him but of bed with one Pugh a witneſs; when I reapprehended him, the officer and myſelf ſcrambled up to the window, got into his room and examined it, he was in the room, nothing of my property was found; not finding any thing, I returned to Bow-ſtreet; we had a long examination of the man, and could make nothing out, and were under the neceſſity of diſcharging him the next day for want of evidence; I took him up to the body, to ſee if that would have any effect upon him; that was on the Tueſday evening, the 28th of June, the day but one following the murder, the woman was dead then, ſhe died about one o'clock on Monday morning, I ſaw her dead myſelf; on the Tueſday evening I took him up to the body, and put many queſtions to him, to ſome of which he gave anſwers that were very well, and ſome that ſhewed confuſion; I requeſted him to put his hand upon her breaſt, he put his hand on, and ſhewed leſs ſenſe of horror than I ſhould ſuppoſe any innocent man could; there was one of the officers of the police there, and he burſt into tears, and could not ſtay in the room.

Mr. Garrow. Did the priſoner uſe any expreſſions which ſhewed his acquaintance with the deceaſed?—He looked at her, and ſaid, my dear I do know you very well, I never did you any harm in my life; I ſaid what do you mean by knowing her very well, he ſaid I do know her very well, I do remember her; I then aſked him whether he recollected that before the magiſtrate, he had ſaid that he never ſaw her but two times, when he came up with two parcels of chairs, he heſitated a little, and then anſwered yes, but I do remember her; I then obſerved in the priſoner's hearing, it was aſtoniſhing a man that had only been twice with chairs, and ſtopped a moment at the door, ſhould know her in the ſtate that ſhe was then in, ſo bruiſed and ſo lacerated, that had I not ſeen her placed on a bed at the hoſpital myſelf, I ſhould not have known her; he made very little anſwer to me then, and he gave me to underſtand, that as there was no magiſtrate there, he conſidered our queſtions as impertinent.

How did he give you to underſtand that? ——In this manner; he ſaid I do not know that I am to anſwer, I ſpeak before the magiſtrate; one of the gentlemen preſent ſaid, let me look into your hands, as I had obſerved cuts in his hands before, at the publick office the morning after the murder, this I obſerved on the examination, after I returned from the Borough.

Court. Tell me your firſt obſervation in the morning about the cuts?——Nothing more, than that there were cuts in the inſide of his fingers, particularly on the ſecond finger on his right hand, when the gentlemen deſired to look in his hands, he was aſked by myſelf, and by one or two of the ſurgeons that attended, how long theſe cuts had been on his hands, and by what they were cauſed, his anſwer was, that they had been ten days or a fortnight, and it had been done with a knife or a chiſſel; one of the ſurgeons upon that opened one of the wounds, which appeared to be the larger wound, and which appeared to be quite a green wound, and the blood would have dropped if he had opened it further; the ſurgeon then declared that it was quite a new wound, and not of the ſtanding the priſoner declared it to be; other queſtions were aſked him, how long he had been married to this woman who he cohabited with as his wife, and is now here; he ſaid he was married, and he was not married, that he had lived with her a year and a half, but could not tell her name.

Mr. Garrow. Did you aſk him where he lodged?——He ſaid near the Borough market, I aſked him the name of the ſtreet, he ſaid he did not know, he had never heard the name of the ſtreet, I then queſtioned him how long he had lodged in that place, he anſwered ſix months; I then remarked to him it was very ſtrange, that he ſhould live with a woman a year and an half and not know her name, and lodge ſix months in a ſtreet, and not know the name of the ſtreet, he made no anſwer whatever, he did not then know that I had found out his lodgings; after his examination the day following, he was diſcharged by the magiſtrate for want of evidence, I was diſſatisfied with the man's diſcharge, and I applied to Sir Sampſon Wright, I told him I was not eaſy with this man's diſcharge; Major Gilbert ſaid, then he would grant me another warrant, and he did ſo, Major Gilbert granted me a warrant, Sir Sampſon backed it; I took three of the officers belonging to Bow-ſtreet with me into the Borough, and we broke into the man's room, and I took him, and the perſon who lived with him as his wife, they were in bed, and I likewiſe took another woman of the houſe, whom I ſuſpected to know ſomething more than what ſhe was willing to declare; I carried them to Bow-ſtreet, we had an examination before Mr. Gilbert, and I produced ſome freſh evidence; the man had then declared himſelf to be a Portugueze, (I find he has ſince paſſed himſelf off for a Laſcar) a native of Madeira; Mr. Gilbert's obſervation to me in the preſence of the priſoner was, Mr. Orrell, this man is a Portugueze, to be ſure we have not evidence, what can we do, we muſt diſcharge him, you can take him at any time; I omitted a little circumſtance; at the firſt examination on the waiſtcoat, where there was the largeſt ſpot of blood upon the breaſt, it was as if it had been nipped out, ſo as to take out a great deal of it, but to ſhew that there was ſome left; he then denied having done anything to it, and that it was in the ſame ſtate as when I firſt ſaw it; after the examination of the morning he was ſent to the watch-houſe, to be brought up in the evening, after which examination I took him to the body as I have mentioned: on the ſecond examination I took him to the body; he ſaid his coat was dirty, it was waſhed between ten and eleven o'clock on the Sunday morning, and by the account of one Ann Jackſon in the priſoner's preſence, who attended to prove an alibi for him, ſhe ſaid it was waſhed about five or ſix on Sunday evening; this ſhe ſaid in the preſence of the priſoner, he having called her to prove an alibi, they both ſtated it to be waſhed by his wife, as ſhe was called, that is by Pugh, this was on the firſt examination.

Court. What did he ſay in reply to Ann Jackſon's contradicting him as to the time?——He made no reply to me.

Did you obſerve any thing in the kitchen?——On the Sunday evening we did not find any thing more than the handle of that razor, on the Monday morning I went into the kitchen to ſee if I could find anything there, I had ſtirred the fire in the front kitchen to light a candle to ſearch the houſe the Sunday evening, and on the Monday morning the blade of a razor I took up from under the front kitchen grate, (the razor produced) and it appeared to me to have the ſtain of blood upon it, notwithſtanding it had been thrown in the fire; in the afternoon there had been a good fire which had cooked the dinner in the front kitchen, and it was into that that it had been thrown: a hair broom in the ſame kitchen was ſprinkled with blood, and upon the handle were the marks of bloody fingers, which ſtill remain, though it has been in conſtant uſe ſince; in the back kitchen there was a ciſtern with eight or ten gallons of water in it, I poured it out, it was ſtained with blood, and at the bottom of it was one of the meat ſpoons that I had miſſed.

Did you find any thing elſe that appears ſince to have been material?——Nothing material.

Recollect a little?—At the latter end of December, I had information from three or four different quarters that the man was in Newgate.

Mr. Garrow. Do you recollect to have found any thing in the houſe, that you have ſince learned to be material?———As to the noſegay, I did not find it myſelf; when I apprehended him the ſecond time, I deſired the priſoner, and the witneſs Pugh that was in bed with him to dreſs; I endeavoured to keep them aſunder, that they might not ſpeak to each other; the priſoner had ſhoes, and there was one circumſtance which will be ſpoke to by a witneſs; I aſked him where his ſhoes were, I looked and found none that had been recently worn, excepting that pair, he ſaid they were the ſhoes he had on, on Sunday, and had worn them ever ſince; I looked at the bottom of them, which appeared to have been in water, they were ſo wet that no marks could be diſcovered; I was very careful that he ſhould put on the ſame ſhoes: an obſervation was made by the magiſtrate, in the preſence of the priſoner, that one of the ſhoes was torn from the ſtrap to the welt, and it immediately ſtruck me, he declaring theſe were the ſame ſhoes he wore on Sunday, that that was the ſhoe that had been deſcribed to me.

Court. Then the ſhoes he declared he had on, on the Sunday, you made him put on?——Yes, and I found no other ſhoes that had been recently worn.

Court. What was there on that ſhoe to your own ſight?——It was torn from the ſtrap to the welt, it was torn two or three ways, but there was a circumſtance that I obſerved to him, ſays I, have theſe ſhoes been mended John ſince you wore them on Sunday, no, ſays he, I mended them on Sunday morning as I ſat on the bed.

Mr. Garrow. After his diſcharge, from reading the Seſſions Papers you was induced to ſuſpect him afreſh?——Yes, I was informed he was in Newgate; I examined the newſpapers, and from them, and ſome information I had had from the Seſſions Paper, I was induced to go to Mrs. Broome's.

What did you find there?———At Mrs. Broome's they produced a black ſilk mode cloak, which was Mrs. Orrell's property, I had not a doubt of it, but Mrs. Orrell was along with me, ſhe immediately knew it, and I likewiſe; that cloak was loſt on the Sunday, the day the murder was committed; the priſoner was at that time in cuſtody, under ſentence of tranſportation, and he has not had any further examinations; I then took up the woman, and ſhe gave an account, and ſhe is here now, this is all I know of the matter.

Court to Priſoner. Do you wiſh to point out any queſtions to me, that you wiſh to have aſked of Mr. Orrell the witneſs?——Yes.

What ſhall I aſk him?——Aſk him what you pleaſe.

No, he has been already fully examined by me and the counſel.

Priſoner. Pleaſe your honor, I wants to know, that I never was in that gentleman's houſe but twice.

Court. He has ſaid that you have ſaid ſo.

Mr. Orrell. On the ſecond examination on the Saturday, I ſearched under his bed, and there I found a ſhirt, I aſked him if that was the ſhirt he had on on the Sunday, his anſwer was yes it was, he had only one ſhirt he ſaid, and an old one he had on, then he ſaid it belonged to ſomebody elſe; looking on the outſide of the wriſtband it appeared a little bloody, as if by friction againſt the ſleeve of a coat.

I think you ſay he acknowledged this to be the ſhirt he had on on Sunday?——Yes, and ſaid it was the only one he had, except an old one which he had on, I queſtioned him how it came marked in that manner, after heſitation, in two or three minutes he ſaid it was by killing vermin, at the ſame time it ſtruck me he muſt have a great number of them; I took this ſhirt with me to the office: on his firſt being brought up and examined, he ſaid he had the itch, and the conſequence of that was, that the magiſtrates ſtarted off, and he was ordered to ſtand a little further; the ſurgeons at the hoſpital were particular in examining his hands; I have got the itch gentlemen ſaid he, and I tell you of it; they were not much in fear of the itch, having the means of curing themſelves in their own hands, and they examined his hands; the Major inſiſted upon his ſtripping, come ſays he, John, ſtrip.

Court. Had he in fact got the itch?——I apprehend he had not, he had a cutaneous complaint, but he had not the itch.

Court. He might ſuppoſe that to be the itch?—I have nothing further to ſay.

WILLIAM CHAPMAN ſworn.

I am a chair maker, I remember ſelling ſome chairs to Mr. Orrell, half a dozen of ſtained chairs, the priſoner carried them home, I did not take notice of the day of the month, it was on a Monday, it was in the month of April; after Mr. Orrell had them a little time, I had orders to change them; the priſoner carried them a ſecond time, and I thought then he ſtaid longer than he ſhould have ſtaid.

Do you remember any thing paſſing on the priſoner after this Sunday?——Yes, I found myſelf that he was in great agitation, that he was not able to do his buſineſs.

Did he make any application to you about leaving his buſineſs?——To my ſon, but I was not preſent.

Mr. Garrow. I call Mary Bruce to the converſation of the deceaſed.

Court. I cannot receive that, the declarations of the deceaſed are no more evidence, than the declarations of any other perſons; the only ground for receiving the declaration of dying perſons as evidence, is becauſe the obligation to ſpeak truth, on the impreſſion of the mind of a dying perſon, is preſumed to be equal to the ſanction of an oath; now the declarations of the deceaſed, after the mortal blow is given, probably made at a time when there were no apprehenſions of danger, though death afterwards enſued, I conceive not to be evidence.

MARY BRUCE ſworn.

You are a neighbour of Mr. Orrell's?—I was acquainted with this young woman, I aſſiſted in cleaning the place after her death; I found a noſegay with three roſes in it, and other little flowers, this was on the Wedneſday after the Sunday when ſhe was killed; we found it in the blood; the woman that was cleaning the place called, and ſaid, Mrs. Bruce, the man had a noſegay; Oh! I ſaid, miſtreſs, take and throw it into the duſt-hole; the kitchen was all over blood; and the noſegay in the middle of it, her head dreſs and all her clothes were all over blood; they were cabbage roſes, not moſs roſes.

Court to Priſoner. Do you wiſh to aſk any queſtion of this witneſs?—Yes, to be ſure.

What would you aſk?—That I never was in this place.

Court. That ſhe does not know, and does not ſay?——Then I know nothing about it.

ELIZABETH PROSSER ſworn.

I live at Mr. Kirkwall's, oppoſite Mr. Orrell's; on the Sunday before the murder, I was ſitting at the parlour window, and I ſaw a man go in, he was on the upper ſtep of the door; the maid had got the door in her hand, I did not ſee his face, I could not ſee his complection; he had long dark hair, and very dirty clothes on.

LAWRENCE HAGDEN ſworn.

I am a milkman, I ſerve Mr. Orrell with milk; on the Sunday of this murder, about twenty-five minutes after two, when I came to Mr. Orrell's door with ſome milk, I called milk, and the maid came to the area door, and told me no milk; with that I took my kettles in my hand, and came along on the ſame ſide of the ſtreet where Mr. Orrell lives, about three doors nearer to the town, there lay a mulatto man on his left ſide, with his body on the ſteps, with his legs extended out on the footpath; I had a large kettle in one hand, and I lifted up my foot with intent to give him a trip; I looked at him, and I could ſee the upper leather of his ſhoe was torn by the welt, it is what you call wax leather, it was torn in this manner from the welt along the welt, and he had a noſegay of cabbage roſes in his boſom, and he had a drab coloured coat on, much inferior to this, it is what is generally called Bath coating; I took no further notice till the next morning, when I heard of the murder, two or three days after, I took no notice but I mentioned the circumſtance to the laſt witneſs, Mrs. Bruce, ſoon after, I was examined on the Saturday before the magiſtrate, the priſoner was there, I told this circumſtance, I could not poſitively ſwear it was him, he had on juſt ſuch a coat; and the ſhoe that I ſaw at the Magiſtrate's taken of this man's foot, appeared to me in my mind at that time, to be the ſhoe, though I could not ſwear poſitively to it, but the coat the priſoner had on at the Juſtice's appeared like the coat that the man had on that I ſaw on the Sunday afternoon in the ſtreet.

Was that ſhoe at the Juſtice's a wax leather ſhoe?—Yes, it was; I could not ſay whether he was the man.

Court. Can you ſay whether the man you ſaw at the baker's door was a different ſized man?—No, I cannot ſay poſitively to his perſon one way or the other, the man I ſaw had his hair tied, queued, and laid with his head in a doleful ſituation, I ſaw his ſide face.

Court to Mr. Orrell. It ſeems extraordinary, that this noſegay ſpoken of by the witneſs Bruce, ſhould not be found before Wedneſday, becauſe Mr. Pooley and you examined the houſe.—The kitchen is a back kitchen, not very light; we looked for ſome weapon, which we ſuppoſed might occaſion her death; there was blood in ſeveral places, and large cakes of blood, we did not put our hands into it, and this was found in one of thoſe cakes, for I did not think it proper to have the place cleaned till the coroner's inqueſt had been taken.

CHARLES POOLEY ſworn.

I am a ſurgeon.

Was you preſent when the priſoner was examined where the dead body laid?—I was.

Did you particularly examine his hands?—I did.

Now, Sir, of what nature were theſe cuts?—The cuts appeared on the fourth finger, and the others were juſt here, whereabouts the graſp is, it appeared to me as if it had been done by ſome inſtrument that he had made uſe of.

Did they appear old or freſh cuts?—The larger cut appeared to be a recent wound.

I preſume a wound of ten days or a fortnight ſtanding, would be healed before that time?—Yes. I heard Mr. Orrell's deſcription of the ſtate of this poor woman, it was perfectly right; I have no doubt of this producing her death.

ELIZABETH BROOME ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker in Park-ſtreet, in the Borough.

Do you remember Mrs. Orrell's coming to you?—Yes.

—— IVES ſworn.

Where did you get this cloak which you produce now?—I found it in the poſſeſſion of the pawnbroker, it has been in my cuſtody ever ſince, it is the ſame that I found at Mrs. Broome's.

Mr. Garrow to Mrs. Broome. Where did you get that cloak?—Of a perſon that went by the name of Elizabeth Hogan, on the 27th of June, between eleven and twelve in the forenoon, it was on a Monday, I am ſure it was that day, I lent half a guinea upon it; it continued in my poſſeſſion till I delivered it to Mr. Ives, here is a ticket upon it which was put on then, it is in my own hand-writing, ſhe had a duplicate on it, the ticket has been on ever ſince; I am ſure this is the ſame cloak that was pledged by Elizabeth Hogan.

(The cloak depoſed to by Mr. Orrell.)

Mr. Orrell. I know it by the general wear, Mrs. Orrell wore it for twelve months, I am convinced by my general view of it that it is hers.

Mrs. ORRELL ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Will you take the trouble to look at that cloak?—I know the cloak to be mine by the lace and the making, as well as I ſhould know any other thing I had worn the time, I have worn it twelve months; at the time of the murder it was hanging up on the back parlour door, and a bonnet upon it, when I returned it was gone, and the bonnet that hung upon it was thrown upon the ground; I had ſeen it on that Sunday, I have not a doubt, I knew it as ſoon as I ſaw it in the pawnbroker's ſhop, before it was open.

Court. Had you bought it ready made, or did you make it yourſelf?—I did not make it myſelf, but I bought the lace and the mode, it was made in Fleet-ſtreet.

Is there any thing particular that will enable you to diſtinguiſh it from another cloak that had been worn twelve months by any body elſe?—I am ſure this is my cloak.

You will underſtand me, I am not aſking you theſe queſtions from the ſmalleſt doubt of the truth of what you ſay to your belief, but it is neceſſary the Jury ſhould know the grounds on which your perſuaſion is founded, now you may be conſcientiouſly perſuaded that this is your cloak, but I want to know by what you know it from another cloak of the ſame ſort and ſize, that has been worn exactly the ſame time?—I ſhould have known the cloak from a thouſand cloaks, I know the make of it in particular.

There is no particular place torn or worn, or any particular obſervation made on the cloak?—There was a tear, which I recollected immediately when I ſaw it again; after examining the cloak very minutely, I knew the cloak perfectly, and I recollected the tear as ſoon as I ſaw it again.

Mrs. Bruce. Mrs. Orrell was out one evening, and loſt her dog, and the dog was ſo glad to ſee her, that he dirtied her cloak, and I cleaned it with ſpirits, and there remain ſome marks of the feet on now.

Mrs. Orrell. I remember the dog leaping up againſt me, and it was cleaned by Mrs. Bruce.

Mrs. Bruce. I am poſitive this is the cloak I cleaned.

Shew us the part where you apprehend the marks are?—At the front on each ſide.

Court to Mrs. Orrell. From the appearance of the front of the cloak could you obſerve that it had been cleaned at all by any thing?—It is cleaned ſo trifling, and done with a little gin, which does not make any difference at all in the mode.

Mrs. Bruce. I knew the cloak from the firſt day it ever came home from the maker's.

Court. Here are marks that are perfectly viſible to me who have not a very good ſight; but they appear to me to be freſher, and of a whiter colour than would ariſe from ſtreet dirt?——The dirt was taken off, it is my cloak, I have not a doubt, I am poſitive of it.

ELIZABETH PUGH ſworn.

Court. In the firſt place I muſt aſk you, if you are not the wife of the priſoner?——No Sir.

You are ſure of that?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. How long have you been acquainted with the priſoner?—About two years.

Have you lived with him all that time?—No, Sir.

How long?——Sixteen months before he was taken up, and at that time.

Where was he on Sunday the 26th of June?——He dined about one, after dinner I went and laid down on the bed, he was ſitting in a chair, about two he went out, he ſaid, he was going to take a walk, I laid on the bed till he returned which was pretty nigh five, between four and five, I cannot poſitively ſay which, he ſtartled me by opening the door, I ſaid nothing at all to him, a little while after Mrs. Jackſon came into the room, and aſked me if I would waſh a ſhirt for her, that was on Sunday evening after his return.

How was the priſoner dreſſed on that Sunday?——With his coat that he uſually wore at his work, a whitiſh ſurtout coat, a ſort of a drab, rather a Bath drab; when the woman aſked me to waſh a ſhirt, I ſaid to him, John, blow the fire, he accordingly pulled off his great coat, it was warm weather, he threw it on the back of a chair where he ſat to blow the fire; I went on and waſhed the ſhirt, while I was waſhing, he ſaid to me, I wiſh you would let me waſh out this elbow, which had been greaſed three weeks before, by working for Mr. Chapman, I ſaid, why do you want to waſh it to day, let it alone till another day, and I will waſh it all over, it will look very odd to ſee the elbow clean and no other part, with that he put the ſleeve quite into the water, and had the bruſh and bruſhed upon the elbow, then I thought he was bruſhing the greaſe out, and I ſaid, your bruſhing will not get the greaſe out, without warm water; then I turned round and ſaw him bruſhing at the wriſt, I aſked him the reaſon, he ſaid, he had ſome ſtain of blood, that he had been fighting, and with that he took and threw it all into the water, and I took and did it all out into the ſuds, as they happened to be good, and I waſhed the coat all over, not knowing anything of the tranſaction.

Did you perceive any blood upon it?—Yes, upon the wriſt I did, but on no other part.

On which arm was it?——I cannot recollect, I look upon it to be the right arm, but I am not ſure.

Did any thing more paſs that evening?——No more at all till the next morning, the next morning he got up to go to his work as uſual, and he went in a blue jacket and his waiſtcoat ſleeves, he did not go in his coat, becauſe it was not dry; on the Monday morning he pulled a cloak from underneath the bed, and ſaid he had bought it for me, and that I was to pay for it at ſo much a week.

What ſort of a cloak was it?—A black mode cloak.

What did you do with it?——I ſaid to him, what did you buy a cloak for, I am not neceſſitated for one, I want money to pay my rent more than a cloak, and I muſt make money for it, it is of no uſe to me; ſo that morning I went, and pledged it with Mrs. Broome, in Park-ſtreet, where I frequently uſe; after this I heard the priſoner was taken up, I went out on the Tueſday morning from the Borough, and I met the landlord of the houſe, ſays he, Mrs. Hogan, ſomething has been the matter; and the landlord went with me, and enquired for him, and we found him at Bow-ſtreet; he was acquitted that time, and taken up again as Mr. Orrell has ſaid, he was again diſcharged, and ſoon after he was diſcharged the ſecond time; he has been very uneaſy at times, I frequently aſked him what made him uneaſy, he ſaid, it was for want of employ, for he did uſe to work, and I thought he had loſt his bread though innocently; I ſaid, what is the reaſon you are ſo uneaſy, he ſaid, he could not reſt; why ſays I, I hope you are not guilty; this might be a month or five weeks after the murder; I ſaid, I hope you have not been guilty of the murder, he ſaid he was very unhappy, for he had done that fact, and he was guilty of that he had been accuſed of.

What fact?——Of the murder of this woman, he did not deſcribe any thing about it, he never told me any more than what the newſpapers expreſſed, I read it one morning to him, before I knew he was guilty, I ſaid it was advertized, and I hope they will come to juſtice that did it, I told him I would go and tell of it, he ſaid, if I did, I ſhould be hanged, which deterred me from making a diſcovery, he is at the bar, now, and you may aſk him; I could not get rid of him, he has ſtaid out four or five nights together, and I never ſaw a farthing nor a halfpenny; I went away from my own apartment on the Monday; I told him, ſays I, there was ſome plate miſſing, which the paper expreſſed beſides the cloak, and he told me he had thrown the ſpoons over London-bridge; I aſked him how he could commit ſuch a thing, and he ſaid he had no intention of doing any ſuch a thing, but that he wanted to be great with her, and ſhe reſiſted.

When he told you, you would be hanged, did he tell you where he got the cloak?——He ſaid, if you tell of me, you will be hanged, he did not explain why.

Did you ever go to ſee him in priſon after he was caſt for tranſportation?—There was a young body, an acquaintance of mine, went to ſee him; he ſent for me, I went to him, and he ſaid he was going abroad, I ſaid, I hope you will not return again, if you do, you will be hanged for returning before your time; but ſays I, there is that that troubles me, I never ſhall reſt till it is divulged, O ſays he, that will not come to light; I left my own home, on the Monday before he was taken to Newgate, becauſe I could not get rid of him.

Court to Priſoner. Do you wiſh to aſk this witneſs any queſtions?—Yes, pleaſe your Lordſhip, aſk her, Sir, if ſhe ever ſaw me throw any ſpoons over London-bridge?

She does not ſay, that ſhe ſaw you do it, but ſhe ſays, you told her that you had done it?——I told her no, pleaſe your honour.

Mr. Garrow. I have done.

Court. Now, priſoner, you have heard the charge that has been made againſt you and the evidence that has been given, have you anything to ſay?

Priſoner. Yes, pleaſe your honour, I am innocent of it, and whoever takes my life away, I will never forgive them.

Have you any witneſſes?—I have plenty on the other ſide of the water, here is Mr. Howes I ſee.

Do you wiſh to call any witneſſes either to fact or to character?——Here are two gentlemen that can give me a character.

——— HOWES ſworn.

I have nothing to ſay about the priſoner concerning this affair, that can be of any ſervice to him, the woman took a room of me, they behaved very honeſtly.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, before I ſtate the evidence to you, it is proper to take ſome notice of the circumſtances of this caſe, and the priſoner that ſtands before you, becauſe it is at all times neceſſary to juſtice, that the Court and Jury ſhould proceed to the conſideration of the evidence, that neceſſarily and immediately affects the life of the priſoner at the bar, with coolneſs and deliberation, and diveſted of every prejudice that from any circumſtance may have been raiſed in their minds: the crime in itſelf is of a horrid nature, and this crime in particular has been attended with circumſtances of unuſual violence, cruelty, and brutality; but you ſhould proceed to the conſideration of this evidence with your minds perfectly indifferent as to the queſtion, whether the priſoner has any relation with the crime or not, for the indignation that human nature neceſſarily is impreſſed with, againſt a crime of ſuch magnitude, ſhould never be transferred to the perſon that is accuſed of it, till a cool deliberation has ſatisfied you, that he is clearly guilty; you ought therefore to diveſt yourſelves, as this is a matter that has been publickly talked off, of every thing that you may have heard or read out of Court, before the priſoner was brought to the bar on this charge; you ought alſo to diveſt yourſelves of any circumſtance in which the priſoner ſtands not extremely favourable to his character, his being accuſed of a crime of a far different nature, is far from being proof that he is guilty of one of this magnitude, and above all, I am ſure you will ſuffer yourſelves to have no impreſſion from the difference of complection or country, but that you will try this man that ſtands at the bar, juſt as you would a man of your own country and complection, and whoſe character before this ſtood unimpeached; it is with that impreſſion upon your minds, that you ought to proceed to the conſideration of the evidence, and in proportion to the magnitude of the crime, ought to be the ſtrength of the evidence, upon which that accuſation is ſupported: I will, therefore, proceed to ſtate to you, the evidence that has been given, and then to point out ſome obſervations upon it: firſt, conſidered as independent of the principal witneſs, Elizabeth Pugh, and in the next place, as connected with her teſtimony; for with reſpect to her, ſhe certainly ſtands before you under circumſtances of ſome diſcredit; for if this charge againſt the priſoner is true, and founded in fact, ſhe ſtands in the ſituation of having long cohabited with this man, the badneſs of whoſe diſpoſition and character, ſhe cannot be ſuppoſed to have been wholly a ſtranger to, though ſhe might not be at all privy to the particular fact, and alſo was poſſeſſed of a knowledge of this fact a conſiderable time before ſhe made any diſcovery, and the diſcovery when made is not perfectly voluntary on her part, but brought about by a circumſtance which immediately connects herſelf with the accuſation; ſhe therefore does not ſtand in the light of a witneſs in full credit, and intitled to implicit confidence to what ſhe ſhall ſay on oath, and therefore, as far as her evidence is unſupported, it certainly ought to be received with ſome degree of caution, though ſhe does not ſtand in the light of an accomplice, and though her evidence is admiſſable, as it is of ſuch a nature that it may be received even where it is unſupported, for ſhe by no means ſtands charged as an accomplice in this fact, or as having any previous knowledge whatever with the commiſſion of it, but ſhe ſtands not in a degree of perfect credit from the circumſtances I have pointed out to you: the firſt witneſs is Mr. Orrell, &c. (Here the learned Judge ſummed up the evidence, and then added) The circumſtance of the cloak ariſes wholly out of the evidence of Elizabeth Pugh: let us ſee what the circumſtances are independent of her evidence, they are theſe; that the priſoner had a knowledge of the houſe of Mr. Orrell, that he had alſo a knowledge of the ſervant maid, that he affirmed that knowledge to have ariſen only from being ſent there twice in the courſe of his buſineſs by Mr. Chapman; but that upon the view of the body of the deceaſed, he expreſſed a degree of knowledge of her, more than could be accounted for on his going twice to the houſe, on that buſineſs; and that a man of the ſame complection was ſeen near the houſe of Mr. Orrell, laying in that ſtreet, a very ſhort time before this fact was committed by ſome perſon or other, that he was dreſſed in the ſame coloured coat that the priſoner appeared afterwards to have on, and had a ſhoe on torn in the ſame manner, and which the witneſs ſwears he believed was the ſame ſhoe the man that he ſaw had on; then the priſoner, when taken up, has marks of blood on his waiſtcoat, and cuts on his hands, of which cuts he aſſigns a reaſon that appears by the evidence of the ſurgeon, not to be a true one; that the coat he had on alſo had the appearance of being recently waſhed, and he acknowledges it had been recently waſhed. but ſays it was waſhed on the Sunday morning, in which he is flatly contradicted by a witneſs produced by himſelf. Gentlemen, theſe are the circumſtances which apply directly to the perſon of the priſoner, and the circumſtances of the cuts appear in this manner, when compared with the ſituation in which the deceaſed was found, becauſe from the razor being broken, the handle twiſted off, and the extreme marks of violence found on the body of the unfortunate woman, it appears extremely clear, ſhe made a conſiderable reſiſtance, and therefore there was a probability that the murderer might be cut: Gentlemen, if you believe the application of the evidence of the milkman, that lets in another ſtrong circumſtance; for if, from the circumſtance of the ſhoe and the great coat, you are clearly ſatisfied, that the priſoner was the man that was laying at the baker's door, there is then another circumſtance, that that man had a noſegay in his boſom, and that noſegay was found in the place where this horrid fact had been committed, but that circumſtance of the noſegay does not apply to the priſoner, unleſs you are ſatisfied, that the man that lay at the baker's ſteps, was the priſoner: now you are to proceed to the conſideration of the additional evidence of Elizabeth Pugh, you are to conſider how far this witneſs is either confirmed or contradicted by the other witneſſes; ſhe had a cloak in her poſſeſſion, her ſtory is this, that the priſoner went out about an hour before this fact, by the evidence of Mr. Orrell, appears to have been committed, for he ſtates, it muſt have been committed between the hours of three and four, for he went out about three, and he returned, for the firſt time, about four; Elizabeth Pugh ſtates, that the priſoner returned home about five o'clock; now the diſtance is conſiderable from the Borough to Charlotte-ſtreet, Portland-place; but it certainly is not more than the time would very eaſily permit to perform it in, it is not above an hour's walk there; firſt ſhe ſpeaks of the blood on the ſleeve of his coat, and of her waſhing it; ſhe ſays, the morning after his return, he produced this cloak, and afterwards ſhe ſpeaks of his confeſſion, that he threw away the ſpoons that were miſſing: it is ſhewn, that a perſon anſwering the deſcription of the priſoner, was in this ſtreet a little before the hour of three, it does not exactly tally with that, in point of time, becauſe he was ſeen by the milkman, about, or very near half paſt two, which is a ſhort time, ſuppoſing the witneſs to be accurate, as to the time he came from the Borough; and the circumſtance of his coat being waſhed, was agreed on all hands, that it had been recently waſhed, and waſhed by this woman, which he himſelf confeſſed, only he differed as to the time. Gentlemen, the effect of the circumſtances upon your minds, independent of the evidence of Pugh, and the degree of credit you pay to her teſtimony, reſt clearly with you, it is my duty to point it out to you, you are to decide upon it free from any paſſions, but what ariſe from a full conſideration of the evidence itſelf, if you think there has been any reaſon, under all the circumſtances, to diſbelieve the evidence of Pugh, then you will conſider the caſe, under all the circumſtances, and judge if they are ſufficient to convict the priſoner without her evidence; or if you can find in the whole caſe, any reaſonable ground of doubt, though you are not to go to conjectures and probabilities, to let a man eſcape juſtice, yet unqueſtionably, if you find any reaſonable ground of doubt, you ought to acquit the priſoner.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

Clerk of the Arraigns. John Hogan, hold up your hand; you ſtand convicted of the wilful murder of Anne Hunt, what have you to ſay why the Court ſhould not give you judgment to die according to law.

Proclamation of ſilence being made, Mr. Recorder paſſed ſentence, as follows:

John Hogan, you now ſtand in the moſt wretched ſituation, which human nature can poſſibly be reduced to; for you have been convicted upon evidence which excludes all doubt, of a crime of ſuch enormity, and attended with ſuch circumſtances, that human nature ſhrinks back with horror, at the relation of the facts that have attended it. The crime of murder does not depend on the laws or policy of this or that country, it is equally an offence in all, it is a direct offence againſt that God who is the creator alike of all mankind, and alike the governor of all nations upon earth: it is the laws of that God, and not of this particular country alone that you have violated, the voice of nature, of reaſon, and of all mankind has at all times cried out, that whoſo ſheddeth man's blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed; a crime ſo enormous in itſelf, receives in your caſe, the moſt dreadful aggravations, from the circumſtances of horror with which this fact has been attended; the violence and cruelty of the act, to whatever motive it is to be aſcribed, argues a diſpoſition ſavage in the extreme, whether it aroſe from avarice and the deſire of plunder, or whether from that motive tive which you yourſelf aſſigned for it, it is almoſt equally guilty, but if it can receive any aggravation, it muſt be upon the latter ſuppoſition; for, to butcher, in that ſavage and inhuman manner, the unhappy object, who had been but a few minutes before the object of your brutal deſires and appetites, argues a degree of ſavage inhumanity and ferocity, unknown to the nature of the fierceſt beaſts, reſerved for man alone, and thank God, only for ſuch as you! Loaded with ſuch a degree of guilt on your mind, you have ſhewn a hardneſs of heart, that has enabled you to view the unhappy victim of your cruelty without emotion, a ſpectacle ſo ſhocking, that it melted into tears, even thoſe whoſe ſituation and profeſſion has neceſſarily made them acquainted with the greateſt ſcenes of horror, whilſt you, the guilty object, was the only perſon that could refrain from ſorrow at the ſight of ſuch a ſpectacle; the only circumſtance therefore, under ſuch accumulated horrors, that leaves the ſmalleſt room for hope for you, for that mercy hereafter, that the laws of the country deny you here, is that trouble and uneaſineſs of mind, that in ſome part of the evidence you appear at times to have laboured under; happy will it be for you, if that trouble and uneaſineſs is, in the ſhort time you have to live, increaſed to the utmoſt degree of horror and remorſe; for it is the utmoſt degree of horror and remorſe alone, that can wipe from the guilty conſcience the ſtains of innocent blood, and obtain that mercy from your offended God, which you cannot expect from man: it remains therefore for me, after earneſtly exhorting you to reflect on the malignity of your crime, and the horror of your ſituation, and praying that that reflection may produce ſome effect upon your guilty ſoul, to pronounce on you the dreadful ſentence of the law, which is, that you be taken from hence to the place from whence you came, and from thence be carried on Monday next, to the place of execution, there to be hanged by the neck until you are dead, and that your body ſhall afterwards be delivered to the ſurgeons, to be diſſected and anatomized; and the Lord have mercy upon your ſinful ſoul!

123. NATHANIEL GOODRIDGE, LEONARD GOODRIDGE, and JAMES EVANS were indicted, for that they, on the 14th day of December, 1782, with force and arms, feloniouſly did falſely make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſely made, forged, and counterfeited, and willingly act and aſſiſt in the falſe making, forging, and counterfeiting, a certain paper writing, with a ſeal thereto affixed, purporting to be the laſt will and teſtament of one Thomas Sawtell, deceaſed, and to be ſigned with the mark of him, the ſaid Thomas Sawtell, in the life time of him, the ſaid Thomas Sawtell, to wit, on the 14th of December, 1782, on the firſt ſheet thereof; and to have been ſigned, ſealed, publiſhed, and declared by the ſaid Thomas Sawtell, as and for his laſt will and teſtament; which ſaid falſe, forged, and counterfeited paper writing, purporting to be the laſt will and teſtament of the ſaid Thomas Sawtell, is to the tenor and effect following, that is to ſay, "This is the laſt will and teſtament of me Thomas Sawtell, late of Saffron-hill, in the pariſh of St. Andrew, Holborn, in the county of Middleſex, tallow-chandler, but now of Brook-ſtreet, in the ſaid pariſh of St. Andrew, Holborn, in the ſaid county of Middleſex, gentleman. Firſt, I will, order, and direct, that all my juſt debts be paid and diſcharged as ſoon as conveniently may be, after my deceaſe, by my executors hereinafter named; I give and bequeath to my ſiſter Mary Allen and her aſſigns, one annuity, or clear yearly ſum of twenty pounds, of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid by my executors quarterly, by equal portions, the firſt payment thereof to be made within one month, next after my deceaſe. And whereas my late brother, Gilbert Sawtell, by his laſt will and teſtament in writing, bearing date the 27th day of December, in the year of our Lord, 1767, amongſt other things, gave and bequeathed to Gilbert Carr therein named, the ſum of one hundred pounds, to be paid him at the age of twenty-one, which ſaid ſum now remains in my hands, as the ſurviving executor of the laſt will and teſtament of my late brother Gilbert Sawtell, now I do hereby direct my executors hereinafter named, to pay intereſt for the ſaid ſum of one hundred pounds, from the laſt time they ſhould have paid intereſt for that ſum, until the ſaid ſum ſhall become due and payable. And whereas I have by bond ſecured the payment of twenty pounds a year to Margaret Enos, for her natural life, now in full payment and ſatisfaction of that bond, which is hereby to be cancelled, and in order to make a further proviſion for the ſaid Margaret Enos, I do hereby give to her and her aſſigns one annuity, or clear yearly ſum of fifty pounds, of lawful money of Great Britain, payable quarterly, at the four moſt uſual feaſts or days of payment in the year, viz. Lady-day, Midſummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Chriſtmas-day, the firſt payment thereof to be made on ſuch of the ſaid days of payment, that ſhall firſt happen, next after my deceaſe: I alſo give and bequeath to Elizabeth Goodridge, wife of Nathaniel Goodridge, of Saffron-hill, in the county of Middleſex, broker, the ſum of one hundred pounds; I alſo give and bequeath to the ſaid Elizabeth Goodridge, my gold watch, chain, and ſeals, for her natural lite, and from, and immediately after her deceaſe, I give and bequeath my ſaid gold watch, chain, and ſeals to her ſon George Haynes, I alſo give and bequeath to the ſaid George Haynes, the ſum of three hundred pounds, to be paid him by my executors, hereinafter named, at the age of twenty-one, or when my executors ſhall think moſt proper, and the intereſt thereof I will and direct ſhall be paid by my ſaid executors, for and towards his cloathing; I alſo give and bequeath unto Henry Erod Bonflabin Haynes, the ſum of three hundred pounds, to be paid him by my executors hereinafter named, when he ſhall attain the age of twenty-one, or when my ſaid executors ſhall think moſt proper, and the intereſt thereof I will and direct ſhall be paid by my ſaid executors, for and towards his maintainance and education; I give and bequeath to George Evans, of Fore-ſtreet, in the pariſh of Cripplegate, ſilver ſmith, one hundred pounds, and to George Evans, ſon of George Evans, the ſum of hundred pounds, to be paid to him by my executors hereinafter named, when he ſhall attain the age of twenty-one, or when my ſaid executors ſhall think moſt proper, and the intereſt thereof I order and direct ſhall be paid by my ſaid executors, towards his maintenance and education; I alſo give and bequeath to Elizabeth Evans, daughter of the ſaid George Evans, three hundred pounds, to be paid by my ſaid executors, when ſhe ſhall attain the age of twenty-one, or when my executors ſhall think moſt proper, and the intereſt thereof I will and direct ſhall be paid by my executors, for and towards her maintenance and education; alſo I give and bequeath to the treaſurer for the time being, of the charity ſchool of St. Ethelburga, in the city of London, the ſum of twenty-ſeven pounds, for the benefit of the ſaid charity ſchool; alſo to Meſſrs. Jonathan Price and Wentworth Ogle, executors of the laſt will and teſtament of my ſaid brother John Sawtell, deceaſed, the ſum of fifty pounds each, hoping they will uſe their endeavours to preſerve my intereſt in my late brother John's will, for the benefit of the perſon or perſons who ſhall become entitled thereto, under this my will; alſo I give and bequeath to William Hunter, of Saffron-hill aforeſaid, merchant, the ſum of three hundred pounds; alſo I give and bequeath to —— Hunter, wife of the ſaid William Hunter, the ſum of twenty pounds; alſo I give and bequeath to Elizabeth Slack, wife of Daniel Slack, of Newgate-ſtreet, London, merchant, the ſum of twenty pounds; alſo I give and bequeath to the ſaid Daniel Slack, the ſum of one hundred and fifty pounds, and ten pounds for mourning; alſo I give and bequeath to Robert Slack, of Green-walk, in the pariſh of Chriſt-church, in the county of Surry, brother of the aforeſaid Daniel Slack, the ſum of one hundred pounds, and ten pounds for mourning; I alſo give and bequeath to William Atkinſon, of Newgate-ſtreet, aforeſaid, merchant, one hundred and fifty pounds, and ten pounds for mourning; alſo I give and bequeath unto John Noble, of the city of Briſtol, gentleman, the ſum of one hundred pounds; alſo to Luke Noble, of Taunton, in the county of Somerſet, the ſum of one hundred pounds; alſo I give and bequeath to my ſervant, Elizabeth Spraggs, the ſum of three hundred pounds; and to my ſervant Edward Price, the ſum of five hundred and fifty pounds, and I give to the ſaid Edward Price, all my wearing apparel and body linen: which ſaid legacies to my ſaid ſervants, Elizabeth Spraggs and Edward Price, I direct to be paid by my executors, to ſuch of them as ſhall be living at the time of my deceaſe: all which ſaid legacies, except as aforeſaid, I hereby order and direct my executors hereinafter named, to pay within twelve months, next after my deceaſe; I give and bequeath unto my friends John Power, of Carter-lane, gentleman; James Evans, of Saffron-hill, aforeſaid, victualler; William Colton, of Holborn, aforeſaid, cheeſemonger; Edward Botham, of Charles-ſtreet, in the ſaid pariſh, bricklayer; William Cochran, and Humphrey Hall, of Peter-ſtreet, in the ſaid pariſh, butcher, each of them a mourning ring: and, as for and concerning the reſt, reſidue, and remainder of my eſtate and effects whatſoever, both real and perſonal, in poſſeſſion, reverſion, remainder, or expectancy, I give, deviſe, and bequeath the ſame to the ſaid Nathaniel Goodridge, his heirs, executors, adminiſtrators, and aſſigns for ever; and I do hereby name, conſtitute, and appoint, the ſaid Nathaniel Goodridge and Daniel Hunter, my executors. In witneſs whereof, I have to this my laſt will and teſtament, contained in two ſheets of paper, to the firſt ſheet, ſet my hand or mark, and to this ſheet, my hand or mark, and ſeal, this 14th day of December, 1782. Thomas Sawtell ⋈ his mark. Signed, ſealed, publiſhed, and declared, by the ſaid teſtator, as and for his laſt will and teſtament, in the preſence of us, who in his preſence, and at his requeſt, and in the preſence of each other, have ſigned our names, as witneſſes hereto, the words "a mark" being firſt twice interlined. James Evans, Leonard Goodridge, John Underwood."——With intention to defraud one Daniel Slack.

THE HON. MR. ERSKINE,
MR. PIGOTT,
MR. SHEPHERD,
MR. GARROW.

The Indictment opened by Mr. Fielding.

The Caſe opened by Sir Thomas Davenport, as follows:

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip and you gentlemen of the Jury, I am councel alſo on the part of this proſecution, againſt the unfortunate priſoners now at this bar, who ſtand there for a crime which it is impoſſible for any words or any imagination, in my opinion, to aggravate; its heinouſneſs and the pernicious conſequences of it, are of ſuch a nature, that every man of common underſtanding muſt obſerve them; this matter has been of very long expectation, it is not impoſſible, it is more indeed than probable, that many reports, many ſayings, many paragraphs in news-papers, may have come to the ears and ſight of almoſt every man; I am clear if it was poſſible that any prepoſſeſſions in point of opinion (I do not ſay prejudices) ſhould find their way into your minds, you, on this occaſion, would naturally diſmiſs them, becauſe you muſt know that on this queſtion you, as men, muſt attend to the feelings of men, and with that attention which, while the lives of you fellow-ſubjects are in danger, is required from you; at the ſame time you muſt know it is your duty to yourſelves, your families, your country, and poſterity, to prevent the effects which muſt ariſe from a ſubverſion of thoſe invaluable rights, which the ſubjects of this country enjoy, for diſpoſing of their property

perty freely, and abſolutely without any controul on the part of the crown, or any interpoſition on the part of their fellow-ſubjects. The free diſpoſition of property will be totally prevented if ſchemes and manœuvres of the kind that will be laid before you ſhould obtain to gain credit before a Jury: Gentlemen, I am aware of the difficulty there will be, as well from the pain that every feeling man muſt entertain, on ſuch a ſubject as this, as from the vaſt variety of matter this cauſe has paſſed through, and the number of ſheets in which it is contained, particularly in Doctors Commons, I ſay I am aware it will be extremely difficult ſo to arrange the matter as to make it completely comprehenſive on the firſt ſtate of the caſe; I will endeavour, however, ſo to ſeparate the circumſtances attending this matter, as to make them as clear as I can to my own underſtanding, which is the beſt way of conveying them to yours, and in doing that I ſhall try likewiſe to bring ſeveral circumſtances together, ſo as to ſhew you the view in which they appear to me, in order that it may be better underſtood both by my Lord and by you. The evidence muſt in its nature take up a conſiderable length of time, it muſt conſiſt, as I ſaid before, of a great variety of matter, and it may poſſibly be ſo laid before you, and ſo put together, that it may be comprehended notwithſtanding the extent of the matter and the variety of it: Gentlemen, you all of you know, and muſt feel, that there are a thouſand caſes in which the actual fact of forgery, and the fabrication of it cannot be proved; there are others, where that impoſſibility is taken away, ſometimes by the admiſſion of accomplices themſelves; and, Gentlemen, give me leave now to obſerve, with reſpect to accomplices, that they come, as, my Lord will tell you, always under circumſtances of ſuſpicion, and are witneſſes, of whom juries always are, and always ought to be, very jealous; I mean thoſe accomplices whoſe confeſſions ariſe either from motives of perſonal fear in themſelves, or hopes of rewards from others, or of revenge or malice towards thoſe perſons with whom they were themſelves concerned; but, at the ſame time, you very well know that there is a neceſſity, which the policy of the laws of this country has admitted, of receiving their evidence in ſome caſes, and that where that neceſſity ariſes, accomplices have been admitted; they are what the law calls competent witneſſes, and their teſtimony is to be heard; but the weight it is to have, the credit that is to be given to it is, as one of the greateſt bleſſings of this land, left to the conſideration of twelve men on their oaths, to the conſideration of twelve men of credit, of reputation, and of property: It will be neceſſary therefore, by circumſtances (and I will add too, in favour of the priſoners, ſtrong circumſtances) to lay a foundation for corroborating the teſtimony of ſuch an accomplice as we ſhall produce, one who had himſelf ſo far loſt the character and the duty of a ſubject of this country, as to be concerned in the tranſaction itſelf. The circumſtances have, in the opinion of ſome of the learned Judges, always been thought moſt proper to precede the teſtimony of the accomplice, I know one in particular, I mean Mr. Juſtice Gould.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. That is my practice.

Sir Thomas Davenport. I have alſo, my Lord's authority to ſay it is his, though I have not the honour to know it in practice; but although Mr. Juſtice Gould, from his great experience and his great attention to every point of the law in that ſituation, which he has filled ſo ably, has alſo adopted that practice, yet, at the ſame time, it is not conſtant and invariable, you will ſee reaſons why it cannot be invariable, the ſtory is ſometimes of ſuch a nature that it muſt precede the circumſtances that are to corroborate it, it will be my duty, therefore to ſubmit to my Lord, for I ſhall be extremely willing to adopt any conduct he thinks right in this proſecution, having no wiſh, no deſire on this ſubject, but to do my duty to the public. Gentlemen, there are a vaſt variety of circumſtances that will very often weigh more with ſenſible minds than the moſt poſitive teſtimony of witneſſes; and of that we have had too many fatal inſtances to doubt, much leſs to deny; there have been caſes where the three witneſſes to a will, as required by the law of this country, which is to paſs real property, as diſtinguiſhed from perſonal; I ſay there have been caſes where all thoſe three witneſſes have denied the execution of the real will, where the circumſtances have ſtill eſtabliſhed that will, and all thoſe witneſſes have been puniſhed for their teſtimony; I mean the caſe of Mr. Joliff, which I am ſure his Lordſhip muſt have heard of, where all the three witneſſes to his will one after another abſolutely contradicted the circumſtances that proved it to be a true one, and they were all puniſhed for their falſe teſtimony; there have been caſes likewiſe, once or twice in my experience, where all the three witneſſes have ſupported the will, and ſwore to it with ſuch ſtrength that would hardly leave a doubt in one's mind, yet it has been proved to be totally falſe, as in the caſe of Sir James Chadwick; then, gentlemen, you will do in this and every ſuch caſe that which is natural and probable; you will attend to that, before any teſtimony of external circumſtances, before any ſaying, or things that are ſuppoſed to have paſſed at different times inconſiſtent with that probability: I ſhall, therefore, begin by ſtating to you the conduct of Mr. Sawtell, the teſtator in the real will that I ſhall lay before you, the ſuppoſed teſtator in this ſuppoſed will that has already been laid before you in the indictment, and then you will judge from that man, from his way of thinking, and from his conſtant habitual way of practice, what was his intention and deſign; he was a very induſtrious man in the trade of a tallow chandler, he had invented the ſpermaceti candle, he had taken ſo much merit to himſelf on that occaſion, that he had a ſeal with the impreſſion, I think, of a candle in a candleſtick, and the words Sperma Ceti wrote round it; he, for a conſiderable time being in buſineſs, had accumulated wealth, ariſing from his own induſtry, that had been added to, by acceſſion from his brother, more particularly than any other relation, which was ſome time about the year 1777 or 1778: In the diſpoſition of this acquired property he had made wills in an early period, and after the acquiſition from his brother of the property that is mentioned to you, he had likewiſe been in the habit of making his diſpoſition by will, and he had employed ſome attorney in whom he had confidence, and to that attorney he always imparted his wiſhes whenever he wanted to alter or re-execute his will, which, in point of law, in truth, is a new will; more additions or codicils to it may be executed as additions, but whenever it is executed over again, it is a new will to all intents and purpoſes, in law as well as in common ſenſe. Some time about the year 1780, his attorney, of the name of Falkner, died, on his death he employed a gentleman of undoubted ability and credit in his profeſſion, Mr. Mumford: in 1780, he employed Mr. Mumford to make his will, in which, as well as in the former ones, for in order to look back to former wills, and to collect the intention of the teſtator, it was neceſſary to turn back to ſuch as had been made in Mr. Falkner's life, which was done by this Mr. Mumford, in the year 1780, therefore, a will was made, the ſame executor, the ſame reſiduary legatee, in that will of 1780, that had been in the former will in the life time of Mr. Falkner: in the beginning of the year 1782, in February, Mr. Sawtell again wiſhed to alter his will, or, in other words, to make a new will, and to have his will new executed; in February, 1782, he made a will, the ſame reſiduary legatee, the ſame ſole executer, that was Mr. Thomas Slack, who had been ſo in the former wills that I ſtate to you, and continued ſo in the ſucceſſion of all the real wills that will be ſtated to you: his ſituation, in the year 1782, was this; he had a ſiſter who had lived in a courſe of life by no means agreeable to him, and indeed not fitting for her, ſhe had incurred his diſpleaſure, and had never entered into any of his wills as an object of his bounty, excepting an annuity of twenty pounds a year, that had at firſt ariſen out of a ſum of money producing nearly that intereſt, that had been left by the brother, that you will find in this will as well as this falſe will (as I now take the liberty to call it, becauſe that is the charge) that annuity remained as a proviſion for her; there was another ſiſter, what children ſhe had, and where they were, was perfectly unknown; it turns out, therefore, that a daughter of this other ſiſter had married one Spence, and gone to Jamaica, whether living or not he did not know, they are in none of the wills, neither in the real or the falſe will; Gentlemen, the teſtator had been in particular intimacy with Mr. Thomas Slack and a brother of his of the name of Robert, and ſo ſtrong was his confidence and his truſt in both of them, but particularly in Thomas, that in all the former wills he had made him his reſiduary legatee, and ſole executor; he had likewiſe, in his life time intruſted him with all his property; he had an iron cheſt in his houſe, where all his property, his bank notes, his watch, ſeals, and every thing that was of the moſt conſequence were uſually and generally kept; there were two keys to it, of which he was the keeper of one, the other Mr. Thomas Slack had, he had conſtant acceſs to and managed his affairs, his money tranſactions and every other buſineſs; he had, beſides his friends and relatives, a niece of his wife's, his wife had been dead many years, and a niece of her's that married Nathaniel Goodridge: She married one Haines before, and the manner and conduct of life of Mr. Haines was not very pleaſing to Mr. Sawtell, he became conſiderably indebted, and ſo did the widow after his death, to Mr. Sawtell, before ſhe married Nathaniel Goodridge; they married, I believe, five years before this falſe or true will was made; on the marriage he had paid the debts of Mrs. Haines, and had given Nathaniel one hundred pounds with her, who was then a carpenter and in buſineſs, for carrying on his trade as ſuch; he had, after this will in February, 1782, made an aſſignment of ſome leaſehold premiſes upon or near Saffron-hill, where he carried on his trade, and where Goodridge lived, he made an aſſignment to Goodridge, thinking it would help him in his trade, as the leaſehold premiſes had three or four years to run, thinking it would enable him the better to renew the leaſes with the landlord, he being in poſſeſſion of them: Mr. Goodridge, who had been a conſiderable time in getting this aſſignment, employs an attorney of the name of Gregory, a gentleman likewiſe, I believe, of very good character; he was the attorney who tranſacted that buſineſs of the aſſignment of the leaſe: Mr. Mumford being the attorney that he had always, from the death of Mr. Falkner, employed, Mr. Sawtell thought he had done enough for this niece of his wife's, and for her huſband; they had no children, he had done quite enough for her in this act of his bounty, beſides the portion he had given her; but whether he thought this act might create diſputes or contradictions in law, or how far this would be a revocation of his will in February, 1782, and this tranſaction paſſed in August, 1782, to prevent diſputes of that ſort is the only reaſon that can be aſſigned, as many tranſactions paſſed many papers neceſſary for him to ſign upon the occaſion, he did not know what might paſs at the time, and he made another will, which was his laſt real will and teſtament, as we mean to eſtabliſh before you on the 4th of November, 1782, after which time I believe he never did or thought of any teſtamentary act whatever; I ſay after the 4th of November, 1782; that is a material date, I will only burthen your memory with thoſe that are moſt material to your attention, and that is one of the moſt material: Mr. Mumford, who made that will, ſaw him duly execute it, and called in the witneſſes that Sawtell thought proper to have to his will; he ſealed it up in a cover, put two ſeals on that cover, the will itſelf was wrote on two ſheets of paper, a ſeal to each, and, I believe the ſignature of the teſtator; it was wrote on the outſide "The laſt will and teſtament of Thomas Sawtell." It was put into this iron cheſt, of which as I told you before, the two keys were kept in the manner I have ſtated; Mr. Slack was not preſent either at the inſtructions for making it, at the execution of it, or in any part of it, nor I believe in any of the former wills, that however may be more accurately ſtated to you by Mr. Mumford when he is examined: Gentlemen, the ſtory may now be neceſſary for me to touch upon, after having directed your attention to that material date, the date of that will, which is contended in the Commons by Nathaniel Goodridge, who was one executor, and Mr. Hunter an acquaintance of his, and alſo Mr. Sawtell's, to be the real and true laſt will and teſtament of Mr. Sawtell, and if it was, you ſee moſt clearly it would revoke all other laſt wills and teſtaments except the one he was executing, I think there he did not add the word of revocation, but in legal operation it would be a revocation: the 14th of December, 1782, is the next material date for you to recollect, it is very difficult to remember without referring to notes, and without reading them, and I came to town yeſterday, and have given this caſe all the attention I could, but if I am incorrect, I ſhall be very much obliged to any gentlemen of either ſide to inform me better, and to correct me: the 14th of December, 1782, is extremely material in this reſpect, from the 4th of November up to that 14th of December, or very near the time, ſome acts have been done, and I lay a great ſtreſs always upon what men do; I am not very old in the profeſſion, but I have had a great deal of painful experience on that head; I have always thought, that men taking different turns of mind, perhaps in company, in liquor, or in a thouſand different ways, ſomethings that they have ſaid, and ſomethings that they have not ſaid, are all very material to be noticed; yet theſe things are often miſunderſtood, and often much miſrepreſented, ſo that little attention merely to what people ſay, is to be paid: but it is very difficult indeed to forge men's hearts, you judge a man from his conduct, and not from his profeſſions, it is the moſt unerring rule that we know: Gentlemen, from the 4th of November to the 5th of December, the teſtator Mr. Sawtell, had continued all that confidence and truſt in Mr. Thomas Slack, that he had before poſſeſſed, uniformly and uninterrupted he continued this until towards the beginning of December, he found nobody elſe capable to conduct any part of his affairs nor even his walks to the Bank; and on the 5th of December, within nine days of this pretended falſe will of his, two ſolemn acts, one a general power of attorney to Thomas Slack, to manage all his affairs, the ſecond a particular power of attorney, ſuch as is called at the Bank, to receive his dividends and intereſt of his money, were executed: no acts that a man could do could be ſtronger than theſe; if you want to look at the regards of a man, look at the treaſure where the heart is generally ſuppoſed to be, thoſe whom he intruſts with that, are ſuppoſed to be the objects of every eſteem, of every affection, that he at that time ſeems to entertain: at the time of the execution of this power of attorney, on the 5th day of December, the teſtator was confined with a ſwelled knee to his bed, and had been for a conſiderable time. Gentlemen, the ſtory that is told in ſupport of this pretended, and this falſe will, is, that it was neceſſary that the execution of it ſhould be a profound ſecret, it was to be tranſacted therefore with the moſt profound ſecrecy, at night, in the ſtillneſs and the dead of night, about twelve the witneſſes were to attend, to be let in by Nathaniel Goodridge, who being as I have ſtated to you, a friend, and in that ſort of connection with Mr. Sawtell, as I have before mentioned, had obtained permiſſion to ſit up with him in turns all night, he had two ſervants at the time, a man and a maid ſervant, the maid ſervant, Elizabeth Spraggs, is unfortunately dead; the man ſervant, Edward Price, lived with him to his laſt dying moments, and was very much benefitted in the real will, as well as in the falſe one; I ſee a conſiderable legacy is left to him, as well as Elizabeth Spraggs, fifty pounds more in the falſe will than in the true will, that circumſtance ſhews the gratitude of his maſter, for his faithful ſervices: Gentlemen, this Edward Price will be produced to you; and he will tell you what is material, which is, that the very next day, (the 15th of December, the day after) that falſe will which is produced to you, with the teſtator's mark to it, dated on the 14th of December, on the ſuppoſition that he was ſo ill, and in ſo much pain, and ſo unable to write, that he was only able to make his mark, I ſhall prove to you that on the 15th of December he was out in a coach, and dined with Mr. Slack, though repreſented ſo infirm, and ſo impotent, that he could do nothing but make a mark, who never made a mark before or afterwards, inſtead of the name Thomas Sawtell, which he uſed to write: after the 15th of December, I believe he was never out, he was better and worſe in the afternoon, going to bed early indeed, I believe his liquor was brandy and water, which was his common liquor when he grew more infirm, whether it was made of equal ſtrength or greater as he found the want of it, but he was generally in the afternoon incapable of doing any ſolemn act, like that of making a will, and ſo conſcious was he of that, that he uſed to appoint ten or not exceeding twelve, knowing his own infirmities, and his turn to liquor, and the natural conſequences of it; at this hour Mr. Mumford will tell you all his appointments were made, and that he was particularly cautious in the due ſtrict punctual attention to that time: Gentlemen, he died on the 9th of February, that will be a third material date for you, the time of his death, during his illneſs, and the laſt confinement from the beginning, or if you will pleaſe to count it from the 15th of December; I do not know that he ever went out afterwards, though he might be up ſome times; during that illneſs ſo little idea had he of Nathaniel Goodridge, as the perſon to be intruſted with the execution of his will, that Price will prove to you, that his orders to him, were during his illneſs, that when at any particular time, he felt himſelf worſe than ordinary, and apprehended himſelf in more than ordinary danger, that he ſhould ſend for Mr. Slack; he once found himſelf in one of theſe ſituations, in which it would be comfortable for him to have Mr. Slack, it was between one and two o'clock in the morning, he ordered Mr. Price to go to Mr. Slack; Price who thought he had been dozing, and waking, did not go to Slack, and he went to ſleep again; about three days before he died, I think on Thurſday the 6th of February, the laſt time he ſpoke intelligibly, or ſcuſeably; he returned his thanks to Price, took him by the hand, thanked him for his long and faithful ſervices to him, wiſhed him his health to enjoy what he had left him, and hoped that Mr. Slack would be punctual in paying him; you ſee that makes it impoſſible for this man to have left another executor: On the 14th of December, and on the 6th of February, he gives theſe directions about Slack, to him they were to look for payment, he was to be ſent for, every thing was to be entruſted to him; every thing was to be done by him: theſe are the natural genuine effects of a man's real mind and will. Gentlemen, after this tranſaction, it will be proper to tell you the ſtory of Underwood. This Underwood, one of the witneſſes to the will, and the writer of the will, tells a ſtory, I think from the 18th of December, 1784; in December twelvemonth at the Public Office, in Bow-ſtreet, before Sir Sampſon Wright, upon an affidavit there made, his ſtory is, that having been concerned for a Mrs. Reeve, ſometime antecedent to the year, 1782; becauſe the tranſactions I am going to ſpeak of, happened in 1781; he had been concerned for her as a woman in poor circumſtances, and having a Chancery ſuit, he was not a man of circumſtances, and could not afford to advance, nor had he credit for the expences of that ſuit; the conſequence was, that ſhe was an acquaintance of Mrs. Nathaniel Goodridge, ſhe applied to her, and the ſtory was told to Mr. Sawtell, concerning this ſuit and the poor woman's right, and I think he was induced in 1782 to contribute five guineas towards it on the ſtory that Underwood told, that, he ſays, is the only time that he ever ſaw Mr. Sawtell to know him; he will tell you that at the execution of the will there was ſomebody in the bed, whether it was Mr. Sawtell or not, he did not know; that having ſo far a knowledge of Nathaniel Goodridge, for he had none of him before, nor of Mr. Sawtell; but as I have told you, his ſtory goes on to ſay, that about the latter end of November, and in this he will be confirmed by his wife, who was preſent at ſeveral of the tranſactions and her maid; that towards the end of November or beginning of December 1782, Nathaniel Goodridge had frequently been applying to him about getting a will from Mr. Sawtell (all that I ſay now, you will take to be his ſtory) it was intended that Underwood ſhould draw this will, ſometime paſt, he found his total inability to draw a will for a man whoſe circumſtances he knew nothing of, and whoſe fortune, where it lay, or what it conſiſted of he was a ſtranger to, he therefore ſaid it was not poſſible for him to do it: then the ſcheme was formed of getting at his will; it was known perfectly that he had made a will, and it was ſuppoſed, and perhaps known, that that will was in favour of Mr. Thomas Slack, for they knew there was a will; the thing then was to get at this will, which would inform them of all the circumſtances they wanted to know, if that could be ſo managed, and you will ſee evidently and clearly, that the firſt part of the falſe will is copied from the true will; there are ſeveral legacies charged in it, there are the two young Haynes's, who are ſons of Mrs. N. Goodridge before her marriage with him; for one of them that the teſtator had provided ſo much money to put him out apprentice, he had provided for one of theſe boys, and meant to provide for the other, they do not appear to have legacies in the true will, but in the falſe they have legacies of three hundred pounds each, Mrs. Goodridge has a gold watch; there are a family of Evans's, (not the priſoner) George Evans and his ſon, (the ſame name as the priſoner) they have three hundred pounds given to them; but the great change to be effected, (the reſt I ſuppoſe was to give a colour) but the real change was the bulk of the eſtate, the reſidue; therefore to change Nathaniel Goodridge for the reſiduary legatee and executor inſtead of Mr. Slack, who was the ſole executor and reſiduary legatee, that was the main object of the will; it was determined to get at this will, how it was I cannot tell you, nor can Underwood, but by the relation of Nathaniel Goodridge, he got ſomebody to make him a key of this cheſt, out of which he might get the real will; a ſuſpicion fell on a lockſmith in the neighbourhood, and as it is impoſſible to aſk him the queſtion, as it muſt make him an accomplice in the buſineſs, I ſhall not call him to give evidence which muſt diſcredit him; it is plain from his relation to Underwood, that he had a pick-lock key that would open and ſhut this cheſt; and on the 14th of December, which was the firſt time he ſat up with the teſtator, that night they went about eleven o'clock, and were let in by Nathaniel Goodridge, by a hem, which was a ſign by Underwood; there were the attorney, James Evans, who was a publican at the Cooper's Arms on Saffron-hill, and the brother of Nathaniel Goodridge, they were let in, they made reſearches, Nathaniel got the bunch of keys, and tried an eſcrutore, and the bureau, and theſe keys opened it, but the key of the iron cheſt happened to be in Price's cuſtody, and he being in his room, Nathaniel could not go into that room without waking Price; the truth therefore, as related by Underwood, is that they did not get at it at this time; this diſconcerted the plan conſiderably, therefore nothing could be done till this will was got at, that was to be the guide, that was to be the ſort of proceeding by which Underwood was to ſteer; accordingly they waited ſome time, and in the firſt week in January, Nathaniel ſaid he had got the key, and they got the cheſt open, the will is found, it is read, there is a pen, ink, and paper for a will, and Underwood ſat down and copied that will, and the copy of that will is ſtill exiſting, the copy of the will of the 4th of November; he next proceeded to take inſtructions from Nathaniel, how he would wiſh to vary it; now this, you will obſerve, is ſaid to be by the date of the 14th of December, and they did not get at it by this ſtory till the firſt week in January; about the 20th of January, or ſomewhere thereabouts, the firſt opportunity they had to meet after, it was agreed that Underwood ſhould go to Nathaniel's work-ſhop, where he had a little ſort of compting-houſe; they went there, and this you will ſee, when I come to ſtate the confirmation of the ſtory, was upon the 21ſt, which is as near the time as can poſſibly be gueſſed: upon the 21ſt he copied about one ſheet then, Nathaniel was with him afterwards; the next night he came again, Nathaniel was with him, and he copied the other ſheet; the other part of this will was performed, if this ſtory is true, on the 22d of January: on the 23d of January every thing was ripe for execution, and you will ſee on the 23d of January, (the will that they exhibit is not the will of the 23d of January, I will tell you the reaſon by and by) this will of the 23d of January they all of them attend, Goodridge ſits up, they are let in upon a ſignal, they go up into the teſtator's room, pulling their ſhoes off that they might not diſturb the ſervants, who did not know the faces of any of them except Nathaniel; Nathaniel being cloſe to the teſtator, who was in bed, and the others of them at the foot of the bed; Nathaniel put a pen into the hand of this Sawtell, who was then in one of the ſtates he uſually was in, or in ſleep, and made a mark to this will, they then went down into the parlour, and ſubſcribed their names to it, and the buſineſs was thought to be done: however the next day, or the day after that, within one or two days after it, before the 26th of January, which I think was on a Sunday, they met and had a conſultation at this Underwood's, and Nathaniel did not like this date of the 23d of January, for ſo that will attempted to be executed on this day was dated; why, ſays he, Slack may be able to prove him incapable on that day, it may be too late: the queſtion then was, what date to give it, and they gave it the date of the 14th of December, that being a time before he was ſo confined, as to be incapable of executing wills, that being the firſt time that Nathaniel had ſat up with him; the conſequence of which was, the ſeal, and I believe the name, that is the mark, was taken off by way of cancelling this will of the 23d of January, and a pen drawn through the 23d of January, and the 14th of December put, and then it was fixed that Underwood ſhould come on Sunday, the 26th of January, and dine at the houſe of Nathaniel, and then he ſhould write the will, and that will ſhould be then prepared; and that will of the 26th of January is the real one, exhibited here as the will of the 14th of December: when this was done, the three witneſſes ſigned their names there; they did not meet after that 26th of January, they had not the impudence and folly, as well as the wickedneſs of going to the houſe; but Nathaniel ſaid, as to the mark of the name, leave that to me; and the will now produced, with the ſuppoſed mark of the teſtator; when that mark was put there nobody but Nathaniel himſelf knows, nor how it came there; it will be for your obſervation, and it is pretty apparent on the face of this inſtrument, of the falſe will, that that mark was not put at the ſame time of the ſubſcribing the names as witneſſes, but at a different time, being written with a different ink, blacker; that is a very ſtrong mark of the truth of this ſtory. It had been in contemplation to apply to a Mr. Aſſiotti, who is ſuppoſed to be an ingenious man at that ſort of imitation, and he was to be ſhewn pieces of paper where the name of Thomas Sawtell was written, to imitate it: Gentlemen, with reſpect to the true will, which had been ſo put in a cover, they took two blank ſheets of paper, that it might appear in the ſame ſtate as when the true will was incloſed in it; they ſealed up this covering in which the true will had been incloſed with the ſame covering, and this deception ſo paſſed on Slack, that he took it to be the real will, he therefore had no ſuſpicion of the deception; there were ſome pencil marks, which were a ſort of direction how and where the name was to be wrote; however that did not take effect, Mr. Aſſiotti not being at home, nothing was done on that occaſion at all: Gentlemen, when this tranſaction, therefore, on the 26th of January, was performed, there wanted nothing but the death of this poor man to bring this falſe will to light; when he died, the parties being ſent to, they came, Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge was there, Mr. Slack, Mr. Gregory the attorney, for Nathaniel had the art, and the ingenuity, at that time to ſend for the real attorney, a man of character; Mr. Gregory, he comes, and enquiry is made whether there is any will, Nathaniel Goodridge produces this out of his pocket, Mr. Slack never dreamt of ſuch a thing; he went home, in the preſence of his partner Mr. Atkinſon opened this cover, and there he found the two ſheets of blank paper: Mr. Mumford being a man of experience and ability, he was too inquiſitive for this kind of buſineſs; he wanted the inſtructions of this will and the draught, this was a pinching part of the buſineſs, however they told him they were in Underwood's hands, and would be produced in proper time; without that, I take it for granted, Mr. Gregory would have had nothing to do with the buſineſs; upon this occaſion, the day after Mr. Sawtell's death there was another conſultation, then it was concerted that Underwood ſhould draw up pretended inſtructions, and copies ſhould be made and ſhewn to Mr. Gregory, and it was ſo, and they impoſed, as naturally they would, upon Mr. Gregory; theſe inſtructions were written at his own houſe the 16th of Febuary, the actual date when theſe inſtructions were written, that was the Sunday following the will; inſtructions for a will of a man who died on the 9th; in fact they were really, and in truth wrote the 16th, ſo this man tells the ſtory; and you will ſee, when I come ſhortly to open the corroborating circumſtances, that they appear to be true: when they came to ſhew the inſtructions, and the copies to Mr. Gregory, as he wrote the originals, as will be ſhewn to you in an incorrect way, and in a looſe way, as ſuppoſed to be taken before the man himſelf, in order to imitate that which would be the natural effect of inſtructions ſo taken; he wrote them in that way, he likewiſe made a copy of the real will of the 14th of November, when he had got this, the draught of the true [illegible] of the 14th of November, he gave it to his wife to keep, ſhe put them into her pocket; it happened very unfortunately that ſhe being very big with child, was brought to bed ſuddenly, and the papers were all ſo extremely dirtied, that they were obliged to be put into a tub of water, and that draught of the 23d of January, ſeems to me to have been burnt, for this reaſon, that it was ſo defaced that it was of no poſſible uſe, the other two will be ſhewn to you; then they wanted a date to theſe inſtructions; then Mr. N. Goodridge ſet his wits to work, let me ſee, ſays he, Mr. Sawtell was at my houſe, the 4th of November, I went with him the 9th, being Lord Mayor's day, to tallow-chandler's hall, therefore the 6th of November will be a proper day, you can ſay you met him at my houſe, and he brought the will to you; that he ſuffered you to copy that will on the 6th of November, and on the 9th, he gave you more perfect inſtructions how he would have it altered, therefore theſe are the two ſuppoſed times; then on the 9th of November were theſe inſtructions to be dated: now gentlemen, with reſpect to the circumſtances confirming this ſtory of the man, I ſhall call to you one witneſs, who will prove to you, the conſultations about the wife of this man getting Aſſiotti to write the name; I ſhall prove to you that when that failed by the journeyman of Mr. Goodridge himſelf, who was in the ſhop at the time that he came, on the 21ſt of January, with Underwood, and they were there four or five hours, Underwood writing, and the other looking over, I ſuppoſe dictating, the man taking no notice, but going about his work, making ſome rail work that wanted to be finiſhed, and which obliged him to work later than uſual; this man ſeeing a part of the writing hang out, after Underwood and Nathaniel were gone, he had the curioſity to ſee what this Underwood had been writing, and there he read the name of Sawtell, and ſaw two or three legacies; he likewiſe was at work on the 22d of January, when he was writing a further part of this will: I ſhall call to you a witneſs, that will prove to you, that Evans, one of the priſoners, applied to a gentleman of the name of Hudſon, a pewterer, a gentleman of character, as I am informed, to be a witneſs, ſuppoſing that Mr. Goodridge could not be there, however he was there. Hudſon did not chuſe to have any thing to do with it, and had nothing to do with it; that is a deciſive circumſtance, to go no further, that there was no true will on the 14th of December, it is of itſelf deciſive; therefore, if that witneſs is believed, there is an end to be ſure, of this matter. Gentlemen, I will confirm it further, on that 26th of January, I will ſhew, Underwood was writing on the 26th of January, when he was making the will that is now produced, that he was a conſiderable time, on the 26th of January, a writing, at Nathaniel Goodridge's, I will prove to you, that he ſtaid and dined there, I will prove that to you, by Goodridge's maid ſervant, that Underwood was writing, though ſhe cannot tell what, that all the witneſſes were there at that time, that Underwood ſays the three put their names to it, and that Nathaniel Goodridge undertook to get the teſtator's mark to it; there again, on the 26th of January, if there had been a will on the 14th of December; if there had not been a reaſon for altering it, why this new work; but I go further, I call to you a man of reputation on Saffron-hill, Mr. Eames, who I believe was the ſucceſſor to Mr. Sawtell in his buſineſs, when he left off, which was in 1781; I will prove to you, that on the 26th of January, Daniel Goodridge, with a good deal of concern, and in a very ſorrowful tone, came to him, and told him, at his ſhop, ſays he, Mr. Eames, Mr. Sawtell is very ill, he is confined, he has ſpoken very favourable of you, he has mentioned his intention to diſpoſe of his eſtate, and to leave me the bulk of his fortune, and to alter his will; the expreſſion is very remarkable, and to alter his will! alter his will! what on the 26th of January, alter his will, if it was complete on the 14th of December! it ſhewed it had not any exiſtence antecedent; ſays Mr. Eames, I am afraid nothing can be done without Ned and Betty, ſo he called the two ſervants, the man and maid; ſays Nathaniel, you are intimate in the houſe, you know them, I wiſh you could apply to them, and get them in my favour, then ſomething may be done; Mr. Eames ſaw Nathaniel Goodridge and Evans in the fore room, after what had paſſed at the ſhop, on the ſame day, and there repeating again this wiſh, that Mr. Eames would be his friend, and aſſiſt him about Ned and Betty; Evans ſays, "O! get it done, d——n it, get it done;" get what done? why it was all done if this was true: Gentlemen, this ſeems to me ſo impoſſible to reſiſt, and ſo unanſwerable, that I do not know what to add to it; if it did want further circumſtances, you would have a great number of circumſtances, that would be leſs material in a caſe like this, and particularly about money that had paſſed among them; for on the 9th of February, Nathaniel Goodridge came to the houſe of Underwood; Leonard Goodridge and Mr. Underwood were above ſtairs, in coming down, and going away, Leonard gave her five guineas, at the bottom of the ſtairs, he put five guineas in her hand and ſhook hands with her huſband, and ſaid, while the cart is going it's right to greaſe the wheels; he ſhook the huſband by the hand, and ſaid, he hoped they ſhould all ſtand true to each other; this is on the 9th of February, immediately after the death; another five guineas was given afterwards, that will be proved to you by the daughter, Suſannah Underwood, who went there in conſequence of a letter, as it had been promiſed that Evans would come there in a day or two, and though the tranſaction ſhe did not ſee, ſhe heard money on the table; this account appears likewiſe from a writing of Nathaniel himſelf, five guineas was ſuppoſed to be left in March, 1783, it is put down March, 1783; however, there is another account follows it of goods that have been had upon credit, neceſſary things, ſuch as tables, chairs, bedding, &c. to the amount of eighteen pounds, then another figure added by Underwood himſelf of five guineas more, making twenty-three pounds ſixteen ſhillings, this was to go in part of the account, and I will ſtate to you another circumſtance that ſhews that the account was kept with this view, about the 7th of April, or ſomewhere thereabouts, this matter being depending in the Commons, a caveat, as it is called, was entered by Mr. Slack, to prevent the probate and the executorſhip paſſing there to Mr. Goodridge: Evans and Underwood did not chooſe to truſt to the honour of Nathaniel Goodridge for their ſhare of this booty, and it was then propoſed that two bonds of eight hundred pounds each to pay four hundred pounds, one to Evans and the other to Underwood ſhould be given, Underwood was for taking this bond, and they ſaid, no, the matter has not been decided in the commons, though it appears to be an abſolute bond on the face of it, it is really meant to be conditional, and not to be paid till the probate is obtained, upon which the bond for Underwood is depoſited with Evans, and Evans gives an accountable receipt for that bond to Underwood, and I will prove to you the hand-writing of Evans; I do not read it to you now becauſe it will be ſufficient to be read in the courſe of the trial, it was that four hundred pounds ſhould be paid and diſcharged as ſoon as it was determined in the Commons, that is the ſubſtance of it: towards the end of the year 1783, the ſum of five guineas was paid: the bond of Nathaniel Goodridge to Evans, was frequently talked off by Underwood, and he was to deduct theſe ſums out of that bond; there were applications made to Nathaniel Goodridge over and over again about money, by Mr. Underwood ſeveral times, and there is a letter from Mr. Goodridge to Underwood where he writes thus, “I received a few lines “from a friend of yours, and wiſh I had “it in my power to help you in your diſtreſs, but you have called upon me ſo often that I have diſtreſſed myſelf, (till this tranſaction Mr. Underwood knew no more of Goodridge than I do, he goes on) “I am aſtoniſhed at your ſending to “me now, and becauſe I have not trouble “enough of my own, I muſt be teazed “with Mr. Underwood's affairs, and I “promiſed you, and I believe Mr. U. “thinks little about it, when you have “got your turns ſerved; remember the “laſt time when your turn was ſerved “it was all well, but as to promiſes they “are all forgot.” This he writes to her whom he had not written to on any other tranſaction than this buſineſs. Gentlemen, I ſhall alſo prove to you, that Mr. Underwood applied to Mr. Todd, a perſon who dealt in ſpiritous liquors, to advance him money, which Todd could not or did not chuſe to do, when he would have pledged this receipt for the bond, as a ſort of ſecurity for the money, and this long before any diſcovery had been made: now, you ſee all theſe tranſactions paſſed in the year 1783, and confirms his ſtory, they being antecedent to the 18th of December 1784, when he went before Sir Sampſon Wright, and made this voluntary confeſſion, from ſome motive that I cannot ſtate to you, no matter what; whatever therefore his character may be, he is certainly ſuch an accomplice in this iniquity, that tho' he could prove it extremely ſtrong, you would not attend much I am ſure to his ſtory, but coupled with theſe antecedent circumſtances, you will learn what the real tranſaction was, and this circumſtance as well as the others you will not forget, namely, the application for a witneſs on the 23d of January, and the application to Eames on the 26th; all clearly ſhew that theſe things had not exiſted in the teſtator's mind; for Slack was the only perſon he had the leaſt idea of as is repreſented: I conclude, therefore, gentlemen, with ſaying that long as this narration has been, I ſhall not mind my own trouble at all, if the caſe is made plain to you, you will therefore judge where the probability is, that this man ſo circumſtanced, and in the ſituation I have ſtated him, ſhould ever make that will on the 14th of December: that is for you to try; if he had made it the 23d of January, and dated it the 14th of December; it would be equally a forgery, though the teſtator himſelf might have executed it on the 23d of January, and for this plain reaſon, the antedating it, and executing it when a man might be incapable; that would therefore have been, without all controverſy, as much a fabrication and forgery, as the preſent. Gentlemen, I will call theſe witneſſes before you, beginning with Mr. Mumford, the former attorney; as it ſeems to be my Lord's wiſh and directions, that it ſhould be ſo, to bring the circumſtances before the ſtory of Underwood; and it will be all ſo connected, and ſo ſupported, that there can be no doubt in any man's mind of the truth of Underwood's ſtory, and it can hardly then be ſaid, that a man in the ſituation of Underwood would come in this laſt ſtage and give this account, if it was not the force of truth that extorted it from him: the whole will be left to you, it will be made as ſhort as can be; if I was to call the whole train of witneſſes, it would lengthen this trial much more, for I know not how many ſcore there are, but I told you before, I paid little or no regard to declarations, but to the acts of a man; we will, therefore, in as ſhort a manner as poſſible, conſiſtent with juſtice, lay this extraordinary caſe before you.

HENRY MUMFORD ſworn.

I am an attorney in Arundel-ſtreet, in the Strand, I knew Mr. Thomas Sawtell, on Saffron-hill, in the year 1780, I was recommended to him on the death of Mr. Falkner, his late attorney, he ſent to me to alter his will, that was in November 1780, I did alter his will, which was executed in due form of law.

Did he ever employ you afterwards?—He did.

How often?—With reſpect to making his will twice; in February 1782, I prepared another will for him, and another on the 4th of November, 1782, that was the laſt will, the firſt was deſtroyed, that was the will of November, 1780, and the one in February, they were deſtroyed in my preſence.

Have you the inſtructions for that will in the year 1782?—Certainly not, they were very immaterial.

Mr. Erſkine. You are an attorney?——Yes.

Did not you take inſtructions from the teſtator for the alterations of his will?—I certainly did, but I do not know where they are.

Did you make any draught?——Yes, that will be produced.

With reſpect to November, 1780, did you make no draught of that?——No.

Did you take down no inſtructions in writing?—I cannot remember.

You muſt tell me one way or the other, whether in November, 1780, when you made this gentleman's will, you took any inſtructions in writing?—They were merely trifling.

Will you ſwear that you never had any inſtructions or any thing in writing of the will of November, 1780?—Certainly not.

You never had?—Not to the beſt of my remembrance, I had not.

Have you ſearched for if?—A conſiderable time ago.

Have you made a recent ſearch to attend this trial?—I have not.

Then, Sir, it ſeems to me rather ſtrange that you cannot ſwear you have none ſubſequent?—I do not recollect I had any inſtructions in writing, about the will of 1780.

I aſk you, if you ever had any inſtructions in writing from the teſtator?—I verily believe I had not them in writing.

If you verily believe that, you muſt have believed it when it was ſtill more recent; did you ſearch for it, Sir?—I do not ſay I ſearched for it, I ſearched for all papers generally.

Then you mean to ſay you have not any ſuch paper that you can prove to the Court, concerning November, 1780?——No, Sir, none.

Mr. Silveſter. Now tell us concerning that will of 1780.——Mr. Daniel Slack was the reſiduary legatee, and the ſole executor in the will that I ſaw, which was made before that which was prepared by Mr. Falkner.

The ſecond will was in January, 1782?—Yes.

—Had you the inſtructions for that will?—No, I had not, I drew a draught of that will, I believe it is in the Commons.

Mr. Erſkine. This you conſider now as a draught of the will itſelf, for the inſtructions are loſt you ſay; in February, 1782, there was a draught of the will, which was taken from ſome preceding inſtructions?—Yes, from his former will.

Then when you came to make another will, in November, 1782, that very draught was altered?——Yes.

Then that which is now in the Commons, and which is now called for, is, in fact now, the draught of the will in November, 1782?—Yes, but I believe there may be ſome little inaccuracy, which I can explain.

Let me underſtand you; the draught of the will of February, 1782, when you came to make another will in November, 1782; you made it by altering the will of February, 1782?——Yes.

Then that paper in February becomes the draught of November, 1782, though it was originally the draught of February, 1782?——Certainly it is.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, I object to this being read, either as the draught of February or of November.

Sir Thomas Davenport. The draught of February, 1782, when you made the will in November, 1782, was, as I underſtand you, the draught upon which the alterations were made?——Yes.

Was that will read to the teſtator?—Yes.

Are the alterations for November, 1782, now viſible on the face of that draught?—I do not know that they are.

Then look and point them out?—I do not think that I can do ſo, but I can very near deſcribe them.

Was th[illegible] in new [illegible]de, read [illegible] to the teſtator, prior to his making the will in 1782?

Mr. Erſkine. Sir Thomas, I muſt beg your pardon, I muſt really interfere.

Sir T. Davenport. Was any draught read to the teſtator, prior to his making the will in November, 1782?—Yes, I believe there was.

Was that draught read to the teſtator, before he made the will of November, 1782?—I cannot anſwer that.

Mr. Erſkine. That would not alter my objection in the leaſt.

Court. The objection is this, that this being altered, and he not being able to diſtinguiſh the alterations that ſtood originally, he cannot now read it as the draught in February; now you may ſee how far you can read it as the draught of November.

Sir T. Davenport. Was any draught read to the teſtator before he executed the will of November, 1782?—If any draught was read, it was that; but no doubt he was made acquainted with the contents.

Do you believe any draught was read to him, in November, 1782?—I do not know whether the draught was, but the original will was, from which that is copied?——Then is this a copy of the original will?—Moſt certainly it is.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, I ſubmit this cannot be given, as evidence of a draught either in February or November.

Court. Certainly not, you cannot produce the draught before you ſhew that the original is deſtroyed.

ROBERT SLACK ſworn on the Voire Dire.

Court. As this is a long trial, if the priſoners wiſh to be accommodated with chairs, they may.

(Two chairs brought into the bar.)

In this ſuppoſed will that Mr. Sawtell is ſuppoſed to have executed, you was ſet down for a legacy of one thouſand pounds?——I was.

You know there is a ſuit in the Commons, in which two wills [illegible] in conteſt; one the 14th of November, 1782, and another of a ſubſequent date; you are a legatee in both theſe wills?——Yes.

Mr. Pigott. I ſubmit, my Lord, it is enough, that he has an intereſt.

Sir T. Davenport. Have you a releaſe?——I have.

Mr. Pigott. You releaſed?——I have.

You have no expectations of receiving the money?—No, Sir.

No part of it?—No.

You have entered into no private agreement about it?—I never mentioned it to any body.

That will not do for me?—My expectations may be upon my brother, but never while he lives as I know of, my brother has no children, and there is no relation but me.

Have you no expectation of receiving from your brother, or from any other perſon on his behalf, any part of that legacy?—No, Sir; are you ſatisfied now.

Now Sir, obſerve, have you entered into no ſtipulation with any perſon about it?—I never mentioned it to any perſon, but what I ſaid was, I had given one thouſand pounds away; the proctor mentioned it to me, and I ſaid, I would do it immediately.

You made no ſtipulation at all?—Not the leaſt.

Mr. Fielding. This is a very uncommon examination after a releaſe.

Mr. Pigott. In anſwering one of my queſtions, you uſed the word expectation from your brother?—My expectations are from him as next of kin and heir at law.

Court. Heir at law is no objection, that does not diſqualify, an heir at law may be a witneſs, but a remainder man cannot.

(The releaſe read by the Clerk of the Arraigns, ſigned Robert Slack.

"Know all men by theſe preſents, that I Robert Slack, legatee in the will of Thomas Sawtell, dated the 14th of November, 1782, have remiſed, &c. to Daniel Slack, of Newgate-ſtreet, London, cotton merchant, his heirs," &c.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, that is no releaſe of this legacy; my objection is, he ſtates himſelf to be a legatee in the will of Mr. Sawtell, and then goes on to releaſe in general terms, but he does not ſpecially releaſe this legacy; now I humbly contend this legacy is no action, nor cauſe of action, it is a claim to which the executors muſt conſent, and it ought to be ſufficiently releaſed by name.

Mr. Pigott. My Lord, I ſay this releaſe, which is a releaſe of all debts and demands due from Daniel Slack to Robert Slack, upon the day of the execution thereof, would be no bar to a claim by a bill in equity, and there is not a doubt in law, but it is an equitable claim, upon which he may go into the Court of Chancery whenever he pleaſes, and to which this would be no bar; and I beg leave to put this queſtion, whether any man in buſineſs ever heard of a releaſe of a legacy, by filling up a common blank releaſe.

Mr. Shepherd. At the time that releaſe was executed, he certainly had no claim on his brother, for Daniel Slack does not appear at preſent to be the executor of that will, for there is no probate granted, the uſual way of doing buſineſs will certainly have ſome weight, nobody yet ever ſaw ſuch a releaſe without the legacy being releaſed ſpecifically, he releaſed ſomething which did not exiſt, it depends on executors having effects, it depends on the executor's aſſent; the only thing in the releaſe is ſimply, that he chooſes to call himſelf a legatee, he does not call his brother Daniel executor.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, as counſel in this caſe, in the ſituation in which I ſtand, I certainly might ſpare myſelf the trouble of arguing this point, becauſe it ſeems to me to be too clear to argue; but as there is ſuch a great phalanx on the other ſide, I ſhall throw in my mite upon this queſtion; and I beg leave to obſerve, how does this man releaſe his brother? not even in the character of executor; but if he did, it is a character that does not belong to him, he is not executor, there is a litigation in the Commons, in the reſult of which we ſay it will not prove that he is ſo: My Lord, ſuppoſe the executor may renounce, the execution will then be committed to the next of kin, he is not in a ſituation to accept of that releaſe; and your Lordſhip knows there muſt be ſomebody in eſſe, capable of accepting and aſſenting to the releaſe; now, my Lord, is Mr. Slack ſuch a perſon? is he the executor of that will of Mr. Sawtell's? there is no ſuch will known to any body, which the Commons have aſſented to as a true will, and there is no probate of any ſuch will: ſuppoſe the next of kin ſhould, upon the renunciation of this gentleman, Mr. Slack, have the probate, would this be a bar as againſt the next of kin, why he would ſay, though I will not bring an action againſt my brother, yet when it is committed to other perſons, I will bring an action; would this be a bar to that action? now obſerve what does he releaſe? he releaſes all debts and claims now actually due, all claims and rights of action now veſted in him, he releaſes nothing which he at preſent poſſeſſes, and this cannot be a bar to any future intereſt he may acquire.

Court. There is nothing in this objection, it is ſaid this would not be a good releaſe in equity, the perſon ſtates himſelf to be a legatee, the general words are ſufficient, all ſuits in equity, quarrels, &c. My Lord Coke ſays quarrels are the ſame as querula, the moſt comprehenſive word whatever.

SIMON ALLEN ſworn on the Voire Dire.

This is my hand-writing, I ſaw it executed, it is a releaſe in the Commons.

ROBERT SLACK ſworn in Chief.

I knew the deceaſed Sawtell ſeven years, I have lived in intimacy with him the laſt three years, my brother was in a degree of intimacy, I do not think there was hardly a day paſſed but what they ſaw each other, particularly as Mr. Sawtell not having much to do, he came there almoſt every day, he was rather infirm and could not go out without ſomebody to attend him, he uſed to go to a particular friend to ſee the news-papers, which I uſed to read to him, I ſaw him for the laſt three years, almoſt every day.

There did ſubſiſt a great intimacy between the gentleman at the bar, Nathaniel Goodridge, and him; when he went up the hill he uſed to call and ſee Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge, I dare ſay Mr. Sawtell knew Leonard Goodridge, and was acquainted with Evans.

Where did Sawtell live at the time of his death?—In Brook-ſtreet, he removed there in January, about twelve months before his death.

Do you know any thing of the manner in which he uſed to keep his treaſure or his papers?——That was in an iron cheſt in a cloſet, cloſe to his papers, a very large cheſt, it had only one lock, I fancy it was near a yard over, it was better than three quarters, I do not know what became of that cheſt.

Your brother did not take it?——No, Sir, that I verily believe he did not.

How many ſervants had Mr. Sawtell?—He had a man and a maid ſervant.

What were their names?—Edward Price and Elizabeth Spraggs; the maid is dead, they had lived with him all the time I knew him, which was ſeven years.

Do you know the confidence that Sawtell placed in Price?——Very great indeed, he lived with him to the day of his death; ſome time previous to his death he was infirm.

Was it a cuſtom that his ſervant uſed to ſit up with him on a night?——No, Sir, not till he was very ill; I ſat up with him for about a month, till within three nights of his death.

When did he die?——He died the 9th of February, 1783.

You was ſaying ſomething of three days preceding his death?——Yes.

Did you ſet up with him the night of his death?——No, Sir, Nathaniel Goodridge ridge did, three days before his death I might ſet up with him.

Now Mr. Slack having this iron cheſt, did you ever ſee him go to it?—Not himſelf, he could not open it.

Did it ever happen to you to perform this office for him?——Very often, two or three times a week, I looked into it the very day before his death.

Where did you get the key from then?—My brother opened it himſelf, he had the key by two powers of attorney to tranſact his buſineſs, I underſtood they were given the beginning of November.

When was it that you underſtood your brother was firſt in poſſeſſion of the key of this iron cheſt?——My brother had one key.

Mr. Erſkine. You are not to ſtate what your brother ſaid to you?——I am not ſaying what he ſaid to me, I ſay that for three years before Mr. Sawtell's death, Mr. Sawtell placed that confidence in him, that he let him have a key of the iron cheſt.

BENJAMIN HUTTON ſworn on the Voire Dire.

(Looks at two Powers of Attorney.)

Is that your hand?——Yes.

Did you ſee theſe two powers of attorney executed?——Yes.

(Read, being a Letter of Attorney to receive dividends, ſigned Thomas Sawtell to Daniel Slack, dated December 15, 1782. Witneſs, William Wilkinſon, Benjamin Hutton.

Mr. Silveſter. How long did you know Mr. Sawtell?——A little time before the year 1779, I cannot recollect the particular time.

Did you know Mr. Daniel Slack?——Yes.

Was there any intimacy between Mr. Sawtell and Mr. Slack?——Yes, very great.

Mr. Fielding to Robert Slack. Did you know the wife of Nathaniel Goodridge?—Yes, perfectly well.

What relation was ſhe to Sawtell?——I believe ſhe was his wife's niece.

Do you know of any money at any time, given to her by Mr. Sawtell?——At the time of the marriage he told me he gave her one hundred and fifty pounds, or ſomething thereabouts, he ſaid ſhe owed him at the time ſixteen years rent, he was very glad ſhe was going to be married, and forgave her the rent, for he was glad ſhe was going to be married, as he ſaid that he ſhould get rid of a plague.

When was it ſhe married?——I cannot recollect.

Do you know of any application made at any time after that, either by Nathaniel Goodridge or his wife to Mr. Sawtell for aſſiſtance, and what was Mr. Sawtell's behaviour on that occaſion?——I remember they made application for five pounds to put out the child apprentice, which I gave to Mrs. Goodridge, I know of no application of Nathaniel's only by hearſay.

Do you know any thing of a Mr. Underwood?——I have ſeen him three or four times, I knew him in the Fleet priſon, I did not know any thing of him prior to the death of Mr. Sawtell, I never heard Mr. Sawtell mention his name.

I believe you know ſomething of the making that firſt will which is ſaid to be loſt?——I knew Mr. Sawtell to make five, and I think I was at the execution of the laſt.

You remember the will before the 4th of November, the firſt of the three?——Yes, that was made, I think, the latter end of the year, 1780, in November, I was preſent and put it into the cheſt by the deſire of Mr. Sawtell.

Were you privy to the contents of that will?——I heard it read over.

Mr. Erſkine. Did you read it yourſelf?——No, it was read to the teſtator and executed.

Does your memory ſerve you to ſpeak of what Mr. Mumford read, purporting to be the will of Thomas Sawtell?——Daniel Slack was executor and reſiduary legatee.

Mr. Fielding. Was Mr. Sawtell at that time ſo infirm as not to be able to open the iron cheſt himſelf?——He could not.

Do you remember any thing of the ſecond will?——Yes, in the beginning of January, 1782, I think it was Mrs. Sawtell, that is his brother's widow, died, he had ſome money came to him, and he altered his will. That will was read over to Mr. Sawtell in my preſence, Daniel Slack was executor and reſiduary legatee.

Was there any notice taken of the Goodridges in that will?—No.

Was there any notice taken of the Goodridges in the will preceding that?—No.

Do you remember any legacy being left to Edward Price the ſervant?—Yes, five hundred pounds, in November, 1780, I think he had not ſo much.

Was there any mention about a will after this?——Yes.

When was that?——Why, I fancy the 1ſt of November.

Into what length did this converſation go?

Mr. Erſkine. I object to this converſation unleſs you can prove the execution of an intention.

Court. You may always ſhew the teſtator's kindneſs to particular perſons.——A few months before the 4th of November, before the execution of that will, Mr. Sawtell aſſigned over ſome houſes with a ſtrange attorney.

Mr. Pigott. Was you preſent at this, Sir?——I will tell you preſently.

No, you muſt tell me firſt?——I was preſent at the aſſignment of a policy at the Inſurance office.

For what, and to whom?——It was an aſſignment in the Fire Office.

Court. Did the teſtator declare his reaſon?——He did.

You muſt not ſay what you imagine to be his reaſon however well founded that may be, but what the teſtator declared to be his reaſon?——He aſſigned over theſe houſes becauſe one man never paid his rent and the other Nathaniel Goodridge lived in, the leaſes were almoſt expired, the teſtator declared the reaſon of his altering his will was, that he was affraid he had ſigned ſome paper that probably might be a will, ſays he, Nathaniel Goodridge might as well have taken my word, for I may have ſigned ſomething that might have been a will; ſays he, what does he bring ſo many papers to me to ſign for, probably I may have ſigned ſomething I ſhould not, I will alter my will, ſays he, if it be only to alter the date; I ſaw him ſign the aſſignment of the policy.

Did he write his name to the inſtrument?——Yes, he did.

At what time was this?——That was about two months or ſix weeks before the 4th of November, I cannot ſpeak to the time, it might be later or ſooner, he made the declaration about the 1ſt of November, and he deſired me to bring Mr. Mumford, and bring the will out of the iron cheſt, Mr. Mumford read the will over to him, and he ſaid, it might be juſt as it was, and to bring it to him in a day or two.

Did you ever know that Mr. Sawtell made a mark inſtead of ſigning his name?—Never, Sir, he always ſaid, Bob, where muſt I write it? and then he put his name directly, I never knew him a put mark.

The continuation of this Trial in the next Part which will be publiſhed in few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of Nathaniel Goodridge, Leonard Goodridge, and John Evans.

How ſoon was it that you had ſeen him write before his death?——I never ſaw him write after the 4th of November, I cannot be poſitive.

(The two powers of attorney handed to the Jury.)

When did Mr. Sawtell chuſe to do his buſineſs?——He was very impatient to do his buſineſs, if it was very particular, by ten o'clock in the morning.

I believe either from infirmity or habit, he was incapable of doing buſineſs after dinner?—He never choſe it, he was not incapable, but he liked to have his pint of porter after dinner.

The intimacy ſubſiſted between your brother and him to his death?——I ſaw him on Saturday night preceding his death about eight, I had no converſation with him about that, the laſt converſation I had with him, was very little for a week or ſo before his death, only ſhaking hands with him, and ſitting with him a little.

Do you believe from the ſtate of Mr. Sawtell's body, that he himſelf could have got into this iron cheſt, without the aſſiſtance of yourſelf or ſome other perſon?——For three months before his death, he was not able to lift the lid of the iron cheſt up, nor for twelve months before his death; on the 15th of December I went to his houſe, and enquired for him, he was not at home, I went there becauſe I had no idea he was capable of going out, on the 13th of December I did not ſee him.

Do you know how the will on the 4th of November was incloſed?—It was wrapped up, and ſealed with his ſeal, a candle in a candleſtick, and a circle, in which ſpermaceti was wrote.

Deſcribe the cover?—I think it was put up corner ways, I put it into the iron cheſt myſelf.

Mr. Pigott. Mr. Slack, did I underſtand you to ſay that the day before this poor man's death, your brother took the will out of his iron cheſt?—The day before the death of Mr. Sawtell, I ſaw it in the iron cheſt, at leaſt I thought it was there, I ſaw the cover, and had it in my hand.

Did you go to the cheſt with your brother?——My brother was at the cheſt then, I went to it and took up the paper.

Did you take that paper?——I underſtood ſo.

The day before you was at the cheſt, and ſaw that paper?——Yes.

You underſtood afterwards your brother took it out?—I did.

Who did you underſtand it from?——I never ſaw my brother till the next morning, then my brother told me that he had taken out the covers, and there was only two blank ſheets of paper.

Now, that cover which you ſuppoſed to contain the laſt will of the teſtator, your brother told you he had taken out of the cheſt, did not your brother tell you diſtinctly, that he took out that cover the day before the man died?——I think he did, I do not know whether he took it out the day before or that ſame morning.

Your brother went with you to the cheſt the day before his death?—Yes.

For what purpoſe did he go?——He had a power of attorney to do buſineſs, I did not aſk him.

You do not know what he went for?—I do not think he went for the purpoſe of taking out the will at that time, he did not tell me, I was with him, there is a little cloſet cloſe by the parlour.

What were you both doing there?——I cannot recollect what he was doing.

What did you go to the cheſt for?——Accidentally, talking to him I went to the cheſt, and I ſaw it lay, and I took it up, and laid it down again.

Were not you preſent at Daniel Slack's examination before the Magiſtrates?—No, I was not, I was at Mancheſter, I never ſaw his examination, I never was preſent at any examination of his concerning that paper.

You have told us that for two or three months before the death of Sawtell, he was not able to lift the lid of that cheſt up?—No, Sir.

It was very large?——Yes.

It required ſome ſtrength to lift it, did not it?——Yes.

Had not Sawtell the key?——Yes.

Was there no method by which he could get at any thing in that cheſt?—I do not know, except it could come through the key-hole.

Why it is very eaſy for me to give the key to another perſon, then it does not jump through the key-hole you know; I may perhaps get at ſomething that is in the cheſt, without its getting through the key-hole to me?——Certainly, Sir.

You have been examined in the Commons, and there you have given an account of the converſation that paſſed before Sawtell, relative to the ſuppoſed will of the 14th of November, you have ſtated that the teſtator declared to you, that he had ſigned papers, and that he might have ſigned a will, and that therefore he would make another will?—Yes.

Now, I have had the curioſity to turn to your examination, and I will read it to you that I may not miſquote it, that the deponent (whom I take to be Robert Slack) thereupon remarking, that perhaps among the reſt, they might have brought Mr. Sawtell a will to ſign?—Very well, Sir.

Do I read right or not?——I do not know what my depoſition was entirely.

Do you fancy it is to be got rid of in that way; when I am ſtating this, that to day you have ſaid here upon your oath, that the teſtator in declaring his reaſons for making a will, told you, that he might have ſigned a will brought him by Nathaniel Goodridge?——We talked all about this paper, and we might both mention it, I cannot ſay whether I ſuggeſted it firſt, he was dubious and I was fearful.

All I want to fix is this, that ſo far from this man having declared that as a reaſon to you, you yourſelf was the firſt perſon that ſuggeſted it?——It certainly was the reaſon.

Now, then having ſworn in theſe two different ways, whether the ſuggeſtion of his having made a will did not proceed from you, and not from the teſtator Sawtell?—I do not know, we were talking of it a long while at the King's Arms, in Holborn.

I ſay upon your oath, Sir, who began the converſation firſt?——He ſaid probably he might have brought a will.

But I want to know who firſt ſuggeſted that circumſtance?——Then I ſay, I poſſibly might; we had a converſation of an hour and half, and who ſuggeſted it at firſt, I cannot ſay, but I know that was the reaſon.

You ſee, Sir, it is thus, that the deponent (Robert Slack) thereupon remarking; now, I aſk you as an honeſt man in the face of this audience, whether you did not firſt ſuggeſt to Mr. Sawtell, that they might have brought him a will; now, anſwer that as you pleaſe?——The converſation began about the Goodridges bringing ſo many papers, but whether it might or not, I cannot ſay.

Court. Do you believe that you did?—Probably I might.

Do you rather believe you did?——I might.

You ſaid ſomething about a ſtrange attorney who was with Sawtell, when he executed thoſe deeds you have mentioned; be ſo good as to tell me who that ſtrange attorney was?——I do not know; the attorney at the execution of the aſſignment of the policy, I believe was Mr. Gregory.

You was a witneſs to it?——I think I was.

Look at that paper, you are a witneſs to it?——Yes.

Did you take that to be a will?——No, Sir.

You ſaw Mr. Sawtell execute this?—Yes.

Was it executed when it bore date?—I think it was.

Was it read over to him by Mr. Gregory?—I think it it was.

Did not you know perfectly well, that Mr. Gregory was the attorney for the Goodridge's?—I never knew Mr. Gregory, nor never ſaw him till then, I never heard his name mentioned.

Who recommended Mr. Mumford?——I did, after Mr. Falkner's death.

You ſay Mrs. Goodridge was a niece to the wife of Mr. Sawtell?—She was.

You ſay Mr. Sawtell ſaid he was very glad to get rid of a plague?—Yes.

That year, in Auguſt 1782, he was giving them houſes?——I underſtood he was not giving them at all, he was to receive the rents before the leaſes were out, that is what he underſtood I am ſure.

Did you ever happen to hear that Mrs. Goodridge was the natural daughter of Mr. Sawtell?——I never heard that.

Never by accident?——No.

Perhaps it is an invention of mine juſt now occurred?—I never heard it.

You and your brother kept a pretty conſtant watch on Sawtell?——We were pretty conſtantly with him, if I was not with him he was very angry with me, probably once a week I might ſpend an evening with him.

Becauſe in your original examination, you ſaid, you and your brother were conſtantly with him?——I generally called upon him every day.

Now, as far as you could make it conſiſtent to your reſpective conveniences, you did look ſharp after this man?—My brother was there generally every day.

May be your brother is a pretty near relation to Mr. Sawtell?—Not that I heard of.

May be you are a relation to him?——I never underſtood that either my brother or me were relations to him.

Mr. Fielding. The cover that you took out of the box with your brother the day before his death, was that the cover you put into the cheſt on the 4th of November?——It was.

Had it a ſufficient mark about it, according to the beſt of your opinion, ſo as to enable you to ſay it was the ſame?—It certainly was.

Now, as to the converſation that took place between you and Mr. Sawtell, does your memory ſerve you ſufficiently to ſay, whether you was the man that firſt ſuggeſted that a will might come among the papers, or he to you?—Upon my word, the converſation laſted ſo long, I cannot ſay.

Who was it that was there upon that occaſion?—I do not know.

Was he the attorney employed by Sawtell?—No, Sir, I heard that he did Mr. Goodridge's buſineſs.

What did Sawtell ſay about the houſes?—He ſaid they were aſſigned over to Nathaniel Goodridge, for the purpoſe of his having them after Sawtell's leaſe was out, there was but a few years to come, the quarter day after Sawtell went on purpoſe to recommend Mr. Goodridge to have them.

What was the value of this aſſignment?——I do not know, I have heard it was upwards of forty pounds a year, it was not communicated to me till I ſaw Mr. Gregory that morning; Mr. Sawtell, ſaid, he was vexed I had not been there the time before, when he ſigned the other.

JOHN SHAW ſworn in Chief.

I belong to the Prerogative-office, in Doctors Commons, I produce the will which the priſoner brought, I do not know who produced it there, I bring it from the regiſter.

SAMUEL FENTON ſworn.

I am an aſſiſtant to Mr. Jenner, who is the Proctor concerned for the perſons named in this will.

Look at that?—This purports to be the will which was brought into Mr. Jenner's office, on the 10th of February, by Nathaniel Goodridge and William Hunter, the executors, who were attended by Mr. Gregory their attorney, they came into Mr. Jenner's office to prove this will.

Is that the ſame will?——Yes, I know it by the Jurata.

Were they all preſent?—Yes, Nathaniel Goodridge, one of the priſoners attended as executor, whether his hand delivered it, I cannot ſay.

Were they ſworn, Sir?——I ſee I have wrote the Jurata, and it appears by the ſignature of the Surrogate, but I do not remember whether I attended them.

Did you read it to them?——No.

Did you ſee him ſign it?—I do not recollect that.

You know the Surrogate's hand writing?—Yes.

Is that it?—Yes.

Mr. Silveſter. Now, I produce that paper.

Mr. Erſkine. What is it?—The will produced by Nathaniel Goodridge.

Mr. Erſkine. I apprehend it is premature upon an indictment for forgery to read the very inſtrument, upon which the indictment proceeds, unleſs they can eſtabliſh ſome fact or other, which fixes the priſoner with it.

Court. Laſt night we did it, we called a man who received a bill from the priſoner, then you may call a man to ſay it is not his hand writing.

Mr. Erſkine. This is the very will that is charged as the forgery on this indictment I apprehend that before you can read this will, you muſt ſhew by ſome ſort of evidence fit to go to the Jury, that they are the forgers of the will.

Court. No, their producing the will, lays the burthen upon them to ſhew it is not a forgery; ſuppoſe it does not bear the reſemblance of the teſtator's hand writing, how can it be ſeen unleſs it is read.

Mr. Erſkine. I ſubmit, my Lord, that you are not to taint the minds of the Jury with hearing the inſtrument read, unleſs you ſhew that the thing is in fact forged, no matter by whom; my objection is, you ſhould not read this till you have given proper cauſe to the Jury and the Court, to believe this is a forged inſtrument.

Court. How does the reading it convey a prejudice that it is forged, it conveys a contrary idea; they admit upon the face of it, it is a good will, then they avoid it by ſaying, though it does appear to you upon the face of it, yet we take take upon ourſelves to prove it is a bad will.

Mr. Erſkine. Suppoſe an action was brought on any inſtrument, the authority of it muſt be proved before it is read, the jit of this indictment is the point of authority.

Court. Here is an inſtrument coming from the hands of one of the priſoners, it is read to ſhew, not that it is not the will, but I ſhall take it as it appears to be, till it is ſhewn to the contrary.

Mr. Erſkine. Then we have no objection.

(The will read as in the indictment, and examined by the record.)

EDWARD PRICE ſworn.

Sir T. Davenport Was you ſervant to Mr. Sawtell?——Yes.

How long?——About thirteen or fourteen years.

Did you live with him at the time of his death?——Yes.

Do you remember when that happened, on what day?——The 9th of February, 1783.

Was you in the houſe with him to his death?—Yes.

What other ſervants had he?—A maid ſervant, Elizabeth Spraggs, ſhe is dead; I know the priſoners James Evans and Nathaniel Goodridge.

Did you ſee them at any time at your maſter's houſe, both or either of them, in the December before he died?—Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge uſed to be there often.

Did he ſet up at nights with the priſoner after you and your fellow ſervant went to bed?——Yes, Sir, many nights.

Do you happen to remember the firſt?—the 14th of December, 1782.

Was your late maſter at home or did he go out on the 15th of December?——The next day he went to Newgate-ſtreet and dined there.

Did you go with him?—Yes.

At that time was he able to write?——That I cannot tell.

But by his ſtate of health I mean?——I ſuppoſe he could, he could handle a knife and fork.

On this 14th of December, do you happen to remember what time he went to bed?——I put him to bed, but I cannot tell the time.

I do not aſk you as to a quarter of an hour or half an hour?——He generally uſed to go to bed, at that time, about nine, ſometimes ſooner, ſometimes later.

Did you that night ſee anybody or hear anybody in the houſe?——No, nobody but what I left, I left Mr. Goodridge to ſet up with him.

You remember an iron cheſt that your maſter had?——Yes.

Do you remember what keys there were to it?—The key of the iron cheſt was by itſelf.

Was there more than one key do you know?——There were two, Mr. Slack of Newgate-ſtreet had the one, and the other was in my maſter's pocket.

Do you happen to remember where that key that was at home was on the 14th of December?——Yes.

Where was it then?—On the 14th of December, before anybody came into the houſe, I took care of all the keys out of my maſter's pocket, and put them in my own pockets, and I put my breeches under my head all that night; the next morning Mr. Slack came, and I deſired him to take care that every thing was clear, for I had done with every thing, I told him Mr. Goodridge had ſet up the night before and then I had nothing to do but to take care of my maſter.

Then during his illneſs and at any time before his death, do you remember his ſaying any thing to you if he was taken ill, worſe than ordinary, what you was to do?—Yes.

What was that?——When anything rendered him ill, or incapable of his own buſineſs, I was to go to Mr. Slack, of Newgate-ſtreet, for he was the man that took care of his property.

Now in what ſtage of his illneſs had you received theſe inſtructions from him?——I had theſe inſtructions for eight or nine years, ever ſince Mr. Slack was executor always; I do not recollect that he gave me any orders to fetch Mr. Slack in any part of his illneſs.

Do you remember any particular day or night that he ſo ſent or ordered you?—I do not recollect.

Do you remember any thing that he ſaid about Mr. Slack or about yourſelf?—He always told me Mr. Slack was to pay me my legacy.

Now, do you remember any time before his death that he ſaid any thing particular to you?——Yes, I remember three days before he died, I went to him, and he opened his eyes and looked at me, and aſked me how I did, and I made him anſwer very well, I hoped he was the ſame, or I wiſhed he was better, or ſomething of that kind, and he deſired me to pray for him for he was not for this world, and he hoped Mr. Slack would pay me what he had left me; that was all he ſaid, it was the laſt ſenſible word he ſpoke to me, that was on Thurſday, the 6th of February, he died on the Sunday after that.

Now, during the time that you lived there, do you remember who had acceſs to his money and all the valuables that were in this iron cheſt beſides himſelf?——Nobody beſides himſelf, but Mr. Slack, or ſomebody by his directions.

Could he himſelf open that iron cheſt within a month or two of his death?—I do not think he could open it ſince the iron cheſt was in his poſſeſſion.

How long had he had it?—The brother died in 1777, then directly after that the iron cheſt came into his houſe.

Now, when he did go to it he took people always to aſſiſt him?—When he went to the iron cheſt he always called one of the men to help him, I have helped him many times.

Has Robert Slack ever?—Robert Slack has many times, he had the management of his buſineſs the laſt year.

Do you remember whether Daniel Slack uſed to go to the iron cheſt?——Very frequently.

Do you remember Nathaniel Goodridge ever going with him to the iron cheſt, or having any thing to do with a key of it by his order or direction?—Yes.

When?—Once or twice.

Then he knew there was an iron cheſt?—Yes.

You have mentioned that he had told you within three days, of his death that Mr. Slack was to pay you your legacy; did he at any time during his illneſs, or at any other time, tell you that Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge was to pay you the legacy?

Mr. Erſkine. That is a ſtrange way of examining your own witneſs, you ſhould aſk him what he ſaid, not put words in his mouth.

Did you ever ſee Underwood at your maſter's?—Never, the firſt time I ſaw him was at Bow-ſtreet, about a twelve-month after his death, it was at the examination.

Do you know Leonard Goodridge?—I have ſeen him ſince my maſter's death, he never was at my maſter's houſe that I know of.

Did you ever ſee Evans there?——Yes, many times.

Have you ever ſeen your maſter write?—Yes, many times.

Did you ever ſee him in his life make a mark inſtead of writing his name?—No, never in my life.

FISHER DODSON ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Silveſter.

I am a carpenter, I know the priſoners, the two Goodridge's are undertakers.

What is Evans?—He was a publican.

Was you employed by either of the two undertakers, and when?—Yes, I was employed by Nathaniel Goodridge.

In what capacity?—As a carpenter.

When was you ſo employed?——In the year 1782.

Do you know a man of the name of Underwood?—Yes.

What is he?—I always took him to be a lawyer or ſomething in that way.

Did you at any time ſee him together with either of the Goodridges?——Yes, Sir, I have.

When?—I ſaw Mr. Underwood with Nathaniel Goodridge about a fortnight before the death of Mr. Sawtell.

Where did you ſee him?——At Mr. Goodridge's ſhop in Fleet-ſtreet.

What did you ſee this man employed about in the preſence of the Goodridge's?—He was employed in writing.

Who was there beſides Nathaniel?——Only Nathaniel and Mr. Underwood, he was there, I think, about three hours.

Had you any opportunity of ſeeing what he was writing?—Not that evening.

When did you leave work that day?——about nine.

When did you return?—I did not return to the ſhop any more that night, I came the next morning to my work.

About what hour?—At the uſual time, about ſix o'clock.

Did you go into the compting-houſe?—Yes.

What did you obſerve?——I obſerved a writing, which I thought Mr. Underwood had been writing the night before.

Where was that writing?—In the writing deſk.

Had you the curioſity to read it?—Yes.

What was it?—Why it ſeemed to me to reſpect a will of Mr. Sawtell's.

What do you mean by ſeeming to reſpect a will of Mr. Sawtell's?—There was the name of Sawtell there.

Did you make any other obſervations?—Yes, Sir, I read ſome legacies that were in the will.

Can you recollect any of them?—Yes, there was to Mrs. Goodridge a gold watch, chain, and ſeals, and after her death to her ſon George Haynes.

Do you recollect any other?——Yes, there was three hundred pounds left to Henry Haynes, and three hundred pounds to George Haynes.

Was it complete?——There were ſome more legacies which I cannot remember.

What other obſervations did you make?—No more than that, I do not remember any more.

Was it a complete will, or only part of a will?——No, Sir, I think it was not a whole will, I think it was three parts of the will, down ſuch a ſheet as that.

Was it wrote on the other ſide?—No, Sir, I think there was none on the other ſide, but to the beſt of my remembrance, it was three parts of the way down, I think it was about a fortnight before Mr. Sawtell's death, I am not certain to a day or two.

Which way was it written?——Down ways of the paper.

Was there one or two ſheets at that time?——I think, to the beſt of my knowledge, there was but one.

Now, how ſoon after you had ſeen this paper and made theſe obſervations upon it did you ſee Underwood again?—The next day in the evening.

Where did you ſee him?—In the ſame place, he was there when I left work, and he might have been there for an hour or two before I left work.

Was either of the Goodridges there at that time?——No, Sir, neither of them at that time when I left my work.

Did any thing particular happen before the death of Mr. Sawtell?—Nothing that I can remember.

When you heard of the death of Sawtell, what paſſed then?—On the morning that Mr. Sawtell died, I was in bed, and I was called up and ſent to Mr. Gregory's, at Wax-Chandler's-Hall, with a parcel ſealed up.

Who ſent you?—Nathaniel Goodridge, after I came home I was ſent over, by Mrs. Goodridge to Mr. Underwood's houſe with a note to acquaint Mr. Underwood of Mr. Sawtell's death, that was the ſame morning I had been to Mr. Gregory's.

Do you know Mr. Goodridge's hand-writing?—I would not wiſh to ſwear to it.

Have you ſeen his hand-writing?—Yes.

Did you ever ſee him write?—Yes.

Look at this.—I think this to be the hand-writing of Nathaniel Goodridge.

What do you think of the firſt?—This here I think to be Mr. Goodridge's hand-writing.

Do you believe it to be Mr. Goodridge's hand-writing or not?—Yes.

Have you ſeen him write often?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow, Mr. Dodſon, you told my friend juſt now you would not wiſh to to ſwear his hand-writing?—I would not wiſh to do a wrong thing.

Then you take that to be a wrong thing to ſwear to his hand-writing?—No, Sir, I ſaid I would not venture to ſwear to his hand-writing.

Having ſaid you was ſo well acquainted with it that you would not wiſh to ſwear it?—I think I could.

Do you mean to ſwear you believe it to be his writing?—I believe it to be his hand-writing.

How long is it ſince you left the ſervice of Mr. Goodridge?—I believe it is upwards of a year and a half.

You have been examined in the Commons?—Yes.

Was you examined before Mr. Underwood was examined in Bow-ſtreet?—No, Sir.

No, I thought not; you was examined for the firſt time in Auguſt, 1785?——It is a twelve month ago ſince I was firſt fetched up.

Was this an open deſk that was in the compting-houſe?—It was a deſk with a ſingle flap, there was a lock and key, it was not locked.

So this writing was left open in the deſk for all the people to read?—There was nobody had any buſineſs in the compting-houſe except me and Mr. Goodridge.

What more buſineſs had you there than Mr. Hill?—He had no buſineſs to ſet down the things.

You was in the conſtant habit of going to this deſk?—Yes.

And ſo Mr. Goodridge knew that this was your duty; ſo this paper you have been examined to was left quite open in this deſk, where you went to ſet down things?—Yes.

Upon the death of Sawtell you heard there was a will in favour of the Goodridges?—No, Sir, I never heard any thing of the kind.

Why, do you mean to ſwear, my man, that you had not heard that?—I have heard as thus, that they took Mr. Sawtell to be a relation to Mrs. Goodridge, and Mrs. Goodridge always called him her uncle.

After Sawtell's death did you not hear there was a will made in their favour?—Yes.

You did not tell anybody that you had ſeen this will of Mr. Sawtell?—Not till after Elizabeth Nicklin went away from Mr. Goodridge's, when ſhe went away Mrs. Goodridge had her box ſearched, and ſhe told me of it, and I ſaid to Nicklin if I had thought that Mr. Goodridge would have ſerved you ſo ill, I would have divulged the ſecret, as I took it to be a ſecret.

Did not you add this little ſentence to it, if ever I have an opportunity of doing for him I will not loſe that opportunity?——That I never ſaid to any body.

Do you know a man of the name of Haſwell?—Very well.

Will you ſwear you never ſaid that to him?—Yes, I will.

Hill was your brother journeyman?—We were about a job that night that was to go to James Evans's, it was a partition to part off a watchmaker's ſhop, to make two places to work inſtead of one.

Do you recollect ſome buſineſs you was doing for Mrs. Cloſe?——That was done afterwards.

Was it a week or a fortnight?——It might be more or leſs.

Was it within the compaſs of a month?—I think it was done within the compaſs of a month, I think it was before Mr. Sawtell's death.

About how long after Underwood came to Goodridge's ſhop?—I think it was juſt about that time.

It was putting up ſome ſtairs in Gutter-lane?—Yes.

Was Underwood writing all the time?—I do not know, I was not in the ſhop all the time; he was writing every time I went into the compting-houſe.

Who was Miſs Nicklin?—A fellow ſervant of mine at Mr. Goodridge's.

She was diſcharged, and her box ſearched?——She was not diſcharged, ſhe diſcharged herſelf.

I believe Mr. Goodridge was uncivil enough to ſearch her box?—Yes, ſhe came down to me and told me that, I was at Walton upon Thames, at my father's, I told her, that if ſo be I had known Mr. Goodridge would have uſed her ſo ill as he did, I would have divulged the ſecret.

Now, what ſecret was it?——When I ſaw this will of Mr. Sawtell's I thought it was an improper place to make a will in.

How long was this after the will had been made as you ſay that ſhe came to you?——A week.

I take it for granted you turned yourſelf off Mr. Dodſon, did not you?——I might have worked longer if I choſe, for he offered to raiſe my wages.

Why, after you told Miſs Nicklin this ſecret, you kept it ſtill a ſecret?——Yes, I never opened my mouth to Hill about it.

To nobody but Nicklin, did Nicklin tell any body about it?—No, that ſhe did not, I am very clear.

How did the gentlemen find out what you know, do you know that?——Why. Mr. Underwood, Sir, ſent for me, at leaſt he got people to ſend for me, when he was taken.

Did you ever tell Underwood that you had looked in the deſk?—No Sir, Underwood or ſomebody told Goodridge when he turned me away, that he had done the worſt thing in the world.

How came Underwood to ſay that?——I do not know.

Did Hill and you drink together that evening?——Yes.

Mr. Silveſter. You went into the room ſeveral times, while Underwood was buſy a writing?——Yes.

Another paper read, ſigned Nathaniel Goodridge, addreſſed to Mrs. Underwood.

" I received ſome few lines from a friend of yours, and I wiſh I had it in my power to help you in your diſtreſs, but you have called on me ſo often, that I have diſtreſſed myſelf, and I am aſtoniſhed at you to ſend to me now, and becauſe I have not trouble enough of my own, I muſt be teazed with Mr. Underwood's affairs; and as to promiſes, you, I believe, and Mr. V. thinks but very little about, when you have got your turn ſerved; for remember laſt time, that when your turn was ſerved, it was all well, but as to the promiſes, was all forgot.

(Examined by Mr. Fielding.)

I knew the deceaſed Mr. Sawtell, ten or eleven years before his death and up to his death.

Did you know of any intimacies ſubſiſting between him and Mr. Slack?——Yes.

Of what nature were they?——Every day Mr. Sawtell went to Mr. Slack's houſe, almoſt.

Do you know either of the priſoners?—Yes.

Which of them?—Two of them.

Did Evans ever make any application, and when, relative to the will of Mr. Sawtell?—Mr. Evans in January, 1783, came to my houſe in the afternoon, and aſked me if I was engaged for the evening, I told him no, he then aſked me if I would come to his houſe that night, about eleven, or between eleven and twelve; there would be an attorney at his houſe, with ſome few friends, that would go with me from thence to Mr. Sawtell's houſe in Brook-ſtreet, to be witneſs to his will.

This you ſay was in January?——In January.

Do you know what part of January?—About the 23d, I aſked him in whoſe favor the will was made, he ſaid in Mr. Goodridge's.

Which of the Goodridges?——He did not mention any chriſtian name.

Did you know the Goodridges before?——I knew Nathaniel; then I aſked him if it would come to the ears of Mr. Slack, in Newgate-ſtreet, if I was to be a witneſs to the will; and he ſaid, he believed in courſe of time it would, and I was to have a ſuit of cloaths or a ring, if I would go, and be witneſs to the will; when I found it was not in favor of Mr. Slack, I told him I hoped he would excuſe me, he left me in the afternoon, about three, four, or five, I cannot particularly ſpeak to the hour, but it was after dinner.

Did you ſee Evans at any time afterwards, and reſume the converſation?——I met him a few days afterwards, and aſked him if he had got a witneſs, and he ſaid, yes, the buſineſs was done, nothing elſe paſſed.

Mr. Erſkine. You are a friend of Mr. Slack's?——Yes.

I believe Mr. Evans knew perfectly well, you were a friend of Mr. Slack's?——No doubt of it.

Mr. Evans did not wiſh that Mr. Slack ſhould know any thing about this will making, as he ſaid it muſt come to his ears in time; did you gather from that, that this was to be ſecret buſineſs, and that Evans did not wiſh Mr. Slack ſhould know it?—I took it to be ſo.

And therefore he came to you, who was a friend of Slack's, about a thing that Slack was not to know; is not that a very odd thing, that a man, out of five or ſix hundred thouſand people, ſhould fix upon you, who he might be ſure would go and tell him?——Evans deſired me to keep it a ſecret; I was as much a friend to Evans as to Slack.

So your evidence appears to day; had Mr. Evans no friends, think you, that were not friends to Slack?——I do not know.

I aſk you this plain queſtion, if you wanted to do a thing you meant to keep a ſecret from me, would you go and pitch upon a particular friend of mine, above all others, to tell it to in preference to any ſtrangers; would you now?—I do not know whether I ſhould or not.

Look at the Jury, and tell me whether, as a man of ſenſe, and a man who has not loſt his reaſon, would you, if you wanted to injure me in any ſuch a way, that I ſhould not be able to correct it, would you pitch upon a particular friend of mine, upon one of theſe gentlemen here; would you be guilty of ſuch an abſurdity?——No, not at all, there is no abſurdity in it.

Would you do ſo, would you conduct yourſelf in that way?—I cannot tell you any more.

But I will make you; would you do ſo, as a man that is not in bedlam; is Mr. Evans a fool; was Mr. Evans in his right ſenſes; is he a prudent, diſcreet man?——I ſuppoſe ſo.

Why ſhould you think he is a greater fool than you?—I do not know; I am very happy I acted in the manner I did in the buſineſs.

When might it firſt occur to you, that this was a material circumſtance; did not you go to Mr. Slack directly, and ſay to him, I would have you be on your guard, things are not going on well here, I have refuſed a ſuit of cloaths and a ring; did you tell Slack that?—No, Sir.

Then you are not ſo good a friend to him as you deſcribed: when might it firſt occur to you, to tell any body that you was intereſted about it?—It was ſome months before Mr. Slack knew that I knew any thing about it.

When you was ſworn in the commons, you ſaid, you lived with him on the moſt friendly and intimate footing imaginable?——What kept this in my breaſt, was the intimacy with the priſoner; he is a relation of my wife's.

How long was it before you met him in the ſtreet afterwards?——I cannot ſpeak to the time in this buſineſs.

Mr. Fielding. Had you any greater degree of friendſhip or intimacy with Mr. Slack than you had with Evans?—No.

The 23d of January was but a ſhort time before Mr. Sawtell's death?—No.

Do you know in what condition Mr. Sawtell happened to be in at the time of this application?——I cannot ſay, I never was at the houſe, any more than what I have heard, Mr. Robert Slack came to me eight or ten months after.

CHARLES EAMES ſworn.

Examined by Sir T. Davenport.

I live at Saffron-hill; I am a tallow-chandler, I ſucceeded Mr. Sawtell, I know Nathaniel Goodridge, I remember Nathaniel's applying to me about Sawtell's will:

on the 26th of January 1783, Nathaniel Goodridge came to my houſe, about ten in the morning, he had a ſhilling's worth of candles; I aſked him how Mr. Sawtell did, and he ſaid he had been ſitting up that night with him, and he was much as uſual; that he had been making all over to him that night by promiſes, that he was diſpoſed to alter his will in his favour, and deſired him to get his attorney for that purpoſe; but it muſt be done privately, as Mr. Slack and Atkinſon were frequently backwards and forwards; he ſaid he did not know any body that had a greater influence with Ned and Betty than I had, they were the ſervants of Mr. Sawtell, and begged I would go for that purpoſe, and ſpeak to them, if they could be entruſted with it, there was opportunity enough, I informed him that I was going to Greenwich that day, and ſhould not ſee them, he preſſed me once or twice, I told him I ſhould be ſorry if I ſhould be the inſtrument of depriving Ned and Betty of what I knew Mr. Sawtell had deſigned for them, as Mr. Sawtell had frequently informed me that he had left them ſomething handſome, he ſaid whatever their legacy was, it ſhould be doubled, and I ſhould have ſomething handſome, I ſaid d—n their money I will have nothing to do with it: whether I aſked him to drink, or whether he aſked me to drink, I cannot ſay, but upon that we went to the houſe of James Evans, and then had a pint of purl in the bar, and nearly the ſame converſation was repeated in the preſence of me, Goodridge, and Evans, and on Goodridge ſaying, that Sawtell was diſpoſed to to alter his will, Evans ſaid, get it done, get it done.

Upon that occaſion did any thing more paſs, or did you part?—I made anſwer that if Mr. Sawtell was in his ſenſes, and diſpoſed to alter his will, he might do it without the aſſiſtance of Ned, Betty, or me; I left them and went to Greenwich; on the Tueſday following, Mrs. Goodridge, Nathaniel's wife, met about fifty doors from my own houſe.

Court. That is no evidence, the priſoner was not there?—No.

Did you know Underwood at that time?—No, I never ſaw him till I ſaw him at Hicks's Hall, a year ago.

Did you ever know Mr. Sawtell in any part of his life time, make a mark inſtead of writing his name?—Never in my life.

Mr. Pigott. Mr. Eames, I take this to be the third time that you have given an account upon oath of theſe tranſactions?—It is.

You were firſt examined in the Commons on the 26th of April 1784?—I was.

You were examined on the behalf of the Slack's?——Certainly.

You were examined for the ſecond time on the 9th of Auguſt 1785, ſixteen months afterwards, is that true?—I believe it is, I cannot recollect the dates.

Do you happen to know that Mr. Underwood gave his information, and was committed upon it?—Yes.

Was Underwood in cuſtody when you was firſt examined in April 1784?—No.

Was not you preſent at Underwood's examination?——No.

You heard when he was committed?—Yes.

Was it after you were firſt examined?—Yes.

Was you or was you not in Bow-ſtreet, when Underwood was examined?——No.

Now Mr. Eames, this converſation which you have proved to day, namely between Mr. Goodridge and you, did you on the firſt examination in the Commons, ſay one word about that converſation?—I did not.

Is there one word of what you have ſworn to day in your firſt examination?—No.

Not one word?——No.

Were you ſworn, Mr. Eames, to ſwear the whole truth?—Yes.

Court. Are not they examined to interrogatories there?

Sir Thomas. That is the whole.

Mr. Pigott. The ſecond time you was examined was after Underwood was in cuſtody?——I believe it was.

When did you for the firſt time diſcloſe all this you have been telling to day?—I diſcloſed it at Doctors Commons, and to other people the day it was ſpoken.

Who ſubpœned you to come into the Commons?—Mr. Slack.

Did nobody aſk you what you could prove?—I never was aſked, to my knowledge, one word by the parties concerned.

Now, obſerve, you ſtand here in a public Court of Juſtice, before a great number of your fellow ſubjects; how do you reconcile to the character and conduct of an honeſt man, to have known that tranſaction, and not diſcovered it?——It was a matter that hung much upon my ſpirits, and as ſuch I could not form a reſolution to declare it; the examiner at Doctors Commons did not aſk me a word about it, it was a matter that I thought would lead to a criminal buſineſs, and I was afraid to utter it at firſt, but when there was a criminal buſineſs about it, I knew it muſt come forward, and I diſcovered it to Mr. Boucher, of Spital-fields.

Why muſt it come forward if you did not diſcloſe it?—I had diſcloſed it to Mr. Boucher; give me leave to inform you, that is with reluctance that I now ſtand here, and if I had not been ſubpœned, I ſhould not have ſtood here.

Between the two examinations, did you tell any perſon, no matter whom, that you had diſcloſed all you knew, upon your oath?—No, I never did.

Pray, do you know any man of the name of Lawrence Green?——Yes, I do.

Now, you never happened to tell him what I ſay?——He muſt know that I told him all that I knew after the death of Mr. Sawtell, within a few days after the death of Mr. Sawtell, I did tell Mr. Green the very thing.

Did you never ſay to Mr. Green, I have been examined at the Commons, and there I diſcloſed all I knew of the matter?—No.

You never did?—I do not know to my knowledge that I did.

Will you ſwear that you did not, look at the Jury, and either affirm or deny as you chuſe?—I never told Lawrence Green, I had ſaid all I knew in Doctors Commons.

Do you know a man of the name of Pollard?—Yes.

Mr. Slack is a friend of yours?——No, he is a great enemy.

Did you ever ſay to Pollard, that you wiſhed for Mr. Slack to get the day?——I never did.

You never ſaid that if Mr. Slack got the day, you ſhould get an hundred pounds?—I never did, Mr. Slack is no friend of mine, nor ever was.

You do not deal together?—Yes, I do.

What, conſiderably?—Not very conſiderably, I deal with him for cotton.

How does it happen, that in this great City of London, you chuſe to deal with a man that is your enemy?—You may make as much of that as you pleaſe.

This is one of the new phenomena of this cauſe, I want to have it underſtood, you ſay, Daniel Slack is an enemy of yours?—I ſay, he is no friend of mine.

Yet you deal with him?——Yes.

Why do you chuſe to deal with him?—I never left him, I dealt with him all along, it is my pleaſure, I chuſe to deal with him.

Did you owe Mr. Sawtell any money?—I owed him a hundred pounds, I am not aſhamed to own it.

You have not paid that to any body?—No.

You never happened to have any converſation by accident (for if you converſe with an enemy, you know it can only be by accident) about this hundred?——No, never, no never, ſpoke to him on the ſubject; nor to Pollard nor any one man in the world on that account.

ELIZABETH NICKLIN ſworn.

I was ſervant to Nathaniel Goodridge, I went there in Auguſt, 1782, and remained there till July 1784.

How came you to quit the ſervice?——Becauſe I did not like to ſtay after my miſtreſs died; I ſaw Underwood and the two Goodridges in the dining room, at Mr. Goodridge's houſe, writing, about a fortnight before Mr. Sawtell's death, I do not remember ſeeing them after his death, I cannot ſay how often before; there was Mr.

Evans came in the courſe of the day, and went into the room.

Was that the time when Evans and Goodridge were there, that this man Underwood was buſy writing?——Yes.

After the death of Mr. Sawtell, do you recollect Underwood's coming to the houſe?——I do not.

Did you hear any converſation about the will, from either of the priſoners?——No.

Do you recollect what day of the week it was?——It was of a Sunday.

Mr. Sheppard. Was you examined at the Commons?—Yes.

Did you ſay any thing about Leonard Goodridge being in the houſe, you ſwore that you could not anſwer any further to the articles than you did, and then you did not ſay that Leonard Goodridge was there, do you mean now to ſwear that Leonard Goodridge was there?—Yes.

You went away in conſequence of your miſtreſs's being dead?—Yes.

Your box was ſearched, I believe, you did not leave the family with any other reaſon, but becauſe your miſtreſs was dead?—No.

When did your miſtreſs die?—In May.

How came you to go to Mr. Dodſon?—I meant to live in that part, I had no place then; I left the family in July, about a fortnight after Dobſon left the family, I had lived in that part of the country, and I went down to ſee an acquaintance.

Your box was ſearched?——Yes.

I believe you was a little angry about it?—Yes, I was.

Did you mention it to any body?—Yes.

Who to?——To my friends that were in town.

Did you mention it to nobody elſe?—No, Sir, not before I went down.

Who did you mention it to afterwards?——I cannot recollect.

Do you remember mentioning it to Mr. Dobſon?——Yes, after I went down.

Did you ever ſay to any body that you would certainly be revenged on your maſter for it?—No, Sir, never.

What did Dobſon ſay when you told him of your box being ſearched?——He did not ſay any thing, only it was a very wrong thing.

Did not he ſay that he was very angry, that he would be up with Mr. Goodridge for it, that he would be revenged for it?——That was all he ſaid, that I recollect, he never ſaid any thing about being revenged.

Did he ſay what he would have done, if he had known it before?——No, Sir, not that I recollect.

Did he ſay to you that he would have divulged their ſecret, if he had known they would have uſed you ſo ill?——He did not ſay any thing to me then of it.

How long do you think it was before you went into ſervice?—I cannot ſay.

How long do you think?—I had no place to go to, or elſe I ſhould have gone ſooner, I went to Walton to ſee an acquaintance, I lived at Weybridge, I went to ſee an acquaintance of mine in Surry.

How came you to go to Wilton at all?—On purpoſe to ſee them, I went to ſee a fellow ſervant.

Upon your oath was there any body at Walton beſides Dodſon that you went to ſee?—No, Sir.

Now, did not you live under his protection when you was at Walton?—No, Sir.

Did not you lodge at the ſame houſe with him?—No, not where he lodged, I lodged at a public houſe there ſix weeks as near as I can gueſs.

Where were your friends?——My acquaintance I had was a fellow ſervant of mine, that I lived with at Chertſey.

Where was you between the time that you quitted Mr. Goodridge, and went into ſervice again?—I was at Chertſey.

What was the name of the houſe that you lodged at, at Walton?——At one Mr. Clarke's I lodged when I firſt went down at Chertſey, Dodſon came to me at Chertſey, I ſent nobody to him to tell him I was there.

How came he to gueſs?—He knew I was coming to that part to ſee my fellow ſervant I told him I ſhould go down in that part.

How was it you did not go into place, are you married ?—Yes.

Who is your huſband ?—Fiſher Dodſon.

How long have you been married ?——I cannot ſay to the day.

About what time was it, and where ?—I have no right to anſwer you to that.

Court. There is no harm in your anſwering to that.

Now, upon your oath, where were you married to Dodſon, in what church ?——I have no right to tell you that.

Mr. Sheppard. His Lordſhip has juſt told you you muſt ?—No, Sir, I ſhall not.

Now after you have been telling that ſtory, do you refuſe anſwering that queſtion before the Jury, and do you expect credit if you do.

Court. You muſt anſwer that, where was you married ?——I did not come upon that ſubject.

That does not ſignify, you muſt anſwer that queſtion ?

Mr. Garrow. Let Dodſon go out of Court till ſhe has anſwered that queſtion ?—

Court. You muſt anſwer ?—No, Sir, I have no right to anſwer.

Yes, you muſt, you are under the obligation to anſwer ?—Not to that ſubject.

Yes, you are.

Court. Do you mean to ſtand to it that you are married ?—Yes.

Then you muſt anſwer it, there can be no harm in anſwering, if you do not anſwer, the conſequence is, I muſt commit you to priſon ?——That is not what I came upon.

Mr. Fielding. My Lord tells you that you muſt anſwer, if you are not married confeſs it.

Court. You muſt ſay when you was married and where.

Mr. Recorder. If it is not true that you are married, the ſooner you retract it the better.

Court. Were you married in a church ?—I ſhall not anſwer to that, for I did not come upon that ſubject.

Are you apprehenſive of bringing upon yourſelf any penalty or puniſhment by anſwering ?—Not that I know of.

Then there can be no reaſon for your not anſwering, if you do not anſwer I ſhall commit you preſently, if you are not married and you have haſtily ſaid that which is not true, you are at liberty to retract it again ; are ou married ?——No, Sir.

Mr. Sheppard. Then I am ſure I will not aſk you another queſtion.

BENJAMIN JOHNSON ſworn.

Do you know Evans ?——Yes.

Did you ever ſee him write, look at that paper and tell us whether you believed that to be his hand-writing ?—I cannot pretend to ſay, it is a good deal like it.

Do you believe it to be his ?——I do, but I cannot be ſure, I ſhould ſuppoſe it to be his, I would not make oath of it.

Mr. Garrow. You ſay you would not ſwear to it ?—No, I would not.

Who are you ?——My name is Benjamin Johnſon, I am a carpenter in Talbot-court.

Are not you a tenant of Mr. Evans's ?—No, I was.

Had you never any words with Mr. Evans ?——None but what I was brought to.

Did not he charge you with defrauding him of a quarter's rent ?—He did.

And I believe he ſummoned you to the Court of Conſcience ?——He did, I was examined in the Commons.

You ſaid there that you was very much irritated at the treatment of Evans, and that you did not doubt but you expreſſed great reſentment, is that true ?—No.

I will read it to you, "a difference of words happened between him and the ſaid James Evans, and by ſuch his treatment the reſpondent was irritated, and doubts not but he expreſſed great reſentment of his treatment to him."—I did ſwear that, it is true that we had words, he certainly uſed me very ill, I know it now, he recovered the taxes.

You ſtill know that he uſed you very ill ?—Certainly.

You was examined after Mr. Underwood was in cuſtody ?——I know nothing of Mr.

Underwood, I cannot ſay any thing about his affairs.

You was not examined till the 3d of September?—I believe not.

That was after Mr. Underwood was in cuſtody?—It was.

Who applied to you to be examined in the Commons?——Mr. Slack ſent ſome young man with his compliments and would be very glad I would attend there.

Who applied to you to know if you could prove Evans's hand-writing?—The very ſame perſon.

Did you ſee him ſign this receipt for rent that you have been talking about?—Yes, I never ſaw this will till I was examined in the Commons.

You knew at that time that Evans was in cuſtody as having been concerned in forgery?—Yes.

You knew that this piece of paper was to be produced in evidence againſt him?—Yes, when it came there, not before.

You thought it was material to go there?—Yes.

Then how comes it you ſwore this in the Commons that you did not know or was not aware that the paper you then proved would materially affect him?——I did not know till then, I ſwore to the beſt of my knowledge, I ſhould ſuppoſe it was his hand-writing, I ſhould ſuppoſe within myſelf, by the manner of the writing, it was his.

When you knew it was to be uſed againſt him in a criminal proſecution, how came you to dare to ſwear that you was not aware it would materially injure him; did you read the receipt that was given to you?—I only looked at the name.

ALEXANDER SCOTT ſworn.

I know Evans.

Is that his hand-writing?—So far as the letter I, and the E, and the ſcrawl at the bottom, I know no further, he has ſigned bills for me for fires, when fires happened about the neighbourhood, I am engine keeper of St. Andrews.

Court. Do you believe the whole or do you diſbelieve it?——I will not take upon myſelf to ſay the whole of it; I believe it is as far as the I and the E, and the ſcrawl.

What do you mean to ſay that one half of it is his writing and the other half not?—If I had his hand-writing in my poſſeſſion I would not ſwear to it.

What is your belief?—My belief, if I was to go ſo far as to ſpeak the truth is, that it is his.

Mr. Erſkine. Mr. Scott, if I underſtand you right, you ſay this, that you have not acquaintance enough with this perſon's hand-writing to take upon you to ſwear in ſuch a caſe as this, that that is his hand-writing, and though it may look like it, you have not a firm belief in his hand-writing?—God forbid.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, in the moſt trumpery civil action in the Court of King's Bench, this would not do.

Court. How often have you ſeen him write?—I have ſeen him write very often.

Are you acquainted with his hand-writing?—No further than what I ſee here, I verily believe that to be his hand-writing, but I will not ſwear it.

You have ſeen him write?—Yes.

Are you, by ſeeing him write, acquainted with his hand-writing?—Yes, I perfectly believe it.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, I never yet in my life, in a capital caſe, heard a man permitted to ſay that he has a firm belief of his hand-writing.

Do you think this a capital caſe, and do you know you are examining upon your oath, and will you take upon yourſelf, in the preſence of God and your country, to ſay you believe that is his hand-writing?—I really believe it is.

Then how came you to diſtinguiſh between the letters I and E and all the reſt of the letters?——I ſee they are all joined together.

You ſaid that as far as the letters I and E you thought they looked like it?——In regard to the letter E, he always made the head of the E larger than the bottom.

How long is it ſince you ſaw him write?——Eight years ago.

You have not ſeen this writing which I hold in my hand now ſince you ſaid you could not take upon you to ſay it was the hand-writing, but that the I and the E were, and that you partly believed it; now ſince you made uſe of that expreſſion you never have ſeen the paper, for I have had it in my hand ever ſince, how came you to ſwear to the contrary now?——There is the top of the letter I, he always uſed to make it ſmaller, I do partly believe it, and I do believe it from my ſoul; if my child was gone to ſea for twenty-eight years I ſhould know him again.

What are you, Sir; I believe you are the man that declared war with the King of France?——That is not the queſtion.

Are you the man?——I am.

How long did you ſtay in Newgate on that buſineſs?—Not at all.

What gaol was it then?—I was two days in the Compter but very well maintained.

You are a thief-taker, are not you, Sir?—Aye, if I ſaw any man pick your pocket I would take him.

You are ſo much a thief-taker, that you ſeem to have caught yourſelf to day?——No, I think not.

Read, ſigned James Evans, the 7th of April, 1783.

"Received of Mr. John Underwood a bond, bearing date the ſame day, of Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge to John Underwood for four hundred pounds, and which bond I hereby promiſe to deliver to the ſaid John Underwood as ſoon as the ſaid Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge ſhall have adminiſtration granted to him from the will of Mr. Thomas Sawtell, deceaſed.

JOHN TODD ſworn.

Do you know John Underwood?—I do.

Look at the receipt and tell us whether you ever ſaw it in the hands of Underwood.

Mr. Pigott. I object to this, becauſe it is a tranſaction between the witneſs and Underwood, neither of the priſoners being preſent or a party.

Court. The objection to this evidence is merely to lay a foundation to introduce Underwood, firſt of all it has been proved to you that Underwood wrote this.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, this evidence cannot at all be received, I ſay the Court will not do that which is palpably, groſsly wrong on the face of it, if they cannot examine into what he has ſaid, can they examine into what he does? he is ſo bad a witneſs, he is ſo little to be credited, that no act of his, no converſation of his, no teſtimony of his, even on his oath, can be ſo received as to go to the Jury, they bring this man to ſhew that this paper was at one time in the hands of Underwood; it would be good evidence. if he was to be tried, ſuppoſe in a burglary, if any of the priſoners pledge any thing, it is evidence againſt them: Though there is no doubt about his guilt, the only queſtion is, whether he ſingly is guilty, or whether he with other perſons is guilty, and not the priſoners: he is a man who cannot be received unleſs moſt ſtrongly confirmed; if ſuch a witneſs were permitted to lay his head together with any other perſon with whom he might adviſe, to have theſe things and ſhew them all about the town, ſo as to get rid of his own examination, there would be an end of the boaſted liberties of the country; I never recollect any ſuch evidence has been received yet.

Court. It has been proved by other witneſſes that this is the hand-writing of Evans, the only queſtion is whether this may be received, now I think it is admiſſible evidence.

Mr. Recorder. I am moſt clearly of opinion with the learned Judge that this evidence is admiſſible, the objection is not pointed to the witneſs, the evidence is this, a paper has been produced in Court, which, by ſome evidence admiſſible, no doubt but upon the credit of which the Jury are hereafter to decide, is proved to be in the hand-writing of one of the priſoners, then the other evidence is to ſhew that the paper was at ſuch a time in ſuch a place, and that is to be ſhewn by the evidence of a witneſs ſtanding unimpeached.

Did you at any time, and when, ſee that paper in the hands of Underwood?—I ſaw the paper in Underwood's hands at the time he was committed to the Fleet, I ſaw this in the poſſeſſion of Mrs. Underwood and him together, in September, 1784.

Mr. Pigott. How happened it that Underwood was in the Fleet Priſon?——I do not know what for, but he was committed by my Lord Chancellor.

Did you never hear Underwood ſay what it was for?——I cannot ſay, I dare ſay he would not open his mind to me on the occaſion.

Was not it about perjury?——I never meddle with any thing that does not immediately concern me, I do not know.

You recollect you have ſeen a paper in the hands of Mr. Underwood, the paper ſubſcribed by the name of Evans?——I do.

Did you read it?——I did, and to the beſt of my knowledge it is the ſame paper, I do not ſpeak poſitively.

In your examination in the Commons you ſaid thus, "This deponent did not then peruſe the whole of the ſaid writing, but to the beſt of his preſent recollection did obſerve the name of Evans thereto ſubſcribed." I have aſked whether you read the whole of that paper purporting to be a receipt from Evans to Underwood, and you ſay you did; now I ſay that previous to this, you were examined in the Commons, and you ſaid, that the deponent did not then peruſe the whole of the ſaid writing, but to the beſt of his preſent recollection did obſerve the name of Evans thereto ſubſcribed, but did not obſerve what his chriſtian name was to it; now obſerve, you firſt deny poſitively that you peruſed the whole, then you add that to the beſt of your recollection you ſaw the name of Evans thereto ſubſcribed, but did not obſerve what his chriſtian name was; is it true what I have been reading, is your evidence in the Commons?—It is.

Sir T. Davenport. Did you or did you not read enough of it, ſo as to be ſure it is the ſame?—Yes.

Mr. Pigott. What do you happen to know of this Mr. Underwood?——Some years ago a perſon of the name of Evans turned ſwindler in India, and gave my brother a draught drawn on one John Underwood, Eſq. at laſt I found this ſame John Underwood, I found him to be the ſon of Dr. Underwood of the Borough, a man of the moſt unblemiſhed character; I ſaw the young man at that time in very low circumſtances, when I urged him to uſe his induſtry to get my money, which he did on the ſwindler's coming to London, this led me to a little kind of reſpect for him.

But what I want to know is the general character of this Mr Underwood?——I think it very indifferent, very indifferent indeed.

You do not happen to know how he got into the Fleet?——Not abſolutely, but I heard it was by the commitment of the Lord Chancellor.

Now, from Underwood's general character, would you believe him upon his oath in a Court of Juſtice?——Why, I do not know, after what has happened I ſhould heſitate very much.

After what has happened you ſay you ſhould heſitate very much?——Yes, I ſhould.

JOHN UNDERWOOD ſworn on the Voire Dire.

Examined by Mr. Erſkine.

Mr. Underwood, I ſhall trouble you with a very few queſtions before your examinamination; firſt, I ſhall be obliged to you if you will tell me whether that is your hand-writing or no? (ſhews him the inſtructions he produced to Mr. Gregory.)——This is my hand-writing.

You are a ſubſcribing witneſs to this will which you now come to invalidate.

Sir T. Davenport. That is no queſtion on the Voire Dire, on the Voire Dire the only queſtion is, whether he has ſuch an intereſt as totally rejects his evidence.

Court. You may attack a witneſs two different ways.

Mr. Erſkine. I conceive the rule of Voire Dire is this, that before a witneſs is examined in chief, he ſhall be aſked ſuch queſtions as the Court ſhall think proper, I am bound to take every thing that he ſays to be true under the Voire Dire, I am entitled to aſk that man any one queſtion which I think fit, to which he ſhall think fit to anſwer, and when I have got all theſe anſwers, I ſay, that upon theſe facts diſcloſed by the witneſs himſelf, and taking them to be true, he is not by the law of England a competent witneſs.

Court. Go on.

Mr. Erſkine. I aſk you whether you are not a ſubſcribing witneſs to the authenticity and truth of that will?—I am ſubſcribing witneſs to the authenticity, but not to the truth.

Jury. Then you come to tell us a lye?

Mr. Erſkine. It is vaſtly beyond my conception to underſtand you, whether or no you did not mean to atteſt that that was ſuch a will?—I cannot ſay that I did as an attorney.

Did you ſign this will, "Signed, ſealed, publiſhed, and declared by the within-named teſtator, as and for his laſt will and teſtament, in the preſence of us who in his preſence, and in the preſence of each other, and at his requeſt, have ſigned our names as witneſſes hereto?—Before it was ſigned or ſealed I ſubſcribed my name.

Then, Sir, you thought proper to ſubſcribe your name as a witneſs before the will was ſealed and before it was executed?——When the truth of the buſineſs comes out, you will know the whole of it.

When ſhall we know that truth comes from you?—When the whole of the buſineſs is related.

Are you acquainted with Mr. Gregory?—I am.

As there are ſo many perſons preſent, I may venture to truſt you with a bit of paper, though I ſhall want it back again; perhaps that is your hand-writing?——It is.

Then I think you delivered this paper which I am now about to read to you, to Mr. Gregory. (Reads.) "On or about Auguſt, 1781, I firſt ſaw Mr. Sawtell, I was ſent for to Mr. Sawtell's ſeveral times, to the houſe of Mr. Goodridge, about Mrs. Reeves, and on my informing him of the hardſhip of the caſe, Mr. Sawtell advanced five guineas. On the 6th of November, 1782, I accidentally called at Mr. Goodridge's, and there I ſaw Mr. Sawtell, and, after ſome time, he aſked if I was not the attorney who had Mrs. Reeve's cauſe, which being anſwered in the affirmative, he, after ſome time, ſaid he had made his will, but was very unhappy or diſſatisfied, or words to that effect, and then applied to me for that purpoſe, but ſaid it muſt be done with ſecreſy, and ſeemed determined, and deſired they would leave the room; they accordingly did, he then produced a will he had made two days before, and deſired I would immediately copy it, which I did, I returned the ſame to him again, and then took his inſtructions, when I had done, he deſired I would meet him again on the Lord Mayor's day, and after making ſome immaterial alterations, Mr. Goodridge and he went, I think to Tallow-Chandler's Hall, but firſt deſiring I would not bring the will to his houſe till he ſent to me, but on the 14th of December Mr. Goodridge came to me, and deſired me to attend him at Mr. Sawtell's houſe, at a quarter after ten at night, we all went up ſtairs into Mr. Sawtell's bed-room, who was awake, and ſaid I am glad you are come; I accordingly proceeded to read the will, with which he ſeemed perfectly ſatisfied, and ſaid it would be very troubleſome in the ſituation he was to write his name, I told him his mark would do as well; then he executed the will, and, applying himſelf to Mr. Goodridge, ſaid, God bleſs you, take care of what I have done for you, or words to that purpoſe; we all went away." This which I have been reading to the Court and Jury, you have acknowledged to be your hand-writing and delivered as ſuch ſolemnly to Mr. Gregory?——I did.

The will was conteſted in the Commons?——Yes.

You gave him this account under your own hand?——I did, I believe, before the will was proved.

Did not you at a ſubſequent time give that paper to Mr. Gregory?——I did.

Now, look Sir further at this paper, and tell me upon your oath (if that makes any difference) whether you did not give that as a copy of the inſtructions which you took down from Mr. Sawtell's mouth to make his will?——I did.

Reads, "As far as concerning the reſt of my eſtate and effects of what nature or kind ſoever, I leave to the ſaid Nathaniel Goodridge, &c. for ever."

You told Mr. Gregory, I believe, that there was ſome alterations which the deceaſed Mr. Sawtell had ſuggeſted to you at the time of taking the inſtructions; this is a whimſical ſituation I am in; to be obliged to take what you ſay for truth; this you gave as a copy of the inſtructions which you took down from old Sawtell for his will?——I did.

You was afterwards examined in Doctors Commons, and you gave a very long and circumſtantial account of that buſineſs, upon your oath; you poſitively ſwore, you was then ſolemnly ſworn upon the goſpel to ſpeak the truth?——Not a doubt of it.

Reads, "And is ſo aſſured in his conſcience, and firmly believes that there was not the leaſt force, fraud, impoſition, perſuaſion, artifice, device or contrivance, uſed or practiſed by any perſon whatever, to prevail upon or induce the deceaſed to make that will, but the deceaſed appeared to the deponent to be in his perfect ſenſes, and capable of knowing what he did, the witneſs never ſaw him after the execution of the will, and knows nothing of his manner of living." Here then you did declare that this was a true valid will made by yourſelf, and that you ſaw it executed, did you ſwear that or did you not?——I did ſwear it.

I believe you was croſs examined on forty five croſs-interrogatories in that Court?——I was.

Perſiſted to give this full account of it?——I did.

And Mr. Underwood, are you come here in the character of a witneſs, to tell my Lord and the Jury that every thing you depoſed to before, was abſolutely falſe, and without any foundation?——I came here as a criminal.

That is no anſwer to my queſtion, you do not come ſo, I wiſh you was at the other end of the Court?——I certainly have entered into a baſe combination with the priſoners, I can only ſay this, I have done a wrong thing, and that I am ſorry for it.

How are we to know that you are not doing a wrong thing to day, then you come here to falſify your atteſtation to Mr. Gregory?——I am a criminal in the buſineſs, and I come here to make all the reparation I can.

Are you come here to falſify, upon your oath, that which you ſwore in the Commons, and that which you delivered to Mr. Gregory?——A man that does wrong, has a right to do right.

Do you, aye or no?——I am come to do right.

Do you come to falſify every thing you have heretofore ſworn?——Not a doubt of it but I am.

All of it!——Yes, all that I have done on account of this will.

The concluſion of this Trial in the next Part which will be publiſhed in few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of Nathaniel Goodridge, Leonard Goodridge, and John Evans.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, I feel myſelf in a ſituation ſo perfectly new, not becauſe I am inexperienced in the hiſtory of judicatures, not becauſe I am inexperienced in the hiſtory of civilized ſociety; but becauſe I am unacquainted with any caſe like this, and therefore, if I ſhould not be able to give all the aſſiſtance to my clients, which in humanity and juſtice I owe them, I hope I ſhall ſtand excuſed; I am ſo aſtoniſhed at what I hear and ſee, as not to be able to recollect the language in which I addreſs your Lordſhip; I muſt make three objections to the competency of this witneſs, and I make them after croſs-examination, on the Voire Dire, that I may have an opportunity of taking them collectively, and not ſeparately: the three objections I make to his evidence, are theſe: firſt, that he appears on his own confeſſion, and upon the ſtatement of the counſel for the proſecution with reſpect to him, to be an accomplice in this crime, with which the priſoners are charged; and I mean to contend before your Lordſhip, that there is not a ſufficient foundation laid in evidence, ſuch as would induce your Lordſhip to leave the guilt or innocence of the perſons to be decided by the evidence of ſuch a witneſs; and that your Lordſhip cannot conſiſtent with your conduct, receive this witneſs after the foundation you have laid down: I think that if even Mr. Underwood ſtood under none of the circumſtances which are ſtated, that ſimply he is an accomplice; my ſecond objection, which I beg to be added to the other, is, that he is a ſubſcribing witneſs, which is one of the moſt ſolemn and deliberate acts, that any man can do to ſociety; he is, upon his own confeſſion, a ſubſcribing witneſs to that will; that he ſays under that atteſtation, he ſaw the teſtator execute, and he has confirmed the truth of that atteſtation to Mr. Gregory in the moſt ſolemn manner, that no fraud, impoſition, or device whatever was uſed in obtaining that will, and now in order that the priſoners may be taken away from the face of the earth, this man is to contradict the whole of his former evidence; there is a third character in which he ſtands, he has atteſted upon his oath in the Commons, as to his ſubſcribing of this will, he ſtands as an informer, he ſtands convicted of perjury, on his own confeſſion, and there is no judgment of record required againſt him; you have previouſly ſaid, as a guide to the rules that we are to govern ourſelves by at the bar, that you expect an antecedent foundation to be laid before an accomplice is admitted; the meaning of that is evidently this, an accomplice ſhall not be called before the foundation is laid for his evidence, for firſt, it operates as a ſnare to the Jury; ſecondly, it waſtes the time of a Court of Juſtice, and no Judge would ſay to a Jury, you are to pay no reſpect to this man, unleſs he is corroborated by other circumſtances: the crimes with which the priſoners at the bar are charged, are ſimply theſe; that they have forged or cauſed to be forged, the will in queſtion; it is not for the uttering and publiſhing, but for the act of forging; and I beg leave to ſay no evidence has been yet given to impute that crime to the priſoners: it appears that Mr. Slack was not connected with the teſtator, Mr. Sawtell, in blood; and by every witneſs it appears that Mrs. Goodridge was his wife's niece, and it appears that he was extremely intimate with him, and he aſſigned him leaſe-hold premiſes and dined with him: my Lord, preſumptions do not weigh in criminal caſes, thoſe which are of great avail in civil caſes, are of no avail in criminal; but, ſays a very experienced lawyer, there is ſuch a ſuperior preſumption in chriſtian charity, that the preſumption is much ſtronger in the innocence of priſoners than any preſumption that can ariſe of their guilt, until the contrary is proved; if I am to examine the evidence, what does it amount to, that Mr. Slack is a ſtranger, and that Mrs. Goodridge is a relation, that Mr. Slack is a friend, and Goodridge another; now, ſuppoſe they had got at the reſiduum, and that the legacies did not ſwallow up the whole, God forbid probabilities are to put men on their defence, charged with the perpetration of a criminal offence, but that is not the caſe: as to Mr. Price in his evidence he has laid no antecedent foundation for the evidence of an accomplice; Mr. Price has proved nothing, and Price ſays this, that for ſome time before his death, this Nathaniel Goodridge had ſet up with the teſtator, and attended him in his ſickneſs; it ſeems to me the ſtrongeſt reaſon in the world, why a man is not to be neglected by the ſick man in his will, for there is no object that can operate on the heart of a good and benevolent man, like the man who chuſes to ſit in a dark loathſome chamber with a ſick man, rather than go out into the open air, and a man muſt have a great friendſhip for another, when he chuſes to truſt him in an office like that of ſitting up all night with him, ſo that Price ſtates things that may lead your Lordſhip to believe that he was the perſon who by his own choice he took to; and Price alſo ſays, that he remembers his going once or twice to the iron cheſt.

Mr. Recorder. I know ſome of the firſt criminal lawyers receive the evidence of the accomplice firſt, that is no ways contrary to law, it is a matter of diſcretion; but I conceive the principle of law is, that accomplices in all caſes are admiſſible witneſſes, but witneſſes ſo diſcredited that unleſs there are ſome circumſtances proved by witneſſes deſerving of credit, to confirm their teſtimony, it ſhall not even be left to the Jury, whether they will or will not believe them: with reſpect to this man, I muſt ſay, that from what has come out from the Voire Dire, he ſtands by no means in the light of a common accomplice, the objection to him is an objection to credit, a man's coming to unſwear what he has ſworn before, if he were not an accomplice it would be a much greater objection to his credit, and no Court or Jury can rely at all on his teſtimony, beyond what is proved by other witneſſes.

Mr. Erſkine. My Lord, this man ſtands in a ſituation ſo very different from a common accomplice, ſo contaminated with guilt, that I venture to ſay he cannot be believed; why is he to be believed? The only reaſon why a witneſs can be competent, and is to be received, is, that the Jury are to ſuppoſe, that the man comes under the ſanctions and ſolemnities of religion, that he is influenced, not only by the fear of that puniſhment which the law can inflict upon him here, but ſtands much more in awe of that greater puniſhment, which it is in the power of the Supreme Being to inflict upon him in a future ſtate: Why cannot a man convicted of perjury be examined as a witneſs? Becauſe he has ſhewn that he pays no regard to the ſolemnities of religion, and though liars may often ſpeak the truth, the life, the fame, and the property of any individual muſt not depend on the teſtimony of any man that is not fit to be believed; and though to be ſure it would not be once in a hundred times, that you could get a gentleman of ſo ſteady a countenance, as Mr. Underwood, to tell you all this is falſe, becauſe he is the firſt man alive that ever did ſo; I cannot bring ſuch another inſtance, there were many inſtances on the reſtoration of King Charles the Second, of perſons who had been found guilty of perjury, and the evidence came viva voce to prove their perjury, the Judges ſaid, if they could get the beſt evidence they would.

Court. What caſes were thoſe.

Mr. Erſkine. I did not bring down my books with me, but in our day a witneſs never can be permitted to ſay one thing upon on his oath, and then be permitted to tell a Court and Jury that the whole of that was perjury, becauſe there is no degree of competency due to him; does your Lordſhip wiſh to have ſuch a witneſs examined? can you tell the Jury that ſuch a man is to be believed? Why he might be indicted upon his own examination; for if a man ſwears to two contrary propoſitions which are not true, you may indict him upon that; and would it not be a hard thing, that thoſe three men at the bar ſhould ſuffer death on the evidence of ſuch a witneſs as Mr. Underwood: I cannot conceive any thing more diſtreſſing to your Lordſhip ſitting as a Judge, than that ſuch a man as this ſhould be examined, that the time ſhould be conſumed, and that a ſnare ſhould be laid for the conſciences of the Jury, only that you ſhould let them looſe on that ſnare; but I am ſure that the Jury have too much good ſenſe, too much humanity, and too much chriſtian charity to condemn any man upon ſuch evidence: if I have offered any thing that does not meet with the opinion of the Court, I am ſorry, I am ſure I ſtand in a caſe pefectly new, it is no wonder I do not know better in ſuch a caſe.

Mr. Pigott. My Lord, if the ſituation in which your Lordſhip now ſtands, was a ſituation in which a Judge ever before found himſelf, I think I ſhould have diſcretion enough not to repeat any thing that Mr. Erſkine has ſaid; but I think that from the firſt moment that juriſprudence has been known, and from the firſt crime in the world down to this time, there never was ſuch a cauſe as this in a Court of Juſtice; there never was a witneſs offered to a Court under ſuch circumſtances, and therefore, I do aſſure your Lordſhip, that with the utmoſt reſpect to the deciſion of your Lordſhip, I ſpeak of the accomplice Underwood. It is of great importance to every citizen in the world, I do not ſay of this free country only, but I ſay on the face of the earth, that, that witneſs ſhould be rejected as incompetent; for if he was to be received, unleſs God Almighty was to make a new revelation of his will, I proteſt I do not ſee how any man's property can be ſafe, if a witneſs comes into a Court of Juſtice, uttering the firſt word, he ſays, I did, (not in ſome other time, not in ſome other caſe, not in ſome other period, I did) commit perjury, but upon this very ſubject, upon this ſubject whether this was a valid will or not, I delivered the copy of the draught to the attorney, and after all I depoſed deliberately making my ſolemn appeal to God for what I ſaid, and I ſtood a croſs examination of forty-five interrogatories, which were calculated to draw forth what I now call the truth of the caſe; but all I depoſed was falſe. My Lord, there is no crime ſo great as high treaſon, yet if there exiſted perſons baſe and wicked enough to conſpire againſt that life, precious as it is in the eye of the law, and a witneſs had been called who could prove that crime of high treaſon, if that witneſs at any other time had been convicted of perjury, though he ſhould have committed it in the earlieſt period of his life, though he ſhould have lived half the life of man in the courſe of amendment and repentance, though he ſhould be received in all ſocieties with reſpect, yet he cannot be received as a witneſs; why? becauſe he has once ſhewn, that in one inſtance, he has diſregarded the ſanction of a ſolemn appeal to God! if that man, John Underwood, whom it is this moment my miſfortune to ſee, had perjured himſelf a hundred thouſand times over upon all the ſubjects on which he had ever depoſed in a Court of Juſtice, would he ſtand (I aſk any man in conſcience, and in reaſon, and in common ſenſe) would he then ſtand in ſuch a predicament as he does in this very caſe; he ſays, in that way I did depoſe, now the very firſt word he utters is, it is all falſe! Now, my Lord, upon what principle is it that a perjured man is unworthy of credit? why, becauſe he has ſworn falſely, not upon the ſubject that relates to this queſtion, but upon any ſubject whatever; he has once ſworn falſely, and what has once happened may happen again: conſider, my Lord, the predicament in which this man ſtands, he is one of the three witneſſes to this will, and has alſo been called upon by proceſs, therefore I am ſure it is a caſe totally new, for if any of your Lordſhips are of opinion that any thing like this has been decided upon any principle that reaches it, then I am perfectly content to ſay that my time has been miſpent; this caſe is perfectly new, and I humbly ſubmit it would be, of all ſituations, the moſt ſingular for the Jury, and ſingular for your Lordſhip to tell the Jury, to receive that man's teſtimony; but God forbid that ſuch teſtimony ſhould be received, if it ſhould, I am ſure that any twelve men picked out of the cells of Newgate would not ſentence three of their fellow creatures to death upon the evidence of ſuch a man.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I ſhall confine myſelf entirely to this queſtion, whether Mr. Underwood can be a competent witneſs, and, my Lord, the evidence by which competent or not competent is to be tried, is this, whether it is poſſible that any man, on any occaſion, can give any credit to the witneſs that is to be ſworn; that I take to be the diſtinction between competence and credit: if there is any thing which can lead the Jury to heſitate whether they ſhall believe him or no, then it becomes a queſtion of credit; but if every body would cry out it is impoſſible to believe his evidence, it then ſtrikes me it is as impoſſible to take his evidence, as if there was a record of perjury: When a man is convicted of perjury, no man can give credit to him however probable the ſtory he tells may be, however, confirmed otherwiſe, ſtill the man himſelf, in that ſituation, deſerves not the ſmalleſt degree of credit; now can any man who has heard Underwood confeſſing that he firſt atteſted to this will, and afterwards upon mature deliberation he depoſed in the moſt ſolemn way that the whole was true; and now he comes here into Court and admits he has perjured himſelf; can any man who has heard all this doubt whether he can be convicted of this perjury or no? he ſtands to all the world a perjured man; does not he ſtand as infamous as if he was upon record? If there was the ſmalleſt circumſtance in his ſituation which could induce a Jury to doubt whether he was perjured or not, it might go to the Jury; but he is not competent, as, upon his credit, not the ſmalleſt diſcretion can be exerciſed.

Mr. Garrow. I take the liberty of troubling your Lordſhip with one word on this queſtion, and I ſay, that ſuch a monſter of profligacy, ſo unlike any thing God ever made, as Mr. John Underwood, who ſtands now before your Lordſhip, never appeared in a Court of Juſtice before; and ought to go forth to the world with a title made for Mr. John Underwood alone: You have it proved by witneſſes called on the part of the proſecution, that Mr. John Underwood is not to be believed upon his oath; the Jury have heard from Mr. John Underwood that he has not only given under his own hand, ſitting in his cloſet, a full account of this will of Mr. Sawtell, and inſtructed the proctor to form interrogatories to ſupport it; but he goes through every minute circumſtance, and is confirmed by other witneſſes, yet he does not ſtop there; for Mr. Underwood in the poſſeſſion of this ſecret, goes about it, knowing it to be a ſecret, he is employed as a ſolicitor, the ſuit is going on to judgment, the probate is about to be granted, and then Mr. John Underwood, urged by neceſſities which his own profligacy have brought upon him, Mr. Underwood in the Fleet, to which the Lord Chancellor had committed him; this Mr. Underwood applies to theſe parties to adminiſter to the neceſſities he has involved himſelf in; they refuſe it, and then for the firſt time Mr. Underwood ſays, now I will negative every ſyllable of that proof I have given under the ſanction of an oath; now I will go before a magiſtrate and negative all I have ſworn! now he ſays, I have done very wrong, and I come to day to make all the reſtoration I can, now for the firſt time in my life I come to do an honeſt act; ſuppoſe it poſſible (but to ſuppoſe it is to inſult your Lordſhip and the Jury) ſuppoſe the evidence that ſhould be given ſhould induce the Jury to find the priſoners guilty, where is the aſſurance that to-morrow he will not ſay, now for the firſt time I feel ſome compunction; now I am going to make reſtitution, the firſt depoſition I made was the true one, do ſomething to ſave me from damnation if you can? how can the Jury depend on the teſtimony he has to give them? how are they to believe the truth of that which he told in the Commons or his preſent ſtory, which is confirmed by no witneſſes but thoſe infamous witneſſes which have been ſet up ſince Mr. Underwood went before the Juſtice? My Lord, do, for God's ſake, conſider to what extent a determination to receive ſuch evidence may go: It was my misfortune once or twice to be a ſubſcribing witneſs to a will, but if I had the misfortune to atteſt another will, how do I know that that man who, if he was alſo a witneſs to the ſame will, might not go and ſay, this is a fabrication from the beginning to the end, I will call witneſſes, I will produce ſome opinions too of Mr. Garrow, and I will go and indict that man at the Old Bailey, I will convict him for not having aſſiſted me in my neceſſities: My Lord, I am ſuppoſing a man who had only lent his ſignature, who ſhould in the firſt inſtance come and ſay he was not a witneſs to the true will, is there any body whoſe property is derived under teſtaments would be ſecure, if a ſubſcribing witneſs to the ſame will can be permitted to falſify his own ſignature, to ſay I know that is my own hand-writing, and I know the thing is a fabrication from the beginning to the end: My Lord, perſons convicted of felony are incompetent witneſſes, but they are meritorious men compared to this witneſs, yet you cannot receive theſe men, however ſincere their repentance may be, however conformable their lives may have been ſince to the ſtricteſt rules of propriety and virtue: My Lord, is that the caſe of Mr. John Underwood, who comes here to ſwear that he has been perjured though whole volumes of depoſitions? My Lord, permit me to ſay, where there is a verdict only for the crime of perjury there may be a doubt; a late caſe, which made a conſiderable noiſe and was attended with very powerful arguments, ſeemed to ſatisfy ſome perſons that thoſe who had penned certain affidavits, had not employed all the correctneſs they might, and it is ſtill in ſome men's minds a doubt whether that man was fairly and ſtrictly convicted: Is it ſo here? Have you any doubt whether he was guilty? have you any doubt whether he was corrupt, have you any doubt whether he was wilfully perjured? when he ſtates now that he did that on the moſt mature deliberation, and added new forgery to forgery, and on the moſt mature deliberation ſat down to make new minutes of inſtructions, as if they were old ones, and thus adding guilt upon guilt; Mr. Underwood, it is ſaid, cannot be convicted of perjury by confronting his two depoſitions, I am very ſorry to hear it, I am bound to believe it, the danger to ſociety becomes infinitely ſtronger, becauſe Mr. Underwood having heard that, and knowing the tendency of his depoſition to day, is to go all the length of it; he is not like a witneſs coming into Court ſwearing as the woman did this day, firſt that ſhe was married and then that ſhe was not; I ſay he comes here to night to perjure himſelf, I can demonſtrate that; I aſſume that this will, which is now the ſubject matter of this indictment is a true will, that it was executed under the circumſtances deſcribed in the Commons, I am ſuppoſing (and I beg pardon again for the ſuppoſition, which is an inſult to your Lordſhip) how can there be any evidence offered to the Jury to confirm that teſtimony which was given in the Commons, to contradict that which he ſhould give to night? there may be caſes of perſons being bought off by wicked perſons: the argument was preſſed by my friends that preceded me with all the ability that can be, and I conteſt that, in this caſe, Mr. Underwood cannot be received as a witneſs: I wiſh I could aſk the Jury if they have nothing before them, it is a ſheer queſtion of competency, and it no longer can be pretended to be a queſtion of credit; the queſtion of credit can no be ſupported againſt a man who ſtands here, I repeat, it as a monſter of human deformity.

Court. I think there is ſufficient ground to admit the accomplice generally, when the atteſting witneſſes are called, they are conſtantly croſs-examined; it is admitted that in caſes of wills atteſting witneſſes may ſpeak to the ſanity of the teſtator: put the caſe of dureſs, ſuppoſe a man makes a bond, a ſubſcribing witneſs is called, ſuppoſe a man puts a piſtol to his breaſt and to the witneſs's breaſt, ſhould it be ſaid that that matter ſhould not be unravelled? as to the other caſe, whether the witneſs is competent to be received, or whether his ſwearing differently in the Commons to what he has done, is an objection to his credit, I have always underſtood that the incompetency of a witneſs is founded on a diſability of law which can only go to the record, the other only goes to his credit.

Mr. Recorder. However painful it may be to be obliged to hear the evidence of a man ſtanding in the ſituation of Underwood, I cannot help entirely concurring in the opinion of the learned Judge as to his competency; this matter has been ably and ingeniouſly argued, and it would tend very much to confound the diſtinctions between credit and competency, if thoſe diſtinctions were not maintained: can any man ſay that a man confeſſing himſelf guilty of every enormity that can diſgrace human nature, is intitled to any degree of credit? and yet I am clearly of opinion that ſuch a man would be competent; the queſtion of credit is a queſtion that always reſts with the Jury, that of competency always reſts with the Court; the objections to credit are infinite, as infinite as reaſon, philoſophy and the workings of human nature can ſuggeſt; the objections to competency are few, and clearly defined by law, they are abſolute diſability of the perſon to give evidence, that he is a perſon convicted of perjury; I conceive it has been miſtaken that the teſtimony of that witneſs is rejected, becauſe when he is examined the Jury ought not to believe him, that is not the reaſon; the reaſon is, that he has been convicted of a crime to which the law affixes a diſability to give evidence, therefore the man who is convicted of perjury, or any other crime to which diſabilities are anexed, though many of them if examined would deſerve the protection, and the credit of the Jury, for inſtance, a man convicted of a rape under particular circumſtances, might be entitled to belief upon his oath, if it were not for ſuch conviction; the perjured man is not rejected becauſe he cannot be believed, but from his ſituation: now, no relationſhip however near and dear, diſqualifies a perſon from giving evidence, except that of huſband and wife alone, and that ariſes from their being in conſideration of law one and the ſame perſon, they are not either of them permitted to give evidence for or againſt the other, but father for a child, or child for a parent, may give evidence; you cannot weigh the degree of intereſt, but any intereſt however ſmall, diſqualifies the party from being examined as a witneſs at all; becauſe men ſhould not be expoſed to the temptation of giving evidence: the objections to credit and competence are perfectly diſtinct in their nature, the objection in this caſe is an objection to credit merely, and the Court may be bound by the rule of law to hear ſuch a witneſs, though they may not believe him, for he may be under circumſtances in which no man alive ought to give the ſmalleſt belief to his oath, that is for the Jury to conſider; but I am of opinion he is a competent witneſs if offered to the Court.

JOHN UNDERWOOD ſworn.

Was you ever in your life on any occaſion employed by Mr. Sawtell?——Never.

By whom was you employed in the preſent tranſaction?—A Mrs. Reeve came to my houſe, a perſon whom I had formerly a Chancery ſuit for, and who was a very diſtreſſed perſon, the ſuit was commenced in 1776, I had had her in my houſe a year or a year and a half, I aſked her for ſome caſh, ſhe ſaid, ſhe had a friend, a Mr. Sawtell, who lived on Saffron-hill, a tallow-chandler, and that ſhe would apply to Mrs. Goodridge, who was his niece; this was in May 1781, I was deſired to attend at Mr. Goodridge's houſe on Saffron-hill, to inform Mr. Sawtell of the caſe of this old woman, Mr. Sawtell ſome how or other anſwered me very ſhort, and I went away affronted, and never ſaw him afterwards, but a few days after Nathaniel Goodridge brought five guineas to a Mr. Wolf, in whoſe houſe I lodged, that was the firſt time I ever ſaw Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge; at length he became rather intereſted in the old woman's buſineſs, and attended me from time to time, and I think to the beſt of my recollection. I carried on the proſecution in Chancery for a twelve month, at length Mr. Goodridge was diſſatisfied with my proceeding in Chancery, and he employed a Mr. Lucas, an attorney of New Inn, to ſuperintend the buſineſs, and I gave him up all the papers; I never heard any further of Mr. Goodridge, till ſometime in the latter end of October 1782, when Mrs. Reeve came over to my houſe, informing Mrs. Underwood that Mrs. Goodridge had ſome gowns to diſpoſe of, Mrs. Underwood attended, and purchaſed theſe ſilk gowns for five guineas; about the latter end of November or the beginning of December, Mrs. Reeve came to my houſe, and deſired me to attend Mr. Goodridge, on Saffron hill, and I attended in conſequence thereof; and I met him at Mr. Evans's houſe, and Mr. Evans and Mr. Goodridge took me into a parlour in that houſe, and after ſome converſation of the buſineſs of Mrs. Reeves, Mr. Evans opened his mind in the following manner. "You know old Mr. Sawtell, who advanced you the money on that buſineſs, he is ill, he has made his will, but has not mentioned either Goodridge or his family in it, and he has made a will, and has left it all to thoſe d—d raſcals the Slacks, who are no relations to him, and it is a pity ſo much money ſhould be loſt:" Evans ſaid, "Old Mr. Sawtell often comes to my houſe to ſpend an evening, and if you will draw a will, I can get him to ſign it, as if he was a witneſs of mine, as he has done before, and if you will call in occaſionally when he is here, and will draw up ſuch a will, we will give you a hundred pounds;" and he immediately went up ſtairs, and brought down his will which Mr. Sawtell witneſſed, to ſhew me Mr. Sawtell had done it; he then deſired me to call occaſionally, and leave my addreſs in caſe he ſhould come, they did not know then where I lived, I did call ſeveral times, but Mr. Sawtell had not been out from home; at length Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge came to my chambers in Lions Inn, and informed me that the old man grew worſe, and that ſome other expedient ſhould be thought of, and he deſired me again to call at the houſe of Mr. Evans; I did call, and upon a converſation between Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge and Mr. James Evans, they ſaid, it would be no harm to forge a will, if it could be done, as it would be giving the property where it ought to go; after a deal of converſation, I accidentally mentioned the name of a Mr. Aſſiotti, who was very clever in drawing of names or any thing of that kind, he was very clever in drawing models, and they told me if I could prevail on Mr. Aſſiotti to draw the hand of Sawtell, they would give him twenty pounds, I told them it would be to no uſe to draw a will, without I could aſcertain the property of the deceaſed, and after a long conſultation thereon, it was agreed that Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge ſhould get to ſit up with Mr. Sawtell, to get a ſight of his will; on the 15th day of December, he came to me and told me he ſhould ſit up with Mr. Sawtell the proceeding night, and that if I would attend the 16th, he would let me in with Mr. Evans, and I was to attend on Mr. Evans for that purpoſe; I accordingly attended at the houſe of Mr. Evans about eight at night, he told me Mr. Goodridge ſat up, and I was to wait there till twelve o'clock; at twelve I and Evans went to the houſe of the deceaſed in Brook-ſtreet, Evans gave a hem, which was the ſignal agreed on between Mr. Goodridge and him, and the door was ſoftly opened by Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge, he introduced us into a parlour, and afterwards went up ſtairs to the deceaſed; in a little time he came down again, and ſaid, Mr. Sawtell was awake, and he could not poſſeſs himſelf of the keys, Evans went away, and left me there; about two in the morning Nathaniel Goodridge brought down the keys of a bureau which ſtood in the parlour, he opened the deſk and looked for a key of the iron cheſt, wherein he thought the will muſt be depoſited, but he could not find the will there, nor in all the drawers of the bureau; accordingly he gave over the ſearch, and informed me he would ſeek it ſome other time, as he thought Mr. Slack muſt have the key; about a week or ten days after, I called at the houſe of Mr. Evans, who informed me that they had got a man to make a key to the iron cheſt, as they could not find it, and that he expected it would be completed in two or three days, or a few days: in the firſt week in January 1783, Mr. Goodridge came to my chambers again, and informed me the key was complete, and deſired I would attend at the houſe of Mr. Evans again, which I did, and there I ſaw Mr. Goodridge, who ſaid, he was to ſit up with Mr. Sawtell that night, and Mr. Evans deſired me to call again a little before twelve, I went home after that, and called at the houſe of Mr. Evans, Evans and me went together, and were let into the houſe of Mr. Sawtell as before, we went into the ſide parlour, Nathaniel Goodridge there produced the key of an iron cheſt, which was rough and newly made, and in a cloſet in the parlour there was an iron cheſt, which was opened by this key, and he took thereout a paper ſealed up and wrote upon "Mr. Sawtell's will," which was opened, I believe we had all a hand in it, wherefrom I took a copy, at that time, which copy was examined by Evans and myſelf.

Mr. Erſkine, (holding up Underwood's affidavit.) Did you take it at Sawtell's houſe?—I am aware of that affidavit, Mr. Erſkine; I then went to the houſe of Mr. Evans, and from thence home.

Where is that copy which you then took?——I believe it is in the hands of the Proctor, it is in being.

Was a copy of that copy delivered in?—Yes.

Look at that?——This is a copy I took in the houſe of Mr Sawtell, I was then to draw a whole draught, and to attend on Mr. Aſſiotti, whom I have before mentioned, to ſee if I could not get him to write the hand writing of Mr. Sawtell, and in purſuance thereof, Nathaniel Goodridge brought me two bits of paper, with the name Thomas Sawtell wrote thereon, and alſo brought over to my houſe an impreſſion of a ſeal, a candle and candleſtick, with the words, Sperma Ceti, wrote round, which were the ſame, as was the ſeal to the will; I went to the houſe of Mr. Aſſiotti, in Long-acre, I ſaw his wife, we had ſome words about family affairs, and I went away; and was then determined to have nothing more to do with the buſineſs: Mr. Goodridge attended me from time to time, and when I told him I would have nothing more to do with the buſineſs, he was quite at a ſtand; he told me, if I would go through it, he would give me a thouſand pounds, I then ſent Mrs. Underwood to Mr. Aſſiotti, and ſhe did not ſee him, ſhe came home, and I was fully determined not to meddle further in the buſineſs at all; Goodridge came to me again, and when I informed him of my intention of having nothing to do with it, he was ſpeechleſs for near half a minute, he then ſaid, will the old man's mark do? and I ſaid yes, and he aſked me to ſtay in the chambers 'till the afternoon, and then he brought Mr. Evans to me, and it was agreed, that he ſhould get the old man to make his mark to the will; I went home with him to Mr. Evans's houſe, and there took inſtructions for all the legacies that were to be in the will.

Who gave inſtructions?—Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge and Mr. Evans, ſometimes together, and ſometimes ſeparate.

What time did they give you the inſtructions?—In the afternoon, Mr. Goodridge then deſired I would attend at his workſhop, to engroſs that will, for he had a compting-houſe in the workſhip, and he deſired me to do it, for the old man was very ill, I attended accordingly, and engroſſed one ſheet of that will, and left the copy and one ſheet engroſſed in a deſk in the compting-houſe, and on the enſuing night I completed it, and I think, as near as I can, a night or two afterwards I was to have attended the execution of the will, and to call at his houſe; I did ſo, and then for the firſt time I ſaw Leonard Goodridge.

What time was this?——It was on the 23d of January as near as I can recollect, I went with Mr. Leonard Goodridge and Mr. Evans to Mr. Sawtell's houſe, in Brook-ſtreet, where we were again let in by Nathaniel Goodridge as before, he went firſt of all to the iron cheſt and took thereout a gold watch, to which was appending a ſeal with which the will was ſealed, he then went up ſtairs himſelf, and he came down ſtairs again, and deſired us to pull off our ſhoes and follow him, but only to ſtand juſt at the feet of the bed and make no noiſe; old Mr. Sawtell lay in bed in a ſtate of inſenſibility to all appearance, and Nathaniel Goodridge took him by the hand and put a pen into his hand and made him make two marks, one oppoſite the ſeal and the other at the bottom of the firſt ſheet of paper; we then went down ſtairs and witneſſed the will, and it was agreed the other will ſhould be taken out and burnt and deſtroyed; the other will was then taken out and deſtroyed, and two ſheets of paper were inſtituted in the room thereof; I then went away, and as near as I can remember, it was the enſuing morning that Nathaniel Goodridge came over to me, and ſaid, ſays he, the will that we have executed will not do, I aſked him the reaſon, why, he ſaid, it is of too early a date, it was dated the 23d of January, the day of the ſuppoſed execution; and, ſays he, you muſt come over to my houſe on Sunday and engroſs another will, dated the 14th of December, this was the 26th of January, exactly a fortnight before the old man died; I accordingly attended at Mr. Goodridge's houſe, and engroſſed ſuch freſh will, and Leonard Goodridge and myſelf and Evans witneſſed the ſame, he undertaking to get the old man to put his mark and put the ſeal; this was in Nathaniel Goodridge's dining-room, then I left them: This is the will I wrote on the 26th of January, and witneſſed as I have told you; in a fortnight afterwards I received a note from Mrs. Goodridge ſignifying that Mr. Sawtell was dead, and deſiring I would ſtay at home and ſomebody would call upon me, I went out to have my hair dreſſed in the afternoon, and I was ſent for home, and I ſaw Leonard Goodridge, and he aſked me to go out with him, I went out with him to the public-houſe, and he ſaid, now the old man is dead I hope we ſhall ſtick true to one another.

What day was that?——The 9th of February.

What time of the day?——About four in the afternoon.

And where?——At my own houſe; we went out of my houſe to the public-houſe; I came home with Leonard Goodridge and he, and I, and Mrs. Underwood went up ſtairs, he gave Mrs. Underwood five guineas, and ſaid to her, it is good to greaſe the wheels while the cart is going; I juſt ſpoke two or three words to him and went away, he came over again in a little while, and deſired I would go over with him to Evans's, I went and ſaw all the parties, Mr. Leonard Goodridge, Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge, and Mr. James Evans; Mr. Goodridge told me I muſt go to Mr. Gregory, for he was the party concerned, and we agreed among ourſelves how we ſhould make up a caſe to ſpeak to Mr. Gregory thereon: and I went to Mr. Gregory's houſe, and told him the whole of the caſe as agreed between us; Mr. Gregory deſired I would bring over the papers, and make a memorandum of all I had told him in writing; and, agreeable to ſeveral meetings we had had, I drew pretended inſtructions for the will of Mr. Sawtell, at my own houſe, and we examined the inſtructions with the draught to ſee that it was all fairly tranſcribed, I then left theſe ſuppoſed inſtructions and the draught of the will with Mr. Gregory, theſe are they: Mr. Gregory alſo deſired him to bring him a copy of the real will, of the 4th of November, of Mr. Sawtell's, and afterwards I went to Doctors Commons, where I gave this unfortunate teſtimony; about the 2d or 3d of April, Mr. Evans came to the public-houſe in Queen-ſtreet, in my neighbourhood, and ſent for me, I lived then in America-ſtreet, he ſaid to me, I think, Underwood, it is very proper we ſhould be ſecured for this buſineſs; ſays I, what do you think of it Mr. Evans, ſays he, I think we cannot have leſs than one thouſand pounds, and we ought to have ſecurity; I ſaid we muſt have a bond if we have any ſecurity at all, we can have no other; he told me to come over to Mr. Goodridge's, and he would back it; I came to Mr. Evans's, and Mr. Goodridge was ſent for, I opened the buſineſs, at length Mr. Goodridge agreed we ſhould have each a bond for four hundred pounds; accordingly on the 7th of April, I went over with two blank bonds to Mr. Evans's houſe, which I filled up for four hundred pounds each, and they were executed, I witneſſed Evans's, and Evans mine; after they were ſo executed, Goodridge ſaid he ſhould not like to have his bonds expoſed, and propoſed for Evans to keep both, and propoſed that they ſhould be ſealed up till the probate of the will was obtained; and as a ſecurity to myſelf I wrote a memorandum or undertaking, whereby Mr. Evans undertook to deliver me up a bond as ſoon as the probate was ſigned; this is the receipt Mr. Evans gave me for my bond, after which we had ſeveral meetings, I had at leaſt, and Mr. Gregory once or twice, at the houſe of Mr. Jenner, and I gave the evidence that has been ſtated in the Commons in ſupport of that will.

What became of all theſe papers afterwards?—Thoſe papers that were executed on the 7th of April, the receipt for the bond and the undertaking I gave to Mrs. Underwood as ſoon as I brought them home, to put by, and ſhe unfortunately put them in her pocket, and ſhe kept them in her pocket till ſhe was brought to bed, and they were ſpoiled as they appear now; the receipt I gave to her on the 7th of April, the moment I came home, and I never had it in my cuſtody till November was twelvemonth, then I gave it up.

Are theſe the two ſheets that were in the cover?——They are, there are two pencil marks, under the ſeals, this is the cover that contained the true will.

Mr. Erſkine. After what I have ſaid of you, Sir, and more eſpecially of what you have ſaid of yourſelf, you may be very ſure that I ſhall not waſte many words upon you, and I hope it will be the laſt time I ſhall ever ſpeak to you; you know very well theſe unfortunate gentlemen at the bar have no opportunity of contradicting this buſineſs; how comes it you ſwore to the truth of this will before?——It is an unfortunate circumſtance that ever I became acquainted with the priſoners at the bar.

How do you think, as you did not ſwear the truth then, that the Jury can tell whether you ſwear the truth now?——That is to be left to the opinion of the Jury.

I believe you was in very great diſtreſs about the time this new light began to ſhine upon your mind?——I was in diſtreſs, I have a large family.

That is an excuſe that ſome other people have made in this country you know, you applied to Mr. Goodridge?——I did.

You wanted money?—I did.

But as for Mr. Slack, you never had any promiſes of money from him?——No, never.

Nor any expectation?——I cannot ſay that.

Then you have ſome expectation?——I had no expectation at all at the time I ſaid the information, the expectations which I had from Mr. Slack, were, they promiſed me they would go to my father and ſee what they could do for me.

Why you had an expectation of an advantage?—They told me if I would come along and tell the truth, they would do all they could with my father to ſerve me.

Nothing at all ſaid about money?—No, nor I never ſaid ſo to any body.

Do you happen to know a perſon by the name of Jacques?—I never heard of ſuch a man.

Perhaps there is no ſuch man living, you ſhall know preſently?——With all my heart.

You never ſaid that Slack offered you a thouſand pounds?—Never in my life.

And that God knew that you had not a ſhilling, and you hoped he would direct you for the beſt?——I never ſaid ſo, as to God directing me for the beſt, I wrote a letter to Mr. Leonard Goodridge, which may be produced.

Then you never did ſay to a perſon of the name of Jacques that Mr. Slack had offered you a thouſand pounds, in order that you may ſwear for him, and that you hoped God would direct you for the beſt, you never ſaid ſo to Mr. Jacques?——No, nor any thing to that effect.

Might you be at Mr. Goodridge's houſe about the 24th of November?—I was.

Do not you know that Mr. Jacques lived in that houſe of Leonard Goodridge's at that time?——I do not know that, I never did ſay that, nor any thing like it, I never ſaid I was expoſed to temptations by Mr. Slack.

Was there not a promiſe from Mr. Slack and ſeveral other gentlemen that they would go to your father and get things ſet right if you would come in and ſwear this?——No, if I would do the thing that was right.

What was that?——To let the right owner have the property.

What converſation had you with Mr. Slack and other gentlemen?——No promiſes of pecuniary aſſiſtance whatever, they promiſed if I would come forward and do what was right, they would ſpeak to my father.

I think you ſay that this receipt for the bond you firſt wrote over on the 6th of April, when Mr. Goodridge was ſent for and came, what time of the day was it?——I believe it was in the afternoon, it was the day before the bonds were executed, and the bonds were executed on the 7th of April.

Goodridge came over to Evans's houſe on the 6th of April, and you ſaw Evans and Goodridge at Evans's houſe, was it in the afternoon or forenoon?——I cannot ſay which.

What time was the bond executed?——It was as ſoon as the candles were lighted.

Now ſuppoſe it ſhould turn out that it ſhould be utterly impoſſible that a ſyllable of this ſhould be true?——I cannot think that.

You ſhall ſee in a minute, you was examined before Dr. Ducarell?—I was.

Now here is a third depoſition that contradicts both theſe, here is your affidavit before Dr. Ducarell has no reference to either, you have been pleaſed to ſay to night that the old will was copied at Sawtell's?—Yes, that I poſitively ſwear.

Did you always ſwear that now, even when you got into the right path, and was to do what was right under thoſe promiſes?—I am perfectly aware of what you have got in your hand.

But I am not perfectly aware of what you have got in your head; you have ſaid juſt now to the Jury, you poſitively ſwore that you are poſitively ſure that the old will was copied at Sawtell's, now this was when you began to be a good boy; mind, your affidavit runs thus, "and that he this deponent afterwards, by the expreſs deſire of Evans and Goodridge, went to the ſaid Evans's, on or about the 22d of January, 1783, when the ſaid will of Thomas Sawtell was produced in favour of Slack and Atkinſon?"—I did not take it at Evans's houſe.

How came you to ſwear it then; mind, before you took that depoſition in the Commons, you made affidavit before Dr. Ducarell?—I did.

In this affidavit, which was the firſt you ſwore after theſe promiſes of Mr. Slack, you ſay that the old will was copied at the houſe of Evans, when you came into the Commons you ſwore the contrary, and now to night you confirm the contradiction of this?——I will give the Court an account of the reaſon why this affidavit was made, there was then no notice taken of this being a forgery, and ſo this was made becauſe

I did not think they would be ſo fool-hardy to have appeared here on ſuch an affair as this, I did not criminate ſo much as I ſhould.

I know that you are in a truly ridiculous light?——It poſitively was copied at Sawtell's houſe.

And you ſwore the contrary twice over on both ſides of the queſtion?—Mr. Slack nor none of the parties knew the criminality of the buſineſs till I ſurrendered at Bow-ſtreet.

You appeared perſonally, (Reads) "John Underwood of New George-ſtreet, in the pariſh of Chriſt-Church, in the county of Surry (he calls himſelf a gentleman!) maketh oath that he is the writer of the two ſheets of paper, and was firſt conſulted upon, in the houſe of the ſaid Evans on Saffron-hill, and aſked if he this deponent would draw a will, &c. that afterwards, by the expreſs deſire of Evans and Goodridge, he went to the ſaid Evans's houſe in and about the 22d of January, 1783, when the ſaid will in favour of Slack and Atkinſon was produced by this deponent;" now, obſerve Mr. Underwood, you, who did not want to criminate theſe men, charge them with a direct and palpable forgery, "and this deponent, upon his oath, ſaith that he never received any inſtructions from the deceaſed:" Why do you mean to ſay there is no crimination here againſt theſe men?——I mean to ſay that when I drew that affidavit I was in hopes they would have given up the matter, I certainly had given up the matter.

Then was that your reaſon, becauſe you thought they would give it up upon your affidavit, did you, therefore, wilfully give it up upon your own affidavit, and did you draw it falſely inſtead of truly?——There was nobody knew it was a forgery till I went to Bow-ſtreet; I did not want to prove the deſtroying the will to criminate ſo much as that: On the 7th of April, as ſoon as I went home I gave the receipt for the bond to my wife, I am poſitive ſure of that.

Now, as this is not true, is all the reſt a lye?—I cannot think that; and ſhe kept it till ſome time in November.

(Reads.) "That accordingly the ſaid bonds were reſpectively ſealed up and given to the ſaid James Evans, who gave a receipt, and deponent ſays the ſaid undertaking remained in his cuſtody till about the latter end of November laſt, when he delivered up the ſame.——The examiner miſunderſtood me.

Was it read to you?—Yes.

Did you ſign it?—I did.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you ſhew Mr. Gregory the draught with the ſeals torn off?—I had it in my hands.

Court. Do you mean the will dated the 23d of January?—Yes.

Did Mr. Gregory examine thoſe papers?——I read them over, and he had the inſtructions.

Then Mr. Gregory muſt have ſeen this cancelled will?——He muſt ſee it.

Mr. Silveſter. What were the promiſes that were made?——That if I would come forward and do the thing that was right they would take care I ſhould not be hurt, and they would take care to do every thing that they could with my father to reſtore me to his favour.

This affidavit that has been talked of by Mr. Erſkine, was that made prior to your going to Bow-ſtreet?——Three weeks or or a month before.

Had the priſoners then been charged with the forgery?—No.

Did any body know of it?—No.

Where were theſe receipts and papers kept?—They were kept in a drawer in my houſe.

The receipt and the inſtructions read to the Jury.

The inſtructions for the will read.

"No. 1. Inſtructions for Mr. Thomas Sawtell's will, 1782; Mary Allen, my ſiſter, the ſum of twenty pounds yearly and quarterly payments; Gilbert Sawtell, by his laſt will and teſtament."

Mr. Mumford. This was the cover in which was incloſed the real will, it was in the iron cheſt, there is no ſubſtantial difference in the legacies, here is a recital of twenty pounds a year, I am in doubt whether it was not twenty-two pounds a year, the reſidue is the ſame, only given to Goodridge inſtead of Slack.

Were the former wills correſpondent?—The ſame legatees and the ſame executor, this draught has a legacy to Mr. Falkner, I never altered it, I only made it a new will by re-executing it.

The will read as ſet forth in the indictment.

Is there any mention of any legacies to the Goodridges in any of the former wills? Certainly not.

Was Daniel Slack preſent at either of theſe conſultations?——No, I ſhould not know him if I was to ſee him.

At the times, had you any particular way of doing buſineſs, or any particular hour of doing buſineſs?——He deſired me to be there by ten in the morning.

Mr. Pigott. Robert Slack is the brother of Daniel Slack, he has no children, perhaps it might ſo happen by accident or otherwiſe, that Robert Slack was preſent, though Daniel was not?—He was preſent certainly.

Was he a witneſs to any of them?—No, Sir.

Sir T. Davenport. Did this man take any part at all?—Certainly not, he was at his houſe, and at his buſineſs.

Did he live at Sawtell's?—He was principally there, he was very frequently there, he had the conduct and management of the old gentleman's concerns in ſome meaſure, he uſed to attend him backwards and forwards to different places.

THOMAS NORTHOLDER ſworn.

Mr. Robert Slack fetched me as a witneſs to a will of Mr. Thomas Sawtell's, he ſent for me, and ſaid he muſt trouble me once more, I had witneſſed a will of his.

Was he in perfect poſſeſſion of his mind at that time?——Yes, as much as I have known him for twenty years.

Mr. Sheppard. Do you ſerve Mr. Robert Slack with meat?—No, Sir.

Mr. Robert Slack fetched you, I think you ſay?—Yes.

JOSEPH BAKER ſworn.

Do you remember at any time witneſſing a will of Mr. Sawtell?—Yes.

What did he ſay?—When I came he deſired me to ſet down, he wanted me to witneſs his will, I was not there five minutes before the execution was over.

Mr. Garrow. Who applied to you?—Young Mr. Slack, he came for me by order of Mr. Sawtell.

ANN UNDERWOOD ſworn.

When was you firſt acquainted with any of the priſoners at the bar?—My firſt acquaintance with Nathaniel Goodridge was the beginning of November, 1782.

What occaſioned your knowing them?—The occaſion of my knowing them was, a perſon recommended me to buy ſome things of Mrs. Goodridge, the wife of Nathaniel Goodridge, ſhe had ſome things to ſell for Mr. Evans.

What were the things?——Gowns and petticoats, my huſband was out twice, once till two in the morning.

Did you buy any?—Yes, Sir.

Do you recollect to what amount?——Yes, Sir, five pounds.

Do you remember Mr. Goodridge's, either one or the other, coming to your huſband?—I think, as near as I can recollect, it was about the firſt week in January, 1783.

Do you recollect whether at any time your huſband being out till late?—Yes, Sir, he was out till four in the morning; Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge came to our houſe, I think, the firſt week in January, and the converſation with him I overheard; I was not immediately let into the light of it, but they wanted me to go to Mr. Aſſiott to get him to write the name of Thomas Sawtell on two ſheets of paper.

Are theſe the papers or not (ſhewing them to her) have you any reaſon independent of what Mr. Underwood told you for knowing theſe ſheets?—Yes, here is a pencil mark under one of theſe ſheets.

Are theſe the ſame papers that you obſerved when Nathaniel was there?—Yes.

Aſte

After he was gone you obſerved a pencil mark?——Yes.

Did you hear at any time while Nathaniel was there, what purpoſe theſe papers were for, or what mark?—Yes, Affiotti was to write the name, and Mr. Underwood, or ſomebody was to fill up the will.

Did that paſs while Nathaniel was there?—Yes, about a day or two after Nathaniel came.

What did paſs, or did any thing paſs concerning the purpoſe of that viſit, while Nathaniel was there?—The ſecond time Nathaniel brought two ſeals, and we were to get a ſeal engraved from that impreſſion, which was in red wax, I was to have got them done; and the third time in January, I recollect my huſband was invited by Nathaniel to dinner, he came about Friday and aſked for Mr. Underwood to dine with him on the Sunday, I think that was the 26th.

Did he mention the purpoſe for which he was to dine with him, or any thing that was to be done?——The purpoſe of his dining there was in order to take a copy of the will, becauſe they thought it was of too late a date, in order to antedate it.

Who ſaid that?——Nathaniel Goodridge.

What was the date of that will?——I think the 23d of January.

Did he give any reaſon why it muſt be an earlier date?—No, my huſband dined out on that Sunday, but I do not know where he was; a journeyman of Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge's brought the intelligence that Mr. Sawtell was dead; Leonard Goodridge was at our houſe that day; the firſt time Nathaniel came, and young Goodridge, Leonard Goodridge, came after, whom I did not know, and they went out together for a little while, when they came back he gave me five guineas, and ſaid, while the cart was going it was fit to greaſe the wheels, going down ſtairs he ſhook Underwood by the hand, and hoped they would all ſtand true to each other; on the Monday following Mr. Goodridge came over to our houſe again, and I heard him ſay that Mr. Underwood was to go to Mr. Gregory, his attorney, and take all the papers, and that it was proper there ſhould be ſome inſtructions, and Mr. Underwood drew ſome papers on the table, I ſet by him while he wrote the inſtructions which he was to carry to Mr. Gregory; Mr. Underwood wrote ſome inſtructions on a ſheet of paper, I ſhould know them.

Are theſe they?—(looks at them.) Theſe are the inſtructions, a copy of theſe were taken ſoon after the latter end of February.

Was that paper the paper that was carried to Mr. Gregory?——That remained with me, there was left in my cuſtody, by Mr. Underwood, a receipt for the bond, and the copies of two wills.

This is one, what became of the other?——The other was burnt becauſe it was ſo much ſpoiled, I had theſe papers the 7th of April, at night, 1783, the firſt time I had it.

Did you happen to ſee Evans whilſt you had that paper or that receipt, did any thing paſs?—Yes.

Relate what that was?——In the month of June, 1783, I was obliged to go to the Fleet; I went to Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge's houſe, and there was Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge and Mr. Evans at ſupper, I aſked them if they would let Mr. Underwood have any money, I ſaid I had the receipt for the bond in my pocket, and it was very odd they would not let me have ſome money or give me the bond, they ſaid it did not matter, it was only a conditional one.

Which of them ſaid that?—I think it was Evans.

Did you make any anſwer, or did any thing more paſs?—I ſaid, that Mr. Underwood ſaid he would arreſt Mr. Evans for the bond, then I went away; Mr. Evans advanced five guineas more in October following.

Did he accompany that advance of the money with any thing ſaid?——He ſaid it was not in his power to advance any more.

Did you keep that receipt and thoſe other papers?——Yes, I kept them till

November, till they went into the Commons.

Mr. Erſkine. You live with your huſband?—Yes.

And have done conſtantly, I take it for granted?—At all times, when I could, when he was in confinement, I was as much with him as could be.

How much was you in this ſcene of wickedneſs?——I knew he was doing a wrong thing.

You did, you knew from the beginning to the end, that there was a wicked contrivance to defraud Mr. Slack, and you was quite happy and contented at all this?——Not very contented, I was affraid to divulge it; on Sunday the 16th, Mr. Underwood wrote the inſtructions on a ſheet of paper.

You think yourſelf bound to obey your huſband more than you are to obey God or any other man?——Yes.

Then perhaps that operates a little upon your mind to day?——Yes.

It would not have been very pleaſing to your huſband if you was to give the lie to every thing he ſaid, you would have a battle at night?——No, I do not think that, I wiſh always to go with my huſband, and would not tell an untruth.

How came you not to tell about this forged will?——I was not aſked.

What was the greaſing of your cart wheels, did not your huſband at the time he gave information about this will, ſay, whether he was not reduced to the very loweſt diſtreſs in the world?—He wanted money to carry on his buſineſs.

Was not he reduced to extreme poverty, almoſt in great diſtreſs, it ſurpriſes me that you ſhould be ſo glib about the dates of theſe wills, the 23d of December, and the 14th of November, had not you theſe circumſtances from your huſband?——No, Sir, they are circumſtances that I was intimate with, I knew the 23d of January from other circumſtances.

How came you to be ſo certain about the day that the will was dated?——Leonard Goodridge I ſaw on the 9th of February at our houſe, I am poſitive ſure of it, it was in the afternoon about four o'clock, or between four and five.

Am I to rely upon you for the truth of theſe circumſtances?——Yes.

Have you any doubt about it?——No, Sir, I ſaw Leonard Goodridge between four and five, on the 9th of February, the day that Sawtell died, at Underwood's, between four and five in the afternoon.

I think it was at ſupper you ſaw theſe people, and that you ſaid that it was very hard that you could not get either money or bond?——Yes.

You ſaid your huſband would arreſt them?—Yes.

Are you ſure you ſaid nothing more than that?——I do not know that I did.

You did not threaten them with any thing further?—Not that I know of.

You did not make uſe of any threatening expreſſions to them, as if you thought they were connected with ſome villainous buſineſs?——That was all that paſſed.

You have been examined before?——In the Commons.

Now let us ſee (reads) "and that ſhe had the receipt in her pocket, upon which ſhe threatened them, that if they would not relieve her huſband, they muſt abide by the conſequences?—I ſwore that at the Commons, I have ſaid ſo to Nathaniel a many times, I heard my huſband ſay there was likely to be an oppoſition.

You have had many converſations with your huſband about all this buſineſs?——No, I have not, I do not like to mention it.

You have taken him you know, for better for worſe, and change as he changes.

Sir Thomas. By the conſequence you meant an arreſt?——Yes.

Mr. Erſkine. If I underſtand you right, you ſaid, a pencil mark was put by your huſband at the place where Affiotti was to write the name of Sawtell?—Yes.

Now look for the place?——This is the place.

(Points out the outer marginal part of the outer margin.)

Your huſband is grown very fat, who maintains him?—I believe Mr. Slack's attorney has paid for the bills.

You are very well fed and very well taken care of?——We are not in want of any thing.

That pencil mark is made in the place where Affiotti was to write Mr. Sawtell's name?——Yes.

Was it made before the ſeal was put on?—Yes.

SUSAN UNDERWOOD ſworn.

Mr. Fielding. How old are you?——Seventeen, I know Nathaniel Goodridge.

Was you ever ſent with a letter by your father to him?——Yes, I think it was about the month of September, I cannot ſay whether it was September or October, it was in the year 1783.

Mr. Pigott. Did you ever read the contents of that letter?—No.

Mr. Fielding. What paſſed between Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge and you?——His wife was in company with him at breakfaſt, ſhe ſaid, money was exceedingly ſcarce, and they did not know how they ſhould get it; Mrs. Goodridge ſaid, ſhe ſuppoſed I knew the contents of the letter, I ſaid, I knew the greateſt part of it.

Did they give you any money?—They gave my father money, I was in an adjoining room, I heard the money.

Did you ſee them deliver the money to you father?——No, Sir, I did not liſten to the converſation, but I heard the chinking of money, I ſaw my father give ſome to my mother.

Did any thing more paſs between you and Nathaniel Goodridge than what you have related.

Mr. Pigott. Your father had a law ſuit for Mrs. Reeves?——No, Sir, that affair was over.

Was not that application for money that Mrs. Reeves owed your father for that law ſuit?——Not to my knowledge, my father in that letter threatened to arreſt Mrs. Reeve, if Nathaniel Goodridge did not ſend the money.

Mr. Fielding. Did you know the contents of the letter?—Yes.

How far?——That he was in want of money, and that he deſired them to ſend ſome, and if they did not, he would arreſt Mrs. Reeves.

THOMAS PULLEN ſworn.

I live with Mr. Bogg the proctor, I know there is a ſuit in which he is concerned for Mrs. Edith Spence, his next of kin, I know very little of the matter.

Court to Nathaniel Goodridge. Have you any thing to ſay in your defence?—I leave it to my counſel, my Lord.

Court to Leonard Goodridge. Have you any thing to ſay?—I leave it to my counſel, my Lord.

Court to James Evans. Have you any thing to ſay?—No, my Lord.

Mr. Erſkine. On the part of the priſoners, your Lordſhip and the Jury very very well know, that it is out of our power to make any obſervations on the evidence, therefore I am perſuaded you will give me leave to ſtate to your Lordſhip, what I call my witneſſes to.

Court. No.

Mr. Erſkine. I never yet heard the objection made in my life.

Sir T. Davenport. I am very much affraid of a ſpeech.

Mr. Erſkine. I wiſhed that the Court and Jury might have underſtood what I call my witneſſes to, but as I muſt not explain it, you Gentlemen of the Jury muſt pick out the defence as you can, you muſt hear it, and pick it out as you can; but, however, I may aſk you whether you have the dates of the 6th and 7th of April, and the 9th of February, when this bond was ſaid to be executed, upon the 6th of April it was ſettled that it ſhould be done on the 7th of April, and after the candles were lighted, on the 7th, the bonds were executed, and the receipt was given; on the 9th of February, Leonard Goodridge is ſtated by Underwood and his wife to have ſaid that the wheels ſhould be greaſed.

THOMAS POLLARD ſworn.

Are you acquainted with the priſoner Leonard Goodridge?—Yes.

What are you?—A ſtone-maſon.

Where do you live?—In Clerkenwell-cloſe; I have heard a good deal about Leonard Goodridge, on the 9th of February 1783 in the afternoon, which was the day that Sawtell died.

Now, do you happen to know where Leonard Goodridge was on that day, from what time to what time?—I was invited to dine with Leonard Goodridge on Sunday the 9th day of February, and I went to his houſe a little before two, and we dined at half after two, and I drank tea, and ſtaid there till paſt ten o'clock; I do not know that he ever was out of my company.

Can you take upon you to ſay, that he remained at his own houſe during the time that you was there?——He never was out of the houſe, I dare ſay, I can take upon myſelf to ſay he never was in his yard, I cannot ſay, but he never was in the ſtreet.

Who dined there beſides?—There was one Mr. Collier, Mrs. Collier, and Mr. Collier's wife ſiſter.

Then you are ſure of the day?—Yes, I am ſure, I have a book in my pocket that will give you a good ſatisfaction about it.

When was the entry made?—The next morning, I have made entries for twenty years.

Let us ſee what you have got in it (Reads) dined at Goodridges?—I poſitively do ſay it, that on Sunday the 9th of February, I dined at Mr. Goodridge's, with Mr. and Mrs. Collier, and I do not think he was out once.

Do you recollect going on the 6th of April any where?—Yes, I do, very well.

Where did you go on the 6th of April?—I went to Barnet, beyond the twelve mile ſtone, Mr. Evans the priſoner went with me, I breakfaſted at Mr. Evans's houſe, about eight on Sunday morning the 6th of April, as I went with him to Barnet, we went to Hendon, and dined by Finchley church, and ſlept at the Mitre, at Barnet; I was employed to meaſure a piece of ground, and tell the value of it, for him to make a purchaſe off.

At what time did you ſet out to return to London?——We dined on Finchley-common, and we came to London between ten and eleven at night.

You are ſure you did not get to town till that time?——Yes, we went to his houſe, we walked all the way, and I ſtaid till near twelve at night on the 7th.

Now, I will tell you a thing that will ſurpriſe you a little; it has been ſaid here to day that Mr. Evans executed a bond on that day at his own houſe?——I can ſay nothing to that, I know he was along with me from Sunday morning eight o'clock, till Monday night twelve o'clock.

Have you any more doubt about what you have been telling the Jury, than you have of your own exiſtence?——No, Sir, it is as true as I ſtand here.

Jury. Have you that in your diary?—Yes.

Now, Mr. Pollard, where was this ground you was meaſuring?—The ground belongs to Mr. Emmery, I am poſitive ſure I was in company with Mr. Evans from eight o'clock on Sunday morning, till near twelve on Monday night.

Did you meet any body coming to town or ſee any body?—No, not that I knew, but there was a man overtook us ſomewhere on this ſide Finchley-common, he was a ſtranger to me, but the man ſpoke to Mr. Evans, and he came along with us.

Sir T. Davenport. As you are ſo very regular, can you tell the day you committed the firſt act of bankruptcy?——I cannot tell you, I never was a bankrupt in my days.

No commiſſion?—No, Sir.

Never any taken out?—No, Sir.

Do you remember the day your creditors met in order to make a compoſition?——I ſuppoſe I may.

When was the day you made a compoſition with your creditors?——I never made a compoſition with my creditors in my life.

Did you ever meet them?——Yes, it was in the year 1781, I ſuppoſe.

In what month in 1781?——It might be ſomewhere in November or December; I was arreſted ſeveral times, and I called my creditors together, and great part of them are paid, and all the money I owe in England, is not above eighty or ninety pounds.

Will you be correct to the month you met your creditors to compound with them?—I cannot.

Have you no memorandum of that?—I ſuppoſe I may at home.

Have you or have you not, have you your books for 1781?—Yes, I will ſhew you ſomething about it; on the 13th day of December 1781, I was arreſted by a Dr. Bull, for eighteen pounds ſeven ſhillings, and this Doctor I gave him ſome money, I paid him the remainder ſince, I I have no entry of the compounding, for the lawyers run away with all the caſh.

Will you ſhew me in this book any entry of your dining at any other place beſides this time?—I do not know that I can, but you may ſee by the complection of my countenance that I am not to be brow beat; I am a man that do not dine very often at a private houſe.

Now I will give you the whole year of 1781 to find me another entry except that.

Mr. Erſkine. You made that entry about the 6th or 7th of April, on the ſpot?——I made it in the field on the ſpot.

Sir T. Davenport. It was very material to enter this dinner, you can tell exactly what you had for dinner at Goodridge's?—We had a haunch of mutton, and boiled beef, and there was a pye, I believe it was a damſon pye, I am not ſure.

How many minutes walk is it from that place to Underwood's houſe?——I do not know where Underwood lived, it is in the Borough, it would take an hour and a half to walk there and back.

When was you firſt called upon, and did firſt diſcloſe this matter?—I ſuppoſe it may be four or five months ago.

Who applied to you?—Leonard Goodridge aſked if I could tell the time that I dined at his houſe, he did not tell me the time, I told him by eight or nine o'clock I was merry.

Have you been frequently in the priſon to ſee them?—I ſuppoſe I have been there forty times, I am intimate with them all, and if you was there I would go to ſee you.

Why did you enter that dinner?——My reaſon is this, I had ſome buſineſs to do with Goodridge, I have no entry about any other dinner, there is another entry in that book of dining with him on Tueſday the 7th of January.

Had not ſomething paſſed on the 7th of January about a will?—I never heard any converſation about any thing being done about a will.

Mr. Erſkine. I obſerve, on the 7th of January you loſt a ſhilling at cards, and on the 9th of February, you gave a ſhilling to the ſervant.

THOMAS COLLIER ſworn.

I dined at Mr. Leonard Goodridge's on Sunday, while Mr. Sawtell lay dead.

Was any body expected to come there to dinner?—Yes.

Who was expected?—Nathaniel Goodridge did not dine there.

Did Pollard dine there?—I do not recollect that circumſtance.

What time did you dine?——About half paſt one, I ſtaid there till ſeven.

During that time was Leonard Goodridge abſent from his own houſe for any time?—I do not recollect.

Mr. Silveſter. When was it?——It was on Sunday, I was told that Mr. Sawtell died that morning; I made no memorandum, I do not recollect Pollard there, my wife was there, ſhe is not here.

JOHN JAQUES ſworn.

I lived ſervant with Nathaniel Goodridge, in 1784; I am a carpenter, I worked with him.

Do you remember in 1784, Underwood's coming to him?—Yes, it was the 24th of November.

Did you hear any converſation between

Underwood and Leonard Goodridge, when he came?——Yes.

What was it?—Mr. Underwood came to Mr. Goodridges's houſe about eight in the morning, he aſked if Goodridge was at home, I ſaid, yes, Underwood was in the kitchen, Goodridge came down and aſked Underwood how he did, Underwood ſaid, he did not know how he did, for it was a ſad thing to be tempted; he had been with Mr. Slack the night before, and he had offered him a thouſand pounds to do what he could on his ſide, and on his behalf; he hoped God would direct him for the beſt, for he would not ſtarve, nor his family, even at the hazard of his life; Mr. Goodridge made anſwer, and ſaid, he would have nothing to do with him or Mr. Slack either.

Mr. Fielding. You have known Leonard Goodridge ſometime, I take it for granted?—Yes.

Where may you live now?—No. 219, St. John's-ſtreet, the laſt perſon I worked with was Mr. Cox; I never made any depoſitions in the Commons.

You never have been ſent for?——No.

When was it you was deſired to come here?——The firſt ſeſſion after they were indicted.

Where was Leonard Goodridge at this time?——He was in the work-ſhop, I was going out, and Underwood was at the door, I opened the door for him; I was in the kitchen when he came, where there was ſome ſpikes and nails, they were in the kitchen then.

Underwood made uſe of this declaration in your preſence and hearing?——Yes.

PHILIP HUMPHRIES ſworn.

I am acquainted with Evans, I formerly kept a public houſe in St. John's-ſtreet; I remember ſeeing Evans on the 7th of April 1783, about ſeven in the evening, I was on this ſide the dirt-houſe, between that and Highgate, there was a gentleman with him, but I do not know who he was, we walked together.

What time did you come to town?——It might be very nigh nine, we came home a little before eleven: I know the day, becauſe I went to ſee a perſon, I never parted from them till I came to town.

SAMUEL HILL ſworn.

I was a fellow ſervant at Goodridge's with Dodſon.

Do you recollect when you came to London?——I was not in London till November 1783, I was at work at Mrs. Cloſes's, in Gutter-lane, I was making ſome ſtairs; I quitted Mr. Cox of Iſlington, to go to Mr. Goodridge's.

Did you go immediately there?—I did this job for Mrs. Cloſe, in Gutter-lane, in the month of November, 1783.

Mr. Silveſter. When did you begin to make memorandums?—I ſet that down.

Do you mean to ſwear that Dodſon worked there in 1783?——Yes, Fiſher Dodſon and me both worked together at Mrs. Cloſe's.

Have you any memorandum of the time?——Here is a memorandum I made as far as this, I had been at work at Mr. Jaques, and drew up a memorandum.

How will that prove that you was at work at Mrs. Cloſes's?——It was within the ſix or eight weeks that I worked for him.

Do you recollect a maid ſervant by the name of Nicklin?——I heard of her, and may have ſeen her, I never ſpoke to her that I know of.

Do not you remember an attorney in the back ſhop?——There was, I remember now, we came out of the ſhop together, and went and drank together, that was abou November 1783.

I ſuppoſe you told Mr. Goodridge wha you knew, when you heard of this?—No

Did not you declare that you kept ou of the way for fear of being met by th proſecutor?—No, Sir, I never was affrai of meeting any perſon.

Did you ever ſay you kept out of th way?——No,

Was not you applied to by the proſec tor to come here?——I had a ſubpœena come here.

W

Was not you applied to by the proſecution for to come here?——I was no further applied to than being ſupœned, I never declared to anybody that I kept out of the way for fear of being brought here on the part of the proſecution.

How came you to come here to prove this was on November, and not in January?——I cannot prove it any otherwiſe than in November, becauſe it was in November.

Mr. Erſkine. Had you ever been in Goodridge's ſervice before you went to Cox's?——No, I never was in his ſhop, the beginning of 1783, I did not know my way to the ſhop.

When you ſaw this man writing in the ſhop, it was in November 1783, and Sawtell had been dead nine months then?——Yes.

——— COX ſworn.

I am a carpenter, I employ men, I keep an account of the men I employ; I know Hill the laſt witneſs, I employed him, he came to work for me on the 21ſt of October 1783, he came on the Tueſday and left me on the Saturday night.

Mr. Silveſter. Do you know where he came from?——He was at work for Jaques.

Who was Jaques ſervant to?——Jaques was ſervant formerly to Goodridge.

Which of the Goodridges?——To Leonard Goodridge.

SUSANNAH CLOSE ſworn.

Do you recollect employing Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge to do any buſineſs for you as a carpenter?——Yes.

What was it?——To make a pair of cellar ſtairs.

Do you recollect at what time that was?——In November 1783.

You are perfectly ſure it was in November 1783?—Quite ſure.

Are you ſure it was not in January 1783?——No, Sir, it was in November, I recollect the time, I expected a gentleman out of the country, that was going to America, and he was to be with me a month; about the 18th of November, on a Saturday evening, they were finiſhed; Mr. Goodridge and both his men worked till twelve at night.

Who were both theſe men?——Hill and Fiſher.

Mr. Fielding. Are you ſure it was in November?—Yes.

Now, was it not in the year 1782?—No, 1783, I will ſhew the bill.

How came you here to day?——I was ſubpœned three days ago.

Mr. Sheppard. Was that the firſt time you was ever ſpoke to about it?—I was told ſome time ago, I might be called on, it may be ſix months, it may be ſeven months.

I am daughter to the laſt witneſs, I recollect Mr. Goodridge being employed to do ſome buſineſs for my mother perfectly well, making a ſet of cellar ſtairs, altering a bedſtead, and ſome other work, as near as I can recollect, it was about the middle of November 1783.

Can you poſſibly have made ſuch a miſtake as that it might have been in January 1783?—No, Sir, I am very ſure of that, I recollect that the work was finiſhed on the Saturday night, the lottery beginning to be drawn on the Monday, I know the ſtairs were made, becauſe we expected a gentleman out of the country about that time, who was going to America, he did not come, he altered his plan; I have no doubt at all about the time.

Who did the work?——Hill was one and Dodſon the other, Mr. Goodridge and his two men all attended together to finiſh the work.

Sir T. Davenport. How long had Hill been with Goodridge?——I cannot tell.

Had theſe men worked for you any time?——Yes, that was in the December before, both Dodſon and Hill, particularly Dodſon, I remember him, and I remember Hill too.

Mr. Garrow. You are ſure that the buſineſs of the ſtairs was done in November 1783?——I am perfectly ſure of that.

——— GREGORY ſworn.

Have you been in Court to day while Mr. Underwood was examined?—I have.

Have you attended his examination?—I did.

You attended particularly to his evidence, where he ſays, he held in his hand a draught with the ſeal torn off?——If it had been as he repreſented it, I muſt moſt certainly have ſeen it, any clerk to an attorney that had not been ſix months with him, muſt have made the obſervation; I want to ſee if that which Mr. Underwood brought into the Commons is the draught, (looks at it) I verily believe this is the draught he ſhewed me, and not the draught he ſpoke off, the draught he ſpoke off, he told me he had torn off the ſeal and the name, is it poſſible that that could have eſcaped my obſervation.

You think it could not?——It could not upon my oath, I verily believe he did not ſhew me ſuch a paper as he mentions, on the contrary, I believe this to be the draught that he ſhewed me, for this reaſon, he pointed out to me that when he attended Mr. Sawtell with this draught, Sawtell made mention to him that he had made a miſtake in two or three of the legacies, particularly that he had altered them with pencils, and that he had inſerted maintenance and clothing, and ſtruck out education, in my office he pointed out that to me; ſays he, here Sir, I have done it with a pencil.

Then Mr. Gregory, how can it be true that he ſhewed you a cancelled will, with the name and ſeals torn off?—I do not believe it.

At the time that Underwood came to you, to give you an account of what he had done, did he give you a clear account? One of the cleareſt accounts that ever was given by man.

Could you have had the leaſt idea from his declaration, that it was not a fair and juſt will?—No man could have had a ſhadow of doubt.

And he gave you this paper which he acknowledged to?——He gave me a copy of inſtructions, which he told me he took himſelf from the teſtator's own mouth at Nathaniel Goodridge's houſe, the 6th of November, I aſked him then, whether he drew any draught; he told me he did, I aſked him whether he read over the draught, he told me he did on the 9th of November, being Lord Mayor's day, that then the teſtator himſelf made the alterations which are in pencil and appear here; his account of the forged will, with the two ſeals torn off, I believe to be totally falſe on my oath.

Mr. Silveſter. You was, I believe, originally the attorney to the Goodridge's?—I was for Nathaniel.———

In ſhort you did all his buſineſs as an attorney?——For the two brothers, for ſome years.

When was the laſt time you did any buſineſs for them before this will was made?——I cannot ſay that.

Did not it ſtrike you as very odd that they ſhould employ Underwood to make a will?—The very reverſe, Sir, I underſtood it was Mr. Sawtell himſelf that employed Underwood, and not Goodridge, for the very moment Sawtell was dead, Nathaniel ſent to me, to come to his houſe on the morning he died, which was the morning of the 9th of February as repreſented to me, and ſent a parcel by Fiſher Dodſon, it was this will of the 14th of December 1782, I caſt my eye over it, and he deſired me to come to Mr. Sawtell's I ſtepped there directly, Nathaniel Goodridge opened the door and aſked me into the parlour, I gave it him, and he put it into his ſide pocket, and went into the parlour, that was the firſt time I had ſeen the will upon my oath; Daniel Slack was in the parlour then; a caveat being put in, I thought it very neceſſary to ſee the attorney who made the will, in order to aſk him proper queſtions concerning it; the next day after his death, I went with Nathaniel and Mr. Hunter his co-executor, to the Commons, in order to prove it, I did not want to ſee Underwood, till I found that a caveat was entered, when I did ſee Underwood, I aſked him firſt of all, whether he had been acquainted with the teſtator, he ſaid, he had, he ſaid, through a Chancery ſuit he had been concerned in for a Mrs. Reeve; I then aſked him whether he ever had taken any inſtructions, and from whom, about Mr. Sawtell's will; when he produced theſe inſtructions to me, I took them into my hand, I have a copy of them which he gave me.

On having the copy of them in your hand, it was examined by the original will he had in his hand?—No, Sir, the copy againſt the genuine inſtructions, not the inſtructions againſt the will, if he had held that in his hand I muſt have ſeen it, I had no ſuſpicion at the time, I believed it to be as fair a tranſaction as any in the world, I ſuppoſed Mr. Sawtell was in poſſeſſion of it; another circumſtance, I ſaw Mr. Underwood many times upon this buſineſs, and when it was given out that Daniel Slack, the preſent proſecutor, found out the cover of a former will, and two blank ſheets of paper, I aſked Underwood if he knew any thing of them, he ſaid no, he did not he declared.

Mr. Erſkine. How long have you known the Goodridges?—I ſuppoſe I have known Leonard Goodridge for twenty years or more, I have known Nathaniel Goodridge about fifteen years.

Have you known much of him?——Certainly, a great deal of him, I have employed them both in their reſpective capacities of carpenters and undertakers; if I was now called upon, on my oath, to name an honeſt man, or one man more honeſt than another, I do not know any two men that would ſooner have entered my mind, than Nathaniel Goodridge and Leonard Goodridge.

Theſe perſons were appriſed of theſe proſecutions, and if they had a mind to have eſcaped they might?——I was furniſhed by Mr. Sheppard, with a copy of the affidavit of Underwood againſt the will, I was greatly aſtoniſhed, I immediately went to Mr. Jenner the Proctor, and ſaw Mr. Jenner, Mr. Jenner himſelf immediately made application to the two Goodridges, in order to talk to them about the matter, Mr. Sheppard gave me a copy of the receipt of Evans, and I wrote a letter to him, and Evans received the letter and came up to town, I know he had the letter, and he came from Wales to meet the charge, and for fear he ſhould not on my letter, Nathaniel Goodridge went to fetch him; Nathaniel Goodridge came firſt to meet the charge, then Evans.

Had not they a full opportunity of eſcaping?——Certainly.

I need not aſk you after the very honourable character you have given of the two Goodridges, whether you believe it poſſible, that they could be capable of committing ſuch a crime?—I do not believe it, I have no reaſon.

Sir T. Davenport. Before you had an anſwer from Evans, did not Nathaniel Goodridge go down to Wales?—He did.

Had he any occaſion to go there but to ſee Evans?—That I cannot ſay.

But to your knowledge?—No, I believe he went to fetch him up.

WATSON HASWELL ſworn.

I lived with Nathaniel Goodridge, I knew Fiſher Dodſon, he lived there at the time I did, and I knew Elizabeth Nicklin, ſhe went away, and uſed to confiſcate and take ſome things belonging to Mr. Goodridge, I acquainted him of it, and he gave her a months wages and ſent her off in a fortnight; Dodſon and ſhe were very well acquainted, Dodſon had left Goodridge's ſervice ſome time before Nicklin.

Have you met Fiſher Dodſon at any time ſince Nicklin was turned away?——I have.

Had you any converſation with him about that circumſtance?—I had, he told me Goodridge had kicked up a fine row about parting with Betty, he ſaid he had no right to ſtop Betty's box, I ſaid he had, I ſaid if ſhe had nothing in her box but her own, ſhe need not have been afraid of his opening it, ſo he was very angry, very angry indeed, and made uſe of ſuch expreſſions, and d—nd Goodridge, and ſaid if ever he had it in his power he would do him a miſchief for ſtopping Betty's box.

Mr. Silveſter. When did Betty go away?——The latter end of June or the beginning of July, 1784.

Now he had gone away a week before that?——I do not recollect the particular time.

Was not it in 1783?——No, it was in 1784, I recollect it very well, it was ſoon after Mrs. Goodridge died, and I recollect her going away then, there was ſuch a [illegible] of work about it; Mrs. Goodridge died, it might be in February, 1784, I cannot properly ſay the time.

What reaſon have you to recollect that this happened in 1783, and not in 1784?——I have no particular reaſons, but I recollect it perfectly well, I recollect I was there at the time, and that it was 1784.

Have you put it down at all?——No, I cannot particularly recollect the time Mr. Sawtell died, I lodged at the houſe when Sawtell died, I cannot recollect properly when it was.

How ſoon after ſhe died did theſe perſons leave Goodridge's ſervice?——They left it after ſhe died, but I cannot recollect how many months.

Was it a few months?—I cannot recollect any particular time.

Was Hill there?—Yes, he worked with Dodſon, I did not work with him.

Do you recollect the time you went to lodge at Goodridge's?—It muſt be about the beginning of the year 1782, I remember they did work together, but not at the the time of Sawtell's death.

LAWRENCE GREEN ſworn.

I live, in Clerkenwell, I know Mr. Eames.

Have you ever had any converſation with Eames about his examination in the Commons?——Yes, I had once, I have ſpoke with him ſeveral times, I think the defendants had been in cuſtody three weeks, it was reported, that Mr. Eames had had an offer of five hundred pounds to be concerned in this forgery, I went to him, he declared to me that it was not true, and that what he ſaid, and that what he had ſworn in the Commons, which was on his firſt examination, was all that he knew; I was acquainted with Sawtell, I had dealings with him, the laſt money I paid him was the 2d of April, 1782, I paid him between one and two, I went to his houſe in Brook-ſtreet.

Who was there with him?—Mr. Slack's brother was there, he counted the money and wrote the receipt by the deſire of Mr. Sawtell, Mr. Sawtell ſaid I cannot ſee to write, Robert, write for me, and he wrote the receipt which I have here, and Robert Slack, after he had wrote it, ſaid, Sir, will you ſign it, he ſaid yes, I will, but I can hardly ſee, and he aſſiſted him to put his hand upon the paper, and he wrote his name, I know all the three priſoners, I have known Nathaniel about ſix or ſeven years, I have known Leonard about ten or eleven, and Mr. Evans ten or eleven.

What is the general reputation of the Goodridges as to honeſty?—I never heard the leaſt imputation upon them.

Is their character a good one?—Yes, I have always found it ſo.

You never heard a whiſper to the contrary?—Never.

Mr. Fielding. Sawtell ſigned his name —Yes, with the aſſiſtance of Mr. Robert Slack.

——— PARDON, Eſq. Under Sheriff ſworn.

Mr. Erſkine. You receive the rent and ground-rents of a certain audit upo

Saffro

Saffron-hill?——I did the 28th of October.

For what purpoſe?—To receive a part of the ground-rents for ſome ladies at Glouceſter, Mr. Sawtell was leſſee of ſome houſes; in October, 1782, I think the 28th of October, Sawtell came there to receive his rents, and brought Nathaniel Goodridge, and he ſaid he ſhould give him the rents, he ſtaid to dine, he ſaid he married a relation of his wife's.

——— CLARE ſworn.

I knew Mr. Sawtell, I am an attorney, but my principal buſineſs is receiving the rents for particular eſtates, to the amount of ſeven or eight thouſand pounds a year, I have met Mr. Sawtell ſeveral times, I have met him two or three times a week coming up Hatton-Garden, but in particular one morning, ſome time in the latter end of 1781, it was a Sabbath morning, when I got down my ſteps I ſaw Mr. Sawtell then nearly on the pavement, and I over took him, and I aſked him how he did, and he ſaid to me, as near as I can recollect, how do you do, he then took me by the arm and ſaid I ſhould go with him to Sagoe's coffee-houſe and have a diſh of coffee, I told him I was particularly engaged, I ſaid to him he was late, he ſaid he was vexed, he ſaid he wiſhed I would go with him to the coffee-houſe, for he wanted to conſult with me about his will or a will, I told him I hoped he had not lived to that age without making a will, he ſaid no, but he could not get one to his mind, he ſaid he wanted to do ſomething or to provide for a daughter or child, I then ſaid I did not know he had any children, he ſaid he had one that he reſpected or conſidered as a child, he ſaid ſhe was married to one Goodridge or Goodwich, and he was a carpenter and undertaker, and as hard-working a dog as any in England, there was ſome other little converſation, but by this time we had juſt got to Sagoe's coffee-houſe, I wiſhed him a good morning, but he took me by the hand and aſked me into the coffee-houſe, I told him I could not, but would call upon him another time, he ſaid if I would not go with him then I might be d—nd, he alſo ſaid, talking about his will, that they would not let him make a will to his mind, I do not know who he meant by they.

Mr. Silveſter. Where do you live?—In Hatton-ſtreet.

A houſekeeper?—Yes, Sir.

What are you?—I am an attorney; but my principal buſineſs is, I am employed by a gentleman at the bar to receive rents; it ſtruck me, as we were not vaſtly intimate, I had no kind of reſpect or regard for Mr. Sawtell, I had no wiſh to have done it if he had choſen it.

When was this?—I rather think it was about the month of September, 1781.

—— SAMUEL SNAPE ſworn.

I live at Iſlington.

Do you remember any time in November, and if you can tell us the day ſo much the better, that you ſaw Mr. Sawtell?—On Lord Mayor's day, 1782, I ſaw him in the parlour at Tallow Chandler's Hall, Nathaniel Goodridge was with him.

Did you ſit by Mr. Sawtell?—I ſat next to Mr. Goodridge.

Did Sawtell ſay any thing about Goodridge?—Yes, Mr. Goodridge ſtood behind Sawtell, and Sawtell turned about and ſaid, Goodridge, come and ſit down by me, you come to help me, you ſhall be my heir.

You are ſure you heard him ſay ſo?—Yes.

I believe they dined together there?—Yes, I was there, they behaved very ſociable and friendly to one another.

Mr. Silveſter. You dined there?——Yes.

And you and the old gentleman got pretty merry?—We were chearful.

He was not what you call a ſot?——He liked to help his neighbour.

Are you poſitive to the words that he made uſe of?——Yes.

Was you always ſure of the expreſſions that he made uſe of?——Yes, Sir, I think I was poſitive to the ſame I have ſaid.

In the Commons you ſaid " This deponent thinks he added the words, you know you are my heir, or to that effect, but cannot ſwear particularly to that particular.

Was this before or after dinner?—Before dinner.

Who did you ſit next to?—Mr. Goodridge, and he ſat next to Sawtell.

How long have you been deaf?——I am not very deaf.

LYDIA DUTHY ſworn.

Did you know Mr. Sawtell in his life time?—Yes, I was at Mr. Goodridge's on Lord Mayor's day, 1782.

Did you ſee Mr. Goodridge there?——Yes.

Who did he come in company with?—With Mr. Sawtell, he ſtaid there about an hour and a half, they ſeemed on very good terms, exceedingly ſo, they had been to Tallow Chandler's Hall to dinner, they went away together.

——— OLIVE ſworn.

You are a ſurgeon and an apothecary, I believe you attended Mr. Sawtell in his laſt illneſs?—I did.

Upon that occaſion had you any opportunity of ſeeing Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge, one of the priſoners at the bar?—Yes, Sir, I ſaw him, every time I went he always was attentive to him and ſeemed fond of having him about him to move him and to do the neceſſary buſineſs, he was generally there and ſeemed to be the acting perſon about him, and there was a man there about him pretty much, I began to attend him the beginning of December, 1782, I attended him about the firſt or ſecond week in February, till he died.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you ever ſee him there before December, 1782?—I do not recollect, I think I have ſeen him there, but I did not attend him before, I had attended in the family before, and I think once I attended him, it was about the 7th or 8th of December, I attended him a week, he had a variety of matters, there was the burning of his legs by ſitting by the fire.

How often did you attend him in a week?—Moſt likely I miſſed very few days in the whole time, my partner might go ſome days, I might one or two days be miſſing, I am very ſure it was but very few days in the latter part of the time, he was not capable, I do not think he was capable of going out after I ſaw him.

Mrs. WALLIS ſworn.

I knew Mr. Sawtell in his life time, I have converſed with him about Mrs. Goodridge.

What was the nature of that converſation?——I had been acquainted with Mr. Sawtell above twenty years, and in the courſe of that time I have always heard him ſpeak of Mrs. Goodridge, it was his whole diſcourſe to me, he never was eaſy but when ſhe did any thing for him that he wanted to be done.

Did you ever hear him ſay any thing of the nature of the relation between them?—Aye, a thouſand times, when her firſt huſband was dying, him and me went to the bed ſide, and he ſhook hands with Mr. Haines, ſays he, John, do not be uneaſy about your family, for I will do for them; and ſhe uſed to come to him every Sunday to dinner before ſhe married Nathaniel Goodridge; Mr. Sawtell told me Mr. Slack was no relation at all, and every thing was given to Mr. Goodridge.

Mr. Silveſter. What are you?——A woman I ſuppoſe.

What profeſſion are you?——A pawnbroker, I was acquainted with him a matter of twenty years, I was not acquainted with him after he left off buſineſs, I have ſeen him ſince.

How many years before he died had he left off buſineſs?—I cannot tell you.

How often did you ſee him after he left off buſineſs?——I cannot tell you that neither, I did not ſee him for twelve months, he gave her all his wife's clothes and one hundred pounds.

Did you ever hear him ſay any thing about his will?—Yes, Mrs. Goodridge came to me and was crying, I aſked her what was the matter, ſays ſhe my uncle has made his will to a cotton merchant, and his name is Slack, and ſhe deſired the favour of me to ſpeak to her uncle, and accordingly the next day he called upon me, and ſat down by me, I ſaid to him after all your promiſes to provide for Haines, you have made a will in favour of Slack, ſo ſays he, poh poh, ſhe is a good girl and I will do for her and her family, ſhe ſhall never want, which might be a year and a half before his death.

Was that before he retired from buſineſs, —I cannot tell you.

GEORGE MORRIS ſworn.

I have known the late Mr. Sawtell about ſixteen years and upwards, I have kept a ſhop in his neighbourhood very near fifteen years.

During all thoſe years have you known him?——Yes, except one time I was at ſea a little while, I knew Mrs. Goodridge, her name was Haines, I know ſhe always came to our houſe on every merry-making day, ſuch as his birth-day or a wedding-day, nothing went right without ſhe was preſent in his family, and among all his friends.

State to the Jury who was his principal favourite?—Mrs. Haines, afterwards Mrs. Goodridge.

Did there happen to be any remarkable likeneſs between them?——Yes, ſhe certainly was very much like him, he was more partial to her than any perſon I know.

Mr. Silveſter. When was this?——About ſixteen years ago.

That was during the life time of his wife?—Yes.

JAMES SAWTELL ſworn.

Was you acquainted with the late Mr. Sawtell?—No doubt of it.

Are you acquainted with Mrs. Goodridge?——I knew her when ſhe was Mrs. Haines, I knew her ſeven years.

Had you opportunities of obſerving whether Sawtell had affection and regard for her?—He generally had her there moſt days to dinner, he ſeemed to ſhew affection and regard, I never heard whether he intended to make any proviſion for her and her family.

—— FENTON ſworn.

The witneſſes on the allegation were examined in Auguſt, 1785?—Yes.

Was there any opportunity to anſwer theſe allegations but by an exceptive allegation?—Certainly not.

It is in contemplation to put in that exceptive allegation?—Yes.

Mr. Silveſter. You might have put it in if you choſe?——The allegation might have been in about this time.

Mr. Erſkine. I have a great many witneſſes to call to the character of the priſoners, but I wiſh to call witneſſes to ſhew who this Mr. Underwood is, we have fourſcore witneſſes to character.

Jury. We ſhall be ſatisfied with a fifth part.

Call the Rev. Mr. Sellon.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, pleaſe to let Mr. Sellon be examined firſt, for if he ſtays till the laſt, he will not be diſmiſſed time enough for his Sunday's lecture.

The Rev. Mr. SELLON ſworn.

I know Mr. Leonard Goodridge, of St. John-ſtreet, Clerkenwell, I have known him above twenty years, he lives in the pariſh of which I am miniſter, I have had ſome little dealings with him at times, and have been a witneſs of his proceedings and conduct as carpenter under the commiſſioners of the paving act, his behaviour has been that of a civil, ſober, induſtrious man, a man of probity, honeſty, and integrity; I never knew any harm of him, and indeed I never heard any harm, and as far as I can judge, from my own perſonal knowledge of his general character, I never could believe him to be guilty of the crime laid to his charge.

JOHN ARIS ſworn.

I know Leonard Goodridge, I am a very near neighbour, I always found him an honeſt man, that is his general character, he has taken ſeveral hundred pounds of my money, I know him to be a tender huſband and a good maſter.

Do you believe him a man capable of committing ſuch a wicked act as is laid to his charge?——I do not indeed upon my oath; I know Nathaniel Goodridge but not intimately.

JOHN HEAVEN ſworn.

I know all the priſoners, I have known Nathaniel Goodridge for ſeven or eight years, his brother about four years, and Mr. Evans the ſame; with reſpect to Leonard Goodridge I have had tranſactions with him in buſineſs, I am in the undertaking and appraiſing line, I have done buſineſs with Mr. Nathaniel Goodridge, and I have found him in all reſpects as honeſt and impartial a man as ever I met with in the whole courſe of my life, and do declare that I do believe him to be an honeſt man in all his tranſactions before this, of which I know nothing; I have had ſome dealing with Evans, with reſpect to collecting the rents, his general character as far as I know of him is that of a very honeſt man, he was always fair and ſquare in all his tranſactions with me.

——— SEARCH, Eſq. ſworn.

I am foreman of the Middleſex Grand Jury, I have known Leonard Goodridge for twelve or fourteen years, a diſtinguiſhed character for juſtice and honeſty.

Mr. Pigott. You have found him ſo and all the world who talked to you about him told you ſo?——Yes.

Mr. HALL ſworn.

I am a Common Council man, I am a builder, the priſoner Leonard Goodridge worked for me twenty years ago, I have known him particularly well ever ſince, I recommended him to my timber merchant, and he thanked me for recommending him ſo good a character, a very honeſt induſtrious man, I have recommended him to ſeveral hundred pounds worth of work that I might have done myſelf, becauſe he lived in the neighbourhood.

——— COLLIER ſworn.

I have known Leonard Goodridge ſeveral years, a very honeſt juſt man.

Did you ever hear a whiſper to his diſadvantage?—Never in the leaſt.

Never an inſinuation to his prejudice?—No.

Mr. Erſkine. All theſe liſts we hold in our hands are filled with names to character equally reſpectable.

Jury. We are ſatisfied as to the character.

NATHANIEL GOODRIDGE,
LEONARD GOODRIDGE,
JAMES EVANS,
} NOT GUILTY.

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

149. JOHN INGRAM was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d day of December laſt, two ſheets, value 10s. the property of Thomas Laidley.

The priſoner was taken with the ſheets upon him.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

150. GEORGE DYNE otherwiſe FARMER otherwiſe PALMER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th day of December laſt, ſeven linen ſhirts, value 30s. five cambric handkerchiefs, value 10s. a cotton handkerchief, value 2s. a cloth coat, value 20s. a pair of cotton ſtockings, value 2s. two pair of caſimere breeches, value 3s. the property of Aaron Goldhorne, in the dwelling-houſe of Catherine Davidſon.

AARON GOLDHORN ſworn.

I found the priſoner in the ſtreet with my ſhirt upon his back, I miſſed the things on the 5th of December, I lodge at the houſe of Catherine Davidſon, the things were in a bottom drawer, I cannot ſay whether the room door was locked or open, the drawers were open, I met the priſoner the 9th of December following in Ruſſel-ſtreet, at a quarter paſt ten coming from the play, I ſuſpected the priſoner by not returning again after the things were loſt, he lodged in the ſame houſe, one of the Bow-ſtreet officers was with me, and he was ſtopped, and one of my ſhirts with A. G. upon it, was found upon his back.

DAVID GORDON ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, I had theſe things of the priſoner either the 14th or 15th of December.

Do not you enter regularly in your books when things are pledged?——Yes, but I think it is either the 14th or 15th, he was taken up the ſame evening or the next day, he pawned them in the name of Palmer, I knew him, he had pawned ſeveral things with me before.

(The things produced and depoſed to.)

JOSEPH DAY ſworn.

I know the priſoner, he lodged with me at Catherine Davidſon's, and that night that the property was loſt he abſconded from his lodgings, and did not return any more, I did not come home that evening, but the next morning the proſecutor informed me he was robbed, I was with the proſecutor when he was taken up.

Court. What is the priſoner?—He is a doctor and apothecary.

What is the value of theſe things?——Twelve ſhillings.

What is the value of the ſhirt that was found upon him?——Three ſhillings.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was in the greateſt diſtreſs, I have been out of place a great while, and could get no ſituation for four months, I meant to return every article back.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 15s.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before
Mr. RECORDER.

---

151. WILLIAM BARTLETT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of January, one ſilver watch, value 20s. a ſteel chain, value 6d. and a ſteel ſeal, value 4d. the property of John Williamſon.

JOHN WILLIAMSON ſworn.

I loſt a ſilver watch laſt Friday night in the evening out of my pocket, I was going up Cornhill, and turning round the corner by the paſtry-cook's, I was joſtled about, and the priſoner took my watch, I felt it going, and I ſaw it in his hand.

By whom were you joſtled?——By that priſoner.

Did you ſee any other?——I ſaw him give the watch to another man, and I collared him directly, and took him into a ſhop and charged a conſtable with him, he denied it, but I ſaw it.

Mr. Scott one of Priſoner's Counſel. What time of the evening was it?—Between four and five.

Was not it duſk?——There were lights in the paſtry-cook's ſhop, but it was light enough to ſee the watch in the man's hand.

This was near a paſtry-cook's ſhop?——Yes.

Did not you ſtop to look into the paſtry-cook's ſhop?——I did not ſtop there.

Then you was paſſing through a crowd that had ſtopped?——Yes.

What was the firſt impediment that you found?——Two or three joſtled me, and I put my hand to my pocket to ſave my watch but I could not, nothing was found on the priſoner.

You ſaw ſomebody part with it?——I ſaw him part with it, I never loſt him.

JOHN RASTEN ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, this is a witneſs that can neither ſpeak nor hear.

MARTHA RASTEN ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. This woman is to be an interpreter to a dumb man, to which I object.

Are you ſworn?—Yes.

To interpret?—Yes, as far as my knowledge.

Swear her to all ſuch queſtions as ſhall be aſked of him.

Mr. Garrow. You are acquainted with this dumb man?—Yes.

What ſign have you to put theſe queſtions to him, what is the nature of an oath, by what ſign would you aſk him that queſtion?—We look up to heaven and ſhew him that he is to anſwer ſeriouſly.

Mr. Garrow objected to this witneſs being examined, but his objection was overruled by the Court.

Court. Can you interpret the oath to him, you have ſworn well and truly to interpret to John Raſten, a witneſs here produced on behalf of the King againſt William Bartlett, now a priſoner at the bar, the queſtions and demands made by the Court, and alſo well and truly interpret the anſwers made to them?——There may be ſome things I do not underſtand.

You cannot interpret farther than you know.

Court. I remember a deaf and dumb man being ſworn in the Common Pleas to ſuffer a fine?—I have interpreted the oath to him and he underſtands it.

Court. Aſk him if he has ſeen the priſoner before?—He ſhews me that he is poſitive to the priſoner.

Aſk him if he knows any thing of the offence which is charged againſt him; what he ſaw the priſoner do?—He ſhews me that he ſaw the priſoner get the watch behind him.

Aſk him if he knows how the priſoner came by the watch?—He ſhewed me he did not ſee it taken out of the pocket, only given behind.

Aſk him if he knows the perſon that loſt the watch?——He ſhewed me he never ſaw him before.

But did he know him now?——Yes, he points to him.

Aſk him how near he ſtood to Williamſon when he ſaw the watch in the priſoner's hand?—I underſtand him he was near, but I cannot anſwer how near, he ſhews me by the length of a yard but I cannot pretend to ſay to the ſpace.

Aſk him if he knows any more of the matter?——No more than the taking him to the conſtable.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had hold of my brother's arm looking paſt the paſtry-cook's ſhop, the corner of Cornhill, and this gentleman came up, there were fifty or ſixty people round me, up came this gentleman and told me I had his watch, I ſaid it was falſe, I never ſaw him before he took me into the paſtry-cook's, he charged a conſtable, he ſearched me and my brother, and found nothing upon us.

Court to Mrs. Raſten. Aſk your brother how far off he was when he ſaw him give the watch to another?——He ſhews me a very little way, but I cannot take upon me to ſay how near.

The Priſoner called three witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

152. JOHN DRURY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of January, one linen ſhirt, value 3s. the property of David Bullpeth.

DAVID BULLPETH ſworn.

I loſt my ſhirt at the bottom of Holborn-hill, out of my pocket, I found the priſoner's hand in my pocket, and I run after him and caught him, and I ſaw him put the ſhirt in another man's hand.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming down Holborn-hill a gentleman took me, I had no ſhirt about me.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

153. MICHAEL SOLOMONS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th day of January, three hundred and ſixty yards of gauze, value 15l. the property of Joſeph Savage, William Savage, and Samuel Savage.

——— STEVENSON ſworn.

I am ſhopman to the proſecutors, I was delivering ſome parcels out of a cart, and I ſaw the priſoner with two of the parcels under his arm, I run after him, he flung down the parcels and run away, he was purſued and taken, he was never out of my ſight.

(The gauze depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I was going to Fleet-market.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

154. JOHN DARBY (a negro) was indicted for burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of William Goſling about the hour of ten in the night, on the 28th day of December laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one wooden ſtock with twelve iron bits, value 20s. an iron ſcrew driver, value 6d. twelve braſs handles for hand organs, value 15s. one large ditto, value 1l. 11s. 6d. and divers other articles of braſs work, belonging to organs and other things, the property of John Piſtor and Edward Piſtor, and three iron ſaws, value 14s. one ſcrew driver and ſundry other tools the property of Valentine Fryer, in the ſaid dwelling-houſe.

VALENTINE FRYER ſworn.

I work in the houſe of William Goſling, he is a carpenter, I work for Meſſrs. Piſtors, organ builders, who rent part of his houſe for a work ſhop, I remember his houſe being broke open the 28th of December, at night, I left my tools there at eight, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, and one particular ſcrew-driver which I have in my hand now, which was made out of a ſword, and other things; the next day when I came in the morning, I miſſed them, and found this ſcrew-driver that was made out of the ſword in the ceiling belonging to the man where the priſoner carried the things to; when I came out at eight I ſecured the door, and at ſeven in the morning when I came it was open.

JOHN PISTOR ſworn.

I am an organ-builder, I have apartments at this houſe, none of my family ſleep in the premiſes, not in that part of it, but Mr. Goſling's family, none of whom are here; I was not there an hour the whole day; the things I loſt are produced by Mr. Edgar, I know nothing of the priſoner's taking theſe things but by his own confeſſion before Mr. Staples.

Is the confeſſion here?—There is none returned; William Wallis that is admitted an evidence is here.

Court. But I muſt firſt have ſome evidence that this man has done ſomething.

JOHN GILES ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Walker, at the Sugar-loaf public-houſe, in Great St. Helens, between ten and eleven I was ſtanding at our door talking to our watchman and the priſoner came along, now watchman, ſays the black, are you faſtened up here, and he ſaid let me through the wicket of the great gates; I ſaw the priſoner was a black man, I ſaw he had ſomething upon his ſhoulder, that was his way from the ſhop, and the next morning I heard the ſhop was robbed.

——— THOMPSON ſworn.

I am a watchman, I ſaw the priſoner go through the gate this night with two bags thrown upon his ſhoulders.

Court. Do not you think this was a great neglect of duty?——I think it was one of the carpenter's men.

Priſoner. Are you ſure it was me that came through at that time of night?——Yes, I will take my oath of it.

Court. Did you know him before?——I took notice of the colour of his dreſs, his hat, and trowſers, and every thing.

Not from the features of his face, did you ſee any body in company with him?—Nobody at all.

Court to Giles. Did you know the priſoner before?—Yes, I know it is the ſame man, I gave a deſcription of him immediately.

WILLIAM WALLIS ſworn.

I know the priſoner, he laid by my fire ſide that very night that he robbed the ſhop, he brought the tools to my lodgings.

Priſoner. Who gave me the bags that held theſe things?——I gave them to him, he aſked me to lend them to him.

Priſoner. He was the man that adviſed me to it, he was in the ſhop with me before he met me, and aſked me where I was going.

Court. That will not make your caſe better, to ſay he was a bad man and tempted you.

JOHN EDGAR ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I produce theſe things which I had from an old iron ſhop in Vincent-ſtreet, Piccadilly, the man's name is Heath, he is not here.

Court to Wallis. Do you know any thing about theſe things?——Yes, they were ſuch things as we have, but I cannot ſay they are the ſame.

Court. It is impoſſible to prove that theſe are the things that were ſtolen, having put no mark upon them.

Fryer. My Lord, his confeſſion was taken in writing.

Court. But it is not here, you cannot give evidence of that.

Fryer. I can ſwear to this ſcrew-driver which was made out of a hanger, which I took out of Wallis's lodging by the confeſſion of the priſoner.

Wallis. I know this ſcrew-driver, I ſaw the priſoner put it in the ceiling, the next morning he ſaid he would get it ſharpened and go on the highway.

Priſoner. How could I get out of the gate when the watchman was there, I have not a friend in the world.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 6d. but not of the burglary.

Tranſported for ſeven years to Africa.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

155. THOMAS ABBOTT, WILLIAM CHADWICK, and BARNEY CLARK were indicted for feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Walter Fitzgerald, between the hours of one and two in the afternoon, on the 2d day of January inſtant, he being therein, and others of his family, and feloniouſly ſtealing three pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 13s. his property.

WALTER FITZGERALD ſworn.

I live in Piccadilly, I had a gentleman in company with me in the parlour, which is about four or five yards off, I ſaw the priſoner Chadwick ſtanding at the window, it was about half paſt one, on the 2d day of January; I ſuſpected the boy, and I run out as hard as ever I could; I found the window broke, it had been broke before and mended; I run into the ſtreet, and about twenty yards from my door, I catched the three priſoners walking together, quite unconcerned, I hit Chadwick on the ſide of the head, and brought him into my ſhop, then I was not long in the ſhop, when theſe men here brought in the other boys; the ſtockings lay in the window that were ſtolen, and many more beſides theſe three pair; I can ſwear to Abbott and Chadwick, but I cannot ſwear to Clark.

DOMINICK ADLAM ſworn.

I was paſſing that way on the 2d of January, and I ſaw the proſecutor ſtruggling with one of the boys, I took him into the ſhop, and found this pair of ſtockings on the priſoner Abbott, theſe ſtockings I have had in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; the priſoner Clark was in company with the others.

(The ſtockings depoſed to.)

What are they worth?——This pair coſt me four ſhillings.

Adlam. I went out at this time, and I kicked two pair of ſilk ſtockings before me, I gave them to the proſecutor, who owned them, I did not ſee who dropped them, the three priſoners were ſtanding in the door way, they turned round and ſaid what is that, ſtockings, that you have picked up.

HUGH O'DANIEL ſworn.

The 3d of this month I was going up Piccadilly, I ſaw the three boys walking down, and I ſaw the proſecutor run after them; I ſaw the lad in the red jacket take two ſmall parcels, and throw them into a paſſage, I did not know what they were, it was Chadwick I ſaw throw down the two parcels, the others were there; I did not examine the parcels, I do not know what they contained, I ſaw them picked up.

PRISONER ABBOTT's DEFENCE.

Coming along the proſecutor laid hold of this boy and I did not know it.

Court to Abbott. What are you?——A grinder, my father lives in Oxford-road, he is a grinder about the ſtreets.

Court to Chadwick. What are you?—A chimney ſweeper.

Court to Clark. Do you give any account of yourſelf?——No, Sir.

THOMAS ABBOTT
WIL. CHADWICK } GUILTY, 4s. 6d.
BARNEY CLARK,

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

156. JOHN POWELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of December laſt, one quadrant made of wood and braſs, value 20s. ſix paper books, value 5s. a gimbler, value 1d. and a canvas bag, value 3d. the property of Hugh Montgomery.

HUGH MONTGOMERY ſworn.

I hired a man to take me in his boat, I deſired the man to go round to the veſſel to take me, he went off with the boat and the things, taking neither the boy nor me in, I do not know the priſoner.

EDWARD CAAVEN ſworn.

The priſoner came to the Dun-horſe, in the Borough, on the Saturday before Chriſtmas-day, at half paſt ten, he drank ſome beer, and ſaid he was diſtreſſed for a ſhilling, and he ſhewed the quadrant, which was the only thing I ſaw in his hand; I lent him a ſhilling upon it, he ſaid, it was his own property; he did not come to redeem it, and I knowing Mr. Gueſt to be an officer, I deſived it to him on the Monday; I never ſaw the priſoner before, but I am ſure he is the man I lent the ſhilling to, I am clear in it, I was two hours in his company.

MARMADUKE GUEST ſworn.

I produce the quadrant; it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, I had it from the laſt witneſs; I took the priſoner on the 26th, at the George, in George-yard, Blackman-ſtreet, he laid there; I went up into his room, and found theſe books.

(The things produced and depoſed to.)

WILLIAM MONTGOMERY ſworn.

What age are you?——Twelve.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—Yes.

Do you know the conſequence if you ſpeak falſly?——Yes.

What will happen to you?——Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour.

That is a very good anſwer, then you know it is a ſin, and will be puniſhed by man alſo?—Yes.

This witneſs confirmed his father's teſtimony.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was rowing up to ſhore, and I took theſe things on board, I was going round to the ſhip, and there came a raft of timber and took the boat away, and I could not find the ſhip again being dark, and I carried the things home.

Court to Montgomery. Did you call after this boat?——Yes, it was a ſtill night, and there was no raft; he made complaint before the Juſtice, that it was cloudy.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

157. HANNAH CARR was indicted for felonioully ſtealing, on the 22d day of December laſt, ten yards and a half of printed cotton, value 21s. the property of Ellis Williams, privily in his ſhop.

GEORGE DAWSON ſworn.

I am ſervant to Ellis Williams, in Lombard-court, Seven Dials; on the 22d of December laſt, my maſter loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, between one and two, I believe, in the day time; the priſoner came into the ſhop, I have ſeen her before in the ſhop, I know her, I do not know her buſineſs, nor where ſhe lives; ſhe aſked to ſee ſome cottons for a bed gown, I ſhewed her ſeveral pieces, ſhe ſtood near the counter; there was a boy in the ſhop, his name is Evans, he is not here; ſhe did not like the cottons, and aſked to ſee ſomething handſomer; in the mean time another woman came in, and aſked the price of ſome table cloths, they had no converſation together, the other woman was a ſtranger; I went to the outſide of the window to tell her the price of the table cloths, and the priſoner followed me out immediately, I came in again, and ſhe went another way.

Did ſhe walk or run?—She only walked, I ſaw her go into a public houſe, I came in immediately, and miſſed one of the cottons; the other woman went off without the table cloths, ſhe did not like the price of them; when I went into the ſhop, ſhe was ſtanding at the door, I was not above a yard from her, when I miſſed the piece of cotton; it contained ten yards and a half, it was the property of my maſter, Ellis Williams.

How many pieces might you ſhew her altogether?—About ſeven or eight, I left them on the counter all the time.

When you ſhewed her the things, was you on one ſide, and the woman on the other?—Yes.

Did ſhe touch any of the things, when ſhe examined them?——Yes, the piece I miſſed was looſe when I left it, ſhe doubled it up, and laid it on one ſide, and ſaid ſhe did not like it.

Was there any opportunity at this time, for the woman to have taken this?—Not at that time, I conceive ſhe took it while I was ſhewing her the cottons, while I turned my back to take the other cottons down; I ſaw her go into a public houſe over the way, and I purſued her, it is a thoroughfare, and as I went in at one door, ſhe went out at the other; I loſt ſight of her, I ſaw her on the other ſide of the way.

(The cotton produced and depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I bought it.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not privately.

To be privately whipped and confined two years in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

158. DANIEL DOLAN was indicted for felonioully ſtealing, on the 15th of December laſt, one iron bar, value 12d. belonging to our Lord the King, affixed to a certain building of our Lord the King, called the General Poſt-office, againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, Charging him with ſtealing one other iron bar, affixed to the Poſt-office.

WILLIAM COMPTON ſworn.

I am a patrol for Langborn ward; on the 15th of December, I was walking round the ward between ſeven and eight; I ſaw the priſoner under St. Mary Woolnorth's church, Lombard-ſtreet; he had ſomething under his arm, I followed him, and ſaid, halloo! my friend, what have you there? this was in the evening; it was an iron bar that came from the back of the General Poſt-office, I had it in my hand not ten minutes before (The bar produced) it was faſtened then; I took the bar and the priſoner into cuſtody, I took the nails out of his waiſtcoat pocket, and a knife; one had been loſt the ſame evening before, I counted the bars, there was one miſſing; after I carried him to the Compter, I came there again, and they were both miſſing; the next morning I tried the bar, and it anſwered in every reſpect; the priſoner ſaid he found it.

JOHN COMYNS ſworn.

I belong to the Poſt-office, I compaſed this bar with the window of the Poſt-office and it correſponded.

Whoſe property is that?—It belongs to the Poſt-office.

Who does the Poſt-office belong to?—It is taken by a leaſe, the rent is piad for by Government, it is the General Poſt-office.

Court. It is occupied by the ſervants of Government?—Yes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I found the bar, it was ſtanding up againſt the wall.

GUILTY.

To be publicly whipped and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

159. GEORGE JONES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d day of December laſt, two quart pewter pots, value 3s. the property of Anthony Aylward.

ANTHONY AYLWARD ſworn.

I keep the Cock in Bow-lane, about half after ten a young man informed me, a man had got ſome ſtolen pots; I went after him, but miſſed him; afterwards I found him in Watling-ſtreet, and in a court in Bread-ſtreet, I ſaw him drop the pots, when I came up to him, he ſtopped and ſaid d—n your bl—dy eyes! I will knock you down, and he ſtruck me two blows, with that I collared him, then he fell a crying, and begged for mercy, he ſaid it was his firſt offence; he ſhewed me the houſe where he took the pots from, it was in St. Thomas the Apoſtle's, and they ſtood at the door.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

A man aſked me to carry them, he picked them up, and deſired me to carry them.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

160. CHARLES WALTON, JOSEPH ORCHARD and THOMAS KNIGHT were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 30th of December laſt, three penny weights of gold, value 10s. 6d. the property of John Nicholls and others.

A ſecond count, For ſtealing the ſame the property of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England.

JOHN NICHOLLS ſworn.

I am one of the moniers of the Mint, there are ten more; the bullion comes to the office from the Bank, we are the moniers employed by Government, to convert bullion into ſpecie; we have miſſed a quantity of gold for a conſiderable time, and in conſequence of an information theſe men were apprehended.

In whoſe cuſtody is this gold?——In the cuſtody of the moniers.

Who is anſwerable for it?——We are.

What are theſe priſoners?—Labourers, employed by us.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. In what way are the moniers appointed?—By ſerving an apprenticeſhip.

Are they appointed by any written appointpointment?—I cannot ſpeak as to that, we are regiſtered in the office as moniers, having ſerved ſeven years.

Does that inſtantly conſtitute you a monier, or have you an appointment?——That inſtantly conſtitutes us; I have been a monier four years.

Are you anſwerable for the bullion that is brought into your individual hands, or in partnerſhip?—In partnerſhip.

From whence does this money of which you ſuppoſe you have loſt ſome, come to you?—It comes to us in bars from the Mint-office, before it comes to us, it is in the cuſtody of the principal officers, they are not moniers, nor are they the Bank of England; it is delivered to us by weight.

Mr. Silveſter. What is delivered to you in bars, and the ſiftings, you are anſwerable for?——Yes.

WILLIAM ATKINSON ſworn.

I am alſo one of the moniers of the Mint; the moniers are anſwerable for the gold that is delivered for coining, the ſifting may be conſidered as part of that property, and as what is collected out of the crucibles.

WILLIAM PRIOR ſworn.

I live in the Minories, I am a gold and ſilver ſmith.

Do you remember buying any gold duſt in December laſt?——Some grains I did, not duſt.

Who off?—I bought it of the priſoner Knight; there was another man came into the ſhop with him, and another ſtood at the door, whom they called in, but I cannot ſpeak to their perſons, Knight was the acting man, and received the money; here is part of it, and part the aſſay maſter had.

Mr. Garrow. Have you much occato melt much gold yourſelf?——No, Sir.

Have you at all been employed in that trade?——Never.

Do the ſiftings of a common jeweller's ſhop, and the breaking of their crucibles have the appearance of theſe?——They would have quite the appearance, if the gold was the ſame quality.

The preſent external appearance does not deſcribe the quality of gold?—No.

Judging only from the external appearance, other gold would appear the ſame?——Yes, I delivered the reſt of the gold to Mr. Alcock.

——— ALCOCK ſworn.

I am aſſay-maſter in the Mint, I received this gold from Mr. Prior; I found it to be about three per cent worſe than the ſtandard of guineas.

Mr. Garrow. Do they make uſe of gold in the proceſs deſcribed?——Never ſo fine, I believe, as what we make uſe of at the Bank; but I muſt own at the ſame time, I think it is poſſible that ſuch grains might be collected, if they ſhould melt gold of that ſtandard.

Which is not abſolutely impoſſible?—No.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Which of theſe perſons was firſt apprehended?—Walton.

Was it conveyed to him in any way that it would be better for him, that he would receive mercy if he would make a confeſſion, and diſcover the perſons concerned?——I never heard of any ſuch thing.

Court to Prior. (The ſame queſtion?)—No, Sir, they did not.

Was this written confeſſion read over to him?——Yes, it was.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you ſee them at the Magiſtrates ſign it?——I did.

Mr. Garrow. I obſerve this is a joint confeſſion?——Yes.

There was a ſeparate confeſſion firſt?—Yes.

Do you know whether before that ſeparate confeſſion, there had not been ſome promiſes made?——Not the leaſt in the world you may be ſure.

(Reads.)

"Middleſex. Examination of Charles Walton, Joſeph Orchard and Thomas Knight,

Knight: who depoſed, they were employed as labourers in the Mint, that yeſterday they found ſome grains of gold, which they feloniouſly took away and ſold to Mr. Prior, for ten ſhillings and ſixpence.

PRISONER KNIGHT's DEFENCE.

When I ſigned, I did not know what I ſigned, nor do I remember the confeſſion was read, I was ſo intimidated in mind and ſpirits, I did not know what to ſay.

Priſoner Walton. I leave it to my counſel.

PRISONER ORCHARD's DEFENCE.

I did not mean to rob any body.

The priſoner Walton called five witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

The Priſoner Orchard called ſeven witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

161. ELIZABETH BROWN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of December laſt, one dead gooſe, value 4s. and one dead fowl, value 1s. the property of John Mills.

JOHN MILLS ſworn.

I ſell fiſh, fowls, and greens; the priſoner on the 24th of December, came into my ſhop for a nice gooſe and fowl, for her miſtreſs to look at, to go to Mrs. Robinſon's in Well-ſtreet, to ſee which ſhe would have, and ſend the boy with change for a guinea.

WILLIAM CROUCH ſworn.

What age are you?——Eleven.

Do you know the nature of an oath, what what will become of you hereafter, if you take a falſe oath?——I do not know.

Where do wicked people go after they are dead?——I do not know.

Has nobody ever taught you?—No, Sir.

Did you never learn your catechiſm?—No.

Nor ſay your prayers?——No.

You never was taught any thing about religion or God Almighty?—No.

You do not know what will become of you?——No.

What will become of you after death?—I do not know.

There being no other evidence the priſoner was.

ACQUITTED.

ELIZABETH GITTOS ſworn.

My huſband's name is Benjamin, I live in Red-lion-ſtreet, Holborn, we loſt a pillar and claw table yeſterday afternoon about four o'clock, it was loſt from under the ſhop window on the outſide.

JOHN MARGROFT ſworn.

Being in company with the priſoner before the robbery was committed, I had a ſuſpicion of him, I afterwards ſaw him go paſt the houſe, though he could not get out of the houſe without being helped out, I ſaw him go paſt apparently well as I am this moment, I ſaw him take a mahogany table and put it on his head and take it away with him, I followed him and afterwards met Mrs. Gittos with the table in her hand, and I informed her of the perſon that had ſtolen the table, I did not ſee him ſtopped becauſe the people were aſſembled.

Court. Where have you been this afternoon?——I have been attending the Court at the New Seſſions Houſe at the Old Bailey.

What at the public-houſe?—No, Sir.

Court to Mrs. Gittos. Have you known this man any time?——Yes, he is a neighbour of ours, he is a tallow-chandler.

Court. He ſeems to me to be in liquor, I cannot examine a witneſs who is in liquor againſt a man for felony.

SARAH GITTOS ſworn.

How old are you?——Ten.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—No, Sir.

Do you know what the conſequence would be if you was to ſpeak falſely againſt this man, if you were to be ſworn?——No.

Do you know what it is to be ſworn?——No.

Have you never heard the nature of an oath explained to you, were you ſworn be-the Juſtice and the Grand Jury?——I believe ſo.

What was done to you there?—I kiſſed the book.

Did you know what the meaning of that was?—No.

Court. I cannot examine her.

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

168. JOHN ARNOLD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 12th day of January, twenty-three pair of cotton ſtockings, value 23s. the property of Alexander Niving.

ANN NIVING ſworn.

My huſband's name is Alexander, I live at Hampſtead, we loſt twenty-three pair of ſtockings yeſterday about eleven o'clock, I miſſed the ſtockings out of the garden, they were hanging to dry, I did not ſee any body but the priſoner, and I purſued him myſelf, I did not think he had them, I ſaw them not; about three minutes before I ſaw the priſoner firſt, about ten yards from my premiſes, he was walking as if from my garden very quick, I followed him and called ſtop thief, he was ſtopped and brought back by John Edwards, without the ſtockings.

A man ſtopped the priſoner with a ſhovel before me, but I ſaw him throw the bundle down and drop it, and they were in this cloth, he was a few yards off, I run immediately, I did not pick up the bundle, one Mr. Metcalf picked them up, I took them, I have had them in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, he never was out of my ſight after he dropped the ſtockings, I had him by the collar all the while, the priſoner made no anſwer.

(The ſtockings depoſed to by the proſecutor, Mary Smith and another, ſervants to the owners.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming through the town of

Hampſtead, and I picked up a bundle in a brown cloth, I carried it the courſe of twenty yards, the woman run out after me and cried ſtop thief, I ſtood ſtaring! I never heard the cry of ſtop thief before, and they took me; I have many friends in the country, I have been out of the country about three weeks.

Court to Proſecutrix. Where is your garden?——Near my houſe on Hampſtead Heath, it opens into the high road, and goes ſtrait down into the town, there is a road between the houſe and garden.

How is your garden fenced off from the bye road?——It is a wooden pale.

How far was he from the pale when you firſt ſaw him?——Not above ten yards.

Court to Priſoner. Where did you come from?——From Wincheſter, I lived with one Mr. Dalton, at the White Hart.

JOHN WHITE ſworn.

I am this inſtant come into Court, I live at Wincheſter, I am deputy keeper of Wincheſter gaol; I know the priſoner perfectly well; when I firſt knew him he was a hoſtler at an inn, and ſince that he has lived at the White Hart in Wincheſter, I am aſtoniſhed to ſee the man, I ſaw him there two or three weeks ago; the man always bore a very honeſt character, I never heard the leaſt againſt him.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

169. ELISHA DAVIS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Samuel Graves about the hour of nine in the night on the 5th of January, at the pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt, with intention his goods and chattles then and there being, feloniouſly and burglariouſly to ſteal.

SARAH GRAVES ſworn.

I know nothing of the priſoner, I was alarmed by the patrols that ſomebody was in the houſe, that was about nine, it was in the parlour, the patrols found the door open and came into the houſe, the door was ſhut about half an hour before, I faſtened it with the lock myſelf, my parlour was about twelve yards from the door, there is another door into Fetter-lane, I do not know whether that was ſhut or no; when the patrols alarmed me I went out, and they were ſtanding with the priſoner, they aſked me if I knew the young man, and I ſaid no.

R. WOOLLET ſworn.

I am a patrol, on the 5th of January my partner and me were going our rounds, we ſaw the proſecutors door was not ſhut, and the priſoner was coming out, we aſked him if he belonged to the houſe, he ſaid he did not, he went in to buy a book, and it not being a bookſellers ſhop we alarmed the people.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

170. ELIZABETH BROWN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 31ſt day of December laſt, two ſmall bundles of wood, value 2d. and nineteen ſhillings and ninepence in monies numbered, the property of Thomas Ledger.

THOMAS LEDGER ſworn.

I am a cabinet-maker, No. 44, Jewin-ſtreet, on Saturday the 31ſt of December, between twelve and one, the priſoner at the bar came to my houſe, I never ſaw her before that time, ſhe wanted a buſhel of coals and change for a guinea to ſend by my boy, ſhe ſtopped till the coals were meaſured, and my wife told her down the change for a guinea, ſhe took the change and paid for the coals and two bundles of wood, and ſhe promiſed to ſend a guinea back by the boy, and ſhe took up nineteen ſhillings and ſixpence, I helped the boy with the coals upon his back, and he went away from my houſe with her, the wood ſhe took herſelf.

WILLIAM WOODFIN ſworn.

I was fourteen laſt Lamma's Day.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—No.

What will become of you if you ſhould ſwear falſe?——I ſhall go to hell: I ſaw the priſoner, when ſhe came for the coals, I was in the ſhop, ſhe came for a buſhel of coals and two bundles of wood; Mr. Ledger put them on my back, and I carried them to the bottom of Well-ſtreet, ſhe took the bundles of wood, ſhe aſked for change for a guinea, I did not ſee the change given to her, when I got to the bottom of Well-ſtreet ſhe told me ſhe had forgot two more bundles of wood, and I muſt go back and get them, I ſet down the coals, and ſhe ſaid you ſtay and reſt yourſelf, I will go for two bundles more of wood.

Did ſhe take the coals from you?—No, ſhe left me with the coals.

MARTHA LEDGER ſworn.

Confirmed the evidence of her huſband.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay, if he knew me to be the perſon why did not they take me, as I have lived eight years upon the ſpot, they wanted me to give them money, and I ſaid I knew nothing about it.

The Priſoner called one witneſs to her character.

GUILTY.

To be impriſoned ſix months in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

171. THOMAS EDWARDS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of December laſt, nineteen pieces of printed callico for womens gowns, containing ninety-nine yards and a quarter, value 23l. one muſlin apron, value 5s. and one piece of printed callico, value 30s. the property of William Stock.

CHARLES SAMUEL BARR ſworn.

I was preſent at the time of the robbery, I am apprentice to Mr. Stock, on Sunday the 24th of December, between five and ſix in the evening, a cuſtomer came into the ſhop and I waited upon her, and another came in after this, immediately after this man came in, the other two was in the ſhop; the priſoner enquired if Mr. James lived there, I replied no, and immediately turned round to ring the bell to give my maſter notice there was another cuſtomer in the ſhop, in the mean time the goods were miſſing, I turned round as ſoon as I had rung and he was gone out of the ſhop, and miſſing things off the compter I immediately called after him, I miſſed nineteen callico gown pieces, five yards and a quarter in each, they had been laying in one bundle, they had been taken out of the window, I cannot ſay I ſaw him have the things, becauſe he was in ſuch a poſition I could not ſee him have them; I went to the door and a number of people came round the door, and ſome ſaid he went one way and ſome another, he got off, and he was taken on the Monday morning, I have never ſeen him before to my knowledge, he was not five minutes in the ſhop.

Did he do any more than aſk if Mr. James lived there?——I did not ſee him do any thing, he juſt came into the ſhop and touched his hat, and aſked if Mr. James lived there, then I turned round to ring the bell, and I turned round again and he was going out of the ſhop.

Can you undertake from the glimpſe you had of this man to ſwear he was the ſame perſon?——No, I cannot.

Were the things ever found again?——No.

ELIZABETH BAILEY ſworn.

I went to the proſecutor's ſhop, and was there when this man came into the ſhop: another gentlewoman came in after me, and aſked for a bit of cloth, and the priſoner came in and aſked if Mr. James lived there, and the boy ſaid no, I turned my head and ſaw him, he was carrying off the piece, he had the piece in his hand before, I think the priſoner is the very ſame.

Can you undertake to ſwear poſitively? ——I have no doubt at all, I am very apt to look at a perſon, it is very fooliſh of me to do ſo, I did not ſee him take the piece, but I ſaw him removing ſomething away, and going out, I have no doubt but he is the ſame perſon.

Proſecutor. The priſoner was taken up on Monday, nothing was found upon him, I loſt the goods mentioned in the indictment, I ſaw them three minutes before.

Priſoner. I know no more of it than a child unborn, I was at a public-houſe in the ſame ſtreet.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not privately.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

172. CHARLES ASLETT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of January, twelve pieces of copper money, called halfpence, value 6d. the property of Joſeph Bennett.

James Rudaway ſaw the priſoner unlock the proſecutor's till, and put in his hand twice, and take out ſome halfpence.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

173. MICHAEL WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th day of December laſt, one half-gallon pewter pot, value 2s. the property of Thomas Brand.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and impriſoned twelve months in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

174. JOHN NOAH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th day of January, eight pair of plated ſhoe buckles, value 2s. ſixteen pair of metal ditto, value 3s. three pair of plated knee buckles, value 1s. three pair of plated ſtock buckles, value 2s. three pair of ſtuds, value 2s. five pair of ſpectacles, value 3s. five watch chains, value 2s. and one ſhew glaſs, value 4s. the property of Henry Joſeph.

HENRY JOSEPH ſworn.

I keep a ſtall by the Two Brewers, Shoreditch, I went in to warm my hands a little, and I heard the people call out, the poor Jew's ſhew glaſs and goods are run away with, I run out immediately and purſued the priſoner, and he dropped the things.

——— RAYNER ſworn.

There was a great out-cry of thief, and I ſaw the priſoner with a ſhew glaſs on his head, I ſaw him taken.

(The things depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I was running along and the people were crying ſtop thief, and the people took me.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

175. MORRIS MERRICK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of December laſt, one cotton gown, value 10s. a muſlin cap laced, value 10s. a muſlin apron laced, value 10s. and ſundry other articles of wearing apparel, the property of Mary Parker, ſpinſter.

There being no evidence to affect the priſoner, he was

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

176. FRANCIS ABBOTT and WILLIAM HILL were indicted for that they, on the 8th day of October laſt, at the pariſh of Chiſwick, two large ſilver flaggons, gilt with gold, value 16l. two ſilver plates, value 5l. one ſilver diſh, value 5l. two ſilver cups, value 6l. one ſilver chalice, value 10l. 15s. two ſilk and gold taſſels, value 5s. two ſurplices, value 5l. two table cloths, value 10s. the property of the pariſhioners of the ſaid pariſh, in the cuſtody of James Wood and William Whapſhot, church-wardens of the ſaid pariſh, feloniouſly and ſacriligiouſly did ſteal.

The indictment opened by Mr. Knowles.

(The witneſſes examined apart.)

MARY TAYLOR ſworn.

I have the care of Chiſwick church, on the 8th of October it was all ſafe.

When did you ſee the church again?—On the 8th day of October, between twelve and one; between five and ſix in the afternoon, when I came from my buſineſs in the church, I faſtened the place where the plate was kept, I locked it and bolted it, and put the key in the place where I keep my books, and I double locked the church door and left it ſafe.

When did you ſee the church again?—On the next day, being Sunday morning, I went between ſeven and eight in order to light the fire ready for the miniſter, and when I came, I had the key in my hand to unlock the door, and the door was already open, and this bolt of the lock was forced off, then I went into the room where the miniſter is dreſſed, and found the cheſt where the plate was kept was open.

Was that cheſt kept locked?—Yes.

Had it been locked on the Saturday?—It was.

Who kept the key?——The clerk.

How do you know it was locked on Saturday then?——To all appearance it was.

Did you find it open on the Sunday morning?——I did, the lock appeared to have been forced, and this is one of the padlocks that was forced off, all the plate entirely was gone, and the ſurplices were gone two or three, and all the trimmings belonging to the pulpit, and the table cloth, they were velvet with gold fringe and gold taſſels, the cuſhion was laid at the cloſet door where the plate was kept, and the two taſſels off, but the fringe was not off the cuſhion, there was a large table cloth and two napkins.

GEORGE COTTON ſworn.

I know the priſoner Francis Abbott.

How long have you known him?—In July, 1776, I firſt became acquainted with him.

Had the priſoner Abbott ever been at the church?—Yes, frequently.

Has he ſeen you put up the velvet?——Yes, I was there on the Friday, the day but one before the church was robbed.

Have you the care of that cheſt?——Yes.

Do you know whether the laſt time you was there you locked it or not?——I know that the laſt time the things were uſed I locked the cheſt myſelf, I have aſked him to go with me, he came to ſchool to my father, I am ſervant to the pariſh clerk, I am not pariſh clerk myſelf, the velvet was not kept in the ſame cheſt with the plate, but it was on a ſhelf in the ſame cloſet with the plate.

When did you put up the velvet laſt?—I put it away the Sunday evening preceding the robbery, I put it in the uſual place.

CÆSAR TURNER ſworn.

I am coachman to Mr. Sandiford, I drive the caſual coach to Kew Bridge, or Turnham Green, or Hammerſmith, or any where, where I can get paſſengers, I know the priſoner Hill, I know nothing of the other.

Do you remember at any time taking Hill in your coach?——No, he never was in my coach, but he rode on the box with me.

When was that?—The 8th of October, between eight and nine on Saturday, he came to me in the road, I drove him to the corner of Half-moon-ſtreet, I take my paſſengers to the farther Pack Horſe at Turnham Green, and coming back the priſoner aſked me if I was going to town, I ſaid I was not, the priſoner ſaid we will give you five ſhillings, he ſaid he would give ſeven ſhillings, I ſaid I will not, but I will drive you down to my maſter, and if he and you can agree for a freſh pair of horſes, I have no objection, with that I ſtaid a little and let another perſon in, I cannot tell who that perſon was, it was a very dark night, this was at Turnham Green, after that he got on the box with me, he had rather ride outſide, he ſaid he had two men to pick up and they were rather tired, and would wiſh to ride, with that I drove up, and three got in inſtead of two, and brought a bag and threw into the coach, I then drove down to Chiſwick, the three that got into the coach came from the corner of a field that comes from Chiſwick, that comes to Turnham Green, there is a path-way from Chiſwick to Turnham Green, and it is all railed along, this was Saturday night, the 8th of October, between eight and nine, as nigh as I can think the time may be, with that the man that rode on the box with me ſaid, how far is it, I ſaid not a great way off, ſays he, I never was at Chiſwick before, with that I got off the box, and my maſter was in the bar, and the priſoner ſaid he would give ſeven ſhillings, ſays my maſter, it ought to be nine ſhillings, then my maſter came out, and Hill was cloſe to me, and my maſter ſaid it ſhould be half-a-guinea, and he would not let the coach go under nine ſhillings, ſo Hill made anſwer and ſaid, how much will that be a piece, and ſomebody that was on the inſide ſaid, how much will that be a piece, it will be my whack; then my maſter ſaid, Cæſar, drive into the yard, Hill went into the ſtable and helped me to harneſs the horſes, becauſe he ſaid he was in a hurry, then I drove to Kenſington and gave my horſes a little water, then I drove to the corner of Half-moon-ſtreet, and I drove up the off-ſide, and they got into a hackney coach, I did not ſee them take the bag out of my coach and put it in the hackney coach; Hill that was on the box with me got on the box of the hackney coach, for he ſaid, riding withinſide made him ſick.

What became of the bag?——I do not know, I ſaw them open the coach door and get in, but what bag they had I did not know, I am ſure I ſaw them put the bag into my coach.

Who paid the money?——My maſter received the money, I cannot ſay who paid it.

Did you drive back the ſame evening from Piccadilly?——Yes.

Did you take up any body in the courſe of your return?—Not a ſoul withinſide, only a poor man outſide that gave me a pint of beer.

When you came back to Chiſwick did you find anything in the coach?—No, Sir, I did not, but the next morning hearing the church was broke open, I went and looked into the coach, and found this inſtrument, a large chiſſel, at the back of the ſeat, quite under the ſeat.

Priſoner. Are you ſure that is the ſame you found?——Yes.

JOHN SANDIFORD ſworn.

I am the maſter of this coach, on the 8th of October, I remember the priſoner Hill hiring a coach of me in the evening.

Court. Who had your coach gone out with before?——With different people before that; I ſaw Hill, but I cannot ſay any other perſon's face, there were four in the carriage when it ſtood at the door, and when it drove into the yard; Hill paid me the money for the coach, nine ſhillings.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. Is it one that is uſed as an occaſional ſtage coach?——Yes, Sir, it had been out taking its chance all day.

JOHN HILARY ſworn.

Do you remember the time when Chiſwick church was broke open?——Not the particular time, I went on the Sunday morning.

What was done when you was there?—I put on a new ſtaple to the lock, that was all I did.

Was the door examined?——I examined it, not that day, and I applied a crow.

When?——It was two or three days after, I cannot be poſitive, the crow was given to me by my maſter, Mr. Hall, a carpenter.

Did that inſtrument which you applied appear to fit the door?——It anſwered to every impreſſion that was made in the door, and likewiſe in the door caſe.

Were there many marks of violence?—Yes.

Could you compare it exactly with the impreſſions?——Exactly.

Which end of the crow?——Both ends, they fitted both ends in different places, it was impoſſible any thing could fit it more exactly.

Could you diſtinguiſh the mark of another crow that was nearly the ſame ſize as this?——It fitted ſo nearly, I think it was impoſſible for the hands of man to make another to fit ſo near.

Mr. Garrow. Could you have diſtinguiſhed it from the mark that was made by a plaiſterer's hammer?——No, I could not.

THOMAS HALL ſworn.

I remember ſending my man to Chiſwick church, I went with him, I took a crow with me which I brought from the coachman, he had brought it back from Sir Sampſon's office after the examination.

Court to Turner. Was the crow you gave to Mr. Hall, the ſame that you found in your coach?—Yes.

You are clear in that?——Quite perfect in it.

Was this that was delivered to you by Turner, the ſame that was tried at the church there?——Yes, I ſaw it tried, I obſerved that the ſmaller end had been put in at the top of the door firſt, in order to make room for ſomething, what that was I do not know, the marks appear perfectly of the crow.

ABRAHAM BUTLER ſworn.

I am a coachman, I drive the Chiſwick coach, I found a letter which diſcovers Mr. Abbott being in the coach, I found it the next morning, I found it in the ſame coach that Turner drove the evening before, I found it on the 9th of October, I believe.

What day of the week?——On Sunday morning.

Who was that letter directed to?——Francis Abbott.

WILLIAM WAPSHOT ſworn.

I am one of the church-wardens of Chiſwick, James Wood is the other.

In whoſe cuſtody is the Communion plate of Chiſwick?—In the church-warwardens; when the new ones come in, the old ones give them up to them, I did not keep the keys, we give them to the clerk.

Was you the church-warden when the church was robbed?——Yes.

JAMES WOOD ſworn.

I was church-warden at the ſame time.

Mr. Garrow. As ſoon as you are appointed the old church-wardens give you the keys?——It is my firſt year, Wapſhot had the keys, I never had them at all.

Was the plate delivered to you?—Never.

It continued in the old cuſtody?——Yes, it continued in the cuſtody of the pariſh clerk, by order of Mr. Wapſhot, I never gave any order about it, I only ſaw the plate every fourth Sunday when I received the Sacrament, never at any other time.

Mr. Garrow to Butler. Did you make any mark on the letter, my man?——No, Sir, I gave the letter to my maſter directly.

Mr. Garrow to Sandiford. What did you do with the letter that Butler gave you?——I remember my ſervant giving me a letter, which he ſaid, he found in the coach, and gave it me on the Sunday morning, the 9th of October; I kept it in my cuſtody till I gave it to Sir Sampſon Wright, I marked it in the preſence of Sir Sampſon Wright, this is the ſame letter, here is my own name, and my own hand-writing upon it, I am clear in that.

ELIZABETH SMEETON ſworn.

Do you know either of the priſoners?—I know Abbott.

Did you ever deliver a letter to him?—I cannot tell the day of the month, I believe it was in September.

Should you know that letter if you was to ſee it?——I cannot ſay I ſhould, I took very little notice of it; my huſband was very ill, and I was in great diſtreſs, I know nothing about it.

Did you ever ſee the inſide of that letter?——No, my daughter read it to me, and put a wafer into it, and I gave it to Abbott the next morning.

Should you know it if you was to ſee it?——No, I make no doubt but it may be the ſame letter.

How was it directed?——Only for F. Abbott.

Mr. Garrow. Then that is not this letter, for this is Mr. F. Abbott.

Court. Can you undertake from your ſight of it, to ſay that is the ſame letter?——To the beſt of my knowledge it is.

Mr. Garrow. Why, good woman, may not the priſoner have had others from the ſame correſpondent?——I make no doubt of that, it may be the ſame letter.

Court. From your view of the letter, and your remembrance of it, do you know whether it is the ſame or not?——From my eye ſight it is the very ſame letter.

(The letter read ſigned L. Bywater, addreſſed F. Abbot, dated 28th September, 1785, relating to the buſineſs of Mr. Bywater.)

Do you know Mr. Bywater?——Very well, he has my firſt floor for an office.

What was Abbott to Bywater?——He was his clerk.

Court. That ſeems to be as far as you can carry that queſtion.

Court to Smeaton. Where do you live?—At No. 4, Titchfield-ſtreet, St. Ann's.

Court to Wood. Who is the pariſh clerk of Chiſwick?—Mr. Cotton.

Court to Young Cotton. Have you got the key of the plate cheſt?—Yes, I keep the key, there were two flaggons and a chalice, two cups, two plates, one diſh, they were uſed the laſt Sunday in September.

When did you ſee them?——I cannot recollect the day of the month, the laſt Sunday in September; but I ſaw them that day, and locked the cheſt, and took the key, there are three keys, I had all the keys, they were all tied together.

Had you opened it from that Sunday, till the church was robbed?—No.

Mr. Garrow. Who delivered the keys to you?——My father, they are kept at our houſe.

Who gave you the keys to take care of the plate?—They have been at our houſe for a certainty theſe ſeven years.

Priſoner Hill. I have not been well, I leave it to the Counſel, and the worthy Gentlemen of the Jury.

Jury. We wiſh to ſee the crow.

The priſoner Abbott called one witneſs who gave him a good character.

The priſoner Hill called three witneſſes who gave him a good character.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

177. PATRICK Mc KERNON was indicted for that he, on the 13th of December laſt, with a certain piſtol loaded with gunpowder and a leaden bullet, unlawfully, maliciouſly, and feloniouſly did ſhoot at one Richard Hudd, he being in the King's highway, againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, only charging the piſtol to be loaded with gunpowder and leaden ſhot.

RICHARD HUDD ſworn.

I know the priſoner, I had been to the public-houſe, on the 13th of December, about twelve at night, to a benefit club, I was coming down Old-ſtreet road by Mr. Calvert's, I ſaw the priſoner and another man, John Riley, whom the Juſtice diſmiſſed, I never ſaw them before, and they met me and paſſed by me, and I turned my head round to look at them, and I ſaw Patrick Mc Kernon with a piſtol in his hand, and I turned my head round to look at him, and as I walked a few ſteps, they both run back to me, and the priſoner ſaid, d—n your eyes who do you look at? I ſaid I had a right to look at who I pleaſed, and ſo might he if he would; then the other man told me to go along about my buſineſs, I told him I would, and one ſide of the road is gravelled and the other is not, I had not got off this gravel not above ten yards from him before the priſoner fired a piſtol at me, I ſaw him point the piſtol at me, and heard the flaſh, I kept my eye upon him, with that I cried out ſtop thief, and thi man run and the other ſtopped; I had a ſtick in my hand, I took the other with the aſſiſtance of a gentleman, and took him to the watch-houſe, and ſomebody brought i the priſoner; then the priſoner at the ba ran up to me and gave me ſeveral blows, and he gave me a blow on the jaw that I could not open it for fourteen days, it wa a moon-light night, I am quite ſure of th priſoner's perſon, I had an opportunity o ſeeing him as he was not many minutes ou of my ſight, this was when they were bot hand-cuffed together carrying to priſon; did not know either of them before th night, they did not demand my money.

How came this man to fire at you?— I do not know, it was his wicked inclin tion.

Did you obſerve whether he pointed t piſtol at you or not?——Yes, he did.

Was the piſtol loaded?—I cannot te it made a very loud report, as if loaded wi ſomething heavy, it alarmed the neig bours; he had only that one piſtol when was ſearched, I was ſure he was the ſame m

when I ſaw him at the watch-houſe, it had been raining juſt before, it cleared up and was quite light.

MICHAEL WATTS ſworn.

I heard the cry of ſtop them, I took the priſoner with the piſtol, the piſtol appeared to have been juſt fired by the ſmell, the priſoner never got out of my ſight till he was ſecured.

HENRY CRICKETT ſworn.

I heard the report, the priſoner came running by me, I knocked him down and ſecured him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

If I was guilty of doing any fact, I ſhould not do it where I was known to every body, I fell down, and in conſequence of the piſtol being cocked it went off, but I made no attempt to fire at him.

Court to the other witneſſes. Was he in liquor?——He did not appear to be ſo.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the only queſtion for your conſideration ſeems to be whether you are ſatisfied under the circumſtances that he fired the piſtol, which was loaded, at the proſecutor, with a felonious intention of killing or wounding him.

Jury to Watts. Was the proſecutor ſober when he came to the watch-houſe?—Yes.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

182. ROBERT JAQUES was indicted for that he, on the 15th day of September laſt, at the pariſh of St. Mary Woolnorth, in the city of London, falſly and feloniouſly did make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſly made, forged and counterfeited, and willingly act and aſſiſt in the falſe making, forging, and counterfeiting, a certain order for the payment of money, with the name John Griffin thereto ſubſcribed, bearing date at Carey-ſtreet, the 15th day of September, 1785, purporting to be the order of one John Griffin, and to be directed to Sir James Eſdaile, Peter Eſdaile, Benjamin Hammett, and William Eſdaile, by the name and deſcription of Sir James Eſdaile and Company, for payment of 30l. ſterling to Thomas Maddocks or bearer, and which ſaid falſe, forged, and counterfeited order for the payment of money is in the words and figures following, that is to ſay, "Carey-ſtreet, September 15th, 1785, Sir James Eſdaile and Co. pay Thomas Maddocks, Eſq. or bearer, the ſum of thirty pounds ſterling. £30. John Griffin," with intention to defraud John Griffin.

A ſecond count, for uttering as true a like forged order for the payment of money, with the like intention.

A third count, charging him in like manner as in the firſt, for feloniouſly forging a like order for payment of money, with the like intention.

A fourth count, for uttering as true a like order, with the like intention.

A fifth count, for that he, on the 15th day of September laſt, having in his cuſtody another order for the payment of money, ſigned and ſubſcribed with the name of John Griffin, directed to Meſſ. Eſdaile and Co. dated November 25th, did alter and cauſe to be altered, and a certain word and a certain figure, to wit, the word November and the figure two, feloniouſly did alter and cauſe to be altered, and that he on the ſame day, in the ſaid laſt mentioned order for the payment of money, falſly and feloniouſly did forge, counterfeit, and inſert in the place and ſtead of the ſaid word November the word September, and the figure one in the place and ſtead of the figure two, by means whereof it did import to be an order for payment of money bearing date September 15th, 1785, with intention to defraud John Griffin.

A ſixth count, for uttering the ſaid falſe and altered order with the like intention.

A ſeventh count, for altering the ſaid order with intention to defraud Sir James Eſdaile and Co.

An eighth count, for uttering the ſaid altered order with intention to defraud Sir James Eſdaile and Co.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

Gentlemen of the Jury, this charge againſt the priſoner Mr. Robert Jaques conſiſts in altering the date of a draught from the 25th of November, 1785, to the 15th of September, 1785, and ſo making the date earlier than it was intended to be; Gentlemen, by an act of parliament made in the 7th year of his late Majeſty's reign, it is enacted, that if any perſon ſhall utter or publiſh as true any forged or altered order for payment of money, knowing the ſame to be ſo, he ſhall be guilty of a capital felony; Gentlemen, the priſoner Jaques is a money-lender, the proſecutor is a ſurgeon who ſerved on board his Majeſty's navy; ſome time ago he applied to the priſoner Jaques for the purpoſe of lending money, Jaques, in that character and ſituation, inſinuated himſelf into the confidence of the proſecutor, Mr. Griffin; Mr. Griffin having left the ſea and become a ſurgeon of eminence, in Carey-ſtreet; they became acquainted; ſome time after this Mr. Jaques applied to him to accommodate him with ſome notes, and ſaid, before they can be payable you may depend upon it I will let you have the money; Mr. Griffin immediately gave him this draught to Sir James Eſdaile and Co. pay to Thomas Maddock, Eſq. or bearer 30l. ſterling, and dated it the 25th of November, 1785; he explained likewiſe at the time that he expected Mr. Jaques would pay the money, and another reaſon was becauſe he thought he ſhould not be in caſh before that time; when Mr. Jaques got poſſeſſion of the note he did not chuſe to wait, but he endeavoured to raiſe money upon it, but he could not, and therefore he altered the date to September the 15th; the draught was taken to the banker's, Sir James Eſdaile, and there it was payed, Sir James or his clerks having no idea but that this was a juſt and fair draught; a few days afterwards Mr. Griffin going by and calling at his bankers, they told him it was not uſual for gentlemen to ſend their draughts as he had done, and they deſired him to ſend ſome caſh in, and they further told him, Sir, we have honoured your draughts ſo far that you have over drawn ſeventy pounds, Mr. Griffin was aſtoniſhed, not being conſcious that he had over drawn his banker, as thoſe draughts that he had given to Jaques, were dated in November, therefore, it did not occur to his mind that a draught dated in November ſhould be offered for payment in September, when they ſhewed it him, he ſaid, it is very true, as you have paid this draught; he then went to Mr. Jaques with the draught, and ſaid, how comes this, you have altered the date? why ſays he, it is my brother did it, not me; do not make any piece of work about it, ſays he, here is ſeventy pounds, take it and pay the banker: but, Gentlemen, you know the payment of the money will not alter the crime: upon enquiring, the bankers were not ſure that Jaques was the actual man that had offered this draught, they could not therefore for ſometime follow up the priſoner; but upon applying to Sir James Eſdaile, it appeared he had paid the perſon that brought the draught by a bank note, but what it was they did not know, however, upon enquiry at the Bank, it appeared that identical bank-note had been indorſed at the Bank as is uſual "Mr. Jaques, Ea. ſt. Rd. Ly. ſre." meaning Eaſt-ſtreet, Red Lyon-ſquare, and not ſpelt as Mr. Jaques ſpells his name, and what is more, that hand writing will be proved to be the hand-writing of the priſoner at the bar, the name was ſpelt with a K. inſtead of a Q. and that ſame bank-note will be proved to have been found in the hands and poſſeſſion of the priſoner: Gentlemen, it is laid in the indictment, to be with intention to defraud in the firſt place Mr. Griffin, certainly it was for that purpoſe, becauſe conſcious of that he paid him the money: Gentlemen, when the facts are proved of the note being altered, and the confeſſion of that man, that it was done by his brother, and when it is proved to be the hand-writing of the priſoner, there cannot be a doubt in any man's mind (though it is very artfully done) but that this man is guilty, and it will then become your duty, though a painful one to pronounce him ſo by your verdict; on the other hand, if you ſee any reaſon to doubt, I am ſure you will chearfully acquit him.

Mr. Sheppard, Priſoner's Counſel. The alteration was not a forgery, for the only offence which appears to be deſcribed in this act, is the altering the number, any principal ſum, in the ſeveral inſtruments, there is no alteration either in number or principal ſum.

Mr. Silveſter. I read it thus, ſhall falſely make, alter &c. any acceptance of any bill; the ſecond offence is altering the number, or principal ſum of any accountable receipt; the third offence is, if he ſhall falſely alter forge or counterfeit any order or warrant for payment of money.

Mr. Sheppard. I take it that the principal ſum relates to all the ſpecies of offence.

Mr. Garrow, one of the Counſel for the Proſecution. That is the queſtion between us, about which I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with a word; becauſe it depends on the reading of the act itſelf, and it deſcribes things which neceſſarily may not have a principal ſum in them. I beg now my Lord to obſerve that one of the witneſſes who has been ſubpœned on the part of the proſecution, has juſt ſent this letter, "Sir, "as I am in danger of being rendered by a "man that is bail for me, I beg the pro"tection of the Court if I come to give "my evidence." I beg, therefore, your Lordſhip will ſay from the bench, that he is protected in going and coming back.

Court. Let an officer of the Court be ſent to bring him.

Mr. Garrow. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſend this meſſage with it; Mr. Jaques's trial will be poſtponed till he comes.

Court. An officer muſt bring him with him, what is his name?—Carlos Cæſar.

JOHN GRIFFIN ſworn on the Voire Dire.

Mr. Griffin, you gave this draught to Mr. Jaques, dated the 25th of November, as you ſay?——Yes.

It was paid by your banker?——It was.

Mr. Jaques afterwards gave you the money, which was ſo paid by your banker, did not he?——Yes, Sir, he did, he advanced me money, but it was upon condition that I would bring, from my bankers, bills that were there, that were not yet due, one of which I can remember.

Did he or did he not give you money to repay your banker for this draught?—He did not give me money, he lent me money.

Have you ever repaid him that ſum of money?——Yes, Sir, I have.

Do you mean to ſwear that?—Yes, Sir, I paid him by the notes he brought back.

Then if I underſtand you right, the money which was ſo given on that day, was not given for this draught?—I do not underſtand you.

I want to know this, whether you mean to ſay, that Mr. Jaques did give you money to reimburſe your banker for the money that was drawn out of your bankers hands, or on any other account?——He gave it me conditionally, that I would bring back all the notes and bills that were then laying at my bankers, that were not yet due, which I have evidence in Court to prove.

Then he did not give it you in conſideration of this draught?—No.

Has not an action of treſpaſs been brought againſt you by a Mr. Williams?——Not that I know off.

Has not a notice been ſent you that it will?—No.

Are not you promiſed that in caſe you ſucceed in this trial, no action ſhould be brought.

Mr. Garrow. Does that go to his competency.

Court. Certainly it does.

Mr. Garrow. If that is to be objected to witneſſes, every third perſon may deprive the King of his witneſſes.

Mr. Silveſter. A man who is brought here as an accomplice, comes with a firm hope and expectation, that he will have the greateſt benefit that a man can have, the King's mercy, here ſome third perſon a friend to Mr. Griffin, ſays, why, if you do not hang Mr. Jaques, we will bring an action againſt you; how is that to affect the priſoner at the bar.

Court. It muſt ariſe from the tranſaction itſelf.

Mr. Garrow. It ſeems to me it is impoſſible that this queſtion or any anſwer to it, can go to the competency of Mr. Griffin, it is not for any dread of the anſwer, becauſe I know what it will be, but for the ſake of juſtice, I take it now in the ſtrongeſt way againſt myſelf; ſuppoſe he ſays a perſon of the name of Williams has threatened to bring an action againſt him, and has promiſed him that if Jaques is convicted, that action ſhall be put an end to; let us ſee a little how that goes to the competency of Mr. Griffin; that it goes to his credit, I am perfectly free to admit; but ſurely we have not forgot what paſſed here yeſterday morning, when we were talking of Underwood, he ſtood under circumſtances of the moſt groſs diſcredit, and yet the King had a right to call him; would not it go to the cutting up of the public adminiſtration of the juſtice of the country, if my learned friend's objection ſhould prevail; I am intitled to aſſume this is a fair proſecution, and in any other fair proſecution, a friend of the defendant ſhall go to the proſecutor, and ſhall ſuperadd an inducement, he ſhall tell him if you will do it, I will give you ten guineas, I will give you five guineas, I will give you five halfpence, it is an intereſt, it would go to his competency; would it be ſuffered, that ſuch a ſort of negociation ſhould go to the competency of a witneſs, and ſo deſtroy the full effect of the proſecution?

Mr. Sheppard. I really think it is my duty to take every objection which I can, when I ſtand as counſel for any man that is upon trial for his life, therefore I anſwer thus, Mr. Garrow has ſtated a caſe which muſt be in all our memories; but I do not put this caſe as a ſimilar one to Underwood's by any means, but what dropped from your Lordſhip appears to me to be an authority to found my objection upon; you there determined that the queſtion as to competency, is not whether a man may be believed after he has told a ſtory, but whether there is any legal bar to his being heard: Mr. Garrow has ſaid where any man goes to a witneſs, and deprives the King of his witneſs; not in every caſe, but I do think, I ſhould have got from Mr. Griffin's mouth, if the materiality of his anſwer had not been ſuggeſted to him by the objection, that he has an expectation, and if the witneſs ſtates on his oath that he expects ſomething will be done, it is an intereſt: in the caſe of Mrs. Rudd, I have heard that when Mrs. Perreau came to the bar, to be examined as a witneſs, ſhe was aſked on the Voire Dire, whether ſhe did not expect that if Mrs. Rudd was convicted, her huſband would be pardoned; I will put another caſe, which appears to me to be in point on this occaſion, ſoon after the act of parliament was paſſed, which gave reward to thieftakers, objections were taken to thoſe men ſo intitled to rewards being witneſſes, the only anſwer of the Court was that that act of parliament did not mean to exclude their teſtimony; I am ſure I recollect that the Court ſaid, that was meant to further the conviction of offenders, and it was the caſe in which perſons intereſted were the only perſons who could convict the offenders: Mr. Griffin if he had anſwered my queſtion, and told your Lordſhip that Mr. Williams or anybody elſe had told him if he convicted Mr. Jaques, they would forbear to bring an action againſt him, which he had in contemplation, I do ſubmit that would have given him a direct intereſt, ariſing in conſequence of this caſe, which would have deſtroyed his competency: I think it is laid down in Serjeant Hawkins, that an intereſt whether mediate or immediate, if to ariſe in conſequence of the event of a trial, is ſuch as to diſqualify a witneſs, and the only exception that I believe has been held to that rule, is the caſe of men intitled under an act of parliament to rewards; and then the Court gave a further reaſon for it, that theſe rewards were intended for the conviction of offenders: I ſubmit if he anſwers in that way, that would be an objection to his evidence.

Mr. Silveſter. Mrs. Perreau was withdrawn.

Mr. M'Nally. I recollect it perfectly, the Court did give an opinion that the objection went to her competency.

Court. I ſhall permit you to put the queſtion to Mr. Griffin, and decide on his competency when I know the circumſtances under which he ſtands.

Mr. Sheppard. An execution went into Mr. William's houſe, have you never been told, and has not Williams or his attorney told you that an action of treſpaſs would be brought againſt you, for bringing that execution into his houſe?——I hope your Lordſhip will allow me to make an anſwer, and he will not ſtop me.

Your anſwer muſt go to the queſtion?—No, Sir, to the contrary.

Did they never tell you ſo?—It was not told me by the Janſons, but it was ſuggeſted to me.

You have been told you ſay to the contrary?—Yes.

Now, I aſk you upon your oath, whether when you was told to the contrary, you was not told that the action ſhould not be brought if you convicted Mr. Jaques?——No, Sir, they did not, nor any thing to that effect.

JOHN GRIFFIN ſworn in Chief.

(The witneſſes ordered to withdraw.)

Mr. Garrow. How long have you been acquainted with Mr. Jaques?—About ten months.

You have had money tranſactions with him?——I never had any other money tranſactions with him than giving him my draught.

Did you in the month of September give him any draught on your banker?—Yes.

What day?—On the 10th of September, I think it was on a Saturday, for thirty pounds, payable to ——— Maddocks, Eſq; or bearer.

Look at it and ſhew it us?—This is the draught.

What date did this draught bear at the time you gave it to Mr. Jaques?——The 25th of November 1785.

How ſoon after did you ſee that draught again?——I did not ſee it till the 20th of September, at my banker's, Sir James Eſdaile and Co. I found it there, as a draught that had been paid.

What date did it bear then?—It bore then, September the 15th.

Was it in the ſtate in which you now produce it?—It was exactly.

Has it been in your cuſtody ever ſince?——It has.

How ſoon after this did you communicate to Mr. Jaques, that you had ſeen it?—As ſoon as a coach could carry me, when I found out that the draught had been paid and altered, I repaired to Mr. Jaques's houſe in Eaſt-ſtreet, Red-Lion-ſquare; he was not at home; at a quarter or half an hour after three, I found him at home.

Now tell us the converſation that paſſed as nearly as you can?——I mentioned the circumſtance with a great deal of uneaſineſs; I told him by giving him a draught dated forwards the 25th of November, that that very draught had been paid into my bankers, with the date and month altered to the 15th of September, I told him alſo that I thought it was a very cruel thing, I had been taking every ſtep to ſerve him, and he was going to ruin me; that my banker was then over drawn, looked black, and expected his money ſhould be paid by ſun-ſet; I told him I felt myſelf exceedingly hurt, and that I was very uneaſy, for that my bankers, unleſs the money was paid in by ſun-ſet, ſeemed as if they would fix me with it; Mr. Jaques ſaid, it was impoſſible, good God! this is a forgery, I thought this had been at Bury, in Suffolk, for I tell you in confidence, I paid this draught to my brother.

Court to Cæſar, who was now brought in by an officer. You are protected by the Court, nobody can preſume to moleſt you, and if you depart the Court without leave, you will be liable not only to be called upon your ſubpœna, but alſo to ſuch other puniſhment as the Court may think proper to inflict.

J. Griffin. He then aſked me if he could aſſiſt me reſpecting the money at my bankers, and I ſaid, I was ſo much diſtreſſed, I had a great deal of buſineſs that day, and I could not apply to any other friend to reimburſe it on that day, he then told me he would give me the money to reimburſe my banker, provided I would bring him the notes and bills that were then laying at my bankers, and not due.

Did you do ſo?—I did.

To what amount were theſe ſecurities?——The bills that I brought back, Sir, was one of fifty pounds, and there was another for ſixty-four pounds, the bills that I gave him amounted to one hundred and fourteen pounds fourteen ſhillings and ſixpence.

What money did he advance to you?—Seventy pounds.

Had you any further converſation with him at this time?——I do not remember any thing particular, only he deſired me to keep in confidence, for that it would ruin his brother.

Had you any ſubſequent converſation with him upon the ſubject?—Yes.

Upon what occaſion was it that afterwards you had this converſation with him, where was it, and who was preſent, and what paſſed?——I had ſome converſation with the priſoner in the preſence of Cæſar, I think ſo.

Whether at any time after this 20th of September, you had any converſation with Mr. Jaques relative to this alteration of the draught?—Yes.

Was Mr Cæſar preſent?—Yes, he was.

What paſſed?—Nothing particular paſſed, only I mentioned the circumſtance.

What circumſtance was that?—I mentioned to him how very extraordinary it was, that the draught ſhould be altered, he made no anſwer, but waved the converſation; I afterwards had ſome converſation with him in the preſence of Mr. John Andre my partner.

How long was that after?—I cannot tell exactly, I believe it might be three weeks after the 20th of September.

Mr. Jaques. I have unfortunately not ſubpœned Meſſrs. Hankey's the bankers, and they will be very material witneſſes, will your Lordſhip permit me to ſend for them, they ſent me word they could not come.

Court. Then ſend a ſubpœnea.

Mr. Sheppard. We are ſituated here without a ſolicitor.

Mr. Garrow. I am afraid we muſt object to Mr. Heſcot being in Court, but he has a partner.

Mr Griffin. Jaques had ſome words with me and my partner, in my partner's houſe, and Mr. Andre came in, and I told Mr. Andre in his preſence, that Mr. Jaques was angry becauſe I had mentioned this forgery to ſome perſon.

In point of fact, had he been angry and expreſſed ſome anger?——He was ſo loud that it was the occaſion of Mr. Andre's coming in.

What had paſſed?——He ſaid that he would go to Sir Sampſon Wright's with me; and made a very great noiſe indeed.

State what he ſaid to you?——He had a large ſtick which he lifted up, and ſaid, you take me up for a forgery, ſays he, I will go with you directly, ſays he, I defy you.

Court. Had you at that time threatened to take him up for a forgery?——No, Sir, I had not.

Then what was this in reply to?——It was in reply to our quarrel, what I had communicated to ſome friends had come to Mr. Jaques's knowledge.

Had you threatened to take him up for forgery?—No, Sir, I had not at that time.

Mr. Garrow. You having communicated the ſecret, it had come round to him?—Certainly.

Court. But had you threatened to any body that your would take him up?—No, Sir, I had not.

Mr. Garrow. Then the purpoſe of his coming to you was your having communicated it to ſome perſon?—Yes, then Mr. Andre came in, and I told him that the reaſon of Mr. Jaques's hectoring and bellowing at me, was becauſe I had mentioned the alteration of that draught that I had communicated to him, Mr. Andre ſaid, he might ſoften his tone, for if he was taken before a Magiſtrate, he would not be in his ſituation for ten thouſand guineas; Mr. Jaques in reply to that, ſaid, he was very ſorry that I had been hurt at my bankers, and that he hoped as he had paid me the money directly, no ill conſequences would happen there, and that Mr. Andre would not think much of the draught.

Did he at that time deny that ſuch an alteration had been made?——No, he did not, he ſaid, that admitting the draught had been altered, as I had had the money to pay into my bankers, he hoped my credit would not be hurt there; Mr. Andre my partner ſeemed ſatisfied with this, and the converſation dropped, but on his going out, he deſired Mr. Andre would not ſay any thing about the buſineſs.

Have you had any other converſation with Mr. Jaques about this at any other time?—Not that I know of.

Court. I wiſh you to be a little more particular, he ſaid admitting the draught had been altered, do you mean by that, to ſay that he admitted the draught had been altered?——I only mention what he ſaid, and I wiſh to put the beſt conſtructions upon it.

Mr. Garrow. You have told us on the 20th of September, you found you had over drawn your banker?—Yes.

Had other draughts been prematurely preſented?——They had.

Look at them.

Court. That may make an impreſſion, and cauſe a ſuſpicion.

Court to Jury. The inſpection of the draught itſelf when you come hereafter to conſider the evidence, will be very material for you.

Mr. Garrow to Mr. Griffin. When you parted with that draught, out of your hands, had you at all eraſed the date or written the draught on any eraſure?—No, I had not.

Were any other perſons in company when you wrote that draught?—Yes, Mr. Cæſar was in company.

Jury. When did you write that draught? —On the 10th of September.

Mr. Garrow. What was the reaſon of your giving the draught in that manner? ——I could not be certain I could have money at my bankers earlier than that time.

If you had been deſired to give it, dated the 15th of September, would you have given it dated that day, ſo as it might have been carried in then?——No, Sir, I could not, becauſe I could not be ſure of money at my bankers.

Did you explain that reaſon to the priſoner at the time you gave it?—Yes, I did ſo the priſoner knows very well.

(Read.)

"Carey-ſtreet, September 15th 1785. Sir James Eſdaile and Co. pay to Thomas Maddocks, Eſq; or bearer, the ſum of thirty pounds ſterling, for John Griffin. (In the margin in figures) £30.

Priſoner. My Lord, may I be permitted to look at the draught?——Certainly; officer hold the draught in your hand, and ſhew it to Mr. Jaques.

(Looks at it.)

Court to Griffin. Was that your only reaſon for dating the draught ſo far forward, and did you communicate it to Mr. Jaques?——That was my only reaſon, I aſſure you.

Was it your intention it ſhould have been paid at the time it bore date?—Yes.

Mr. Sheppard. Do you recollect, or do you know from your own recollection, what date this draught originally bore, or from the relation of ſome other perſon?—I know it from myſelf.

Then you mean now to ſwear, that you recollect this draught to have been dated on the 25th day of November, from you own recollection?——From my own recollection, that is the only reaſon I have to recollect it.

Did you make any memorandum at the time you gave it?——No, Sir, I did not.

Have you never ſaid that the only reaſon you had to think it was dated on the 25th of November, was becauſe ſomebody told you ſo?——No, Sir.

Have you never ſaid ſo?——I do not remember ſaying ſo.

Will you ſwear that you did not ſwear that was the reaſon when you was before the Magiſtrate?—I do not remember ſwearing ſo.

Did you never ſwear before the Magiſtrate, or ſay that the reaſon why you recollected it to be the 25th of November, was becauſe Mr. Reeves told you ſo?——I do not remember ſaying ſo.

When you gave this note, was not the conſideration of it for a bill Mr. Jaques lent you?——No, Sir.

Did not he lend you a bill drawn on Mr. Planner, for which you gave him as a counter ſecurity this draught?—I do not remember he did.

Why if your memory can recollect the date of this note, you can recollect the tranſaction at the time?—I do not remember I did.

You mean to ſwear that he did not?—I mean to ſwear that I do not remember, I ſwear to the beſt of my memory, I will not ſwear that he gave me a bill on Mr. Planner.

Upon your oath was it not the ſame time that draught was given to you?—No, Sir, it was not.

Did you give him no other draught at that time, nor a bill on Mr. Addis?—No, Sir, I did not.

Did you never give him a bill on Mr. Addis?——Yes, Sir, I did, but that bill of Mr. Addis's I drew out of my own bankers, at the ſame time I found out this eraſement to the beſt of my remembrance, this thirty pound draught was not for payment or a ſecurity for that bill.

When you come to Mr. Jaques's, you ſay you told him, you had no other friend you could apply to, in reſpect to money at that time?—Yes.

Mr. Jaques. When did he receive that bill on Mr. Planner?——Upon my word, I cannot tell exactly, I believe it was ten days, or ſome days before, I cannot ſwear poſitively.

How came you then to recollect ſo accurately the date of this draught?——I not only remember that I gave it for the 25th of November, but when I came to look at the draught, my eyes told me ſo by ſeeing the eraſure, and another thing that refreſhed my memory likewiſe, a day or two, or three, or four, I cannot ſay exactly, I went to Mr. Reeves.

Mr. Reeves told you what day it had been dated?——He told me a draught had been offered to him.

Your memory was refreſhed as to the date, by ſomething which ſomebody told you?——Yes.

Court. You muſt not aſk what that ſomething was.

Mr. Sheppard. Then I do not put the queſtion.

You ſay that when you came to ſee the draught, that ſomething made you recollect what date it originally was?—It did.

Look at that draught, and tell me how any thing appearing upon that draught makes you recollect what was originally on that draught?—I remember giving this draught.

Court. You have been aſked why you could ſwear ſo exactly to the very day of the date of this draught, your anſwer was this, I not only remember it as I gave it for the 25th of November, but when I came to look at the draught my eyes told me ſo by ſeeing the eraſure?—Remembering myſelf by this, that I had given a draught for the 25th of November, and this being altered I can remember this was the draught.

Court. What is there then in your eye ſight that leads you to aſcertain the day, the day on which it was originally dated?—The firſt ſtroke of my N in November is in this manner, the next ſtroke of the N the top is ſcratched off, the bottom of that is left to make the E for September, the R is made out of O.

Do you mean to ſay, that that appears upon the inſpection of that draught?——It does.

(The draught handed to the Jury.)

Mr. Sheppard. Upon this diſcovery of your being over drawn, you went to Mr. Jaques's?——Yes.

I believe previous to that you had a bill of Mr. Jaques's for ſixty-four pounds, drawn by him or upon him?—I had a bill at my bankers that was not due, for which I gave him the money.

That bill you had carried to your bankers?——I did.

Your banker entered it ſhort?——He did.

Upon your oath, was not it becauſe your banker entered it ſhort, was not that the reaſon you was over drawn at that time?——No, it was not.

When you carried that to your bankers, did not you deſire them to diſcount it?—No, I did not.

Did not you carry it there to be entered as caſh in your book?——No, I did not, I carried it as ſecurity, to be carried to the place where it was due, and then it would be entered as caſh when paid.

You mean to ſwear that?——I do.

Do you ſwear that was not one of the reaſons why you was over drawn?—I do.

Priſoner. Did he not declare to Mr. Eſdaile, at the time he went there, that the reaſon of his being over drawn was becauſe that bill was entered ſhort?——No, Sir.

Did you never ſay that to any body?—I never ſaid it to any body in my life.

Will you venture to ſwear you never ſaid ſo?—Yes, I will.

When you came to Mr. Jaques's and told him of this alteration, you ſay he lent you ſome money to reimburſe you?——He did.

He lent you money to take up theſe bills that were at the bankers?——No, upon condition that I would bring them back in order that the priſoner might get them diſcounted.

It was not then on account of this bill that he gave you the ſeventy pounds?——That was one reaſon why it was given to help to pay that bill at my bankers.

Why you poſitively ſwore on the Voire Dire that money was given that you might bring back this bill, and that this was not any part of the condition of his giving you any part of this money?——No, more it was.

You ſaid that he lent you this money on condition that you would bring back theſe bills that were lodged at the bankers?——That was the reaſon, and to make up the deficiency at the bankers.

Now, what do you mean by ſaying that Mr. Jaques ſaid, as you had been paid that money, it would be of no conſequence?—He ſaid, as the money had been paid in at my bankers I ſhould ſuffer no diſcredit; what I have to pay now will amount to three or four hundred pounds.

To what amount have you had money tranſactions with Mr. Jaques, exchanging bills ſince the diſcovery of what you are pleaſed now to call a forgery?——I cannot tell exactly.

How much do you think ſince that tranſaction?——I believe that our money tranſactions have been to the amount of three hundred pounds.

Since the diſcovery of this forgery?——Not ſince the full diſcovery, but ſince I ſhewed it to Mr. Jaques, I have had tranſactions with him ſince that time for ſeveral hundred pounds.

A little time before Mr. Jaques was firſt charged with this, did not you apply to him for money to take up ſome bills?——No.

Did not you apply to him for money on any account?—No.

Then you never applied to Mr. Jaques either to lend you money or to take up any bill before he was taken up himſelf for this forgery?——I do not remember I did.

Will you ſwear you did not after the trial of the action in the Common Pleas, did you not after that time, and before he was taken up, apply to him?——I applied to Mr. Jaques for thirty pounds.

Now that was refuſed? It was.

Upon your oath, did not you ſay, if he did not give you that you would charge him with the forgery?—No, I did not that I know off.

(The queſtion repeated.)—Never, to my knowledge.

Do you recollect an indictment being drawn againſt Mr. Williams for perjury?——I do not.

Do you recollect applying to Mr. Jaques to deſire he would not go on with the proſecution againſt Mr. Williams for perjury ?—No.

You do not recollect that indictment being drawn ?—I cannot recollect a thing I never ſaw; the priſoner met me, and told me there was a proſecution.

You do remember that proſecution being on foot ?——I remember having heard ſay ſo.

Now, then did you not ſay if that proſecution was carried on, you yourſelf ſhould be indicted for perjury, and therefore deſired Mr. Jaques to drop it ?—I do not remember any ſuch thing, it does not occur to me, and I cannot poſitively ſay that I did not.

Was you never threatened by Williams or his attorneys, or by ſome perſons for him, was you never threatened with an indictment for perjury ?—I never was.

Do you remember that trial in the Common Pleas ?—I do.

Do you remember being examined as to the exiſtence of any note ?—I do.

Do you remember poſitively ſwearing that you had not a note exiſting between you and Mr. Jaques ?—Where did I ſwear it?

Did you ſay it ?——I ſaid to my Lord Loughborough, he ſent for me up and aſked me if I had theſe notes for the warrant of attorney, I told him I had not, and he thought it was very ſtrange that I ſhould not have preſerved theſe notes.

Do you remember being ſent home by Lord Loughborough to find the notes ?—I do.

Did not you ſay when you came back again in the hearing of Lord Loughborough and the Jury that you had deſtroyed the notes ?——I do not remember ſaying any ſuch thing, becauſe it is impoſſible I ſhould.

Did not you ſay that you had deſtroyed the checques as well as the notes ?—I did not, my Lord Loughborough aſked me if I had any notes or checques, alluding to the warrant of attorney, and I told him I had deſtroyed them.

Did he make uſe of any expreſſion as alluding to the warrant of attorney, or did he aſk it generally ?—I underſtood it ſo.

Do you remember producing ſome ſcraps of paper ?—I do.

Did not you ſay theſe were all the papers relative to the tranſaction between you and Mr. Jaques ?—No, I did not, I ſaid they were all I could find.

Did not you ſay it was cuſtomary with you to burn every one of your checques ?—I never ſaid ſo concerning my checques, I only ſaid ſo with reſpect to my notes.

Were not you called upon for checques as well as notes ?——I only looked upon it that I was called upon for notes.

Have you never ſince ſeen, or had in your poſſeſſion, any of the checques that were given as conſideration for that warrant of attorney ?——I have, I have ſeen one of them, I produced papers after I came back, but not to my Lord Loughborough, I produced all I could find.

Do you mean to ſwear that you never had any notice of an action of treſpaſs being brought againſt you ?——Never.

Did Mr. I'anſon never give you any notice ?——Never to my knowledge.

Did he or his clerk never give you notice of an action of treſpaſs being brought againſt you for that execution ?——Never; that I mean to ſwear.

I think you ſay you know Mr. Reeves ?—I do.

Did you never declare to that ſame Mr. Reeves, that if Mr. Jaques did not pay a draught of fifteen pounds that Reeves had, you would take Jaques up for forgery ?—I do not remember ſaying any ſuch thing.

Do you remember an action that was brought, I think the name of it was Cæſar againſt Spencer ?—I do.

Do you recollect you went down to Maidſtone as a witneſs ?——I do, I was ſubpœned.

Do you recollect having any converſation with Reeves on that action ?—I never did it, I do not know that I ever mentioned a ſyllable.

Did not you ſay that you went down to Maidſtone to prove a man's writing whom you knew nothing off?——No, as God is in heaven, I never ſaid ſo, nor as I am upon my oath I never ſaid ſo; to my remembrance I never ſaid, that if Jaques did not take up a draught for fifteen pounds, that he would be indicted for forgery.

Was not your reaſon for making this charge becauſe Jaques would not accommodate you with money?——No, it was not. I might not approve of the priſoner's conduct, but I do not remember ever ſaying ſo.

Was not you threatened with a proſecution for perjury by Williams or I'anſon? —I do not remember that I ſaid ſo.

Is not one of the inducements for making this charge, that you ſhould not be proſecuted for perjury by them?—No, it is not, I never ſaid ſo, I never was told ſo to my knowledge.

Was you ever told that you ſhould be proſecuted if you did not make the charge? ——No.

Did not I'anſon tell you that that action of treſpaſs ſhould not be brought if you would go on with this charge?—He never told me ſo, nor any body for him that I know off, I never converſed with Williams ſince that action.

Was not you at the London Coffee-houſe with Mr. Williams within theſe three days?—I have never met them at the London Coffee-houſe or any other place that I know of, not to my knowledge ever ſince, and I can ſwear it.

You mean ſtill to have the Jury underſtand you, that it is from perceiving that ſame altered note that you recollected it to be the ſame that was dated on the 25th of November?——From recollecting giving the note, and ſeeing this, I verily believe that to be the note.

Is it upon the face of that note that you collect what the thing originally was?—Moſt certainly the memory and the eyeſight help one another, it does ſo in this inſtance.

Mr. Garrow. Did I underſtand you right, that from recollecting the manner in which you wrote the date on the 25th of November, 1785, and obſerving the ſtrokes of the date you knew it was altered?—Yes.

That is not obvious to other people?—No.

Priſoner. Did you ever make an affidavit in a cauſe againſt Cæſar, to ſet aſide an execution?—I did.

Do you recollect the purport of it?—Not exactly.

Court. You cannot impeach the witneſs's character by ſpecific facts, unconnected with this buſineſs.

Mr. Garrow. You was ſubpœned to go down to Maidſtone to prove a hand-writing?——Mr. Jaques and Mr. Cæſar both took me up to the Blue Boar Inn, Holborn, and a man was there whom they told me was Richard Groves, I went there in conſequence of what I heard, and there was no ſuch perſon; Mr. Jaques ſeemed much hurt, and told me in a day or two I ſhould be brought into company with him who would ſhew me his hand-writing, and tell me it was his hand-writing; I ſaw a man there who was introduced by Jaques.

Priſoner. I wiſh to aſk Mr. Griffin if he has received theſe draughts from me ſince the 20th of September, and for what; they are draughts from my bankers, and all ſince that tranſaction, he will ſee his name upon the backs of ſome of them.

Court. Is your name on the back?

Priſoner. You need not heſitate about them, Mr. Griffin.

Here are only three that my name appears on, two have not.

Priſoner. The draught of ſixty pounds that has not your name, did you receive that from me, and for what?—I remember receiving a draught for ſixty pounds, but whether this is the draught or not I cannot ſay, I think I can tell by looking at my bankers book.

Court. Look at it?——I remember very well going to the priſoner's bankers, and receiving this ſixty pounds myſelf.

Priſoner. And that fifty pounds made payable to yourſelf, I believe it is?—Yes, that likewiſe.

What did you receive that for ?—Here is one I do not remember any thing about, I do not remember any thing of that, I do not remember this, there are four that I do remember that have been through my hands, and two that have not.

Court. Now with reſpect to theſe two, do you mean to ſay that they were not poſitively given to you by Mr. Jaques?——By not going through my bankers hands, I cannot ſay poſitively one way or the other.

Priſoner. Thoſe two which he ſays he did not receive, are both marked by his banker.

Court to Griffin. Look at the draughts again ?——I cannot tell my bankers mark, it is impoſſible for me to tell by the draught itſelf, (looks at them again) I do not remember theſe two draughts upon my word.

Court. Look in your bankers book at the firſt of December ?——I do not ſee any.

Court. Now theſe four draughts that you admit you have received, for what purpoſe did you receive them ?——Upon my word I cannot tell.

One of them is the draught you received on the 20th of September ?—Yes.

Then the three others were all dated in the month of November ?—I believe I can recollect the ſixty pounds draught, I received it myſelf in Bond-ſtreet in lieu of a note of my own acceptance.

When was that ?——I cannot ſay, the note became due about ten days ago, that is the note I was arreſted upon on the Saturday morning, and for which that draught was given.

At whoſe ſuit was you arreſted ?——I cannot recollect, I never was arreſted before, and when the officer came I took his word, I made no doubt but I was arreſted, he ſhewed me a piece of paper ; I had my brother-in-law with me, who was bail for me, and he let me go directly.

The ſixty pounds, I think you ſay, which bears date on the 4th of November, was given you in exchange for a note of equal value of your own ?—Yes.

Which note was due a few days ago, and on which you was arreſted ?—Yes.

Do you remember for what the draught of the 18th of November, for eighteen guineas, was given ?—Upon my word I do not recollect.

Do you recollect for what purpoſe that on the 22d of November, for twenty guineas was given ?—No.

The two other draughts you ſay you do not know any thing about ?

Court. September the 26th, thirty pounds payable to Mr. Griffin, and December the 1ſt, twenty pounds, are the dates of the two notes that the witneſs does not remember.

Mr. Sheppard. I beg to aſk the witneſs how this draught in queſtion came to be made payable to Maddocks ?——Upon my word I cannot recollect juſtly how it could be ; I ſhould rather ſuppoſe that it was at my own deſire, and for that reaſon becauſe I did not like to put in Mr. Jaques's name.

Priſoner. Did not you declare before the magiſtrate that the reaſon was, that the forgery was found out at your bankers, and you did not like to make it payable to me ?—It might be ſo.

Mr. Sheppard. You ſay your reaſon was becauſe you did not like Mr. Jaques's name ſhould be put in ?—Yes.

But the other draughts are in Mr. Jaques's name ?—Yes, he drew them himſelf.

Priſoner. I wiſh to know of him whether he did not diſcloſe before the magiſtrate that the reaſon the draughts were made payable to another perſon was, becauſe that forgery was found out at his bankers ; I wiſh to aſk whether I am debtor to Mr. Griffin or he to me ?—I look upon Mr. Jaques to be the debtor.

In what way, and to what amount ?—I cannot poſitively ſay to the whole amount altogether, but I ſhould ſuppoſe Mr. Jaques is conſiderably indebted to me.

Can you ſay at all near what amount ?—Above a hundred pounds, that I can ſwear to.

Since this tranſaction I believe you have ſworn to a debt of a hundred pounds, have you not?—Yes.

You have attempted likewiſe to make me a bankrupt I believe?—I have.

Since I have been in priſon?——Yes.

Priſoner. He has ſealed a commiſſion, but they did not think proper to proceed upon it.

Court. Have you a poſitive recollection with reſpect to the date of the draught on which the forgery is aſſigned, as connected with the name of Maddocks?——Yes, Sir.

What then you have a diſtinct recollection, at this time, that the draught which you gave, payable to Maddocks or bearer, was dated originally on the 15th of September?——Yes.

Did you ever give Mr. Jaques any draught whatever, bearing date the 25th of November?—I believe I did.

For what ſum?—For the ſum of thirty pounds.

Do you remember who that was payable to?——That was payable, I think, in the name of Clement.

How can you be poſitive in two draughts for thirty pounds, one in the name of Maddocks and one in the name of Clement, which of them was dated the 15th of September, and which the 25th of November, what ſerves to guide your remembrance?—That the draught dated forward to the 25th of November was carried to Mr. Reeves, of Holborn-bridge, to get caſh for.

Your recollection leads you to believe that the other draught dated the 15th of September, was in the name of Clement?——Yes.

Is your recollection equally clear with reſpect to one draught as the other?——It is.

Do you think you are as liable to be miſtaken in one as in the other?——No, I do not think ſo.

Why not?——Becauſe I remember the name of Clement being down in my bankers book.

Then your recollection is more certain as to that than the other, ſuppoſe you are miſtaken as to that draught to Clement?—I do not think I am.

If you are not now you were before, for you ſwore before the magiſtrate that the draught dated the 15th of September was payable to Charles Shepherd, Eſq.?——That was another draught.

How comes that, when I aſked you whether there was any draught dated on the 15th of September, you told me there was one, and that one was payable in the name of Clement; now you tell me it was another draught, why did not you tell me at firſt there were two; I aſk you the general queſtion, whether there was any draught given on the 15th of September, to which that paper in November anſwers, it now appears to be that there were two?——I cannot ſay that there were two, becauſe one of them which I gave for the 15th has ſince been altered to the 13th.

But were there two originally given, bearing date the 15th?—It is more than I can truſt my memory to; as to the dates, I remember giving a draught to Charles Shepherd for the 15th, but it is altered back from the 15th to the 13th; I think I gave it dated the 15th.

You are ſure you gave another draught dated the 15th?——Yes.

Then you only think now that that was dated originally the 15th?——I think ſo.

Can you ſwear poſitively that it was ſo?——No, I will not venture to ſwear it was.

Have you ever been more venturesome, and ſwore that it was originally dated on the 15th?——Not I believe poſitively.

Court. Read that part of his examination before the magiſtrate, "and ſays that another of the ſaid draughts was produced and ſhewn to this informant, which appears to be dated September the 13th, payable to Charles Shepherd or bearer, for thirty pounds, which was, when delivered by this deponent to the ſaid Robert Jaques, dated the 15th of September, 1785."

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of Robert Jaques.

Court. There is no think—or believe there: When was Mr. Jaques firſt taken up on this charge?——I do not recollect the time.

Was it about the 22d of December?—I believe that was the day of the firſt examination.

Down to what time, how near to that time was Jaques and you upon a footing of confidence and intimacy?——I think till the trial of the cauſe in the Common Pleas.

When was that cauſe tried?——I do not exactly remember the day of the month.

Priſoner. It was the 6th of December.

You and Mr. Jaques at the time of that cauſe were in the ſame intereſt, endeavouring to charge Mr. Williams with payment of two hundred pounds?—Yes.

How ſoon after the unſucceſsful event of that cauſe did you take up Mr. Jaques?—The day after.

Then between the trial of that cauſe and the day after, or upon the trial of that cauſe, did any thing happen to you to induce you to change your opinion of Mr. Jaques?—My opinion of Mr. Jaques was changed long before that.

Have you made any new diſcovery ſince the trial of that cauſ·?—My bankers have informed me that the bank note which they delivered for that draught which was paid on the 15th of September, that that note had come into the bank.

When did you hear that from your bankers?——I have heard it from my banker within theſe three days.

Did you hear it before the 22d of December?——No, but they informed me of the number, and that it might take place and by and by that they ſhould ſee the bank note come into the bank.

Now I will aſk you this queſtion, between the 6th of December, the day of the trial in which Mr. Jaques and you were joint plaintiffs, and the 26th of December, when he was taken up, was any new diſcovery made by you whatever reſpecting this fact?——The diſcovery of the number of the bank note was made to me.

But how did that apply to Mr. Jaques? ——I thought ſome time or other it would come out.

Upon what did you take him up, becauſe ſomething would come out in future?——I thought my ſuſpicions were very ſtrong at the time I took him up.

Were they not equally ſtrong on the 6th of December?——I think they were.

Then, Sir, upon your oath, ſhould you ever have commenced this proſecution againſt Mr. Jaques, if that action had been ſucceſsful?——Upon my oath I ſhould.

Priſoner. My Lord, it was his motion, and he called upon me to join with him in an affidavit, which was the 10th or 12th of November, he called upon me to make an affidavit in ſupport of his cauſe.

Whether the witneſs was not intimate with me till within a day of his apprehending me? whether he has not declared, during the dependance of that motion in the preſence of Mr. Reeves, that he would ſwear to any thing to convict Mr. I'anſon of perjury?——No, I did not.

Whether he has not often declared that he looked upon an oath as a matter of form, and would ſwear to any thing to anſwer his purpoſe, I have witneſſes, my Lord, to prove it?—Never, my Lord, never.

CARLOS CÆSAR ſworn.

Court. Have you any evidence in addition to that of Mr. Griffin's with reſpect to the original dates of this note, you ſee it is upon that that the whole evidence of this turns.

CARLOS CÆSAR ſworn in Chief.

Mr. Garrow. You have been long acquainted with Mr. Jaques, and are acquainted with Mr. Griffin?——I am.

Do you know of any tranſaction of notes given to Mr. Griffin by Mr. Jaques on the 10th of September?——I cannot ſpeak to the day, but I had a draught of thirty pounds, I cannot tell who it was particularly to, I received it from Mr. Jaques, I took it to Mr. Thomas Reeves to get it caſhed on the ſame evening.

THOMAS REEVES ſworn.

I know Carlos Cæſar.

Do you recollect his bringing you any note to caſh?——I do, it was Mr. Griffin's note for thirty pounds.

To whom was it payable?——Upon my word I did not examine, I do not know.

Should you know the note if you was to ſee it?——I ſhould not.

(Shews him the draught.)—Upon my word, till this time I neither knew whether it was a checque or note.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, the gentlemen on the part of the proſecution very fairly ſay, they can carry this no further: if you have any doubt we muſt proceed to further inveſtigation; if not, we cannot carry it any further.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

183. LAZARUS JONAS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of December laſt, a piece of gold coin, value 8s. 9d. the property of Edward Harris.

EDWARD HARRIS ſworn.

I am a grocer and tea-dealer, I live in St. George's pariſh, in Wapping High-ſtreet; the priſoner came into my ſhop, the 28th of December laſt, about ſeven, he bought one ounce of tea, and half a pound of ſugar, which came to ten-pence, he put down a ſhilling, I gave him twopence; I was giving change to another perſon; I had a Venetian piece of gold in my hand, I put it down, he took it up, and I ſaid, what is this worth? he ſaid, will you give me anything to drink this Chriſtmas? yes, ſays I; I went to fetch a little rum out of the next room, and Lazarus decamped with the piece of gold, whether he went up or down the ſtreet, I do not know; I ſaw him take it off the counter, and turn it on his finger, I knew him before for ſix or ſeven years.

What is he?——He has ſometimes commiſſions for Dutch goods, which is a good reputable way of life, in a middling way.

What made you think he meant to ſteal this?——Becauſe he did not ſtay to drink.

When did you ſee him afterwards?——On the Friday; this was on the Wedneſday.

Why he did not go away from his houſe or from his buſineſs, do you think he meant to ſteal it?—It did not look well in him to do it.

Mr. Knowles, Priſoner's Counſel. Now, Mr. Harris, did not you give the man this piece of gold, and aſk him whether he would not buy it of you?—I laid it on the counter before him, and aſked him the value of it.

Do not you know he could have diſpoſed of it for you?—No doubt of it.

How long have you known him?—Seven years.

Have not you known him fourteen years?—No, Sir.

Recollect yourſelf, did not you meet him the next day and aſk him for this?—No, it was done on the Wedneſday, and I took him on the Friday.

Will you ſwear it was not full ſix days before you took him up?——I took him on the Friday after.

Will you ſwear it was not ſix days after? Good God! Sir, I have ſworn it was but two days.

Have not you ſaid, before more people than one, that if he would give you the value of this piece of gold coin, you would not find the bill againſt him?—No, Sir, I did not.

In the preſence of your own wife?—No, Sir.

Had not you an information againſt you two or three years ago, for ſmuggling?—Yes, I was not in trade, I was then ſick in bed.

Have not you ſaid to Mrs. Harris, that you believed Jonas was the man that gave the information, and you would puniſh him for it?—I have not.

Do you know the priſoner's ſiſter, Mrs. Barlin, did you never ſay before her, that if the priſoner would pay you the money, you would not find the bill againſt him?——I never ſaid ſo, to her, but I wiſhed I had had nothing to do with the proſecution.

Did you never tell her that if he had not given that information, you would not have ſet on foot this proſecution?—No.

Did you never tell this gentleman here, or any other perſon, that if he would execute a mutual releaſe, that there ſhould be no proſecution againſt you for ſmuggling, you would not carry on this proſecution?—O dear, Sir, there was a propoſal made, but I ſaid I would go to the Court.

Anſwer my queſtion directly?—I never ſaid ſuch a thing in my life.

WILLIAM IVORY ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor, I ſerved the priſoner with an ounce of tea, and half a pound of ſugar.

Did you ſee him take this piece of gold?—I ſaw my maſter take ſilver out of his pocket, and this piece of gold in his hand; and the priſoner took it up in my maſter's preſence, and he looked upon it in his hand, and then he aſked my maſter to give him ſomething to drink, and while my maſter went to get ſome rum, he went out.

Mr. Knowles. Do you know of the priſoner's frequenting your ſhop for a long time?—No, I never ſaw the man in my life.

How long have you been with your maſter?—Four months.

Priſoner. I leave it all to my counſel.

——— BARLIN ſworn.

My huſband is a tobacconiſt, I called on the proſecutor about this buſineſs two or three days after Lazarus Jonas was taken up, to know the reaſon; he then told me that he came into his ſhop for ſome tea and ſugar, and he ſhewed him a piece of gold, and he aſked him what it was, and he aſked him to drink ſomething, and he went backwards, and Lazarus went out; and that he met him on Friday morning, and ſaid, Jonas, why do not you bring me the gold, or the value of it; and Jonas then called him a ſmuggler, and an infamous fellow, and told him he left the gold on the counter; he then ſaid, he adviſed with his wife, who ſaid, he had better take out a warrant, for he had very ill uſed him, and now he would be even with him for ſomething; Lazarus Jonas had ill uſed him, and now it would be a recompence to him; he then ſaid, now I will be even with him; I begged of him to conſider that the priſoner had a wife and children, and I did not hear that he had been guilty of any thing before, and that he ſhould take the value, and not find the bill; he ſaid, he would not, and he told me, ſome years ago he had five hundred weight of coffee in the houſe, and Jonas gave information againſt him, he ſaid, he was pretty ſure it was him, for nobody elſe knew of it; Mrs. Harris ſays ſhe was obliged to ſwear herſelf a whore to Harris, though his lawful wife; and Harris then ſaid, huſh my dear; I then intreated him again not to conſider all this, for very likely it was not Jonas, he then ſaid, if I choſe to pay the expences, and the piece of gold, and give him an indemnification, that Jonas never would inform againſt him, he would not find a bill againſt him.

Did he ſay how long it was after, before he took out the warrant?—He ſaid three days after.

Court to Harris. You have heard what the witneſs has ſaid?—I have.

Is that true?—Not a word of it, I have a certificate of my marriage.

Had you any ſuch converſation?—I never heard of it.

Had you any converſation?—She came in once or twice, to beg for Lazarus, I never ſaw her before.

But had you ſuch converſation?—Not me, I know nothing of it.

LAURANCE JONES ſworn.

I am an officer belonging to the New York Volunteers, in the regiment that is now reduced to half pay.

Did you call on Mr. Harris, and what paſſed?—Jonas formerly uſed to bruſh my clothes and go of errands, he ſtaid away five or ſix days, and did not come as uſual; laſt Friday I wanted him, and was informed he was in Newgate; as I had frequently entruſted him with forty or fifty pounds, I was rather ſurpriſed, I called on Harris at his ſhop, there was a woman preſent which I afterwards underſtood to be the wife of Harris; I aſked Harris to inform me, what was the reaſon for taking up Jonas, he told me the ſame ſtory as Mr. Barlin has related, namely, that he had given him a foreign piece of gold to look at, and aſcertain the value of, and to know if he would purchaſe it or not, the priſoner aſked him for a glaſs of gin, he went to fetch the bottle, and deſired the ſhopman to get the glaſs, and while they went they found the priſoner Jonas gone out of the ſhop; he met him the Friday morning, this I underſtand was three or four days previous to his miſſing him, or two days, I cannot be poſitive to the day, he aſked him what he meant by taking money from him, without returning it to him, or giving him the value for it, and that the priſoner had told him that he had not taken a piece of gold out of his ſhop, that he had left it with him in his ſhop, and gave him abuſive language, which was the means of inducing him to take out a warrant for him, he ſaid he ſhould not have taken him for this trifling cauſe, having known him for a number of years, had not it been for his ill treatment ſome years ſince; I aſked him what ill treatment it was, he told me about three or four years paſt, he had laid an information againſt him, as he had a quantity of raw coffee, in his houſe; I aſked him which way he knew the priſoner had done it, and the reaſon he gave for it was, that he, a day or two before the officers entered his houſe, offered to ſell this Jonas four hundred pounds weight of raw coffee, but they could not agree for price; the wife who is preſent in Court, and by my advice has been ſubpœned, for I am diſintereſted in the affair, ſhe ſaid, that ſhe was obliged to ſwear herſelf a common whore in the Court, to prevent Harris being ruined.

What character has the priſoner borne ſo far as you know?——I have known him ſeveral years, he behaved to me very honeſt, never heard any thing elſe of him, or elſe I ſhould not have truſted him.

Court to Harris. You have heard what this witneſs has ſaid, is it true?——Not a word about the coffee is true, I never ſpoke a word about it nor a word paſſed or ever thought about it.

Ivory. I ſaw him with it in his hand, when he went out of the door.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

ACQUITTED.

Court. Let the recognizance be eſtreated.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

187. WILLIAM WILLIAMS and RICHARD BREWER were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Edward Jones, on the King's highway, on the 30th day of December laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, three ſhillings in monies numbered, his property.

EDWARD JONES ſworn.

I was ſtopped on Tower-hill, the 30th of laſt month, between ſix and ſeven, I was going into the Borough from Whitechapel, nobody was in company with me, I was coming acroſs the hill, the two priſoners met me, and knocked me down, I cannot ſay which it was; and took three ſhillings out of my pocket, I had four guineas in my inſide pocket, which they did not find.

Was not it dark?—Yes.

How long did you remain on the ground?—They left me on the ground, and as ſoon as they left me, I aroſe from the ground, and by the light of the lamps I ſaw them paſs, and I followed them, I never loſt ſight of them, till they went into a houſe, it was a private houſe, in Virginia-ſtreet; they went into a door which was marked with chalk, I went and told a gentleman at the next door the caſe, and he got a conſtable immediately, and he went up ſtairs and took them; I was with him, they were ſitting in a chair doing nothing; I gave charge of them, they ſaid, they were not the men, the man that keeps the houſe, was in the houſe, but no other man that I ſaw; the officer ſearched their pockets, they owned they came acroſs the hill.

How long was it before you got a conſtable?——As far as I can tell about ten minutes.

Do you know their perſons?——Yes, I am ſure of the men by the light of the lamps, and the candles of the paſtry-cook's ſhop, I took obſervation upon them.

Now, remember the lives of theſe two men depend upon what you ſay, can you take upon yourſelf to ſwear to theſe two men by that light?——Yes.

Mr. Knowles, Priſoner's Counſel to Jones. Were you quite ſober at that time?—Yes, as ſober as I am now.

The night very dark?——Yes, it was dark.

You went to the Juſtice's the ſame evening?—Yes.

How happened you to miſtake one of the Juſtice's men for the conſtable you took with you?--O! Sir, no ſuch thing, I knew the conſtable.

You was knocked down?——Yes.

Stunned by the blow?——Yes, for a ſmall ſpace of time.

No light near you when you were knocked down?—No more than the lamps.

Do not you know when theſe men were ſearched, there was nothing found upon them?——Yes.

Did not they ſay, they were ready to go with you any where, that they were not the men?——Yes.

JOHN BECKHAM ſworn.

I am a conſtable living very nigh, I was ſent for, I went with the proſecutor to this houſe, the man that keeps this houſe, his name is Hinde, a very ſober labouring man at the victualling-office, Tower-hill.

Who admitted you into the houſe?——The door was chained, and when I knocked, the door was opened by Mr. Hinde, and the proſecutor ſaid, theſe are the two men that robbed me; the men were ſitting in a chair in the room next the fire place, in the ſecond floor.

Were they drinking?——No, nothing at all, they came from on board a ſhip, they ſaid, for ſome linen to be waſhed, I ſearched their pockets, and found no property upon them, I took them to the Juſtice, and the proſecutor ſwore to the men.

Was the proſecutor drunk or ſober?——Upon my word, I am not able to ſay, he might be in liquor, or he might not; he ſaid he never loſt ſight of them, the men behaved very civil, and were willing to go to the Juſtice's, they ſaid they were not the men.

Mr. Knowles. When you went to the Juſtice's did Jones know you?——Yes, Sir, he knew me, but however ſome people ſay he was in liquor, and that he did not know me from one of the runners; I had a coat on, and a handkerchief about my neck, like one of the runners; that was the opinion of the people that ſtood about, I did not obſerve myſelf.

PRISONER WILLIAMS's DEFENCE

I know nothing about it.

PRISONER BREWER's DEFENCE.

I am innocent of the fact, we had been hard at work all day, we came from on board a ſhip, we were going for a clean ſhirt for Sunday.

ROBERT HUNT ſworn.

Do you remember the priſoners being taken from your houſe by a conſtable?—Yes.

What did they come to your houſe for?—For ſome linen my wife had waſhed for them.

From what place did they come?—From a brig that was at Horſely-down-ſtairs, the other ſide of the water, I have known both the priſoners ſince they have been now in the river, one of them is my brother in law, I have known him for years, he bears as good a character as any man in the world; I did not expect them that night, Brewer often comes to our houſe, my wife waſhes for him and his ſiſter, and the other man came along with him.

Court. Is the direct way from Horſely-down-ſtairs, to Virginia-ſtreet, over Tower-hill?—Yes, they came over the bridge, they had not money to bring them over the water, ſo they came to ſave expences acroſs the bridge.

Both Not Guilty.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice Heath.

188. THOMAS GRASSHOP was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting George Freeman, on the King's highway, on the 5th day of January, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, four muſlin caps, value 20s. four muſlin frocks, value 30s. three pair of ſheets, value 3l. two pair of pillow caſes, value 5s. two ſhifts, value 10s. the property of John Abrahams.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

189. ZACHARIAH BEVAN was indicted for that he, on the 13th day of April laſt, at the pariſh of St. Bennet, otherwiſe St. Benedict, Paul's-wharf, did feloniouſly and falſly make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſly made, forged, and counterfeited, and feloniouſly act and aſſiſt in the falſe making, forging, and counterfeiting, a certain will and teſtament, partly printed, and partly written, with the name of William Howell thereto ſubſcribed, purporting to be the laſt will and teſtament of William Howell, and to be ſigned, ſealed and publiſhed by him, whereby he left his effects to his brother John Howell, and appointed him the ſaid Zachariah Bevan, the executor of his will, which will was dated the 6th of March, 1779, and ſigned William Howell, in the preſence of Stephen Sandys, firſt Lieutenant, and William Cowley, Maſter's Mate, with intention to defraud Iſabella Stuport againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, For publiſhing the ſame with the like intention.

Counsel for the Prisoner.

Mr. Fielding, Mr. Garrow.

Counsel for the Prosecution.

Mr. Silveſter, Mr. Reeve.

Mr. Bevan deſired to be accommodated with a chair, which was ordered by the Court.

SAMUEL HAWKINS ſworn.

I am clerk in the Prerogative-office.

Mr. Silveſter. Do you know of a will coming into the office, ſaid to be ſigned William Howell?—I do not know till I look, I have not looked at the papers; I produce two wills from the Prerogative-office, I received them from the records of the office.

Mr. Fielding. So all that you know, is that theſe are two papers that you have produced from the Prerogative-office?——Yes.

——— JONES ſworn.

I am a Proctor in the Commons, I know Mr. Bevan, he does buſineſs in the office I am in.

Look at that will?—I have.

What do you know of it?—I ſee nothing upon the face of it, to induce me to know it to be the will, I believe it to be ſo, and I have no doubt about it; in general wills have a jurata, this has not, it has been out of my cuſtody ſeveral months, and therefore it is impoſſible I can ſpeak of it with certainty, I have ſeen the will in the regiſtry, but I do not know that is the very will that was put originally there, in the courſe of the proſecution in Doctor's Commons, the will was put into the regiſtry; but whether that is the will, is impoſſible for me to ſay.

When was it carried in, and by whom?—I judge by the indorſement, by one Peter Shaw, clerk in the office, and I have no doubt, but that at the time it appears to be brought in, it was; but there is not any thing on the face of the will, that can induce me to ſay that this is the will that was tendered to the office by Mr. Bevan.

Mr. Silveſter to Mr. Hawkins. Are there any other wills of that name?——Not that I know of.

Mr. Garrow to Mr. Jones. What time was the will that was delivered to you by Mr. Bevan ſo delivered?——I will ſwear that the will left by Mr. Bevan was in my cuſtody previous to the 7th of May, 1784, which conſtituted the proſecution, for it appears to me that the citation citing Mrs. Stuport to bring in her probate, is dated the 14th of May 1784.

Mr. Garrow. I need not go on with ſome more enquiries that I have, till it can be proved.

Court. How comes it there is no jurata?——It was known there had been a probate granted to Mrs. Stupert, as the executor of her will, therefore the application was for a citation to bring in the probate.

EDWARD COOPER ſworn.

Look at the will?——I have.

What do you know of it?——I know that on or about the 7th of May 1784, this will, or I believe a will, was left at my office, and upon ſearching the regiſtry, probate had been granted for a former will, in conſequence of that, I ſee by my memorandum, becauſe I took general inſtructions for a citation, to ſhew cauſe why it ſhould not be declared null and void, and the probate revoked.

Was this the identical will that was produced?——It is impoſſible for me to ſay, there is another gentleman in Court of the ſame profeſſion, and he cannot ſay; I believe it to be the ſame will, I propounded in the cauſe on the part of Mr. Bevan.

Who produced it to you?—To the beſt of my recollection, Mr. Jones brought it from hackney where he has a houſe, and Mr. Bevan is I believe his neighbour, Mr. Jones left it with me as I beſt recollect.

Did you receive any will from the priſoner?——Upon my word I cannot ſay, Mr. Bevan came ſeveral times to me on this buſineſs, and conſulted me, I told him what was neceſſary, and I know his application was in May 1784, whether he delivered it to me, and I delivered it to Mr. Jones, or whether he delivered it to Mr.

Jones, and he took it to the office for inſtructions for the citation, I cannot poſitively ſay how I came by the will, I ſee I have as a matter of courſe taken inſtructions.

From whoſe mouth?—That I cannot ſay.

Mr. Silveſter. Who did you receive the inſtructions from?—I cannot poſitively ſay, I do not recollect, but very poſſibly from Mr. Bevan himſelf, I could not take the inſtructions from Mr. Jones, though the will might be left to me for that purpoſe, I ſee I have taken theſe inſtructions with my own hand writing, which are generally taken by a clerk.

Did you at any time ſee Mr. Bevan upon this ſubject?—I have ſeen him frequently upon the buſineſs.

Mr. Silveſter. What paſt upon that occaſion?

Mr. Fielding. No, no, he does not know that that is the paper upon which the converſation paſſed?

Court. You may aſk whether he had any converſation about a will, but then the queſtion ſuppoſes it to be that paper, which you are not entitled to do.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you ever ſhew that paper to Mr. Bevan?——I do not recollect that I ever did ſhew it to Mr. Bevan, while it was in my office, it was brought into the public office for the inſpection of Mr. Bevan or any other gentleman, but I do not recollect that I went with Mr. Bevan to ſhew it him; looking further into the memorandum, I ſee I have taken the date of the will, which I took the 6th of March, 1779, which is the date of this paper.

Mr. Jones. The will that I took the inſtruction for the citation from was dated the 6th of March, 1779.

Does it appear by your minute from whom you took the inſtructions?——No, it does not.

Court. Is there any means by which you can indentify that particular paper now produced?

Mr. Silveſter. No, my Lord, I do not know that there are any particular means.

Court to Jones. What means do you take in the Prerogative-office to authenticate papers, to prevent a ſubſtitution of one paper for another; for inſtance, now ſuppoſe one perſon ſhould ſubſtitute another paper for the original will?—When wills are brought to the proctor's for the purpoſe of being proved, they lay there to be taken into the regiſtry, the regiſtry is ſearched to ſee that no former grant has paſſed, if it has, it is uſual to take the original will back, then you take out a citation againſt the party who is in poſſeſſion of that probate to bring it in, and ſome months after it is before you to bring it in, which is generally by affidavit of ſcripts, and the will is annexed; this will I find was brought into the regiſtry, and there it remained in the cuſtody of the regiſter, the uſual practice has been purſued in this cauſe.

Court. No, it has not.——This is a ſeaman's buſineſs, and every expence is ſaved; the proctor alſo takes in the affidavit of ſcripts with the original will, it is of very little conſequence whether he takes it in annexed to the affidavit or not.

In this caſe it has not that?——The paper is identified to the regiſter, he marks them in what they call an aſſignation book, takes down the date only.

Court. The will you ſtate does not identify that piece of paper, the date is no mark of the piece of paper?—The minute would be Bevan againſt Stupart, on ſuch a day, Stupart brought into the regiſtry the will, that is not marked at all.

Court. The evidence is, that this is not the hand-writing of the party, now for ought it appears this may be a copy of that which Mr. Bevan brought, if there were circumſtances which ſhewed this will produced could not be a genuine one, I certainly ſhould not let the trial proceed.

Mr. Fielding. I am ſure if your Lordſhip was to hear Mr. Bevan's witneſſes, neither you nor any other perſon would have a moment's doubt of the innocence of the gentleman at the bar; and the parties on the ſide of the proſecution have been putting him to all this pain and trouble without the leaſt ſhadow of foundation.

Court. All that we can ſay at preſent is, that there is no evidence laid before us to doubt of this gentleman's innocence.

Mr. Fielding. My Lord, I have ſuch a volume of witneſſes in my brief, that if they were gone through would raiſe the aſtoniſhment and indignation of every perſon that heard of this proſecution.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, Mr. Woollſtoncroft attends here to tell your Lordſhip that Mr. Bevan firſt applied to him, who was attorney to Mrs. Stupart, to deſire his directions, that he was told Mrs. Stupart claimed a debt of ninety or a hundred pounds, and he aſked Mr. Bevan what was willed, and Mr. Bevan telling him a few hundreds, he adviſed Mr. Bevan to pay her; ſaid he, you had better make her an offer to pay her her debt, and get a diſcharge, rather than call in the will made to her, as the expences in law would be as much or more; this is what the proſecutrix now calls a compromiſe.

Mr. Jones. It is becoming every man in this Court to ſay what he can; I mentioned two circumſtances, the one is that the citation is dated the 14th of May, 1784, publication paſſed the 28th of July, and this indictment was not ſet on foot till the 14th of September laſt, after publication paſſed.

Court. Then you cannot carry this any further.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

Mr. Bevan. My Lord, may I crave the favour of this Court to grant me a copy of the indictment, I have been exceedingly injured, my life as well as my property has been injured, and we can ſufficiently prove that there has been a combination to extort money from me; a warrant was obtained, I ſuppoſe, more for that purpoſe than bringing me to this bar, but happily I eſcaped the villains that came to take me, and I came and voluntarily ſurrendered myſelf; my Lord, every thing that malice, that deviliſh malice could have done, has been done; therefore I hope I ſhall have a copy of my indictment, that I may be able to bring the proſecutors to juſtice, and I hope your Lordſhip will do it for the ſake of public juſtice.

Court. Mr. Bevan, the matter has certainly not proceeded in this caſe far enough to entitle me to comply with your requeſt, for this reaſon, though it appears to the Court there is no ground for the charge, yet it does not appear to the Court, nor can it, whether the will produced in the Commons was a genuine will or not; the ſuppoſition of it's not being a genuine will may be perfectly conſiſtent with your compleat innocence, for if this will was delivered to you by the brother, who claims the intereſt, it by no means follows, if it was not genuine, that you had any knowledge of it; but I cannot call this a malicious proſecution, until I have proof before me that it is a malicious proſecution.

Mr. Bevan. My Lord, the not going into the evidence hinders this proof.

Mr. Fielding. It is my duty to ſtop a proſecution in its firſt ſtage, where a defect is found, but it does not ſeem to me to be of any importance to have a copy of the indictment; if you can trace out the offenders you may obtain ſatisfaction.

Mr. Bevan. But when the ſentence is paſſed in the Commons may not that be obtained.

Court. The power of the Court will paſs away with the Seſſions, but I conceive it to be a miſtaken idea that there muſt be a copy of the indictment, for, an action of conſpiracy or for a malicious proſecution may be maintained without a copy of the indictment, granted by order of the Court.

190. JOHN MOLLOY was indicted for that he, on the 27th day of July, in the 14th year of his preſent Majeſty's reign, at the pariſh of Kilcock, in the county of Kildare, in the kingdom of Ireland, did marry one Catherine Courtney, ſpinſter, and had her for a wife; and on the 11th of May laſt, at the pariſh of St. Mary-le-bon, did marry one Mary Parker, widow, the ſaid Catherine, his former wife being then alive.

Court to Jury. There is no evidence, Gentlemen, but the evidence of the firſt wife, who is by law incompetent to give any evidence, either for or againſt her huſband, and alſo to make an affidavit to put off the trial, in order that ſhe may obtain evidence againſt her huſband.

Juſtice Heath. She ought not to be the proſecutrix.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

MISDEMEANOR.

191. GEORGE BAILEY was indicted for that he, on the 13th day of December laſt, one glaſs lamp with a burner and braſs furniture, value 10s. the property of Paul Le Meſurier, Eſq. by a certain perſon then before ſtolen, unlawfully and feloniouſly did receive, knowing the ſame to be ſtolen.

JOHN ROUVIERE ſworn.

I am clerk to Mr. Le Meſurier; on the 13th of December, about four in the afternoon I was going to my buſineſs after dinner, and I ſaw a man in the paſſage taking the lamp, I had no thought of his having bad deſigns, I thought the lamp wanted ſome repairing, and the man wanted to take it down, I ſaw no more of him, the lamp was taken down, the lamp was gone, and I went to my buſineſs.

From the ſight you had of that man, was it the priſoner?——It was rather dark, it was about four, the man was dreſſed in a light-coloured coat, I believe that man was not the priſoner.

LEWIS LEWIS ſworn.

I keep the New London Tavern, the priſoner brought me a lamp on the 13th of December, and ſaid he came from Mrs. Phillips, who kept the houſe ſome time before I took it, he aſked three half crowns for the lamp or elſe he was not to leave it, I then ſent to Mrs. Phillips to enquire whether ſhe had ſent him or not, he followed the perſon that went, I ſent one of my waiters; when the priſoner came back he acknowledged to me that he had told an untruth in ſaying that Mrs. Phillips ſent him, he came back for the lamp or the money, I told him he muſt give a better account of it, and I then gave charge of him to a conſtable, he ſaid he brought the lamp from Chelſea, the conſtable took the lamp with him.

GEORGE PIERREPONT ſworn.

I left the lamp in Mr. Lewis's charge that night, the next day I had it and the priſoner before the Alderman, the Alderman ordered me to advertiſe it, which I did on the 16th, and Alderman Le Meſurier's ſervant applied to me on the 16th, in the morning, and informed me that the Alderman had loſt a lamp, he afterwards ſaw the lamp and ſwore to it as the property of Alderman Le Meſurier, I kept it in my cuſtody till laſt ſeſſion, and laſt ſeſſion, by leave of your Lordſhip, Mr. Lewis put a mark on it.

WILLIAM WHITE ſworn.

I know the lamp, I am ſure of it.

Lewis. Here is my mark on it, I am ſure it is the ſame.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

On the 13th of December I was coming home about a quarter paſt four, and I ſaw a perſon dreſſed in a light-coloured coat running through Fryers Paſſage, I was running and he put the lamp down, I did not know whoſe the lamp was; I behaved, I acknowledge, imprudently in offering it for ſale, I have no witneſſes, my friends are ſuch as I would not chuſe to bring to ſuch a place as this.

GUILTY.

192. JOSEPH RICKARDS was indicted for that he, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the devil, on the 11th day of February, at the pariſh of St. Pancras, in and upon Walt Horſeman, in the peace of God and ou Lord the King then and there being, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice afor thought, did make an aſſault, and that h the ſaid Joſeph Rickards, with a certain iron bar of the value of 12d. which he in both his hands then and there had and held, the ſaid Walter, in and upon the body of the ſaid Walter, did ſtrike and beat, giving him then and there, with the ſaid iron bar, one mortal wound of the length of three inches, of the depth of two inches, and of the breadth of one inch, of which ſaid mortal wound the ſaid Walter from thence to the 19th of February, did languiſh, and languiſhing did live, and upon which ſaid 19th day of February, the ſaid Walter Horſeman did die; and the jurors ſay, that him the ſaid Walter Horſeman he the ſaid Joſeph Rickards did kill and murder.

MARY HORSEMAN ſworn.

Court. You are the widow of the deceaſed?—Yes.

Was the priſoner a ſervant to your huſband at any time?—Yes, about a year and a half, I believe, to the beſt of my knowledge.

When was he diſcharged from your huſband's ſervice?—I think, to the beſt of my remembrance, it was a month the Thurſday before the deed was done.

What buſineſs was your huſband?——A milk-man.

What was the occaſion of his being diſmiſſed from his ſervice?—It was that he did not do his work againſt his maſter came home.

How old is this priſoner?—I think he is between eighteen and nineteen.

Where did he come from?—Out of Bedfordſhire; I underſtood he went to ſee his mother, in Bedfordſhire, after he was diſmiſſed.

How long did he ſtay away, before he returned to your houſe at Kentiſh town?——I think about a week or ten days.

Did he come to your houſe after he returned?—Yes, he did come to our houſe ſeveral times, and I gave him victuals ſeveral times.

Did your huſband know of that, Madam?—My huſband knew that he had been to the houſe, but he did not know that I gave him victuals.

How did he employ himſelf after he came back to Kentiſh Town?—He had very little work to do after he came out of the country.

Then he hardly earned his living, did he?—No, my Lord, he did not, and that was the reaſon I gave him victuals.

Did he lay at your houſe after he returned?—Not to my knowledge he never did.

But do you know in fact that he did, though without your conſent?——No, he never lay a night in the houſe that ever I heard of.

When did this accident happen?——On Saturday morning, the 11th of February, I found it out.

What time in the morning?——It was about ten minutes after two or rather better.

Was you in bed?—I was.

In what room?——In the room under where my huſband ſlept.

Was you called or how?—I have a little girl of four years old lay with my huſband.

A daughter of yours?——Yes, the child called me, that waked the other in the other room, and my little boy after called to me at the top of the ſtairs.

What did ſhe ſay?——I did not hear her call, it waked the other in the other room, my little boy, who lay in the other room, on the ſame floor, he lay along with Trotman, and he called me.

How old is that boy?——Ten years old this September.

What is that Trotman?—A lodger in the houſe.

Is he a man?—Yes.

What is his Chriſtian name?—John.

Did the room where Trotman and your little boy lay communicate with the room where your huſband lay?—Only the ſtair parted them, my little boy came and knocked at my door, and told me his father wanted me, I went in directly, and by the light of the moon, he ſeemed to be quite black with blood from his face to his waiſt, the moon ſhone very bright, and there are two large windows in the room, he was ſitting up in the bed, and as far as his waiſt appeared black and covered with blood.

Did he ſpeak to you, good woman?——

When I ſaw him, I ſaid, Horſemann, my dear creature, what is the matter with you? he ſaid to me, Lord bleſs you! ſomething has run over my face; I ſaid, Lord bleſs you child! run over your face! why you are nothing but blood; he made me anſwer, have you got a candle? I ſaid, no child, I did not wait for a candle; I went down immediately, and got a candle, and when I came up, I found him beat and cut all to pieces; his forehead, and his eyes and noſe were cut all to pieces; I aſked him to tell me how it came, and he ſaid I do not know, do not aſk me, I do not know how it came. I called Trotman up, to go and fetch his nephew to me, and likewiſe to order the doctor and ſurgeons to come, that live at Kentiſh Town, then I went and got the pillow caſe off the pillow to wrap round his head, to try to ſtop the blood, then I got him to lay down in the bed, then I turned myſelf round in the room, and I found a ſtick laying by the drawers between the fire-place and the drawers, I took the ſtick up in my hand, this is the ſtick, but there was no blood upon this.

(Produces a hedge-ſtake.)

Did you ever ſee this ſtick before?—I ſaw it at the time it was cut, which was the Sunday before this accident happened.

You never ſaw it in your huſband's room before?——No, it never was there before.

Who cut it?—Trotman and the priſoner went out on Sunday to cut ſome ſticks, and they brought in three.

Who had that?—This was the priſoner's ſtick.

Did he bring it in with him?—To ſay whether he brought the ſtick in his hand, or whether Trotman brought them all in, I cannot ſay.

Why did you ſay it was the priſoner's then?—Becauſe it was a rough ſtick, cut off an elm tree, when it was brought in the priſoner cut it round the head as you ſee.

Did you ſee him do that?——I ſaw him doing it on the Sunday.

What did he do with this ſtick after he cut it round?—I do not know.

Did you ever ſee it after he cut it round till this time?——I have ſeen him with the ſtick in his hand when he has been out of the door.

Have you ſeen him with it more than once?——I cannot ſay whether once or twice, but I have ſeen him with it.

Do let us look at that ſtick.

(The ſtick handed to the Court; it appeared upon inſpection to have lead poured into a hole in the top of it.)

Did you ever ſee any thing done to this ſtick beſides cutting it round?—No, I never did; then I took this iron bar ſtanding between the fire-place and the drawers, the drawers are not a yard from the fire-place, it appeared to ſtand leaning one end of it againſt the fire-place, and the other againſt the drawers.

Was there any appearance of blood upon it?—Yes, there were marks of blood upon it, and ſeveral hairs upon the end of the bar, but I believe by carrying it backwards and forwards they are off.

Was the blood freſh?——Quite freſh, it was then.

You could not have any account from your huſband how it happened?——No, he never could give any account till the time he died; it was done on Sunday morning between one and two, I imagine it was, and he lived till the Sunday ſe'nnight following, till the 10th of February.

Was he in his ſenſes till he died?—Yes, he had not the leaſt idea how it happened, he never could tell how it happened.

Was his ſcull fractured?——Yes, it was, but I did not underſtand the nature of any thing of the kind; but it was cut and mangled in a deſperate manner.

What was the reaſon you did not lay with your huſband that night?—My Lord, I did not lay with him for ſix or ſeven nights, I have a little child about fourteen months old, that was very bad, cutting his teeth, and to prevent diſturbing my huſband, as he worked ſo hard, I lay with a woman.

Was your huſband uſed to ſleep ſound?—Very ſound in his firſt ſleep, till he waked about four o'clock, and then he uſed to be very wakefull.

Have you any thing to alledge againſt the priſoner at the bar for being guilty of this? —No other, but by finding the ſtick in the room, and likewiſe the ſtairs being ſo critical, I thought it was impoſſible for a ſtranger to have dond it, without taking any thing.

How could a perſon get into your houſe without being let in?——God Almighty knows, my Lord, I cannot tell how, unleſs he got in, in the evening, and concealed himſelf in the houſe.

When you went to bed, did you faſten all your doors and windows?——I faſtened all the doors, my Lord, the windows down ſtairs are not made to open.

How are they above?——Above they ſlide up and down.

Saſhes?——Yes.

Do you know whether theſe were faſtened?——They were all down when I went up ſtairs, we never did ſcrew them, only ſlipped them up and down at pleaſure.

Did you find any of them up in the morning?——No, never a one of them.

Was there any little room of any kind in your huſband's room, or within it?——No, there was none, there are three cupboards in Trotman's room, they are the length of the room, to put lumber in.

Were theſe cupboards down to the floor? ——No, not down to the floor, I imagine they are a yard from the floor.

Then a perſon to get into one of theſe cupboards muſt have ſtepped upon ſomething?——They might have ſtepped upon the bedſtead, which is under the cupboards.

Is there room for a man to ſtand up in it?——No, they muſt either lay down or ſit in it.

Is there a cupboard in your huſband's room?—No, never a cupboard there.

Your huſband, I find, diſcharged this priſoner from his ſervice, upon account of neglecting his duty, and not doing his buſineſs againſt the time of his coming home? —Yes.

That was his reaſon?—Yes.

Do you know of any enmity between them?—Never in my life.

So you know of no grudge from the priſoner againſt your huſband?——No, my Lord, I never heard anything of the kind.

Do you know whether any thing was taken away this night from your huſband? ——I miſſed nothing but a few farthings, which were in a baſon, in a cloſet where we kept our china, in the room where my huſband lay.

How many farthings were taken away?— I cannot ſay preciſely to the quantity, but I imagine there might be about ſixpenny-worth, there were a great many more that lay in rows, in ſixpenny-worths, there might be half-a-crown's-worth for what I know.

That was all you miſſed?—Yes.

Is this all the evidence you can give?— Yes.

Court. Will the priſoner aſk any queſtion of Mrs. Horſeman?—No.

MARY FULLER ſworn.

Did you lodge at Mrs. Horſeman's? ——Yes, I lived there a twelvemonth laſt Chriſtmas.

You lived there at the time the poor man was killed?—Yes.

Can you give any account of that matter? —No, I cannot.

What do you know relative to the priſoner at the bar?—I can give no account, Mrs. Horſeman called me.

Do you know any thing about it?—No.

You lay with Mrs. Horſeman?——Yes, with Mrs. Horſeman and the two children.

Do you remember Mrs. Horſeman being called up in the night?—Not the firſt time, till ſhe came and called me.

Did you go up ſtairs?—I got up immediately, and put my things on, and went up ſtairs.

Was Mrs. Horſeman there at the time you went up?—We both went up together, I could not have patience to ſtay behind, I was ſo frightened.

What condition did you find poor Horſeman in ?——All over blood, all red, covered with blood.

Could he tell how it happened ?—No, he never ſaid a word to me; Mrs. Horſeman deſired me to light a fire immediately.

Do you know any thing of a ſtick ?—Yes, I ſaw the priſoner at the bar ſend for a pipe, and melt lead in it.

How long was that before this poor man was wounded in this way ?—As nigh as I can recollect, it was either Tueſday or Wedneſday before.

How did he melt the lead ?——He put lead in the bowl of a tobacco pipe, and put the pipe into the fire, and I ſaw him take and pour it into the hole of the ſtick.

Look at the ſtick and ſhew us where it was ?——Yes, I will take my oath to the ſtick, here is the place where it was poured in.

Court. (Looks at it.) Gentlemen, you will look at it, but it ſeems to be of no conſequence, it is only to fill up the hole.

Where was the priſoner when he melted the lead ?——At Mr. Horſeman's houſe, he ſtood directly by the fire, nobody was in the houſe but me, and the child in my lap.

How long before Mr. Horſeman died, did you ſee the priſoner at his houſe ?——As nigh as I can recollect it was four or five days.

Did you ever ſee him at the houſe any time after he melted the lead, till the time Mr. Horſeman died ?—He has come into the houſe after Tueſday, but he has not ſtopped.

Do you know whether he ever lay in the houſe, after he was turned away ?—Never, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Did you lay there every night ?—Mrs. Horſeman, and me, and the two children, lay together every night.

Do you know whether Mr. Horſeman ever ſaw him in the houſe, after he was turned away ?——Not to the beſt of my knowledge.

JOSHUA JOHNSON ſworn.

I am a watchman at Battle-bridge, I met the priſoner at three o'clock in the morning, I was crying the hour.

What morning was that ?—On Saturday ſe'nnight.

Whereabouts was it you met him ?—In Chads-row.

How far is that from Kentiſh-town ?—About a mile and a half, when I met him he wiſhed me a good morning.

Did you know him ?—No, Sir, I never ſaw him before to my knowledge, he paſſed me, and went towards Kentiſh Town.

Do you know this Mr. Horſeman ?—Yes.

Did you know where his houſe was ?—I never was there, I never knew where he lived, I have been told it was by the Old Chapel.

How far might that be from the place where you met him ?——Near two miles.

Court to Mrs. Horſeman. Where is your houſe ſituated ?——It is on this ſide of the Anglers, in Kentiſh Town, next door to where the Old Chapel ſtood.

Johnſon. He paſſed me, and went towards Kentiſh Town; I had to call a little higher, when I returned, I walked ſharp after him, and he ſtopped againſt my watch-box, and when I was within a few yards of the box, he ſaid, watchman, here is three-pennyworth of farthings if you will accept them.

Did you take them ?—Yes.

What became of him then ?—He went towards Kentiſh Town.

Are you ſure the priſoner is the ſame perſon you met ?—Yes, I am ſure he is the ſame perſon, the moon ſhone very bright.

That is all you know ?—He wiſhed me a good morning, and ſaid it would be four o'clock before he got to Kentiſh Town.

Court to Priſoner. Would you aſk any queſtion of this witneſs ?—No, my Lord.

JOHN TROTMAN ſworn.

Did you lodge at Mr. Horſeman's ?—Yes.

What is your buſineſs pray ?—A blackſmith.

Are you a journeyman blackſmith, or how?——Yes.

Where was your room that you lay in?——On the other ſide of the houſe.

Was it upon the ſame floor where Horſeman lay?——Yes, only the ſtairs parted the rooms.

Who lay with you?—Mr. Horſeman's ſon.

How old is he?—Upon my life I cannot tell, about ten years old I believe.

Did you hear any noiſe in the night time?——No, none at all.

What did you hear, what do you know of the matter?——The little girl that lay with her father, came and called for her mother firſt, and then ſhe came and called me.

What happened then?——That waked me, and I heard Horſeman groan; then I called out to him, and aſked him what was the matter with him, he ſaid, Lord bleſs my ſoul, John, ſomething has run over my face; then Mrs. Horſeman, his wife, came up ſtairs, and ſhe aſked him what was the matter with him, and he ſaid the ſame thing to her, that ſomething had run over his face; then I got up directly, and went to Kentiſh Town to fetch his nephew, ſhe deſired me to go.

What was the nephew's name?——William Winkworth, then I fetched him, then I went to Tottenham-court-road, to Doctor Prykes, and Mr. Sallinger, came with me.

Did not you find the doctor at home?—Yes, he was at home, but the ſervant came.

Where does Mr. Sallinger live?—He was at Mr. Pryke's houſe.

When you roſe did you go into the room where Horſeman lay?——No, I did not go in, I looked in at the door and ſaw him, and I went for his nephew as faſt as I could.

Did you ever obſerve an iron bar in the room where Horſeman lay?—No, I never did.

Did you ever obſerve one ſtand there, in the chimney, or any part of the room?——No, I never did, I never did go into the room.

Will you look at that ſtick, have you ever ſeen that ſtick before?——Yes, I cut the ſtick.

How long before this affair did you cut it?—I believe it was a week, or a fortnight, but I am not ſure which, I cut three, but the others were not ſo big as this.

Was the priſoner with you?——Yes, he was, I brought them into the houſe, and I took the leaſt, and the priſoner ſaid he would have this.

Did you ſee him do anything to that ſtick afterwards?——I ſaw him bore this hole in our ſhop at the top of the knob, that was all I ſaw him do to it.

Who put that lead in it?——I do not know, I did not ſee him put it in.

Did you ſee the iron bar after you had been for the ſurgeon?——I ſaw it before I went for the ſurgeon, for Mrs. Horſeman had brought this bar out into my room, when I was in bed, before I got up.

What condition was it in?——It was all over nothing but blood, and the blood was jellied on the bar, or pieces of fleſh, I do not know which.

Where did the iron bar uſually ſtand?—It uſed to ſtand in my room, under my window, it belonged to my window, but the window ſhutter was never faſtened.

Did you ſee any hair upon it?—No, I did not obſerve any.

Court to Priſoner. Would you aſk any queſtions of this witneſs?—No.

SARAH ROSE ſworn.

Do you know the priſoner?——I know him, he lodged at my houſe.

How far do you live from Horſeman's?—About four doors I believe.

When did he come to lodge at your houſe?—He came to lodge with me the Monday fortnight before.

When did you know him firſt?——I knew him when he lived with Mr. Horſeman.

And after he was diſcharged he took a lodging at your houſe?——No, not till after he had been at his mother's.

Do you know where he was the night this unfortunate accident happened?—— He was not at his lodgings that night.

Had he laid out of your houſe any night before?——He had laid out one night before.

He did not lay at home that night?—— No.

When did you next ſee him?——I never ſaw him afterwards, he did not board at my houſe, he only lodged there.

How many days was it before this night, that he lay out the night before?—To the beſt of my knowledge it was the Saturday after he came to my houſe.

AMY HALL ſworn.

I am maid ſervant to Mrs. Roſe.

I think the priſoner lodged at that houſe for ſome time?——Yes, he did.

How long?——I cannot ſay, it was above a week.

Do you remember him when he was ſervant to Horſeman?——Yes.

He lodged at your houſe after he left Horſeman's ſervice?————Yes.

Do you know whether he was at home the night that this affair happened?——No, my Lord, he was not at his lodgings that night.

Do you know where he was?——No, I cannot ſay.

Did you expect him home that night?— Yes.

Did you make any enquiry after him?— I went down to Mr. Horſeman's on the Friday night, at a quarter before eleven o'clock.

Who did you aſk after?——I went down, my miſtreſs ſent me to aſk Mrs. Horſeman, if ſhe would be ſo good to go up to Mr. Tompkins's.

Did you aſk any thing about the priſoner? ————Yes, I went to Mrs. Horſeman, and aſked Mrs. Horſeman if ſhe would be ſo good, to go up to Mr. Tomkins's, to inſure No. 6, and after we had done talking about the Lottery, I aſked Mrs. Horſeman if Joe was come home, and ſhe ſaid he was not come home, and I made anſwer, and ſaid, may be he will not come home to night, and ſhe ſaid ſhe dare ſay that he would, and ſhe ſuppoſed if he came home, that he would not come to our houſe, but would come there, and if he flung any thing up at the window, John would hear him, and let him in.

What John?——John the blackſmith; ſhe ſaid, ſhe ſuppoſed he would not come to our houſe, but would come to theirs.

What more was ſaid?——I do not remember any thing elſe.

He did not come home to your houſe? —No, he did not.

Mr. Recorder. Did Mrs. Horſeman ſay any thing more to you then?—She ſaid that he laid there one night before, when he laid out.

Mrs. Horſeman. I did not ſay any ſuch thing.

Court to Hall. He did not return to your lodgings after, did he?——No, he never did.

Court to Mrs. Horſeman. This woman ſays, that you told her, that he had laid one night before at your houſe?—My Lord, I did not ſay ſo to her, the words I ſaid to her were, ſhe aſked me if Joe was come home, I ſaid no, ſhe ſaid do you think he will come home to night, I ſaid very likely he will throw ſome dirt up at the window, if John hears him it is a hundred to one but he will let him in.

She ſays, you ſaid he had laid there one night before?——I never did.

You have ſaid in your evidence, that he never lay a night in your houſe after he was diſcharged?——Never, to the beſt of my knowledge he never did.

Never that you heard of?——No, my Lord.

GEORGE SALLINGER ſworn.

I attended the deceaſed in the firſt inſtance, I recollect it was the [illegible] inſtant, about half paſt three in the morning, when I was called up on the Saturday morning, two young men came to call me up; I went, and immediately on my entrance into the room, I perceived him in a very mangled condition, and covered with blood.

This poor man is dead?———Yes.

Did you examine the condition of his head?———The inner table of the ſcull was totally detached from the upper; there likewiſe was a fracture over the left eye, which intirely broke to pieces the orbit of the eye; there was likewiſe another blow over the right eye, which broke that to pieces, and a piece of the fracture had divided the optic nerves.

When did he die?———On the Sunday morning, about a quarter after ſeven.

What do you impute his death to?——To the wounds he received.

Were his wounds neceſſarily mortal?———They were, and ſuch was the opinion of Mr. Heavyſide, the ſurgeon, whom I called in.

——— HEAVYSIDE ſworn.

I was ſent for on Saturday afternoon, the day after the accident; I found the whole ſcull ſo mangled, that there was no poſſibility for any art to aſſiſt him.

Was there any poſſibility, humanly ſpeaking, that he could recover?———Utterly impoſſible, no doubt of it; I do not conceive it neceſſary for me to enter into any anatomical account of this affair, but on opening his head afterwards, it very clearly appeared, that it was out of the reach of art to aſſiſt him, from the very firſt moment.

Court. Does the priſoner wiſh to aſk either of theſe gentleman any queſtions?———No.

SAMUEL LOVELACE ſworn.

What do you know boy of this affair?———This little boy ſaid he heard the child call its mother.

Did you lodge in the houſe?———Yes.

Who did you lodge with?———Thomas Fuller, I heard the little girl call the mother.

Do you know any thing more of the matter?———No.

What room did Thomas Fuller lay in?——In the front room.

Was that in the ſame room where Trotman lay?—Yes.

What were there two beds?—Yes.

Had you laid there often?———Yes.

Several times?———Yes.

Do you remember any thing of a cupboard in that room?—Yes, there were three in the ſide of the wainſcot.

Are there ſeveral doors to them?—There are doors to every cupboard.

They do not run one into another, do they?—No, they have partitions between them.

Suppoſe a perſon was to get into one of theſe cupboards, could he ſtand upright?—No, he could ſit in, or lay in them.

Was it long enough for a perſon to lay in?———Yes, they are divided one from the other, but long enough to lay down in.

Do you recollect when you went to bed, how theſe cupboards were?———They were all ſhut.

Are you ſure of that?———Yes, it was moon-light.

What led you to take notice of it?———I always look round the room, but in the morning when I waked the door of one of the cupboards was open over my bed.

Do you remember an iron bar that uſed to be in that room where you lay?———I have ſeen an iron bar over the window.

Did you take notice of it that night?—No.

Did you ſee the priſoner that day?——No.

Court. After the accident happened did you ſee the priſoner?———Yes: Mrs. Horſeman ſent me to the Anglers to call him to carry the milk that morning, as he knew the walk.

What time in the morning was that?—At four o'clock.

What on the ſame morning her huſband was killed, ſhe ſent you to the Anglers to call the priſoner?———Yes.

This Anglers is a publick houſe I ſuppoſe?—Yes.

How far might it be from Mr. Horſeman's?———Two or three doors.

Court to Priſoner. Would you aſk any queſtion of this boy?—No.

Mr. Recorder. Who keeps that houſe?

Jane Roſe.

Did you meet with him?—No, I called four times, and the fourth time he anſwered me over the way, he was coming from London.

Was he in a houſe?——No, he was in the road.

Did he go to milk the cows that morning?——Yes.

How old are you?——Sixteen the latter end of laſt June.

THOMAS FULLER ſworn.

How old are you?——Fifteen, I ſlept with Lovelace, I obſerved the cupboards, they were ſhut when I went to bed.

Did you ariſe the ſame time that Lovelace did?——Yes.

Did you obſerve the cupboards then?—Yes, one cupboard was open.

Do you know any thing more?——Yes, I was in bed, and my bedfellow was aſleep, and I heard a noiſe in the morning.

How long before you aroſe was that?—A good while, it was a little after one o'clock as near as I can gueſs, I happened to be awake, I heard a noiſe.

What ſort of a noiſe?—I cannot tell juſtly what ſort of a noiſe it was, I was between ſleep and awake.

In what room was it you heard the noiſe?—In the room where I lay, over my head.

You lay in the ſame room where Trotman was?—Yes.

What ſort of a noiſe was it?—I cannot ſay.

What ſort of a ſound did it make?—I cannot ſay, my partner nipped me, and I fell aſleep again.

Do you know the priſoner very well?—Yes.

Do you remember when he was turned off by Mr. Horſeman?—Yes, it was on Thurſday in the afternoon that he paid him off, as ſoon as he had done milking; I heard he went into Bedfordſhire, and he came back in a week's time.

Did you ever ſee him at your miſtreſs's houſe after he came back?—Yes.

How many times?—I cannot ſay how many times, he was in his beſt clothes when I firſt ſaw him ſince he came back.

Do you know whether he ever ſlept at your houſe?—I do not know that he ever ſlept at the houſe, one morning Mr. Horſeman and me got up to milk the cows and we left the door on the ſnack, we always do, and he always ſends me up to call his ſon Billy, when the three cows came in, I went up to call Billy, and I ſaw an orange on the table, and I aſked how that orange came there, Billy ſaid it was his, and I aſked him who gave it him, and he ſaid Joe Rickards.

Did you ſee Rickards there?——Yes, he was in the place where I got out from, in my place along with my bedfellow.

Can you tell what day that was?—I cannot tell what day that was.

How long was it before this accident?—I cannot juſtly ſay to the truth what day it was.

Was it after he had been down into Bedfordſhire, and come back again?——Yes, my Lord, I ſaw him in bed where I lay, with that blue coat that he has on now, and the child ſaid he gave him the orange becauſe he ſhould not tell he had been there.

Are you ſure it was after he came from Bedfordſhire, when you ſaw him in bed?—No, Sir, I am not ſure whether it was after or before.

Are you ſure it was after he was diſmiſſed the ſervice of Mr. Horſeman?—Yes, Sir, a good while after he was turned away.

JOHN BERRINGER ſworn.

I am headborough for the pariſh of St. Pancraſs, I was ſtanding at my door, I believe it might be about eight o'clock, on the 11th of February, on Saturday morning, and the firſt alarm I had was a little boy told me Mr. Horſeman was almoſt murdered, he ſaid, with an iron bar, he ſaid the houſe was not robbed, it was done out of ſpight, and when I came Mrs. Horſeman took me up ſtairs, and related to me the ſame as ſhe has now, upon which

I went to the next public-houſe, Mrs. Roſe's, and one man ſaid you need not gallop a horſe to death to find it out, and he ſaid the perſon who ſhould have been here laſt night was not at home; which information gave me very great ſuſpicion, and I went and met the priſoner coming home with his milk pails, I turned ſhort upon him and ſaid, why, Joe, your maſter is almoſt murdered, I aſked him if he knew any thing of it, or had heard any information that had been given of any body, he ſaid no, he knew nothing at all of it; I ſaid it was very odd he ſhould ſeem ſo unconcerned about his maſter, he replied he could not help it, for he knew nothing at all about it, then I ſaid to him, Joe, to make ſhort of it, you are my priſoner; I conducted him back to Mr. Horſeman's houſe, with his milk pails on his ſhoulder, he threw off his milk pails in a very great paſſion like, and ſaid he would go directly with me any where, I bid him not be too much in a hurry for that I ſhould have a little talk with him firſt, not do things too raſhly; then I aſked him how he could be guilty of ſuch a thing, I accuſed him, he ſaid he did not know whether he ever did ſuch a thing in his life, that was the reply he made me; I ſaid it was very odd if he did not know whether he ever killed a man or no; no, he ſaid he never did, and I ſaid, no, I ſuppoſe not till now; then I ſaid, well you are certainly guilty, and come up ſtairs with me, and ſee this poor man; upon which I went up ſtairs and made him go with me, and I ſaid, Joſeph, look at that poor unfortunate man! and I ſaid, now can your conſcience let you deny that you have murdered this man, touch him if you dare, and deny the fact; he ſaid he could, he could ſhake hands with him, upon which the deceaſed put out his hand and they did ſhake hands; I then took him to the Rotation Office immediately, and when I took him there, he went under the examination, and I thought it proper for Mr. Fletcher and the Juſtices to get what ſecret information I could, and bring in all the evidences that are here preſent, and Lovelace told me, that he ſaid to him d—n his maſter, one way or another he would work him up; he likewiſe told Thomas Fuller that if he did not conſider his ſore heel, one day or other he would work him up, and he wiſhed ſome accident might fall on him, he ſaid he would be d—ned if he would not work him up one of theſe days.

How long was this before the priſoner left his ſervice?—About two months.

Court to Thomas Fuller. Did you ever hear him ſay any thing of this kind?——Yes, he ſaid to me if he did not conſider his ſore heel more than he did, he would work him up one day or another, and he wiſhed ſome bad accident might happen to him.

Had the priſoner ſore heels?——Yes, he tumbled down one day on the ice and cut his heel coming back from carrying his milk.

How long was this before he left his maſter's ſervice?——I cannot juſtly ſay how long, I think it was about a month or ſix weeks.

Priſoner. It was only five days after I hurt myſelf before I was turned away.

Court. There is a confeſſion of this boy, is not there?——Yes, taken before Juſtice Machin.

Court. The Juſtice of the peace ought to be here himſelf, it is a ſhameful neglect of duty not to attend.

Mr. Garrow. He is a very old and infirm man.

Berringer. I can prove it.

Was you preſent when that examination was taken?——I was not at the beginning, but I was at the latter end and heard it read over.

Was there any promiſe or threatening made uſe of?——Not at all, all the time and deliberation that could be given him, was given him, there was more caution than any thing elſe.

Was it freely and voluntarily made by the priſoner at the bar?——Entirely ſo, for we had got the commitment to Newgate, and all the Juſtices were gone but this gentleman, who is a very old man, he was gone into the back room, then he ſaid before the Juſtice he would go back and tell the whole, for if it was not for one in the houſe, he would not have done it, I ſaw the Juſtice ſign the information.

(The Confeſſion read.)

Signed, "the mark of Joſeph Rickards taken the 20th of February, 1786, before John Machin."

"Middleſex, to wit. The voluntary examination and confeſſion of Joſeph Rickards, touching the murder of Walter Horſeman, &c. taken before me, one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the peace for the ſaid county, who ſays, that about Auguſt laſt, he was hired to live with Walter Horſeman, a cow-keeper, at Kentiſh Town, and that about a fortnight after he had been in the ſervice, he was ſitting one evening with his miſtreſs, Mrs. Horſeman, by the kitchen fire, when ſhe pulled his head on her boſom, and ſeemed very fond of him; that ever ſince that time ſhe has frequently kiſſed him, and this informant has laid hold of her breaſts, and at ſeveral times§ * *
but he has never had any other connection of a private nature than what is before mentioned; but ſhe has frequently told him ſhe wiſhed her huſband was dead; that on Friday, the 10th of February inſt. about ſix o'clock in the evening he ſhut the back door that goes into the yard, and went up ſtairs and hid himſelf in the cloſet, deſcribed by the ſeveral informants in the information, and about two o'clock in the morning he came out of the cloſet and went into the room where Horſeman lay, with the ſtick he left in the room, and now in poſſeſſion of John Berringer the headborough, but on ſeeing an iron bar ſtanding in the chimney corner, he took the bar and wounded the ſaid Walter Horſeman, and ſtruck him ſeveral blows on the head and face, and then made his eſcape out of a window in Horſeman's room, opened the back gates, and run away over the fields, and returned again in the morning to Kentiſh Town, the farthings he gave the watchman he took out of a cloſet in Horſeman's room, and that no perſon whatever knew any thing of the matter but this examinant."

Court. Joſeph Rickards, you have heard the evidence that has been given againſt you on this occaſion, what have you to ſay in your defence?

Priſoner. I am not guilty, Sir.

Have you any witneſſes to call?—No, Sir, I have not.

What do you ſay about your confeſſion, you have confeſſed yourſelf, and as it is proved at your own deſire and requeſt?—I did go into the room, I was perſuaded by the people on the outſide.

Court to the Headborough. Was it his voluntary offer to go back or was he perſuaded by the people to go back?—We were all gone away over the way, and while we were there, there came in news that there was a confeſſion.

Was it by the influence of others, or was it his own voluntary deſire and propoſal?——His own voluntary deſire and propoſal.

Court to Priſoner. You hear what this headborough ſays?—I do, it was not my deſire, when I got out of the place ſeveral people were there, and bid me go in and ſay what I did, and they told me that would clear me.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, this priſoner at the bar is indicted for the wilful murder of Walter Horſeman, and giving him a blow with an iron bar on his forehead, charged to have been done on the 11th of February, and that he languiſhed till the 19th and then died. Mary Horſeman, the widow of the deceaſed, &c. [Here the learned Judge ſummed up the evidence, and then added,] Gentlemen, this evidence is only circumſtantial, yet it produces a very ſtrong ſuſpicion certainly in one's mind againſt the priſoner, but to ſay there is any direct teſtimony againſt him, nobody can aſſert, but they lay a very ſtrong foundation to introduce the confeſſion he has made: I ſhould not for one, though he is very near the ſtate of manhood, chuſe to reſt ſingly and merely on his confeſſion, as he is not at full age, though he is above that age of diſcretion, which the law aſſigns to be at the age of fourteen years, and certainly it is near the time that human reaſon is ſuppoſed to be mature, therefore, I thought, and my learned brother, and Mr. Recorder agree with me, that it was extremely proper to have the whole circumſtances of this caſe laid before you by evidence; theſe circumſtances, Gentlemen, you have heard, and I cannot but ſay they operate very ſtrongly on my mind to introduce this confeſſion: Now, the headborough, who ſeems to be a very ſenſible man and maſter of his buſineſs, has given a very full account, I think, to authoriſe and warrant the Court to permit this confeſſion to be read; the Juſtice of the peace is, I find, an old gentleman, or elſe he ſhould have attended the Court, but the priſoner having abſolutely perſiſted in his innocence, until they were carrying him off with the commitment, he, in the preſence of the headborough, voluntarily, as he ſwears, begged and intreated to be carried back again to tell the truth of the caſe before the Juſtice of the peace; the Juſtices were all gone except Mr. Machin, he tells you that all ſort of time was given to him, that he made this confeſſion with all ſort of deliberation, and that it was read to him: I think it unneceſſary to read it over to you a ſecond time, it cannot have eſcaped your memory; it is a full expreſs confeſſion of the fact, and he takes the murder entirely upon himſelf, and declares that no one elſe was concerned in it; there is an expreſſion in it, whether true or not, that he did hear Mrs. Horſeman expreſs a wiſh that her huſband was dead, whether that was the motive or ſpring of this horrid action I cannot ſay: Now he ſays he is innocent, and that with reſpect to this confeſſion, ſome people after he was gone out ſuggeſted to him that it was better he would tell the truth, and that would clear him; that is not very conſiſtent, I think, to ſuppoſe a man who confeſſes he is guilty of a wilful murder, and ſo barbarous a murder as this is, that he ſhould be cleared, that his life ſhould be ſaved by making an ample confeſſion of the crime, but the headborough being aſked again, does expreſsly tell you it was the voluntary wiſh and confeſſion of the priſoner: If you are ſatisfied, Gentlemen, upon the whole, that he is guilty, you will find him ſo; if you ſee any reaſonable doubt, you will acquit him.

§ Here ſome familiarities were recited too indecent for publication.

The Jury retired for a ſhort time, and returned with a Verdict

GUILTY, Death.

Clerk of the Arraignt. Joſeph Rickards, hold up your hand, you ſtand convicted of the wilful murder of Walter Horſeman; what have you to ſay, why the Court ſhould not give you judgment to die according to law.

(Proclamation made.)

Mr. Recorder. Priſoner, you have been convicted, upon evidence which excludes all poſſibility of doubt, of a crime in itſelf the moſt heinous of any that human nature can commit; we are told from ſacred authority that the blood of the innocent cries to Heaven for vengeance and atonement, and the voice of God and man agree, that whoſo ſhedeth man's blood, by man alſo ſhall his blood be ſhed: If ſuch is the nature of murder conſidered in itſelf, how deeply aggravated is your guilt, when we conſider the peculiar circumſtances of your caſe, you have had no palliation from provocation or the influence of ungovernable and fatal paſſions, but actuated by the moſt deliberate and diabolical malice; the unhappy victim of your crime was the maſter whom you had ſerved, who had never injured you, and to whom you owed nothing but reverence and duty; inflamed with the thirſt of blood, yet deliberate enough to form an artful plan, for effectuating your infernal purpoſe, you laid in wait for your maſter's life, and in the dead hour of night when all the innocent part of the family were lulled in reſt and ſeeming ſecurity, you crept forth from your lurking place, and in the defenceleſs and harmleſs ſtate of ſleep, with more than ſavage ferocity you butchered and mangled your maſter in the moſt brutal and inhuman manner; for guilt ſo aggravated as this, all mercy from the laws of your country muſt be excluded; far be it, however, from man to ſet bounds to the mercy of the Moſt High; happy will it be for you if the attonement of your guilty blood, joined with the deepeſt remorſe and repentance during the ſhort time that remains for you to live, ſhould prove ſufficient to obtain that mercy from him hereafter, which juſtice muſt deny you here: In the fervent prayer, that his mercy may ſo work upon your ſinful ſoul as to produce that change which is neceſſary to your ſalvation, it remains only for me to pronounce upon you the awful ſentence of the law, which muſt inevitably be carried into execution, which is, that you be carried from hence to the place from whence you came, and from thence to the place of execution, there to be hanged by the neck till you are dead; and that your body be delivered to be diſſected and anatomiſed, according to the ſtatute, and the Lord have mercy on you ſinful ſoul.

Mr. Akerman. My Lord, the priſoner now ſays the accuſation againſt the woman is falſe.

Proſecutrix to the Jury. Gentlemen, I beg you will aſk him whether what he has ſaid is true concerning me.

Proſecutrix to Priſoner. Am I innocent of what you have ſaid?

Priſoner. Yes: (the priſoner was taking away, but brought back again) She is innocent of every thing I have accuſed her with.

Court. What was the motive that urged you to the commiſſion of this horrid crime?

Priſoner. I do not know.

Court. It is thought proper by the Court that the ſentence ſhould be executed as near as conveniently may be where the murder was committed, make out the order accordingly.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

193. THOMAS TATHAM, SAMUEL FRANCIS, HUGH M'DONALD and LEONARD SULLIVAN were indicted for burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John White, about the hour of one in the night on the 31ſt day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein two hundred and forty yards of ſilk ſerge, value 60l. forty yards of other ſilk, value 12l. 6s. fourteen yards of other ſilk, called ſattin, value 4l. 12s. ſix yards of other ſilk, value 35s. four yards of buff figured ſilk, value 32s. three yards of other ſilk, value 18s. two yards of other ſilk, value 12s. two hundred ſeventy-eight yards of other ſilk called luteſtring, value 62l. fifty-two yards of armozeen, value 17l. and fifty-two yards of remnants of ſilk and worſted, value 12l. his property.

The caſe opened by Mr. Garrow, previous to which the witneſſes were ordered out of Court by the deſire of Mr. Morgan, Counſel for two of the priſoners.

JOHN WHITE ſworn.

On Tueſday the 31ſt of January, I went to bed after twelve, I was reading in the parlour, I was not alarmed in the night, and my houſe was all faſt in the morning, I found a wall broke down which came by a ſtaircaſe of the cellar, from a houſe that was empty in Wytch-ſtreet, that was oppoſite to my houſe; and adjacent to it, there was a breach made in the wall, the ſize of a good pane of glaſs, on the right there was a party wall of my neighbour's, and on the left they would have got into a ceſſpool; I miſſed the following articles which I took down from our number book, which we have regularly, and mark off every day.

Court. To what value was the whole? —The whole amount is two hundred pounds, the whole amount of thoſe I have found again, are nearly upon a third.

What time did you get up in the morning?—I believe it was a little after ſeven.

Mr. Morgan, Counſel for Mᶜ Donald and Francis. Was you up the firſt in the family?——I was not.

Who was?—I believe one James Haydon which is my ſervant.

What time was he up?——I look upon it to be nearly ſeven.

Before or after?——I cannot ſay.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

I think it was on Thurſday the 5th, I received information that there were ſome people at the priſoner Tatham's, with a quantity of ſilk; Mr. White happened to be at the office, I took him with me to Mr. Tatham's houſe, in Drury-lane; I think it was No. 65, if I miſtake not; Tatham and the other two were in the parlour; there were Tatham, Francis, and Mᶜ Donald, I know nothing at all of Sullivan; we ſearched the houſe, and in the ſhop under the counter, in the front room, we found ſeveral things; it is a ſhop where they ſell ribbons and handkerchiefs, and things of that ſort, Tatham keeps the ſhop.

What did you find in the back room?—After ſearching that, I aſked what rooms they had, and he told me there was a back kitchen, and I think a one pair of ſtairs; I ſent Macmanus up for the key of the kitchen, and I ſtood by while he took this and a dark lanthorn out of the back kitchen; theſe three men were in the back parlour; there was no property there.

What were theſe three men about?——They were ſtanding upright round the table, I made no other obſervation, there was a paper laying before them, which contained ſome account, that paper, I believe, is in the hands of Mr. Jealous, this was on the Thurſday.

Court to Mr. White. Look at the ſeveral articles that are produced?——I do, I have meaſured them ſince the robbery; and they all agree with the number book, and as for the waiſtcoat piece, ſome of the pieces were cut off for my children, and I have them alſo, and they all correſpond.

This piece correſponded with the number oppoſite to this in your number book? —Yes.

Court. Can you ſwear that you had ſuch things in your houſe on the 31ſt of October?—I can.

Mr. Garrow. Have you any doubt that they are yours?—None in the world.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

I went into the back parlour, I ſaw Tatham ſitting by the fire, and Mᶜ Donald and Francis ſitting round a little mahogany table, then Macmanus ſecured Francis and Mᶜ Donald, and I ſearched Tatham; on Tatham I found twenty guineas, and upon the table lay a piece of paper with ſome writing upon it; I then left Macmanus in the parlour, and came into the ſhop where I was preſent when the ſilks were found, but not when the ſilk damaſk was found; this is the paper that was on the table.

Did you find anything elſe there?——I found a glove there.

Can you explain what it means?—No, I cannot.

Proſecutor. According to the poſition of the priſoners, ſitting round the table, there appeared to be a kind of ſettlement of money, here is 514 which comes near the ſum of the goods which were miſſing (The paper contained two articles 310 and 204 and another claſs of figures of pounds and ſhillings, 19l. 14s.) the 514 yards comes near the goods that are now miſſing, there was a yard that ſeemed not to have been long made uſe off, lay by the place where they were; Mr. Clarke ſaid to the people, what I ſee you have been meaſuring, there lay the yards, and we abſolutely thought this was the money that was found on Tatham, and that the other was the goods which they had ſold which was deficient; there are ſeven hundred and nine yards miſſing, and there are two hundred recovered, now here is five hundred and fourteen.

Court. Was any anſwer given by either of the priſoners when Clark ſaid, I ſee you have been meaſuring?—No, I did not take any notice, but they all denied knowing any thing of the paper, though it lay before them on the table, nobody knew any thing of the hand writing or any thing.

That was all the obſervation you made on the paper?—It was.

(The paper handed to the Court and Jury.)

Mr. Morgan to Mr. White. McDonald and Francis were ſearched, I believe, before you, were they not?——They were ſearched, and there was ſome money.

Who took the money?——One of the officers.

Which of them?——I cannot ſay.

Court to Clarke. Do either of you know whether any money was found on either of the priſoners beſides Tatham?——Yes, Macmanus has it.

Court to Clarke. In what condition were theſe goods?—They were rather in a rough ſtate, they lay ſimply juſt as they do now, any body that is uſed to ſilk would not let them lay ſo.

PATRICK MACMANUS ſworn.

I went to Francis's lodging, on the ſame day that Mr. Clarke went to Tatham's, I was at Tatham's alſo; at Francis's I found this in a drawer in his lodgings, which was in Newtoner's-ſtreet, this is a piece of crimſon damaſk ſilk which Mr. White owns; the other which Mr. White ſays is the ſame, was found in the back kitchen at Tatham's.

Mr. White. This is part of the ſame damaſk, and correſponds with what we have at home, what we found in Tatham's back kitchen, and this correſponds with the admeaſurement, when we took ſtock in October laſt, with the addition of this that was found at Francis's, it makes up the quantity exactly, and it is the ſame pattern.

Macmanus. In Tatham's back kitchen, where this ſilk and damaſk was in a trunk, there was a board looked like an ironing-board ſtood out, and there was a piece of brown paper, and under the piece of brown paper, this dark lanthorn lay concealed; this damaſk was not with the reſt of the ſilks, it was in a trunk that was locked, we had the key from Tatham; I went to Francis's afterwards, and found this ſtriped piece in the corner upon a little ſhelf.

Mr. White. I called directly to Clarke, and ſaid, here is ſome of my property, I can ſwear to it.

Mr. Morgan to Macmanus. You ſearched the two priſoners, McDonald and Francis?—Yes.

You found ſome money upon them?—Yes, I found two guineas and a half on Francis and on the other, there might be a guinea difference, I returned the money again.

You found this piece of ſilk at Francis's lodgings?—Yes.

There are ſeveral lodgers in the houſe, I ſuppoſe?——I do not know, it is a neighbourhood I ſeldom go to.

You do not know what parties reſide in that houſe?—I do not.

Mr. Fielding, Priſoner Tatham's Counſel. I want to know whether the goods were not found in different places, they were not all in one ſpot jumbled together?—No, Sir.

Mr. Morgan to White. This is not an uncommon pattern, I ſuppoſe?——No, it is not.

You was not the only perſon that bought all that was made of this ſilk?—No, Sir.

Then, Sir, is this not a common pattern for a chair cover?—We look upon it as ſuch.

There or thereabouts?—Yes, I bought them at a ſale, a number of them, ſome I have made uſe of myſelf, and ſome I have ſold.

Court. Was the kitchen up ſtairs or down ſtairs?—Down ſtairs, a back kitchen.

Clarke. The damaſks were in a back kitchen, in a trunk.

JAMES HAYDON ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. White; on the morning after this robbery, I got up about ſeven, and when I came to open the door as uſual, I found a wooden bar that we put by way of jamb to the ſhop door was removed, and I ſaw two of the ſhutters taken down and the goods gone; I ran round to every door, we have four doors, I paſſed by the hole which was on the cellar ſtairs, it appeared to me, that the perſons came in at that hole; I have examined the pieces that were found by our books, and they correſpond with the length and colours, in the numbering book; I have not the leaſt doubt of their being my maſter's property, and of their being in his houſe the night of the robbery; I can particularly ſpeak to the damaſk, theſe two pieces make up the amount of that pattern of the damaſk, which appears to have been loſt.

PRISONER TATHAM's DEFENCE.

I keep open ſhop in Drury-lane, I frequently purchaſe and ſell things in the ſhop, I attend ſales, and buy wholeſale; finding buſineſs not turn out to my advantage, I frequently bought of hawkers different things at different times, and theſe I purchaſed in the ſame manner in my ſhop.

Priſoner Francis. I leave my defence to my counſel.

Priſoner M'Donald. I leave it to my counſel.

The Priſoner Tatham's witneſſes called, but none anſwered.

THOMAS WRIGHT ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Morgan.

I am a publican, I keep the White-horſe, Fan's-alley, Alderſgate-ſtreet; I know the priſoner M'Donald.

Did he lodge at your houſe in January laſt?——He has lodged at my houſe theſe three months back.

Have you a club at your houſe?——I have.

Had you any club on Thurſday night, the 31ſt of January?—I had.

Is M'Donald a member of that club?—No member in particular, only going backwards and forwards, he was there that night, he was there about nine that night, and ſtaid till about nine in the morning; I am ſure of that, I believe there are ſome others of the members of the club here, I have known him theſe two years, he had always had a very good character, I never ſaw any thing amiſs.

What buſineſs is he?——He uſed to follow rabbiting when I firſt knew him, and dealt in fowls.

Mr. Garrow. How long may you have kept this reputable houſe in Fan's-alley?—About ſix months.

You keep it ſtill?——Yes.

In whoſe ward is it?

Mr. Alderman Plomer. It is in my ward.

What may be the ſign of your houſe?—The White-horſe.

Did my friend underſtand you right, that this man was in your houſe from nine in the morning till nine at night?——I ſpoke it.

And you mean to ſwear it?—I did ſwear it, I ſwore to the truth; I was at the club all the time, the chairman is at my houſe to get what friends he can.

So your houſe continues open from nine at night till nine in the morning, for all ſorts of perſons to come in and out as they pleaſe?—No, Sir, they had a bit of ſupper, thoſe that ſtaid behind remained, from eleven any body might go out, but not come in; I know nothing of what is done before eleven, the chairman does that, I have this club once a week, on a Tueſday evening.

Has this man frequented it every Tueſday evening, ſince he has lodged at your houſe?——I cannot remember.

What makes you ſure this was the 31ſt of January?—It was the 31ſt by the day of the month, I am ſure, by remarking the bills are always on that day of the month; I have a bill for the chair.

How many perſons might be preſent at the club that night?—I cannot ſay.

What were the expences?—I cannot ſay.

What had they for ſupper?——A piece of boiled beef, I think they had ſome punch, I do not ſell wine, I am ſure they had no wine; I cannot juſtly ſay how many perſons were preſent.

Ten?——I cannot ſay.

A dozen?—I cannot ſay.

Twenty?——I cannot ſay.

Thirty?—I cannot ſay what number.

Were there forty?—I cannot ſay.

Do you believe there were ſo few as forty?——I cannot ſay what number.

Do not you know whether there were ten perſons, or twenty, or thirty, or forty, or fifty?——I cannot ſay to the number, there were about ten, to be ſure about twenty.

Might there be above thirty?——Above forty.

Above fifty?—There might.

How many more people were there beſides Mr. M'Donald?—I cannot ſay.

Who was there beſides him?—I cannot ſay to any other of the gentlemen.

Were any of the other priſoners there?——I cannot ſwear they were or were not.

Do you believe they were not there?—I did not take particular notice of no perſon, they might be there, and they might not, I cannot ſay.

Are the other priſoners members of that club?—That night do you mean?

Any night, Sir?——I cannot ſay, I do not know that they were.

Have you ever ſeen them there?——I cannot ſay, I do not know that I have ſeen them.

What made you ſay that night juſt now, then?—Why to be ſure, I cannot ſay that I have ever ſeen the other men there, in the whole courſe of my life.

Do you believe that you never ſaw the other before?—I have ſpoke what I have to ſay.

Anſwer my queſtion, Sir?——I do not know that I have.

Do you believe that you never did?—I believe I never did.

M'Donald that lodges in the one pair of ſtairs, is a ſingle man?——I do not know that he is married.

Was he never out?—He might be out, but I did not miſs him; I ſwear to M'Donald being there as my lodger, I know him perſonally to be at the club from nine at night till nine in the morning, he departed from my houſe about nine in the morning.

Are you ſure he was not out before?—I do not know that he was, he might be, I do not know that I miſſed him at all; this was the 31ſt of laſt month.

Mr. Morgan. Was he taken up ſoon after?——Yes; on the Wedneſday or Thurſday.

Court. What ſort of room was this where the club met?—A long room, with two fire places.

What ſize?——It has four windows in front, I do not know the length of it.

JOHN EGAN ſworn.

I am a member of the club at the houſe of Wright, I was there the 31ſt of laſt month.

Do you admit viſitors?—Yes, friends and acquaintance, I know the priſoner M'Donald, he was at the club that night, and took the chair at ſeven in the afternoon, he came in about a quarter of an hour.

How long did he ſtay?—I kept the chair till two o'clock in the morning, then I had a piece of cold beef for a few of my acquaintance, I could not have ſupper for all that were there, a hundred and odd members, then ſome of us came down into the parlour, and I remained there till after ſix, I never miſſed this man the whole time, I have known the priſoner ſince the year 1783, he was firſt a porter, I never heard any thing bad of him.

Mr. Garrow. What may be your way of life?—I am employed moſtly in the navy.

What is your employment?—Any body that chuſes to employ me, that is my employment.

Are you a navy agent?——No, Sir, any body that chuſes to employ me, I have a right to be employed.

I aſk you in point of fact, what your occupation is?——Several people employ me to recover their wages and prize money.

Poſſibly you are an attorney then?——No, Sir.

How long have you been the chairman of this reſpectable ſociety?——Never before that night.

It changes its officer at certain ſtated periods, I take it for granted?——I ſuppoſe ſo.

How long have you been a member of it?——About a dozen clubs, once a week, on a Tueſday evening.

What time did Francis go away that evening?——I never ſaw him to my knowledge till that night, he was there till I left the chair up ſtairs, that was about two, I did not ſee him after ſupper.

As to Tatham, did he go away with Francis or before?—I do not know that I ſaw him at all there, I am not ſure of that, there were above twenty people that I knew.

Did not Sullivan fetch Francis away?——I do not know him.

Was not you at Bow-ſtreet, my honeſt friend?——Yes, I was.

So there were a hundred of you?——Yes, there were a hundred and thirty odd.

All in one room?—Yes.

You, as chairman, I ſuppoſe ſat with a bill and paid?——I paid as the liquor came in.

What might be the expences of the evening?—Only ſixpence apiece, the ſupper I paid for myſelf.

Were there any ladies?——Yes, there were.

And a dance probably?—Yes.

What time did the landlord go to bed?—Mr. Wright's wife went to bed about eleven I believe, and Mr. Wright ſat up till four or five in the morning.

Then he went to bed and ſhe got up?—Yes, he did not get up again after that, I left the houſe at ſeven in the morning, at that time ſhe was there minding the buſineſs, and he was gone to bed.

He was mellow enough, I ſuppoſe?——He was ſober enough.

Will you give me your direction?—You will find me in Blue Anchor-alley, Bunhill-row, at No. 12, next to the Coach and Horſes; I was at the club laſt night, we had not above nineteen.

Court. Do you know whether M‘Donald could write?——I cannot ſay.

Court to Wright. Do you know?——I cannot ſay.

Court to Egan. I think you ſaid you never ſaw Francis after the time you went to ſupper?——No, I did not; M‘Donald was at ſupper, I ſaw him there, I believe it was after five in the morning that M‘Donald was with me, and ſix or ſeven more, there were only about ten that ſupped, we came down ſtairs about two, and ſupped about three; then we had ſome punch after ſupper, I did not leave the houſe till after ſix, and he was there the whole time, I am ſure.

DAVID COLEMAN ſworn.

I am a member of this club at Wright's, I was there the 31ſt of January, between ſeven and eight, and M‘Donald was there then, I ſtaid there till between one and two.

Did he continue there as long as you?—He did.

Have you known him any length of time?——I have known him thirteen or fourteen weeks, I never knew him to be charged with a halfpenny worth of any thing.

Mr. Garrow. How long did you ſtay?——Till about one or two, M‘Donald wanted me to ſtay there all night, one Egan was the chairman.

Egan was an acquaintance of yours?—No acquaintance.

What is he?——I believe he is ſomething in the Navy-office.

What, a clerk in the Navy-office?—I do not know, I am not an intimate acquaintance of his; I have known Wright the landlord about two years, I have been a member of the club about two years.

—What is the name of the club?——It is a beer club.

Perhaps it is the laudable ſociety?——It is what you may call a beer club.

How much wine was drank?—I did not drink any, I drank nothing but porter.

There were a good many members preſent, thirty or forty as we have heard?—I dare ſay there were pretty near a hundred, I knew a good many.

Did Francis go away before M'Donald, or after him?——I cannot ſay, I left Tatham and M'Donald and Francis, all three at the time, I am ſure of that.

Can you ſwear as to Sullivan?—I cannot, I went to Bow-ſtreet after they were taken up, but I could not get admitted.

Then Sullivan is the only one that you cannot ſwear poſitively to, when you went away?——Yes.

Did you play at cards?—No, I never do.

How then, ſhuffle-board, perhaps?——No, Sir, only juſt drank a draught of porter, and ſmoked our pipes.

You had a little ſinging?——Generally merry.

And that was all?—Yes.

Had you any ladies among you?—There were ſeveral women.

Any dancing?—Yes, and muſic.

What muſic?——A piper.

Mr. Fielding. Did you mean to ſay that Tatham was at the club that night?——No, Sir.

Did you know Tatham?——No, Sir, never in my life.

Court. How came you to anſwer the queſtion ſo then, for you was aſked expreſsly for Tatham and Francis, and you ſaid ſo?—I knew nothing at all of Tatham.

Mr. Fielding. You do not mean to ſay that Tatham was there?——No, Sir, but Francis and M'Donald were both there that night.

Mr. Garrow. Who are you?——I am clerk and warehouſe keeper to Mr. Fidler, a china-man, No. 4, Red-lion-court, Watling-ſtreet.

Court. Can M'Donald write?—Yes.

Does he write well?——Not at all well, I do not know his hand to be poſitive, I have ſeen him juſt writing.

Look at that, and tell me whether you believe it to be his hand or not (ſhews him the paper.)?—No, Sir, he never wrote ſo good a hand.

CHARLES MURRAY ſworn.

I am a ſworn broker, in Leadenhall-ſtreet; I have known the priſoner Hugh M'Donald about three years, he bore a very good character when he lived at Mr. Taylor's; I do not know what he is now, I have not not known any thing of him, for the laſt two years; if I wanted a ſervant, I would have him at this time, I believe him to be a very honeſt man.

The priſoner M'Donald called two more witneſſes to his character.

The priſoner Francis called two witneſſes to his character.

The priſoner Tatham called five witneſſes to his character.

194. THE ſaid THOMAS TATHAM and HUGH M‘DONALD were again indicted for felonioufſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt day of December laſt, twelve pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 40s. the property of John Archer, privily in his ſhop.

JOHN ARCHER ſworn.

I live in Sackville-ſtreet, I keep a hoſier's ſhop, I never ſaw the priſoner in my ſhop; on the 1ſt of December, I loſt twelve pair of new white ſilk ſtockings, and one ſingle odd ſtocking, it was a patent ſtocking.

JOHN IDLE ſworn.

I am an apprentice to the laſt witneſs; on the 1ſt day of December, I ſaw the priſoner M‘Donald in my maſter's ſhop, it was between eight and nine in the morning, when he came in, he aſked for a pair of ſtockings, I ſhewed him ſeveral parcels, he went out without buying any, the ſtockings were laying on the counter, twelve pair and an odd one, when he came in; and about half an hour after, we miſſed them, and between the time we miſſed them and the time of his coming in, there was nobody there.

Did you ſee him take any ſtockings while he was in the ſhop?—No, I had no ſuſpicion of him; then Mr. Archer went and gave information at Bow-ſtreet.

Mr. Morgan, Priſoner M‘Donald's Counſel. When was this?——The 1ſt of December.

How long was it after you miſſed the ſtockings, that the priſoner was taken up?——I do not know.

How long is it ſince you was at Bow-ſtreet?——A fortnight to day.

When you came there, you was deſired to look round the room, and point the priſoner out, was not you?——Yes.

You had never ſeen him from the firſt of December to that time?——Never.

Had you ever ſeen him before?—No.

I aſk you upon your oath, if you could at firſt diſcover the priſoner or point him out?—I knew him directly as I ſaw him, I recollected in my mind, he was the man.

What, without the officer looking at you or giving you a ſingle hint, or ſpeaking to you?——Yes.

Is this a pretty public ſtreet?—Not very public.

Had you breakfaſted when the man that took the ſtockings came into the ſhop?—No.

How long after did you breakfaſt?—About ten minutes.

Where did you breakfaſt?--In the parlour.

Can you now, at the diſtance of three months, ſwear that you breakfaſted in the parlour, and that no perſon could come in and take the ſtockings?——Yes.

Did your maſter go into the ſhop?——Yes, but no ſtrangers nor cuſtomers.

Had you a fire in the parlour where you breakfaſted?—Yes.

How does the fire ſtand with reſpect to the window?—In a corner.

Did you ſit with your face to the fire at your breakfaſt?—No, Sir, I ſat on one ſide looking at the ſhop.

What had you for breakfaſt?—Tea.

What elſe?——Rolls and butter.

Did you butter them yourſelf?——No.

Who buttered them for you?——The maid, ſhe came without coming through the ſhop, there are two doors into the parlour, one into the ſhop, and one into the paſſage, I am very ſure the girl did not come through the ſhop.

Did none of your family go into the ſhop while you was at breakfaſt?——No.

And will you ſay you never turned your eyes off from the ſhop during the whole time of breakfaſt?—I am poſitive nobody was in the ſhop.

Is that an anſwer to my queſtion, did you during the whole time you was at breakfaſt, keep your eyes conſtantly on the ſhop?——Yes.

Conſtantly?——Yes.

You never looked at the rolls nor the tea?——Yes, the door was faſtened, I am ſure of that, I faſtened it, my maſter was down ſtairs then.

How many people have you in family?——Four, there is another apprentice beſides myſelf, and Mr. Archer, and the maid.

Who went to fetch the rolls?——A perſon brings them.

Court. This parlour adjoins to the ſhop?——Yes.

Could any perſon come into the ſhop, without your obſerving them, while you was at breakfaſt?——They could not.

It was your buſineſs to mind the ſhop while you was at breakfaſt?——Yes.

There was nobody elſe employed to mind the ſhop alone?——No.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner Tatham, and Macmanus took M'Donald in Tatham's houſe, I was preſent, on the 2d of February, M'Donald ſtood round the table on left hand ſide of the ſhop as you go in, I found eleven pair of ſilk ſtockings.

Was there any odd ſtocking with them?——No, here are nine pair which the proſecutor has looked at, and two were delivered to the priſoner's wife back, that were not owned; I carried the ſtockings I found to the office, they were advertized, and the proſecutor come and ſearched them.

Mr. Morgan. What were the two pair of ſtockings that were returned?——Two pair of French ones, I returned them to Tatham's wife.

PRISONER TATHAM's DEFENCE.

Gentlemen of the Jury, I hope you will do me the kindneſs to inſpect into this matter; I have been very unfortunate, and am but young in buſineſs, and inexperienced; but I really had purchaſed theſe things in my ſhop, not knowing them to be ſtolen by different people.

Court to Archer. Did you deſcribe theſe things?——Yes, on Wedneſday the 8th of February, the ſtocking trimmer, whoſe name is Thompſon, gave me information, and I went with him, there were eleven pair produced, nine of which were my property, I knew them by the welt, and two letters, and a figure which diſtinguiſhes the quality; I am perfectly clear that they are mine, I am ſure theſe ſtockings were in my ſhop on the night before the robbery when they were miſſed, they were there ready to be ſent to the trimmers.

Court. Deſcribe the marks?——B. A. and 6. worked in the welt, the meaning of the mark is, when my father was in partnerſhip, his name was Beckett.

Mr. Morgan. It may mean Benjamin Allen you know?—Yes, it may ſo.

PRISONER M'DONALD'S DEFENCE.

I was very ill with a ſprained ancle, five weeks before Chriſtmas, ever ſince the 28th of November; I had a letter from Counſeller Pile in Eſſex, on the ſame day that the boy came up, when I was taken up, and he ſaid he believed I was the man, and the man ſaid, are not you ſure he is the man, and he looked at him with a ſtern countenance, and he ſaid, he was.

Court to boy. You have heard what the priſoner now ſays?——I ſaid, I was not very poſitive, but I believed it was the man.

Priſoner. He ſaid it ſeveral times.

Macmanus. My Lord, the priſoner ſays I looked at the boy, and ſaid, he muſt ſay it was him; when the boy went in the priſoner M'Donald was walking towards him, he went to the fire, and took the poker and ſtirred the fire.

Priſoner. There was no poker.

Proſecutor. There was a poker, I ſaw him ſtir the fire.

Court to boy. Have you any doubt now, whether he was the man or not?——No, Sir, I have not any doubt.

Mr. Morgan. I refer to the former trial for the character of the priſoner M'Donald.

Court. What are the value of the ſtockings?——About eight ſhillings a pair, that is not the extent of them.

THOMAS TATHAM, NOT GUILTY.

HUGH M'DONALD, GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

195. JOSEPH BUTLER was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Edward Poulton, on the King's highway, on the 16th day of February, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one linen handkerchief, value 6d. ſixteen yards of black bombazeen, value 40s. a black ſilk gown, value 40s. a black ſilk petticoat, value 20s. the property of Martha Robinſon, ſpinſter.

EDWARD POULTON ſworn.

I am going on fourteen; on Thurſday night laſt, I loſt ſome things between nine and ten in Bond-ſtreet, I was going from Eſſex-ſtreet in the Strand; I was going to Brook-ſtreet, and from thence to Caſtle-ſtreet; going on Bond-ſtreet, I met three fellows juſt facing Cork-ſtreet, and they aſked me what ſtreet it was, and I told them it was Bond-ſtreet, I was carrying a hare that I had, then two of the fellows took it away, and this man took my bundle, I held my bundle, and he dragged me along the ſtreet, he pulled me ſo, I was forced to let go, he did not ſay any thing to me, I called out murder! and he ran away, and dropped the bundle which another man picked up and brought me, the man was taken to the watch-houſe in about a quarter of an hour, I did not ſee him taken, he was taken at almoſt ten o'clock, I know it was the ſame man, for he dragged me ſo far along the ſtreet, that I looked at him all the time he was dragging me, the bundle was tied up in a white handkerchief, I do not know what was in it, it belonged to my miſtreſs's ſiſter, Martha Robinſon; the bundle was taken to the watch-houſe.

Was that the ſame bundle you had?—Yes.

How do you know that, if you do not know what was in it?——I knew it by the handkerchief.

Did not you ſee at the watch-houſe what things were in it?——I did not look to ſee what things were in it.

Mr. Peatt, Priſoner's Counſel. What time was this, my little fellow?—Between nine and ten.

A great many people paſſing?—No.

Was you on the foot path?——Yes.

Nobody offered to aſſiſt you?—No, Sir.

Was not you rather ſurprized when the hare was dragged from you?—Yes.

Was you frightened?——Yes.

I ſuppoſe you kept looking at your bundle with a watchful eye, for fear you ſhould loſe it?—Yes.

And I ſuppoſe, the perſon that got the bundle from you, run away?—Yes.

Then he turned his back to you?——Yes.

Then you ſaw no more of him, till you ſaw him him at the watch-houſe?——Yes, I ſaw him again before he was carried to the watch-houſe.

What ſort of handkerchief was this?—A white handkerchief with a little red round the border.

And a mark in the corner?——I do not know.

Suppoſe you had ſeen that bundle in any other place, ſhould you have known your handkerchief again?—Yes.

How would you have known it?——I ſhould have known it by the ſilk gown in the handkerchief, I could ſee it in.

Court. Why you told me juſt now, you did not know what was in the bundle?—There was a black gown, I could ſee in the bundle, I ſaw it at one corner.

How could you ſee whether it was a gown, or a cloak, or what it was?——It looked like a gown.

Did you know any thing elſe that was in it?——No.

Was it a black gown?—Yes.

WILLIAM BENTLEY ſworn.

I was ſtanding in Cork-ſtreet, when I heard the alarm was given, I ran down Cork-ſtreet, and perceived a man with a bundle under his arm; I tried to ſtop him, as ſoon as he ſaw me, he dropped the bundle down.

What became of the bundle?—I ſtooped and picked the bundle up, the man went paſt me, Jonathan Oakes, who was ſtanding by, purſued and took him within forty or fifty yards.

Was he ever out of your ſight before he was taken?——Yes.

Can you ſay whether the man that was taken, was the ſame man that you ſaw with the bundle?—Yes.

How did you know him again?——I knew him by his perſon, I ſaw him before he came to me, by the ſhade of the lamp, I remarked his yellow buttons, I knew him more by his clothes than his face; I gave the bundle to the boy.

Mr. Peatt. The man was running?—Yes.

JONATHAN OAKES ſworn.

I heard the cry, I purſued the priſoner, I did not ſee him drop any bundle, it was behind ſome trees in Cork-ſtreet; I ſaw the priſoner doing nothing only running up the ſtreet as faſt as he could, he never was out of my ſight, he never was above two yards from me, I took him to the watch-houſe; when I came up to him he blaſted my eyes, and aſked what I wanted, he ſaid nothing elſe.

(Mr. Bentley produced the bundle.)

I brought it from my own houſe, I had it from Martha Robinſon the owner.

Court. The bundle you picked up, was left at the watch-houſe?—Yes.

MARTHA ROBINSON ſworn.

Where did you get the bundle that you gave to Bentley on Friday night?—I had it from the watch-houſe, it was locked up in a cupboard in the watch-houſe.

Have you any body here to prove that it was the ſame bundle that was left there by Bentley?

Oakes. I ſaw the boy carry it to the watch-houſe, and it was opened there that night, directly as it was taken in, the boy was there, I ſaw it contained a gown and petticoat, and ſome bombazeen.

Did not the boy ſee what it contained? No, Sir, I do not think he did, he was ſtanding by the fire at the ſame time, it was tied up, and put in the cupboard with another bundle.

Was any mark put upon it?—No, that was the other bundle that the boy had, that was left at the watch-houſe the ſame time.

Court to Oakes. Now, can you ſay it is the ſame bundle?——Yes.

How?—I can tell by the handkerchief, I took notice of the border of the handkerchief at the time it was open.

Court to Boy. Was this the bundle the priſoner took from you?—Yes, I am quite ſure of that, becauſe the other was in a cheque handkerchief, I ſtood by the fire at the watch-houſe, I did not ſee them open the bundle.

Court to Mrs. Robinſon. Did you ſend the boy with this bundle?—Yes, he was going into Brook-ſtreet, he was to carry theſe bundles into Caſtle-ſtreet where I live; this is one of the bundles I gave him to carry, I am quite ſure of it.

Priſoner. I leave it all to my counſel.

The priſoner called three witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended by the Proſecutrix to his Majeſty's mercy.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

196. THOMAS COLBROOK was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Catherine Haines, widow, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 10th day of February, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one gold watch, value 18l. the property of Thomas Sutherland.

THOMAS SUTHERLAND ſworn.

I keep a watch maker's and jeweller's ſhop in my mother's houſe, in Vigo-lane; I loſt a horizontal watch, capped and jewelled, the caſe remarkably ſtrong; I loſt it from Vigo-lane, Sackville-ſtreet, Piccadilly, in the houſe of my mother Catherine Haines; it was a little after ten, on Friday the 10th of this month, I was behind the counter, within a yard from whence the watch was taken.

In what manner was it taken?——By a violent blow made againſt the window, it hung up by a ſmall braſs hook, within an inch of the window, or thereabouts; I was writing behind the counter, I heard the window break, I immediately turned and miſſed the watch, I ran out as faſt as I could, I did not ſee the watch taken from the hook, I miſſed it the inſtant it was taken; I run out and turned to my left-hand, and met my next door neighbour, who was coming out, I took him with me, there was a man ſtanding by, whom I imagined to be an accomplice, who informed me wrong, and ſaid the man was gone to the left; a witneſs that is here preſent, ſaid, he has miſinformed you, Sir, he has ran the other way, upon which I immediately turned round, and found the priſoner in cuſtody, he had been knocked down on the fact being committed, I never recovered my watch again.

I was ſtanding the corner of Swallow-ſtreet, about eighteen yards from this ſhop at the time this affair happened, I heard the window break, and I ſaw this priſoner's hand come from the window, he immediately ran acroſs Vigo-lane, into Sackville-ſtreet, then John Lowe took him into cuſtody, I never loſt ſight of him till he was knocked down.

Could you from the place where you ſtood, ſee into Sackville-ſtreet?——Very plain, as far as the watch-box, and there he was knocked down, I knew nothing of the priſoner before; I am a young fellow come out of the country, I keep a little ſhop at Swallow-field, near Reading, I was in town about a little buſineſs, I am ſure it was the priſoner; the priſoner was taken into a public-houſe and ſearched, and nothing was found upon him, except a key, and a pair of ſciſſars, there was no watch.

Did you ſee any ſuſpicious perſons lurking about the houſe?—There was another man ſtanding by the priſoner within three yards of him, at the time the window was broke.

JOHN

JOHN LOWE ſworn.

On the 10th of this month, in the evening, I was going along Sackville-ſtreet, about ſeven, and I ſaw two men lurking about the proſecuter's ſhop window, when I had paſſed the priſoner I ſuſpected them, I clapped my back at the corner of Sackville-ſtreet, and watched them five or ſix minutes, and I ſaw the priſoner put his left-hand in his right hand-pocket, and pull out a rag or handkerchief, and he lapped it round his left hand, and with his left hand I ſaw him break the window, I am ſure of that, but what he took I do not know.

Did you ſee him take any thing?—I did not, I ſaw him break the window, and I ſaw him take his hand out of the window, and as ſoon as he took out his hand, he ran away to Sackville-ſtreet, and I knocked him down.

Did you ſee him put his right hand into that hole that he broke with his left hand?——No, I did not, I then took him into a public-houſe, the corner of Sackville-ſtreet, he was ſearched, and nothing was found upon him.

After he took away his hand from the window that you ſaw him break, did you ſee him hand over anything to the man that you ſaw lurking?——No, I did not, I knocked him down once, and picked him up, and he fell down again, then I picked him up again.

Priſoner. Was not I walking along with my hands in my pocket, and did not you come up to me, and ſtrike me over the face, and did not I ſay, do you want to rob me; my Lord, he knocked me over the noſe, and I put my hand into my pocket, and ſaid, do you want to rob me, I had a few ſhillings in my pocket, they ſtripped me, and ſearched me, ſays I, gentlemen, this is not proper uſage, and one ſtruck me, and another ſtruck me.

Lowe. His clothes were not pulled off at the public-houſe, they were at the Rotation-office, he did not ſay that I wanted to rob him.

Court to Proſecutor. You did not ſee this man break the window, or catch hold of him immediately on your coming out?——No, I did not.

What kind of man was that which put you upon a wrong ſcent?—He was much ſuch a kind of man as the priſoner.

Court. In ſuch a buſineſs as this, it ſeems to me to be very improper to put a watch of this value in a window.

Proſecutor. I have wires for that purpoſe, but they were not up that night, I am ſo fearful of being robbed, I generally ſhut my ſhop up at night, and leave my door open.

FRANCIS DEGEZ ſworn.

I am a broker and cabinet maker, I live in Little Earle-ſtreet, Seven-dials.

How long have you known the priſoner?——Between ſeven and eight years.

What way of life is he in?—I believe in the portering way.

Have you employed him in your buſineſs?——I have employed his mother, that is the way I have known him, no further; I always underſtood him to be an honeſt young fellow, I knew nothing of this before this very morning that ſhe came to me, I was in bed when ſhe came.

Jury to Mr. Sutherland. How long was it before the window was broke, that you ſaw the watch?—Not two minutes before.

When the window was broke, and you went out, did you miſs the watch?—Yes, I did, as ſoon as I went from the door, I met my next door neighbour, and told him of my loſs; it made a report equal to that of a gun, I turned round immediately, and ſaw a vacancy, there were three watches hung there, and this was the centre watch.

Court to Priſoner. Do you know either or both the witneſſes?—I never ſaw either of them before.

Jury. Who is Lowe?

Lowe. I live at Kenſington Gore, I am a hair-dreſſer by trade, I had been at Berwick-ſtreet, to my ſiſter to tea, and that kept me late, I work for my brother-in-law.

GUILTY, Death.

Proſecutor. I humbly recommend the priſoner to mercy.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

197. JOHN HOWS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Walknet, about the hour of nine in the night, on the 18th day of February, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, four ſhillings in monies numbered, the monies of Richard Huffnell.

RICHARD HUFFNELL ſworn.

I rent a ſhop and parlour of John Walknet, he lives in the front room up one pair of ſtairs, I ſell ready made clothes, hoſiery and haberdaſhery, the ſhop was broke open laſt Saturday evening, between nine and ten, the ſhop was ſhut up, I ſhut it up myſelf, I was out, there is one ſtreet door which goes to ſeveral apartments, there are two doors, one into the ſhop, and one into the parlour, this was the door that goes into the paſſage; I went out a little after nine, and returned about a quarter before ten, as near as I can gueſs, when I returned the ſhop was open, by ſome means the eſcutcheon that goes over the key hole was broke, but whether it was whole when I went out or not, I cannot ſay.

Did you find the locks or any part of them broke?——No.

Was the door locked when you went out?——Yes, it was, and I had the key in my pocket, I tried both the doors when I locked them, to ſee if they were faſt, which I always do, I miſſed ſome ſilver out of the till, four ſhillings, when I came home I was informed my ſhop was broke open, and the priſoner was taken to St. James's watch-houſe; I left a fire and a candle in the parlour, the candle was miſſing out of the ſtick, the ſtick was left, and there was ſome candle greaſe about the till, I went out at the parlour door, and locked it, and took the key, and I locked the ſhop door on the inſide; I never ſaw the priſoner before; I did not commiſſion him nor any one to take care of my ſhop.

———— WILSON ſworn.

On Saturday night laſt, I was going to ſpeak to a perſon that lodges at this houſe, about twenty minutes paſt nine, when I got, I found the ſtreet door open, I went in, and walking acroſs the paſſage, I went againſt two men, it was quite dark, they ſtood at the parlour door, one of them aſked me if I had ever a ſhag waiſtcoat, upon my telling him him I did not belong to the houſe, they went out at the ſtreet door, I went up ſtairs, and deſired the perſon that I went to, to come down and faſten the ſtreet door after me, when we came down, ſhe ſaid, Mr. Huffnell was come home, and ſhe would tell him ſome perſon had wanted him; we went to the ſhop door in the paſſage, and we found that faſt, we then went back to the parlour door, while we was trying to open that, ſome perſon in the ſhop opened the ſhop door into the paſſage, and came out, and went out at the ſtreet door, I ſaw them go out, but not enough to notice them; I then went into the ſhop, and the priſoner ſtood behind the door when I went in, I aſked him if he belonged to the ſhop, he ſaid, he was left in care of it, I then enquired of Mrs. Wilſon, if the man who kept the ſhop had any body to aſſiſt him, I did not know Mr. Huffnell before, ſhe told me he had not, I then took hold of the priſoner, and took him to St. James's watch-houſe; I did not take notice of the till at that time, I returned from the watch-houſe, and the proſecutor came home in five minutes, then I aſked him to look about the ſhop and the parlour, to ſee if he could find any picklock key, but there was none found; there was a candleſtick in the parlour, which ſtood by the drawers, there was no candle in it, after the proſecutor came home, we looked about the ſhop, and ſaw nothing particular, but about the till, ſeveral drops of tallow greaſe were found, the piece of candle was not found, the till was ſhut in, theſe drops of tallow looked freſh, at the watch-houſe the priſoner ſaid, he went in to buy a pair of ſtockings.

Priſoner. That gentleman went round the ſhop, and opened almoſt every drawer with a candle in his hand.

HANNAH WILSON ſworn.

I came down with the other witneſs, I called him back, and ſaid I heard ſomebody in the parlour, and while we went to that door, a man opened the door in the paſſage and ran away, we then went into the ſhop, and the priſoner was ſtanding rather behind the door, about a yard within the ſhop; I aſked him how he came there, he ſaid he was left by the maſter of the ſhop to take care of it; I aſked him to tell me what ſort of a man the maſter of the ſhop was, but he made no anſwer to that; the bell that was over the ſhop door was broke down, ſo that the other man went without our hearing him; the laſt witneſs took the priſoner to St. James's watch-houſe, the proſecutor returned in about ten minutes, and I took care of the ſhop till his return.

The door of the ſhop was not broke at all?—No, they got in at the parlour door, we found the door open, the ſcutcheon was broke off the door, but whether that was broke before I do not know, and the lock was picked, and I ſaw ſome marks of tallow on the counter.

Court to Proſecutor. Was the door between the parlour and the ſhop locked?——No, there is no lock upon it, I forgot to mention the bell that was hung up as an alarm was ſecured quite down.

Court to Wilſon. Was the priſoner ſearched when you took him?—He was not particularly ſearched.

Court to Proſecutor. What money had you left in the till?——There were ſix or ſeven ſhillings, and when I came back there was one ſhilling and ſome halfpence left.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming along, there was an alarm that the gentleman's houſe was broke open, and I went to ſee, and they caught hold of me, I was ſearched all over, even my ſhoes, and I had not a halfpenny in the world.

How old are you?—Between fifteen and ſixteen.

LETITIA RUSSELL ſworn.

I have known him ſometime, I work for the lady that his father and mother lives with, his parents are decent honeſt people, and I never knew any thing to the contrary, I have ſeen the youth with his parents, his father is a bricklayer, and his mother lives cook and houſe-keeper to the lady that is here now, I believe he works with his father.

GEORGE JOHNSON ſworn.

I have known him theſe two years; ſince I have known him, he has worked with me about ſix months; I am a painter and japanner, he has behaved very well, I looked upon him while he ſtaid with me to be very honeſt.

SARAH DENNESON ſworn.

I have known him four or five years, his mother has lived ſervant with me three years, he has been at my houſe for three months together with his mother, I never heard any thing amiſs of him, I have truſted him with plate and a great many valuable things, I always found him exceedingly honeſt, there are more witneſſes, who, if here, would all give him the ſame character I have done.

198. JOHN LANGFORD and THOMAS PETRIE were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of William Cruſhaw about the hour of ſix in the night, on the 25th day of January laſt, and buglariouſly ſtealing therein, one woollen great coat, value 14s. one pair of corderoy breeches, value 13s. the property of William Barnard.

JUDITH BARNARD ſworn.

I am wife of William Barnard, we live in the houſe of one William Cruſhaw, in Bowling-ſtreet, Weſtminſter, we rent ſome rooms in the lower apartments; Cruſhaw lives in the upper part; we keep a clothes ſhop, our houſe was broke open the 25th of January, about ſix in the evening, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, the ſhop was open and a candle in the ſhop, I never ſaw the priſoners till I ſaw them at Juſtice Abingdon's, in King-ſtreet, Weſtminſter, in about half an hour after; but the things have never yet been diſcovered, they were in the ſhop window, which is a low window, the wooden pannel was forced in, they hung upon a rail within the ſhop, there is a parlour adjoining the ſhop; the wooden pannel underneath the window was forced ſo that a hand might be put in to reach the coat and breeeches which hung on a rail, I heard a noiſe in my parlour and came out as ſoon as poſſible, I ſaw the things were gone, and I run immediately into the ſtreet, the pannel was whole at four in the afternoon, I am clear in that.

——— PARKER ſworn.

I am a taylor, I was at Mr. Barnard's ſhop at three in the afternoon, on the 25th of January to the beſt of my knowledge, I ſtopped there ſometime, I ſaw the coat and breeches hanging on the rail, and the windows were all ſafe at that time, I ſtaid a little while, and went away; about twenty minutes after ſix the ſame evening I was ſent for by Mrs. Barnard, and they informed me her ſhop had been robbed, I went to her, and found the things were gone, and the pannel was broke in; I went to the Juſtice's and found the two priſoners there.

WILLIAM WATSON ſworn.

I am a gardener and one of the patrol of St. John's pariſh, I came along Bowling-ſtreet, this houſe of Mr. Barnard's is a corner houſe, one window looks into Little Peter-ſtreet and one into Bowling-ſtreet, the two priſoners paſſed by that window.

Did you know the perſons of the priſoners?—I had had information of them before, I knew the talleſt, Langford, before, I watched them for a quarter of an hour, I ſaw them both, during the time I ſaw Petrie paſſing the window, I could ſee them perfectly, I was but a little diſtance, Petrie fixed his back againſt the window in Little Peter-ſtreet, and I ſaw him fumbling along, while at this wooden pannel that he broke in, they both then went up Bowling-ſtreet eying the window.

Did you ſee him break it in?—No, I ſaw him a fumbling, which made me have a ſtrong ſuſpicion that they meant to rob the ſhop; there is a court in Bowling-ſtreet, called Oliver's-court, and they both of them went in there; I ſaw them return and paſs this ſhop, I went to carry my tools home, and I went for my cutlaſs, and I returned immediately, and when I returned the robbery was committed; the men were gone away, I went in purſuit of them; I took them before Juſtice Abingdon, and ſaw no more of them that night.

Are you poſitive thoſe are the two men?—Yes, I viewed them near a quarter of an hour or better, and they were not further from me much than you are, I am poſitive they are the two men, I paſſed them ſeveral times.

JOSEPH PERSIVAL ſworn.

I aſſiſted in taking the priſoners, we went together, in Bowling-ſtreet I remarked the priſoner Langford in particular, and I had not a doubt of the other, I ſaw his face; I am as clear of ſeeing Langford as of ſeeing you; I have not a doubt about the other; I came down Bowling-ſtreet, and Watſon ſays them are the two chaps, ſays I directly that is Higby as we call him, that was the priſoner Langford, they were then about three or four doors from the ſhop, I ſaw them go to Barnard's, we all got into an area to conceal ourſelves, and Watſon went to carry his tools home.

Did you ſee the priſoners do any thing?——We ſaw them walk backwards and forwards looking in at the window, then they both joined together about the part where this pannel was broke, the pannel was puſhd in with a knife, we did not ſee them break in the pannel, they were in the dark part of the window, but we ſaw them there, and ſaw them go by with nothing, and then Langford came away with a bundle, it had the appearance of cloaths, it came from the direct ſpot where that pannel was broke, the priſoners ran one one way and one the other, and we tried to overtake them but could not, and in about a quarter of an hour we took them, we met with them in Duck lane both together and took them, they had nothing with them, then we ſearched them, and found on Petrie a knife that ſtrikes a light on the back, and ſome matches.

Jury. Was it the top of the pannel or the bottom that was wrenched?—It was the whole pannel, it appeared to have been done with a knife, and the knife we found on Petrie matched exactly with the impreſſion of the wood.

Court. The pannel was not taken out? ——Not the outſide, not outward, it was forced inwards, I could almoſt get my body in.

Priſoner Langford. Why did he not detect us when he firſt ſaw us?—We ſhould have detected them if we could have got out ſoon enough, we thought that he meant to go in at the door, by peeping in at the door and the windows.

JOHN GOUGH ſworn.

I am conſtable of St. John's.

Is the account that Perſival has given a true account?—I can explain it a little better in ſome reſpects if you pleaſe; firſt I was called by Watſon, he told me there were ſome thieves, I went with him, and we called on Perſival on our way, when we got into Bowling-Alley, almoſt facing the houſe on the oppoſite ſide of the way, we met the priſoner Langford, and I believe Petrie, but I am not quite ſo clear to him as the other; ſays Watſon, there they are; then we went into an area the corner of Tuffton-ſtreet and concealed ourſelves, and preſently they came back round into Little Peter-ſtreet to this place where the pannel was broke out; the low part of the ſaſh they fill up with pannels inſtead of glaſs, and painted dark, which made it rather dark that we could not ſee what they were about; when they came back to Bowling-ſtreet to us to that particular place; immediately I ſaw the cloaths ſlide off the rail, and them two men at that identical place, I could ſee into the ſhop by the light that was in the ſhop, I ſaw very plain the cloaths ſlide off the rail, but I could not perceive their arms ſo plain as if the other pannels had been glaſs, one of the priſoners paſſed us and out-run us, we tried to purſue them, but we knew them ſo well we were in no doubt of finding them again: I do not ſpeak ſo clear to Petrie as I do to Langford: We took them ſoon after in Duck-lane.

Did you obſerve the dreſs of the other priſoner?—Not ſo well my Lord, we found theſe two knives upon them, and one of them matched with the impreſſions that were made on the wood, and it much about fits theſe things, they are rabbitted on the inſide, and bradded in with bradds.

Jury. What diſtance was the area you was concealed in?—About thirteen or fourteen yards.

Court to Mrs. Barnard. Had you had any occaſion to take notice of this pannel before this evening?—They were all ſecure for what I know.

Do you know that they were ſecure?—I am pretty clear they were, they were all ſafe between three and four.

Jury. How high was the rail from the ground where the cloaths hung?—I cannot juſtly ſay, it was breaſt high.

How low down was the pannel?——I cannot ſay.

PRISONER LANGFORD's DEFENCE.

I have nothing more to ſay than I am innocent, I ſaw them two gentlemen juſt before me, but I had no ſuſpicion of them.

PRISONER PETRIE's DEFENCE.

My mother ſent me to know what it was o'clock, and I met this priſoner and ſtood talking with him, and they came and took me up.

JOYCE

JOYCE PETRIE ſworn.

Do you remember the evening your ſon was taken up upon this buſineſs?—Yes, I ſent him out to ſee what it was o'clock, I was going out to a night's waſhing, and I never ſaw him till I was told he was taken up.

Where had he been before you had ſent him out?——He was at home in the afternoon, he had been at home for two hours, I ſent him out between eight and nine, I was going out at ten at night, and I waſhed all night.

What time was it they told you he was taken?——It might be an hour and three quarters, between the time he was gone and the time they came and told me he was taken.

Where was your ſon at ſix that evening?—He was at home and had ſome tea with me, and was in a conſiderable while after that, and ſitting by the fire before I ſent him out to ſee what o'clock it was.

What is your uſual tea time?——No ſettled time.

The priſoner Petrie called two other witneſſes to his character.

ELIZABETH HIGBY ſworn.

I am mother-in-law to Langford, I came up to London to ſee my ſon, and to eat a bit of ſupper with him, and then I heard the report he was taken up; I had not ſeen him for ſeven years, he had been at ſea with Admiral Hughes.

199. WILLIAM PIGOT was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Thomas Murphy, about the hour of two in the night on the 13th day of February laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, ſeven ſilver teaſpoons, value 10s. one ſilver pepper-box, value 5s. one paper box, value 2d. one broken gold ring, value 6d. one thouſand four hundred and forty copper half-pence, value 3l. four hundred and eighty copper farthings, value 10s. and one horſe-piſtol mounted with braſs, value 3s. the property of the ſaid Thomas Murphy.

HANNAH MURPHY ſworn.

I am wife of Thomas Murphy, he keeps the ſign of the Court-houſe in Court-ſtreet, Whitechapel; the houſe was faſtened up the night of this robbery, and the cellar window was faſtened, I heard no noiſe in the night, I got up a quarter before ſeven, my huſband came down ſtairs juſt before me, and he ſaid, make haſte down, for the houſe has been broke open; I came down in three minutes after, when I came down I ſaw the bar door was broke open, and the till in the bar, the till goes with a lock; I loſt a large quantity of halfpence that were looſe, and one five-ſhilling paper, they were done up in a piece of brown paper and tied up with pack-thread, they were all looſe, except the five-ſhilling paper, I loſt ſeven tea-ſpoons and the things mentioned in the indictment, it appeared, by ſome of the boards being broke away, as if ſomebody had put in their hands and unbolted the cellar window; no other part of my houſe was broke on the outſide, they came at the bolt by breaking away the boards; the priſoner was a cuſtomer of ours ſome time, he uſed to live higher up in Whitechapel, but I do not know whereabouts, he is a copper-ſmith I believe; afterwards that morning I heard from the watchman, William Brown, that this priſoner was taken, and theſe things were found upon him; the watchman came to me at nine in the morning, I went before Juſtice Staples, the priſoner was at the bar, and I ſaw my teaſpoons and pepper-box, and ſome halfpence, I could not know the halfpence, but I knew the five-ſhilling paper, (the ſpoons and pepper-box, and the five ſhillings worth of halfpence produced and depoſed to,) two of them are marked H. W. one is marked S. G. and a cypher on the other, and two that are plain, here is an I, and the other is G. E. W. and the other two plain, I have had them five or ſix years, I am ſure they are all mine, I have obſerved the marks on thoſe that are marked many times, the pepper-box has no mark upon it particularly, I am ſure it is mine; here is the piſtol, I have ſeen it in my bar ſeveral times, it was not my own, it was left in my care by another perſon; this paper box is mine, and within the box is a bit of paper written on; there is a nutmeg in it now, but there was nothing but a ſlip of paper in it, I am ſure it is my box, I am ſure of the paper of halfpence, they are tied up in a clumſy manner.

Mr. Knowles Priſoner's Counſel. Whereabouts is this cellar window of yours?—It opens into Court-ſtreet.

How many months before this matter happened had you obſerved theſe boards?—No months nor days, I never ſaw it before the night of this robbery.

Do you and your huſband live alone in this houſe, or have you any ſervant?——I have a ſervant.

How many lodgers have you?—A man and his wife.

No more?——I have ſome people worked up ſtairs, but they do not lodge in my houſe.

Are you quite ſure they could get their hand in where this bolt was unbolted?—Yes.

Do not you know that other people have tried ſince this matter happened, and could not do it?——No.

Have they not told you that they tried, and that it could not be ſo?—No.

Can you ſwear that all your lodgers were in bed at this time?—They were all up ſtairs at that time, I always ſee the doors faſtened before I go to bed.

Did you ſee all your lodgers come in that night?——I cannot ſay I did, but it is a thing impoſſible that my lodgers ſhould come into this houſe that way, my lodgers were all in the houſe before I went to bed, I was the laſt perſon that was within the cellar.

Did you happen to try the cellar window?—I ſaw it bolted ſafe the ſame night, my huſband and me were both in the cellar, and we went to bed immediately.

Are you quite ſure that this breaking of the boards was a freſh breaking?—I never ſaw it broke before, if it had been broke before I muſt have ſeen it; you cannot go in and out of the parlour without ſeeing it.

Court. But however, whether it was broke or not, you are ſure that window was bolted juſt before you went to bed?—Yes, it was.

Court. Then if the door was broke before, if any man put in his hand and put back the bolt, it is a burglary.

WILLIAM BROWN ſworn.

I am a private watchman in Whitechapel road ſide, I took the priſoner in Broker's-row, about half paſt two on the Monday night, I found this horſe-piſtol upon him under his coat, I did not ſearch him any further till I took him to the watch-houſe, there he was ſearched in my preſence, and there were a large quantity of halfpence looſe in his pockets, and there was this brown paper with halfpence in it, and ſeven ſilver tea ſpoons; and a ſilver pepper box was found upon him, and this paper box, there were found ſome pieces of a gold ring, Mrs. Murphy ſent her ſervant to my houſe, and I went about nine, and ſaid, I had taken a man with with ſome ſilver ſpoons, and a pepper box; I ſaw the bar door had been broke open, I ſaw Mrs. Murphy before the Juſtice, when the priſoner was there, the things were produced before the Juſtice, the woman ſwore to them.

Mr. Knowles. Did Mrs. Murphy ſhew you the cellar window?——I did not aſk her.

Have you ever ſeen the window?——I have, and it appears to be freſh broke.

Was the priſoner ſober when you took him?—No, I thought him rather ſtupid in liquor, I would not ſpeak harm to the gentleman.

Did you find any implement of houſe-breaking upon him?——No, but in the ſtruggle, he drew the ramrod of the piſtol from me againſt my will.

JOHN FOSSETT ſworn.

I was ſtanding about fifty yards from my ſtand, I ran to aſſiſt, and I helped to take him to the watch-houſe, I ſaw ſome halfpence taken from him looſe, and in a paper too, and the ſpoons and pepper box were taken out of his left hand pocket, and this little box, and a broken gold ring was taken out of his right hand breeches pocket, the proſecutor ſwore to him; Mr. Glanceman has had them ever ſince.

RICHARD GLANCEMAN ſworn.

I am the night beadle, I produce theſe things that I found on the priſoner at the watch-houſe, all but this piſtol, I produced them at the Juſtice's, I have had them ever ſince.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing at all to ſay, any further than I was very much in liquor when I went before the Juſtice, I leave it to my counſel.

Mr. Knowles to Proſecutor. Was not he at your houſe that night?—Yes, he was, he had only one pint of beer.

Was he ſober?—I do not think he was ſober, when he had the pint of beer.

The priſoner called three witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

200. GEORGE CHARLEWOOD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th day of October laſt, one bay gelding, price 5l. the property of John Houſeman.

JOHN HOUSEMAN ſworn.

I am a ſtable keeper in Crown-ſtreet, St. Ann's, the priſoner applied to me for a horſe, for one Mr. Edy; the priſoner was a poſt-boy that I knew by ſight; he ſaid, there was a chaiſe going to Barnet, and he wanted this horſe to accompany the chaiſe, to carry the ſervant, and to return with the chaiſe again, I know the horſe was delivered by my man, I ſaw him brought out by my man, and delivered to the priſoner, the hire was to be paid afterwards, he was worth five pounds, but I would not have ſold him for twice five pounds; I found him at one Mr. Johnſon's, in Whitechapel, he was then Mr. Johnſon's property, Mr. Johnſon came and gave me the intelligence himſelf, he keeps hackney coaches, I did not ſee the horſe till I ſaw him at the Rotation-office, there I ſwore to him, it was the ſame horſe the priſoner had from me, I had had the horſe between three and four months, I am ſure it was my horſe, I can bring twenty people to prove it; I underſtood afterwards, that inſtead of going to Barnet, he ſold the horſe in Lemon-ſtreet, Goodman's-fields.

JAMES WOOLDRIDGE ſworn.

I live cloſe by the premiſes of the proſecutor, and I was paſſing by his yard, and I went in about ſome buſineſs, I ſaw the priſoner take the horſe from Mr. Houſeman's ſervant, and ride it out of the yard, I aſked him where he was going with that horſe, I ſaid the horſe had a bad knee, and if he did not take care he would ſtumble; he ſeemed to make light of that, he ſaid, he was going no further than Barnet; he went the way that goes to Tottenham-court-road, which goes to Barnet, he might go that way to Mr. Edy's, but it would be a third part further.

ROBERT SUGDEN ſworn.

I bought the horſe of the priſoner, that there gentleman that is ſtanding here, it was the day of Croydon fair, I think it was Tueſday, it was in October, I am ſure that was the day; it was a bay gelding, his knees were moſt terribly broke when I bought him at the Black-horſe, Lemon-ſtreet, Goodman's-fields; it was between three and four in the afternoon, it appeared to have been very hard rode, there was a piece of fleſh hung over his knee, where it had been torn.

Court to Wooldridge. You ſpoke of one broken knee, do you know whether there were two broken knees or one?——Yes, both knees were blemiſhed, but one worſe than the other; I loſt ſight of the man after he had gone about twenty or thirty yards.

Sugden. When I ſaw him, one of his knees looked as if it had been freſh done, one of his knees was all over blood.

Wooldridge. When the priſoner took it, it was not freſh.

Sugden. The horſe appeared to be rode hard beſides, he was all of a ſweat, I was to give the priſoner a guinea, and half a crown, there was a ſaddle and bridle on the horſe, that I ſuppoſe were worth three pounds, but that I did not buy; I knew the young fellow for five or ſix years, he lived with one Mr. Skammell, at the Black Horſe, in Lemon-ſtreet, which made me buy the horſe of him, I do not deal in horſes, it is the firſt horſe I ever bought in my life; I bought it to ride, but found it did not anſwer my purpoſe, and I ſold it to one John Johnſon two days after; he lives in Catherine Wheel-alley, Whitechapel, for two pounds fifteen ſhillings; this horſe was then produced, and the proſecutor owned it, and ſent it to his houſe.

Court. It is a good buſineſs that, is not it?—No, my Lord.

You was under examination at the Rotation-office?——Yes, I delivered up the property, that is, I was the loſer of the money, when Johnſon told me the horſe was advertized, and I was preſent when Johnſon delivered back the horſe to Houſeman, he took the horſe home with him; I was at the Rotation-office ſix or ſeven days after, I cannot tell the day; Juſtice Staples granted me a warrant to take the party if I found him, which I did not.

Did Mr. Houſeman ſee the horſe that night?—Yes.

Did you ſee the horſe that Houſeman claimed?—Yes.

Was it the horſe you bought of the priſoner?—The very ſame horſe.

Court to Houſeman. Did you ſee this Sugden at the Rotation-office?—Yes.

Jury to Sugden. What buſineſs are you?——A ſaleſman and dealer in clothes.

Where do you live?——In Great Exchange, Roſemary-lane, here are ſome gentlemen that know me and my family extremely well.

JOHN JOHNSON ſworn.

I live in Catherine Wheel-alley, Whitechapel, I bought this horſe of Sugden, he had a broken knee, I thought he would ſerve me as a hackney-coachman, I do not know where he had been bought, but they told me at Croydon-fair, and that the gentleman threw him down in coming home.

What did you give for it?——Two pounds fifteen ſhillings, and ſpent half a crown.

Did you know this Sugden before?——Extremely well.

What is he, a horſe dealer?——No, but I knew Mr. Skammel's hoſtler, we often buy horſes with broken knees, they are no blemiſhes to us; I keep a hackney coach that works in the ſtreet.

A broken kneed horſe is no objection?—No, none, nor a blind horſe, any thing anſwers our end that will only go forwards.

Was you at the Rotation-office?——I was the man that went up to Mr. Houſeman's, and told him that a friend of mine had the property, and I wiſhed for my money, that was the truth if I could have got it back again; I was the perſon that took the horſe to the Rotation-office from my ſtables, and Houſeman ſwore to the horſe, and I would not let him have it without; I made him make an affidavit before Juſtice Staples, Sugden was there, and it was the very horſe I bought of Sugden, den, I have had all the money from Sugden, he gave me part, and I ſummoned him for the reſt.

What would this horſe have been worth to you?——I look upon him not to be worth a great deal at that time his knee was broke and very much blemiſhed.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The Tueſday that Croydon fair was, I ſaw a man riding up Oxford-road, with a blue coat and boots and ſpurs, I was at breakfaſt, I hailed him, he ſaid, will you have any thing to drink, ſays I, you have a poor horſe, yes, ſays he, I bought him yeſterday at Croydon fair, I wiſh you would do with him as well as you can; I took him into Whitechapel, and ſold him for one pound three ſhillings and ſixpence, and Sugden bought him of me.

MATTHEW HOTCHKINS ſworn.

I happened to be the ſame morning at a public houſe, at the Buffalo's Head, the corner of Newman-ſtreet, Oxford-ſtreet.

Court. What morning was it?—The day of Croydon fair.

At what time?—I look upon it to be about ten in the day, or between that and eleven, I cannot be particular to half an hour.

What happened when you was at this Buffalo's Head?——The priſoner at the bar was there, and had ſome beef-ſtakes, there were one or two more that were in company, the priſoner aſked me to eat with them, and whilſt we were eating them in the tap-room, there came up a man on horſe-back, juſt after we had done he came to the door, and the priſoner knowing him they had a drop of gin, I believe, to the beſt of my knowledge together, he came in, and ſaid, he wanted to ſpeak with him, and took him out, and away they went together, and what they did I do not know; at the ſame time I ſaw the man deliver the horſe up to the priſoner, the ſame time he told him to do as well as he could with him, but what was the meaning I could not tell, I know nothing further, I left them, that is, they went off and I ſaw no more of them.

Did you go out of the room to look at this horſe?——Yes, I did.

What ſort of horſe was it?——A bay horſe, with broken knees, and more than that, I ſaw the ſame horſe in Mr. Houſeman's ſtables, and I knew him again.

How long after was that?——It might be about four or five days, I cannot juſtly ſay, it was ſomewhere thereabouts.

What are you?—A gentleman's coachman, I am out of place.

Who was your laſt maſter?——Young Mr. Bird.

Where does he live?—In Berkley-ſquare.

Did you live with him any time?—Yes, about nine months in the whole.

Did you live in his houſe?——No, only drove him as a job, I am a job ſervant, a hackney ſervant.

You drove him nine months?—I drove him and was likewiſe groom to him together nine months.

Court to Houſeman. Was the priſoner in cuſtody when you was at the Rotation-office?—No.

How long was it afterwards?——About three weeks or a month, that he was taken.

Before what Juſtice was he carried?—The Rotation-office, in Litchfield-ſtreet.

Court to Hotchkins. Was you at the Rotation-office in Litchfield-ſtreet, when the priſoner was taken?——No, I was not.

How happened that?——I do not know any thing of his being taken, he did not know where to find me.

Had you been acquainted before?—Yes, I have known him ſometime, never to have much acquaintance, or know where to find him, or he me.

Then you did not know any thing of this horſe being ſtolen?——Yes, I heard the horſe was ſtolen, but I did not know who ſtole it.

You did not hear that the priſoner was accuſed of it?——No, not that he was accuſed of ſtealing the horſe.

Did you know any thing of the man that delivered this horſe to the priſoner at the Buffalo's-head ?——I know the man very well by ſight, but I do not know his name, nor I did not know the priſoner's name then, I could ſoon find the name of that man that brought the horſe, but I did not give myſelf any trouble in going after it; nor at that time, I did not know the priſoner's name any further than knowing him by ſight.

Did the priſoner know where to find you ?—No, he did not, only that I heard of it, and I came to ſee him.

From the love of juſtice, I ſuppoſe ?——Yes, I did.

Jury What day was it that you ſaw the horſe at the Buffalo's Head ?——Upon my word, I cannot juſtly tell the day, but it was in the morning I remember very well, I cannot juſtly ſay, whether it was Monday Tueſday or Wedneſday, it was Croydon-fair, but Croydon fair is two or three days.

How long had you been acquainted with the priſoner before this happened ?—I have known the man for ſome years.

What name did you uſe to call him by ?——It is a vulgar name, but we uſed to call him Snaptrace, and ſome called him Squintum.

Was you in a club together ?—No, Sir, clubs are things I ſeldom go to.

JAMES FINCH ſworn.

I have known the priſoner ten years.

What are you ?—I keep a public houſe.

Whereabouts ?——At London Wall, I have kept it about half a year; I never heard but the priſoner bore a very good character, I knew him before I kept a public houſe.

JOSEPH CHARLEWOOD ſworn.

Are you any relation to the priſoner ?—Yes.

What relation ?——I am his brother, I have ever known him honeſt and induſtrious, but very credulous and unthinking; and it ſeems in my opinion, he has been tricked into this buſineſs, by the artifice of a fellow who has eſcaped with impunity; I therefore truſt, that the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider the caſe of the priſoner at the bar, with that candour and deliberation, which will ever diſtinguiſh their ſenſe, feelings, and virtues, and that their opinion will go with mine, that it was not an act of the priſoner's to defraud, but merely an action of ſtupidity; I have ever known him honeſt and induſtrious, he was left very young, he is a year older than me, I am twenty-five laſt October; but he is very eaſy of belief, he has not the diſcerning ſenſe which ſhould protect him from the artifice and deception of others, he has not that ſenſe which would keep him from the artifice of the world; and, my Lord, on the examination in Litchfield-ſtreet, Houſeman and his hoſtler were both there, and his hoſtler who is the man that delivered the horſe to the perſon that hired him, was told he was to appear upon the trial, I have tried to ſubpœna him, but that man is kept out of the way; it ſeems to me to be a combination on the part of the proſecutor to a degree of malignance, and to obtain a reward: I hope therefore, Gentlemen, you will pity my feelings, and conſider that it is my unfortunate brother's caſe I plead.

Houſeman. I ſaddled the horſe myſelf, and my man took him out to the priſoner.

Where is that man ?——He is with me now, he has never been out of the way.

Has any body been enquiring after him ?—I have never heard any thing of it.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Judges have determined upon a ſimilar caſe to this, the caſe of Pares, that if the Jury are ſatisfied upon the circumſtances, that at the time the priſoner obtained the horſe, he then meant and intended not to go to Barnet, but to go and ſell the horſe, that that was a felonious taking, that was the determination in the caſe of Pares, there is a nice diſtinction, which as it runs ſo near, like ſplitting a hair, it is my duty to mention it, that is this; if on the circumſtances, you think that the man really did intend at the time he came to hire or borrow the horſe, to borrow it or hire it for the purpoſe of going to Barnet, as he ſaid, nd that he proceeded on the way, and then afterwards returned, in that caſe it would not be a felonious taking; but it muſt be his intention at the very moment of obtaining the delivery to behave in that fraudulent manner; if you conceive the intention to have ariſen afterwards, that will not amount to a felonious taking: another thing I take to be perfectly clear, that is, that ſuppoſe upon this evidence, you ſhould be ſatisfied that the priſoner did go to Barnet with this horſe, and returned with the horſe, and after he returned, inſtead of delivering it to the owner, ſold it; there I take it to be clear law, independant of Pares's caſe, that he was guilty of felony, becauſe you ſee the end and purpoſe of hiring a horſe would be then over; now with regard to that you recollect, this horſe quite freſh bled at his knees, he was cut, and the fleſh hanging over his kneees, and with all the appearance of being hard rode, now if you ſhould be of opinion that the man rode this horſe to Barnet, and came back again, the difference is from eleven to four, or half after four in the afternoon, then moſt clearly he will be guilty without any doubt; on the other hand, ſuppoſe you ſhould not be ſatisfied that he did take it to Barnet, then you will conſider whether on this evidence, you are ſatisfied that he did obtain the horſe at that moment, with the purpoſe of diſpoſing of it.

GUILTY, Death.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, you will be ſo good as to ſay, whether you go upon the firſt point, that at the time he took the horſe, he had an intention to ſteal him.

Jury. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Baron Perryn to Jury. Gentlemen, the Jury declared the very ſame thing in the caſe of the King and Pares, in 1779, Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt tried that, and he ſtated it as my brother Gould has done, and left it; he reſerved it for the opinion of all the Judges, and they were of opinion it was felony, and I believe the man was afterwards executed; and the Jury ſaid they were of opinion that the horſe was obtained by Pares with intention originally to ſteal it, and that the pretence of going to Surry was a mere pretence and colour, and that at the time he had an intention to ſteal it: this is the caſe of the priſoner in my opinion, for this man comes in the name of one Edy, and inſtead of going to Edy's ſtables, he rides away with it.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

201. HANANEL FONSECA was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of January laſt, one cloth cloak, value 3s. and three pounds of herb tobacco, value 3s. the property of Mary Wilks, widow.

MARY WILKS ſworn.

I loſt the things on the 7th of February, in the neighbourhood of Whitechapel, two men met me, and ſhuffled me about, one took my handkerchief, I do not know which it was; then another Jew ſtopped him, and ſaid, do not you be affraid my dear, you will have your things again, and going along through another paſſage, I met the priſoner with my things, and he chucked them between my witneſs and me, and the other Jew ſaid d—n me, I owe her a ſpite.

Court. What buſineſs had you there?—I had been to carry ſome goods, I am ſure the priſoner took my cloak and the tobacco between him and the other, I never ſaw any of theſe people before; the priſoner told Juſtice Staples, that he took the cloak but not the parcel.

Was the examination taken in writing?——Yes.

Court. Then I cannot receive parol evidence of this.

Mr. Peatt, Priſoner's Counſel. What time of the day was this?——Three in the afternoon.

Then you had dined I ſuppoſe?—I had.

And took a chearful glaſs after dinner.

——I am ſure I had drank nothing, he told Juſtice Staples, that he had made me drunk, I had drank nothing but a little drop of cold beer.

Was there a good many people about you in this narrow ſtreet?——There was a great deal of Jews and other men, I ſaw all the action and tranſaction, there are a parcel of dirty boys, there was nobody ſpoke to me, but the other man and him.

How come you to recollect him?—Becauſe I do, if I could not ſwear to him, I would not.

Why do you ſwear to him?—I can ſwear to him in any place in England, that he is the man that took my cloak, he is the man I met and chucked them down.

Did you at any time during the courſe of this day, ſay you could not tell whether the priſoner or any other man took your cloak?——I did not, they are falſe people that ſay ſo.

BENJAMIN READ ſworn.

I was coming through the paſſage, the corner of Broad-place, Caſtle-ſtreet, I belong to Whitechapel pariſh, and as I was coming through a little alley, I met the priſoner and another lad or two running with the woman's property, I made a reply to them, ſays I, you have been and made a hawl ſomewhere, they made a reply to me, with an oath, and ſaid let me paſs you, they paſſed me, I did not ſtop them then, I went through the place into Wingfield-ſtreet, and there this woman was crying, and ſaid, ſhe had loſt her property, a Jew man ſaid, do not cry, I will ſhew you where you can have your property, we went through this place again, and met this young fellow coming to bring her property; ſhe then ſaid, this is the man that took my property, and I took him before Juſtice Staples; I am not an officer, but I imagine that having examined the property and not finding it valuable enough, he was coming to bring it her again, ſhe gave me charge of him, and they took it out of his hand.

Mr. Peatt. Did they ſay any thing in your preſence about her ſtealing the property from another perſon?——They never ſaid a word of that ſort in their life to my knowledge.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going along, and this woman was crying, and I ſaid, I will run after the people, and get you your property again, and I went and took it from the people, and was bringing of it back again to her.

MARY COLEDOCK ſworn.

Do you know Mary Wilks the proſecutrix?——No, I do not, but that woman was in company with me to day, I happened to go promiſcuouſly into the Bull's-head, in the Old Bailey, and ſhe came in and aſked me to ſhew her into the back yard; and while I was there, ſhe fell a trembling, there ſhe ſaid, ſhe wiſhed ſhe had never called out ſtop thief; ſays ſhe, I have been robbed by two women in Wingfield-ſtreet, of three pounds of tobacco, and a red cloak; then we parted, and went there again, and the proſecutrix was there again, and ſhe ſaid, the man was not brought up yet; ſays I, I think you told me you was robbed by two men and two women, ſays ſhe, I did not know which out of the four did rob me, any further than the priſoner that is now in cuſtody, he ſaid before the Juſtice, he took the cloak from me, but who took the tobacco I do not know.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY,

To be whipped and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

203. JOHN CARTER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th day of January laſt, four live geeſe, price 18s.

and one live gander, price 3s. the property of William Iley.

WILLIAM ILEY ſworn.

I live at Harrow, on the 17th of January, I loſt four geeſe, and a gander out of an out-houſe, I am a poor man, I do not know the priſoner.

Did you ever find theſe geeſe, and this gander again?—Yes.

In whoſe poſſeſſion?—In the poſſeſſion of Ralph Barnard, the man had taken them I ſaw them there afterwards, the priſoner owned after he was taken, that he had them from my houſe.

RALPH BARNARD ſworn.

I live in Hanger-lane, I ſaw the priſoner in poſſeſſion of ſome geeſe, the 17th of January.

Did you ſtop him?—Yes, I ſaw him loitering about the buildings, and we ſuſpected him; he had four geeſe and a gander in a bag, I have the bag here, the geeſe were dead, I took him into cuſtody, a few words paſſed, and I aſked him where he had them from, he told me from William Iley; I went to the proſecutor's, and he owned them.

Court to Proſecutor. Were there any particular marks to diſtinguiſh them?——No otherwiſe than by their feathers.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I pray the mercy of the Court.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

203. JAMES CLARKE and JOHN GREEN were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th day of February, one bag, value 6d. one baſket, value 12d. and one hundred and fifty pounds weight of Ruſſia tallow, value 4l. the property of Thomas Wale.

THOMAS WALE ſworn.

I live in Shadwell High-ſtreet, I am a Tallow-chandler, on the 17th of this month, I called my ſervant up at five to make candles, after he came down ſtairs the clock ſtruck, he did not know the time when he came down, the act of parliament is ſo ſtrict we dare not begin before five, while he was enquiring the clock he was informed ſome tallow was loſt, which had been in the cellar under my dwelling-houſe, this place that I commonly work in is detached from the houſe about twenty yards; when we came to examine the door that had been locked was open, and the lock wrenched; they called me and told me I had been robbed, I got up and ſaw the tallow gone.

JOHN ENNEVER ſworn.

I miſſed ſome tallow, I know the ſack it was in, when it is produced.

ROBERT MABERLY ſworn.

I was going in my courſe to ſurvey, I ſurveyed my firſt courſe, on my double (what we call the double is going twice to each houſe) a man paſſed me and turned round to look at me, and I having my dark lanthorn in my hand I turned to look at him again, this was at half paſt three in Ratcliff-highway, it being a lightiſh morning, I perceived ſomething light coming upon me, then I perceived it coming nearer, and then I put my light under my coat, and I ſaw the priſoner Green run over into Parker and Henry's yard, I ran after him, he ran from the oppoſite ſide of the way, he put down the baſket and tried to eſcape over ſome little rails that were there; I called for the watch, and he ſecured him, then we went and took the baſket and carried him and it to the watch-houſe; the baſket contained Ruſſia tallow.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of James Clark and John Green.

Ennever. After I received information from the exciſe officer, I went to ſee what I miſſed, and I miſſed a ſack and baſket, with about two hundred weight of tallow in it, I knew it by having chopped it, and I knew the ſack by the corner where I tied it up.

JOHN OSBORNE ſworn.

I am a watchman belonging to Wapping, I was ſetting in my watch-box about half paſt two in the morning, and I heard ſomebody coming along very nimble, and I ſaw two men run down Black-horſe-yard, I immediately unbolted the door, I ran down after them, and caught the priſoner Clarke by the collar, and aſked him what he had got there, and the other man called out Tom; I aſked him what it was, he ſaid it was only a bit of tallow; I brought him back to the watch-houſe with me, I took him to the watch-houſe, and the next day to Mr. Juſtice Smith's, and the proſecutor claimed it; I aſked him where he got it, he ſaid from on board a ſhip down at Blackwall, I told him he muſt be detained till the morning, I know nothing further.

EDWARD PRIOR ſworn.

I came to the aſſiſtance of the exciſe officer, I likewiſe ſaw the baſket, I jumped over the rails and ſearched the ſhed, and found him in the vault, he was in a great heat when I collared him, I am ſure nobody elſe was over the pales, for I examined the place.

Court to Maberly. Was the man the watchman brought out the ſame man you ſaw get over the pales?—Yes, I am quite ſure of it.

PRISONER CLARKE's DEFENCE.

I belong to the Ariadne, I was out in her the laſt ſeaſon, and when the ſhip lay at Deptford I got liberty to come on ſhore, I could not come but at night, coming along Ratcliff-highway, two men came acroſs the way and aſked me to cary a load, one of them ſtaid by me, and ſaid it was to carry a bag which had Ruſſia tallow in it, he ſaid it was ſmuggled, I was carrying it along, and the watchman came and told me to ſtand, I have been at ſea fourteen years.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

PRISONER GREEN's DEFENCE.

I came on ſhore that night about eight,

I was out late and I went into this yard till the morning.

BOTH GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

204. THOMAS WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of January laſt, three handkerchiefs, value 5s. one muſlin handkerchief, value 2s. and one pair of cotton ſtockings, value 2s. the property of Angus M‘Kenzie.

ELIZABETH M‘KENZIE ſworn.

I am wife of Angus M‘Kenzie, he lives in St. Martin's Church-yard; this boy lived ſervant with us three weeks, we loſt the things mentioned in the indictment in January; I did not miſs the things till they were brought to me on the Sunday evening by Mr. Mander, he brought two handkerchiefs and a pair of cotton ſtockings, they were my property, the boy lived with me at the ſame time.

WILLIAM MANDER ſworn.

I keep a public-houſe in St. James's-ſtreet, and on Sunday night my wife went up ſtairs in the ſervants room, ſhe found this ſmall bundle, the boy was out with beer, and we aſked the man whether he knew any thing of it, when the boy came in we aſked him whether it belonged to him, he ſaid it did, I aſked him how he came by it, and he ſaid a boy gave it him, I aſked him what boy; it appeared to me very unlikely that a boy ſhould give him theſe things; he ſaid it was a boy that drew beer at the Catherine-wheel, near me, but he was not there now, I enquired and found out where the boy lived, I found him in St. Martin's Church-yard, at the proſecutrix's; I ſhewed her the things, they were her property, ſhe adviſed me to ſend for my boy, and we ſent for him up ſtairs, and the priſoner owned he had taken the things out of his maſter's ſhop and given them to my boy.

Were any promiſes made him?—None at all; my boy is here, his name is John Smith, I left the things that night with Mrs. M‘Kenzie.

(The things depoſed to by the proſecutrix.)

The ſtockings are mine marked with the letter A.

JOHN SMITH ſworn.

The priſoner ſaid he had a good place, ſays I, I am glad of it, and ſays he my miſtreſs finds me in victuals and cloaths; ſays he I have theſe things, I will give them to you; I have known the priſoner about five months.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay.

GUILTY.

To be twice whipped and impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

205. MARY WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d day of February, one ſilk gown and coat, value 30s. one bombazeen gown and coat, value 28s. a cloak, value 3s. an handkerchief, value 2s. the property of Diana Harriſon, widow, in the dwelling-houſe of Letitia Baker.

DIANA HARRISON ſworn.

I am a widow, I was going up ſtairs, and I heard ſomebody in my bed-room, and when I came to the top of the ſtairs I ſaw my room door broke open, and the priſoner ſtanding at the door, I had left it locked about half an hour before, and took the key in my pocket; the priſoner had ſome things in her apron, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, the value of the ſilk gown and coat is about thirty ſhillings, it would ſell for that, the bombazeen gown and coat is about twenty-eight ſhillings, it would ſell for that; a ſilk cloak which I value at three ſhillings; and a ſilk handkerchief, not worth more than two ſhillings; I know the things, the ſilk gown and coat I had worn many times, I have no doubt about any of this property: I aſked the priſoner who ſhe wanted, ſhe ſaid ſhe wanted one Smith a ſhoe-maker; I told her there was no ſuch perſon lodged in the houſe, ſhe ſaid there did, and it was an orange warehouſe; I aſked her what ſhe had in her apron, ſhe ſaid they were for Mr. Smith, I aſked her to let me ſee them, ſhe refuſed, I aſked her again, ſhe ſaid they were her own; I told her if they were ſhe would not be aſhamed to ſhew them, ſhe ſaid if I would let her come down I ſhould ſee them, I did ſo as far as the landing place, I aſked her again to let me ſee them, and ſhe again refuſed, I told her I believed they were my property; I called the lodgers on the ſecond floor to come and take the child out of my arms, and I called for more aſſiſtance, and the lodgers of the firſt floor happened to be coming through the paſſage, and aſked what was the matter, we examined her apron againſt her inclination, and there were the things that are mentioned in the indictment, that lodger took them out of her apron, and the other lodger tied them up, I have had them ever ſince.

ELIZABETH HASSEL ſworn.

I lodge in the ſecond floor in Mrs. Baker's houſe, ſhe is a ſingle woman; I heard Mrs. Harriſon call, and when I came out ſhe was ſtopping the priſoner on the landing place on the firſt floor, I ſaw the things taken out of her apron which are here, which Mrs. Harriſon claimed, I am convinced the priſoner is the ſame perſon which took the things.

RICHARD BROOK ſworn.

I lodge at Mrs. Baker's, in the room adjoining where Mrs. Harriſon lays, I was coming through the paſſage and heard high words, and the priſoner at the bar refuſed to ſhew what ſhe had in her apron; ſo I called another man and turned theſe things out of her apron, I am ſure to the priſoner, we took her to the watch-houſe directly.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When I went up to this perſon I trod upon theſe things, I picked them up, and would have come down to have ſhewn them to this gentlewoman in the parlour, ſhe would not let me; the things were taken out of my lap by force; I trod upon them by accident, I came to ſee Mr. Smith of High-ſtreet Marybon; I never was nigh the room nor in the room; I was ſearched, I know nothing of the things.

Court to Proſecutrix. In what manner was your door broke?——The ſtaple was forced.

Was there any body there but her at this time?——Nobody but her, and I am ſure I locked the door, I tried it after, and I took the key out.

(The Jury deſired to look at the property.)

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing to the value of 20s.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

206. ROBERT NEWMAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of February, ſix ſilk handkerchiefs, value twenty-ſix ſhillings, the property of Charles Haſkew, privily in his ſhop.

CATHERINE HASKEW ſworn.

I live in John-ſtreet, Oxford-road, I keep a haberdaſher's and milliner's ſhop, I loſt ſix ſilk handkerchiefs out of my ſhop, they were lying in the window, and were found on the priſoner; the priſoner came into the ſhop as I was ſitting in the parlour, he aſked me to ſerve him with a halfpenny-worth of black ſilk, he paid for it, and then went from behind the door, the ſhop window was behind the door, I ſaw him take a piece of ſilk handkerchiefs, as ſoon as I ſaw them in his hands, I ſcreamed out thieves! he carried them off with him, I followed him till he was taken, he got about fifty yards, I did not get the handkerchiefs again, he owned he threw them under the coaches in Oxford-road, we went to look for them, but could not find them, I believe the priſoner came into the ſhop the Saturday night before, for a halfpenny-worth of ſilk, about nine; this was on the Monday, I cannot ſay I recollected him again when he came in, but I am ſure he is the man that come in on Monday night, the halfpenny-worth of ſilk was found upon him, but not the handkerchiefs, I ſaw it found upon him, he was not out of my ſight till he was taken, but the mob increaſing, I could not diſtinguiſh him from the reſt.

JOHN WALDO ſworn.

I heard the cry of ſtop thief! I am a patrol, I purſued the priſoner and took him, and brought him to the ſhop directly, and a halfpenny-worth of white ſilk was found upon him.

JOHN NICHOLS ſworn.

I am another patrol, I was along with the laſt witneſs, I aſſiſted to take the priſoner; we wear white coats, in Marybon, and a great many people ſaid, you ſhould not be taken by them white angels, they call us white angels on account of our coats; I ſearched the priſoner and a halfpenny-worth of white ſilk was found upon him; I heard the priſoner deſire the gentleman, from whom he ſtole the handkerchiefs, to be favourable to him, and he would tell me where he flung them, he ſaid, he flung them under the firſt ſtand of coaches, they went to endeavour to find them, and took the lanthorn, and could not find them, he had ſo many confederates after him; I ſuppoſe there were above a hundred people after him.

Did they appear to be friends or enemies?——Some of them ſeemed to be great enemies.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My mother has got a large family of children, and I wanted ſome bread, and my father has but one leg, and I took the things for bread; the family were all crying for want of bread, and my father was very ill at the time.

GUILTY,

Of ſtealing, but not privately.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

---

207. ANN GALLOWAY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of February laſt, one woman's black callimanco petticoat, value 13s. the property of Ralph Steel, privily in his ſhop.

——— TUCKLER ſworn.

I am ſhopman to Mr. Steele, the proſecutor, he is a mercer in the pariſh of St. Ann, Soho, the priſoner came to my maſter's ſhop, the 15th of February, about five in the evening, and aſked to look at ſome childrens great coats, ſhe ſaid ſhe kept a ſhop in Monmouth-ſtreet, and wanted ſome to ſell again, I ſhewed her ſeveral, at laſt ſhe pitched on one, and agreed for price, and paid me five ſhillings and ſixpence for it, then ſhe looked at ſome other great coats, I ſhewed her ſeveral of them, and the parcel ſhe bought, ſhe had before her, ſhe had a large cloak on, and I thought ſhe had ſomething made the cloak ſtick out rather more than common behind, I then went paſt her and laid my hand on her cloak, and I felt ſomething as I thought, like a ſtuff petticoat, I then went and ſhut the door, and put a little bolt on it, and came back, and aſked her to try on one of the great coats, I told her, I was ſure they would fit her, ſhe heſitated ſome time, at laſt I inſiſted upon her trying one on, and pulling off her cloak, and as ſhe pulled off her cloak, the petticoat I have here fell from under her arm; I had ſhewed this petticoat to another cuſtomer, not five minutes before the priſoner came in, it lay on the counter; and before I pulled off the cloak, I looked on the ground, to ſee if there was nothing upon the ground, and there was not; after the coat dropped from her, I took it up, and charged her with it, ſhe was taken into cuſtody, and ſhe began abuſing me very much.

Did you ſee her take it off the counter?——No, I did not, I never ſaw her take it till I ſaw it ſtick out behind.

What value is it?—It is valued at thirteen ſhillings, but it is worth more money than that.

Priſoner. There were two other people in the ſhop.

Court. Is that ſo?—Yes, there were ſome people at ſome diſtance.

Did any of theſe perſons obſerve her take the petticoat, and put it under her cloak?——No, my Lord, they did not.

Had you ever ſeen this woman in the ſhop before?——Yes, ſhe had been a cuſtomer many times.

Did you know where ſhe lived?——She told me ſhe kept a ſhop in Monmouth-ſtreet, but I found ſhe had left that ever ſince Chriſtmas, ſhe did keep a ſhop in the ready made line.

Jury. Is that the coat upon the child ſhe has with her?——I believe it may, it is the ſame colour.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went into Mr. Steel's ſhop to buy this little coat, I did not ſay I lived in Monmouth-ſtreet then, but he knew I had lived there; he aſked me ſix ſhillings and ſixpence for the coat, I gave him five ſhillings and ſixpence for it, he lifted it up, and put it under my arm, and I told him, that I wanted one of a dark colour; he went up ſtairs and fetched one, and aſked me to try it on, I told him, I did not like the colour nor the buttons, he offered to change the buttons, I took off my cloak, and he fitted on the great coat, I told him it was too tight, he wiſhed me to have it, and he went behind me, and ſaid, it fitted me very well, and he picked up a petticoat, the young man had been there wrapping up ſome petticoats, and he ſaid, I dare ſay you have had this petticoat under your cloak.

Court. Is the account ſhe gives true?—Some part of it is; about fitting on the coat.

Court. Did the petticoat drop down when ſhe firſt pulled off her cloak?—Yes.

Court. It is very extraordinary if you thought ſhe had been guilty of a felony in ſtealing this, that you did not proceed to charge her?——I heſitated with myſelf, whether I ſhould let her go off quietly, as ſhe had been a cuſtomer before; and then I thought to let her go, when I had got her, as we had loſt ſo many things, was not right.

Court. Might not it have been bruſhed off the counter?—No, it could not.

Could not ſhe have taken it up by miſtake?——I am confident it was a petticoat ſhe had under her arm by the feel.

Jury. Was ſhe willing to pull off her cloak, or did ſhe heſitate?—No, ſhe heſitated; ſhe ſaid, ſhe would bring a lady to ſuit herſelf, but when I went paſt her, I felt through her cloak, and it felt like a ſtuff petticoat, it was not half a moment before I charged her with the petticoat.

Jury. Did you charge her with the petticoat, before you tried the great coat, or afterwards?——Afterwards.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

208. PATRICK RIDLEY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th day of February, one linen ſheet, value 1s. one towel, value 2d. two check aprons, value 1s. two aprons, value 2s. one gown, value 4s. one waiſtcoat, value 18d. two pair of cotton ſtockings, value 2s. two linen table cloths, value 6d. three pair of ſtockings, value 3s. the property of Sarah Turner.

SARAH TURNER ſworn.

I live in Queen-ſtreet, Lincoln's-Inn-fields, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, on the 17th of this month; I am ſervant to a gentleman, theſe things were taken from the houſe, I know the things, they have no mark on them.

Mr. Garrow. I believe they are your maſter's property?——The five aprons are mine, and a gown, and twelve pair of ſtockings, the reſt were my maſter's, which were in my care; there was a cry of ſtop thief! I was in the kitchen, I did not go up ſtairs directly, but before I got up ſtairs the ſhop door was opened, and the things were put in; I know nothing of the priſoner.

JOHN DOW ſworn.

Laſt Friday night, about a quarter or twenty minutes after eight, I was ſitting in my own parlour, I live in Little Queen-ſtreet, I went to the door, being informed by my ſon, and in three minutes I ſaw a man looking very earneſtly up at the one pair of ſtairs window, and preſently a bundle came out, he opened his hands, and received it in this manner; I hallooed out ſtop thief! he dropped the bundle, and ran away; I went acroſs the way, and there was ſome clothes laying upon the payment, a ſheet, a towel, and a checque apron while I was picking them up, the priſoner jumped out of the one pair of ſtairs window, I went to lay hold of him, but he got away from me, I got up Great Catherine-ſtreet, I followed him, and cried ſtop thief, and I ſaw a man a little way before me croſs the way with a lanthorn in his hand, and he laid hold of him, I never loſt ſight of him, this is the ſame perſon that jumped out of the window, that was taken by the other man, I went with him directly to Juſtice Walker's, he was ſearched, and there was found upon him, a knife, and two penny-worth of halfpence, no linen nor any thing elſe, he ſaid, before the Juſtice, that he was coming along the ſtreet, and ſaw a man in a white coat running down the ſtreet, and he run after the man.

THOMAS WELCH ſworn.

I am a watchman, I ſaw the priſoner in Great Queen-ſtreet, laſt Friday, he was running away, and the laſt witneſs cried ſtop thief! and I ſtopped him.

Was there any body running before the priſoner, that he was in purſuit of, or was he running away?——No, there was nobody before him, I took him before the Juſtice, I am ſure the priſoner is the perſon I ſtopped.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I drank tea with my mother, about half after ſix, and going to my maſter's for a laſt, I heard the cry of ſtop thief! there were a hundred and fifty people running, I was running up Queen-ſtreet, and the watchman ſtopped me.

Court to Welch. Was there theſe people running which he ſays?——There were a good many people after him, I did not ſee any body before him.

The priſoner called his maſter and four more witneſſes, who all gave him a very good character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

209. THOMAS FREEMAN and JOSEPH DYER were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Robert Broughton, about the hour of ſix in the night, on the 24th day January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, three ſilk handkerchiefs, chiefs, value 6s. one cotton handkerchief, value 12d. and one worked muſlin apron, value 12d. his property.

ROBERT BROUGHTON ſworn.

On the 24th of January laſt, between ſix and ſeven, the window of my ſhop was broke open, at that alarm I run out of doors, I keep a chandler's ſhop and pawnbrokers; I ran out and found ſome things had dropped from the window, and others ſtolen out; the priſoners were apprehended in a few minutes afterwards, theſe are the things which were taken away from my houſe, which had dropped about fifteen or twenty yards near my houſe; Joſeph Tyſon took them up, theſe are my things, they have ſufficient marks for me to ſwear to them; here are tickets on two or three of them, that I can ſwear to, I know the marks, they are my wife's writing, they were put into the window for ſale, and I knew the people they belonged to.

JOSEPH TYSON ſworn.

On the 24th of January laſt, in the evening, coming home paſt the proſecutor's houſe, I heard a glaſs give a ſmaſh, and I ſaw the two priſoners at the window, there was no one elſe near it, I was about ſix yards from them when they dropped the property; there were handkerchiefs, and ſome aprons, one or two, I picked them up in a hurry, the handkerchiefs were either ſewed together or pinned together, but the apron was ſeparate from the others; theſe are part of the things that I picked up, but whether they are the whole I cannot tell, I am ſure they are the ſame that I picked up. I delivered them to the proſecutor directly; ſtooping to pick the things up, I loſt ſight of the priſoners, and in the courſe of ten minutes or leſs, I ſaw them again, a woman apprehended them.

Had you any knowledge of the priſoners before this time?——No; I did not cry ſtop thief! there was a woman before them, ſhe clapped hold of the youngeſt of them, and called out for the proſecutor, the priſoners never offered to ſtir, they ſaid, they were going to the White Raven, to get a pint of beer; I will venture to ſwear they are both the people that broke the window; there was light from the window and the lamp, and they were under it.

Priſoner. This man ſaid, he was twenty yards off me, and he ſaid, I was the moſt likely perſon.

Tyſon. I hear what he ſays, but it is very falſe, there was no other perſon but the woman.

What time was it?——Soon after ſix.

SARAH BYLE ſworn.

I ſaw two or three people ſtanding by the proſecutor's window on this night, and when I had gone five or ſix yards, the window was broke; the people that were under the window run away, I apprehended one of the priſoners.

Do you know that either of the priſoners were either of theſe perſons that broke the window, or were either of them ſtopped by you?——Yes, I take them to be the ſame people, I once before ſaw Joſeph Dyer, and as to Thomas Freeman, I have known him above ten years; I am ſure he was one of the perſons that was under the window.

Did you take notice of the perſon of Dyer at this time that you ſtopped him?——Yes, it might be ten minutes paſt ſix, when the window was broke.

When you ſtopped Dyer, did you make ſuch obſervations on his perſon, that you can poſitively ſwear he is the perſon you ſaw at the window?——I cannot poſitively ſwear he is the ſame perſon, I can ſay he is the ſame perſon I took hold of; I ſaw the priſoner Freeman at the window ten minutes before the robbery was done, and I ſaw the window broke, and I am poſitive Freeman was there at the time, and another, if not two with him.

Priſoner Freeman. Before the Juſtice, that woman ſaid, ſhe could not ſwear to me.

Mrs. Byle. I would not have wiſhed to have been brought here, but I told Mr. Staples that he was the man, and I believed Dyer to be the other.

Pri-

Prisoner Freeman's Defence.

I was going to look after my father, and this woman came after me, and ſaid, I was a likely perſon to do it, and they took this priſoner and me, and the man could not ſwear to me the firſt time.

THOMAS JENKINSON ſworn.

I have known Freeman ten years, and have always known him to be an honeſt lad, I live in Long-alley, Moor-fields.

Prisoner Dyer's Defence.

My mother is very bad, and my maſter is taken to the King's Bench, and he cannot be here.

Court to Byle. Was there any body before the Juſtice?

Priſoner Freeman. When I was taken, this gentlewoman ſaid, ſhe took us, becauſe ſhe ſaw us looking on the ground.

Byle. They were both there, and another perſon in their company.

Both Guilty, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron Perryn.

210. CORNELIUS CRONE was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Elizabeth Bell, about the hour of three in the night, on the 13th day of February, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one hundred and fifty pounds weight of lead, value 20s. the property of Joſeph Kirkman.

THOMAS BELL ſworn.

I am grandſon to the proſecutrix, ſhe is a ſingle woman, ſhe lived in High-ſtreet, St. Giles's, ſhe rents a houſe; it was broke open on the 13th of January, about ten we went to bed, about ſix in the evening I ſaw the houſe was ſafe, it was the window of the ground floor that was broke open, it had been a ſhop, but was ſhut up at this time; it was in the front of the houſe, I looked at that window about ſix in the evening, it was ſhut, and a parcel of rubbiſh laid againſt it.

How is it faſtened?——I believe it had been nailed ſometime before, but I did not examine it to ſee whether it was nailed that evening, it had been nailed for four or five nights, it was uſually kept bolted.

Was there any ſhutter to it?—Yes, outſide ſhutters.

Nailed?——There was a bolt withinſide to the ſhutters, I believe it was not faſtened on account that they could not get into the room, at ſix o'clock, I did not examine whether the nail was in, but as I paſſed it, I ſaw there was a great deal of rubbiſh lay on the outſide of the window, and the window ſhutters were both cloſe, but whether nailed or not, I cannot ſay.

Did you obſerve at all after ſix till you went to bed?—Not to my knowledge; the next morning I was called up about ſeven, and informed of the robbery, I went to look at the window, and I ſaw the window broke open, it appeared that the bottom part of the ſhutter was wrenched open, and the top and bottom of the ſhutters were broken, and the ſaſh was lifted up; I did not ſee that the window was broke.

Was any other part of the houſe broke?——Not that I ſaw.

Was any thing taken out of the houſe?——Not that I know of, I know nothing more of the matter.

Jury. Do you ſleep in the ſame houſe?—Yes.

JOHN ABRAHAMS ſworn.

I live at No. 24, Tottenham-ſtreet, I ſaw the ſhutters nailed about a week before the robbery was committed, on Monday the 13th of February; I ordered the workmen to lay a quantity of rubbiſh againſt the ſhutters, and when I left the building, which was about five, the ſhutters were quite ſecure; and when I came in the morning, the rubbiſh was removed, and the windows open, and the lead gone.

Was it neceſſary to remove the rubbiſh in order to open the ſhutters?—We could not get the ſhutter open before, that room had been locked up for a week, but not the reſt of the houſe.

WILLIAM TOMKINSON ſworn.

On Tueſday morning, when I came to work, about half paſt ſix, I found a quantity of lead lay in the yard, and the ſhutter was broke open, and the bottom ſaſh lifted up; there was half a hundred weight of lead, the lead was the property of Mr. Kirkman, it was left in the houſe, it was put in the parlour; and I looked in the morning, and found the lead, ſome of it was gone away, and ſome little remained, I did not take notice how much.

What quantity of lead was there in the whole that you took off Mr. Kirkman's houſe?—That I cannot ſay.

Did you try the lead with Mr. Kirkman's houſe, to ſee whether it fitted or not?——No.

DANIEL BURBRIDGE ſworn.

I cut this lead into five ſeveral pieces myſelf, and carried them into the front parlour of Elizabeth Bell, and that piece which is here now, I know to be the ſame lead that came off Mr. Kirkman's building, I know it by the ſhort piece that is here; (Produced) and here is a place I cut with my hatchet.

JAMES GUNNING ſworn.

On the 14th of this month, I ſaw the priſoner going with this lead on his back, I ſaw him going from the fence of the houſe when he took the lead, I purſued him and took him with the lead to the watch-houſe.

JOHN GARDENER ſworn.

I was paſſing through St. Giles's, the 14th of this month, about three in the morning, and I heard the fence crack in the boards, and I made up towards it, and ſaw the priſoner going off with the quantity of lead upon his back, I purſued him, and he threw away the lead, and I took him about fifty yards from Mr. Bell's houſe.

GEORGE MIDDLETON ſworn.

On the 14th of this month, about three in the morning, my partner, the laſt witneſs, and I were walking in St. Giles's, I am a patrol, and we heard the cracking of boards, and we made up to a fence, by Mrs. Bell's houſe; I ſaw the priſoner with a load on his back, and we followed him up to his lodgings, he was about fifty yards from the fence when we firſt ſaw him, he never was out of our ſight, we aſked him no queſtions.

WILLIAM DAYSELL ſworn.

I am a watchman, juſt above where the robbery was committed, I heard the beat of the witneſs Gunning's rattle, I took charge of the priſoner, and as ſoon as the other men were out of ſight, the priſoner began to wreſtle with me, and I took him to the watch-houſe, and they brought the lead after; and going along, he ſaid, did you ſee me with the lead upon my back; I ſaid, no; he ſaid, if you do not let me go, I will have both your ears off before Saturday night in you box; and at Middle-row, he again attempted to kick up my heels.

Priſoner. I know nothing of the lead.

Court. Have you any witneſſes?—Yes, I have witneſſes, but I have not them here now.

Court to Bell. Do you know this man?——No, I ſleep upon the ground floor, that was the ſame that this lead was in, and between this room where I ſlept, and the room where this lead was, there is a kitchen.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

211. HENRY THOMPSON and THOMAS HARRIS were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Iſabella Chapman, about the hour of three in the night, on the 5th day of February, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, thirteen pewter diſhes, value 15s. twenty-ſix pewter plates, value 20s. one fiſh pewter plate, value 1s. one pewter cullender, value 1s. one ſatin cloak, value 20s. three ſilver tea ſpoons, value 5s. one table cloth, value 6d. three aprons, value 1s. one pair of ſhoes, value 3s. two ſixpences, value 1s. forty-ſix halfpence, value 1s. 11d. fourteen China bowls, value 40s. and a piece of lead, value 1d. her property.

ISABELLA CHAPMAN ſworn.

I live in Union-court, Holborn-hill, I keep the Angel public houſe, my houſe was broke open, on Sunday morning, the 5th of February, I was in bed at one o'clock, and at two I heard the watch-man, my family were all in bed, I go up generally the laſt, my houſe was very ſecure, and the watchman called me when he came at four o'clock, my cellar door was broke open, and my ſtreet door was broke open on the inſide, they got into the parlour, and wrenched the lock off the door of the ſtair-caſe; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment and the value therein, I left four ſixpences in the till for change, with about one and elevenpence in halfpence, the China bowls were taken down all ready to take away, they were carried from the bar into the kitchen, the pewter was carried away; the pewter was found in a ruination place, in George-court, between Union-court and Field-lane, covered with dirt, between eleven and twelve on the Sunday morning; my cloak was put in a bag, and my aprons and ſhoes, but they did not take them, becauſe they were diſturbed, the priſoners were taken a little after four in the morning, in the next yard.

Did you know any thing of the priſoners before?——Yes, I have ſeen them ſeveral times.

Were they cuſtomers to your houſe?—Caſually, they came in now and then.

Mr. Knowles, Counſel for Priſoner Harris, Then in fact nothing was taken out of the houſe but the pewter?—No.

Where does this court that you live in, lead down to?——It leads into Hatton-garden.

Does not it communicate with Field-lane?——I ſuppoſe you know as well as I do.

Does not the court where you live communicate with Field-lane?——I told you it carries you down between Union-court and Field-lane.

Then all the cuſtomers of your houſe are the gentlemen about Field-lane?——No, Sir, I do not know any thing of them.

What do you know of Mr. Philip Briſtow?—I know him, his father and mother lived in Union-court.

Has not he been very intimate in your houſe?—No, he has a houſe of his own.

Has not he been the moſt intimate friend you have had theſe ſeven years?——No, Sir, he has not, if I had no better friend than him, I ſhould have none.

I have not done with you yet?—But I have done with you then.

Do you know Harris?—Yes.

Did not you once charge him with robbing you?——No, Sir, I did not, I cleared Harris from that when the conſtable came.

Had he not firſt of all been committed on your charge?—No, he had not, I gave no charge of him.

Did you never give charge of him to Juſtice Blackborrow?—I was never before Juſtice Blackborrow.

Not for a ſilver tankard?—No, I did not give charge of him.

Priſoner Harris. I can prove it.

Was not he committed on your charge?——No, I did not charge him with a ſilver tankard, it was one drunken Tom they call him.

Did not you firſt charge him with it, and afterwards declare that you knew that he did not know of it?——I will not anſwer you any more.

Court. You muſt anſwer him.

Mr. Knowles. Did not you firſt of all charge this man with the robbery, and afterwards ſay he knew nothing of it?——Does Bob Pearce put that in his head.

That matter was agreeably ſettled, was not it ?—Nobody was tried for this robbery, he was in the club room, you may catch me, if you pleaſe.

They were taken in the next yard ?——They got over the tyles, into the next yard.

Did you ſee them get over ?—No.

Was that place where the priſoners were found in, the way from your houſe to the ruinous place where the pewter was found in, or was it not ?—No, it was not.

JANE HUDSON ſworn.

I live in the proſecutrix's houſe, I am a ſervant there.

What time did you go to bed that night? —A little after twelve, I heard the watchman call between three and four, and he alarmed us that the houſe was broke open, I came down immediately.

What condition did you find the houſe in ?——The bar was ſtripped of all the bowls, the cellar door was broke open, the lock broke, and the ſtreet door was open, not broke that I know of.

What was miſſing ?——All the pewter was gone out of the houſe, I have lived in this houſe five years, there were fifteen pewter diſhes taken away, and a fiſh plate, a pewter cullender ; I found the cloak, and the bag on the kitchen floor, there were a pair of new ſhoes, and three coloured aprons, theſe bowls were in a cloſet on the over night, and the aprons and ſhoes in a drawer, the cloſet door was locked, and the key was in it ; the pewter was found the ſame day, in ſome ruins, covered with ſome lime ; the priſoners were taken within two minutes after I came down ſtairs, I ſtood at the door while the watchman took the firſt, they were taken the very next yard to us.

Mr. Garrow. How long have you lived in this family ?—Five years.

A public houſe, a pretty notorious one, I believe it is ?——No, Sir.

You deny that ?——She keeps a very regular houſe.

Perhaps, regularly irregular ?—No, Sir, we ſhut up the houſe at eleven.

Your miſtreſs has been a little unlucky, ſhe has been robbed before ?—Yes.

She loſt a ſilver tankard ?—Yes.

How long ago was that ?—The day after Chriſtmas-day.

What was the value of that tankard ?—I do not know, it was a full quart tankard.

Your miſtreſs went to the Juſtice's ?—No, Sir, but a perſon who was in the houſe at that time took the man.

What man ?——Mr. Ramus.

Was it ſix or ſeven guineas that Mr. Ramus gave your miſtreſs ?—He did not give any thing at all.

Do you mean to ſwear that ?——I did not ſee him give any thing, I will take my oath, my miſtreſs never told me ſo.

Upon your oath, do not you know by ſome means or other, that your miſtreſs received ſix guineas upon that occaſion ?—I heard ſay ſo, but I did not ſee it.

Now I aſk you again, did not you hear your miſtreſs ſay it ?—Yes, I did.

Court. This moment you ſaid, you did not hear her ſay ſo ?——Ramus was not taken up for it, it was one Thomas, I cannot recollect the man's name, it was one Thomas Walker ; Ramus was the man that took him into cuſtody, Ramus was in company.

Court. You admit you did hear your miſtreſs ſay ſhe had ſix guineas to make it up ?—Yes.

The man was diſcharged in conſequence? ——Yes.

Court. That was very bad behaviour in the woman, but the Jury will judge of her credit, it is no reaſon becauſe ſhe was robbed once, that ſhe ſhould be robbed every day.

EDWARD MASON ſworn.

I am a lodger of Mrs Chapman's, about four in the morning, on the 5th of this month, I was awaked by the watchman knocking and calling Mrs. Chapman up, I thought ſomething was the matter, and I bid the ſervant girl get up, ſhe got up, and going by my room door, ſhe deſired me to come down, ſhe ſaid ſhe was afraid ſomething was the matter ; I got up, and come down with my coat on, and her cry when I was half way down ſtairs, was that ſhe was robbed; with that I came down, and as ſoon as I came into the tap-room, I laid hold of the poker, I ſaid, if any body is here, let us ſee who they are; the watchman was there, and he and me went to the door to go into the next yard, there was another watchman waiting, and they opened a door, and went into the next adjoining yard; while I ſtood within the paſſage, with the poker in my hand, I heard one of the watchmen ſay, here we have got him; they returned with the priſoner Thompſon, I knew him directly, and ſays I, Harry, what in the name of God are you doing here; they brought him into the tap-room, and they left our watchman Ware with him, and me and the other watchman went out again into the ſame yard, and found the other priſoner Harris in the neceſſary; the priſoners are the men, Harris was ſitting in the neceſſary pretending to be aſleep, we brought him into the tap-room to the other, and with that I left the two watchmen with the two priſoners, and I went up ſtairs to put on my clothes, and when I returned they were gone with them to the watch-houſe, and a neighbour came in, and we ſearched round, and could not find the pewter; I found the cellar door broke open, and the lock wrenched off, it was hanging on one of the nails; as I was going down the ſteps, I ſaw the little window out that goes out of the yard, into the cellar, about eight or nine inches wide, that was knocked out; I went into the cellar, and looked round with a candle, I could find no property there, but the lamp was lighted, and was burning on the ſide of one of the buts, the tyling of the yard was all broke, and ſome garden pots with a few trees in them were all knocked down, four or five of them, and the ſky-light was broke, and I ſaw the print of the fore part of a man's foot, all mud and dirt juſt freſh done, as if he had been getting out of one yard into another; and one Baſſet a conſtable found the pewter, I ſaw a cloak, three aprons, and a pair of now ſhoes in a bag on the kitchen floor, which Mrs. Chapman claimed.

Mr. Garrow. How long have you lodged in this houſe of Mrs. Chapman?—Four years come April.

You found Harris in the neceſſary in the next yard?—Yes.

He appeared to be aſleep?—He pretended to be aſleep.

Did you find any other of the property?——No.

Did you examine that neceſſary to ſee if you could find any thing?—No.

Did you find any tools or implements of houſe breaking?—No.

The property that was found, was found in a different direction, inſtead of being found on the ſide of the houſe where Harris was found, it was on the other ſide?——Yes.

Court. How far was the place where the pewter was found, from Mrs. Chapman's houſe?——About ſixty, eighty, or a hundred yards, it is but a little way.

Was it as far as to the wall of Newgate?——I cannot tell for certain, it is I ſuppoſe above a hundred yards, as nigh as I can tell, it is a contrary way where they were found, it is going out of the houſe, and turns up a court to a dunghill, there was nothing found on the priſoner.

RICHARD WARE ſworn.

I am a watchman in Union-court, I called up the proſecutrix at four o'clock, and found the cellar window open, I perceived a light between the ſhutters, I hit againſt the ſtreet door, and it was open; I took the priſoner Thompſon in the next adjoining yard, one M'Leard, a city watchman, was with me, and Maſon was ſtanding at the door of the next houſe: I brought Thompſon into the tap-room, and took care of him while the other two went back; they returned in the ſpace of two or three minutes, they brought with them Thomas Harris, the other priſoner; there are only ſome deal boards between Chapman's yard and the adjoining yard, where we took them. I did not obſerve any thing particufar about the partition ; I obſerved where they got over, which is a tyling about ſeven feet high, there are ſome garden pots and a bit of a ſky-light, and when I alarmed the people of the houſe I heard the pots fall and the ſky-light break ; we went to the next houſe, and the door was on the latch ; I knew the houſe, and the woman that keeps the houſe has lodgers, it is hardly ever faſtened, and we lifted up the latch and went in, and I went to the yard door, but I am not poſitive whether it was bolted or not ; I found Thompſon in that yard, that yard might be two yards wide and three yards long, it is a very ſmall yard ; Mr. Beſwick found the pewter, I was not preſent.

THOMAS M'LEARD ſworn.

I am a city watchman, I was preſent at taking Thompſon, the other watchman, Maſon, was at the taking the other, with me, he was not with us when we went into that yard firſt, only the watchman and me ; Thompſon was ſtanding in the yard when we came in, we ſaw no other at that time ; we took him into the tap-room, and left the other watchman with him ; then Maſon and me went into the yard again, and looked into the neceſſary, the door of the neceſſary was not faſt, and there we found the priſoner Harris pretending to be aſleep ; we took him into the tap-room, and I went into the yard belonging to the proſecutrix, after they were taken to the watch-houſe, and I ſaw the garden pots taken down, and the ſky-light broke.

Where were theſe garden pots ?—They were at the top of the pent-houſe, between the two yards.

Did you obſerve any thing elſe there about this pent-houſe or ſky-light ?—No, Sir, we went away to the watch-houſe with them ; I was not preſent when the pewter was found.

MARY LUDLOW ſworn.

I live at No. 12, in Union-court, next door to the proſecutrix : the 5th day of February, being Sunday morning, about the hour of four, I heard a noiſe like the falling of tiles ; I liſtened a little, thinking it was a fire ; I looked through the glaſs of the caſement, and I ſaw the pots that were on a ridge between the two ſheds, with ſhrubs and trees in them, were down, and I heard the breaking of glaſs, and the tiles rattled about, and I ſaid, for God's ſake who are you, or what are you ; I ſaw a man come over the tiles feet foremoſt, and he came down all of a lump, I ſaw his legs come over the pent-houſe ſliding, and I ſaid, for God's ſake where is the fire ; the man did not anſwer me, and I thought he was killed : I run then to the fore window, and he fell all of a lump into my yard, mine is the next yard that joins to Mrs. Chapman's, and I run to the fore window, and knocked as hard as I could ; I heard ſomebody call watch, watch, and I thought they ſaid Scott, Scott, which is the maſter of the engine, and two watchmen came, and I ſaid, for God's ſake break open my door, for I cannot find the key, (I have been burnt out twice before) they opened the door and came in ; the watch ſaid, it is not fire, it is thieves ; then ſaid I, there is a man come over the tiles into my yard ; then ſays the watchman, we have got him, but I did not ſee him take the firſt man ; the watchman came in at my fore door.

How did they get into the yard ?——One of them unbolted the back door ; I took the box iron and opened the caſement ; ſays I, pray give me a light, for it appears to me, by the great noiſe of the garden pots, and the tiles falling, that there muſt be more than one, and he ſaid there is nobody here, and I ſlipped on my under petticoat, and went to the door, and ſaid, have you looked on the tiles ; no, ſays he ; ſays I, have you looked in the neceſſary, and he ſaid no, and he opened the door of the neceſſary, and there ſat that young man, Harris, I ſaw him there.

Was the neceſſary houſe ſhut when you came down ?——I was in the yard ſome minutes before twelve, and I looked round, and there was neither man nor mortal there ; I then went into Mrs. Chapman's houſe, and ſaid there is another, give the watchman ſome help, and Maſon took the poker, and came in and ſaid, it is Tom Harris, by G—d.

Mr. Garrow. What is your name?—Mary Ludlow.

Is not your name Briſtow?—No, Sir.

I thought you was the wife of William Briſtow?——No, Sir, he was the Earl of Bedford's groom ſome years ſince, he was a lodger of mine twenty-three years ago.

How high did you ſleep on this night?—I laid on the ground floor, even with the yard.

Have you any window ſhutters?—No, but I nailed the window up.

Have you any lamp in that yard?——No.

What time in the morning?——About four.

A moon-light night?——Star-light.

What may be the ſize of this yard of your's?——From the pales I think it is not above a yard from the window.

How far is it from George-alley?——One window out of George-alley comes into my yard; I have ſeen the dunghill.

How far is it from your houſe?——I think it is not ſo far as the length of this Court to Newgate; George-alley communicates with Field-lane, it is a neighbourhood for poor families to live in, there are but three families in our houſe, very regular and decent people.

ALEXANDER SCOTT ſworn.

About four in the morning of this month I heard a cry, and I thought they ſaid Scott, but they ſaid watch; I live about five doors from Mrs. Chapman's, I looked out of my window, and I heard the rattling of tiles, and I thought it was fire; I ran down with my pole-axe in my hand, and juſt as I ſhut my door, ſays they, here is the other; I ran directly to Mrs. Chapman's, and both the priſoners were in the box in the tap-room, cloſe to the bar; I ſaw a caſe knife on the top of the table, and I thought it prudent to remove it to another box, and I ſtood over them with my pole-axe; then more aſſiſtance came; I went into the kitchen, and upon the floor I ſaw the bag, with ſomething in it; I opened it, and put all the things in it out upon the floor in the kitchen, there was a black ſatin cloak, a new pair of leather ſhoes, a table cloth, three linen aprons, two of them new, one of them worn, and I put them into the bag again, and tied them up, and then looked into the kitchen, and there was the china bowls, the pewter was all gone off the ſhelf in the kitchen; Jane Hudſon goes into the bar, and ſays, before God here is Harris's ſtick; this is the ſtick, I marked it, Maſon can prove it is his ſtick, Maſon has kept the ſtick ever ſince.

Maſon. I was going to mention it, but was ordered down, I had been to the watch-houſe, and when I came back this ſtick was found.

Do you know whoſe ſtick that is?——It is the priſoner Harris's, I know it, for a few nights before this affair happened, I had this ſtick in my hands for nigh half an hour from the priſoner Harris; a perſon came to ſpeak to him, and I was in the ſame box ſitting where he was, and the ſtick fell, and I took it up, and went and examined it very much, and another man that was in company with me aſked me what wood it was, and we agreed it was aſh; and if this ſtick was amongſt a thouſand, I could ſwear to this ſtick, that was at the ſame houſe the robbery was committed.

Was you preſent when Harris was taken out of the neceſſary houſe?——Yes.

Had he any ſtick in his poſſeſſion then?——He had none when he was taken, nor when he was brought to the tap-room.

Scott. The maid brought it out of the bar.

To Maſon. What did you do with the ſtick when you had it half an hour?——Harris aſked me for it, and I returned it to him.

Did he leave it in the tap-room that night?——He went away ſoon afterwards.

And did he carry the ſtick with him?—To the beſt of my knowledge he did; I examined it very particularly, not thinking any thing of the kind would happen.

Have you any imagination that he left the ſtick behind him that night?—No.

Proſecutrix. This ſtick was found behind the ſtreet door; I faſtened the ſtreet door over night, and there was neither ſtick, nor any thing elſe, behind the door at that time.

Jane Hudſon. I found the ſtick behind the ſtreet door, and I gave it to my miſtreſs in the bar, it was juſt after they went out to the watch-houſe; I went to ſhut the ſtreet door, and I hit it with my foot; my miſtreſs ſaid, this is Harris's ſtick, the maid has found it behind the door; my miſtreſs ſaid, I ſaw it in Harris's hand.

Had you had occaſion to go out at that ſtreet door?——No, Sir, we went up ſtairs to bed immediately, and Mr. Maſon.

Had you ſeen that ſtick behind the door that day?——No, Sir, I had not, it was not there when I went to bed; I looked to ſee if Mr. Maſon had faſtened the door, and there was nothing behind the door at all; I have ſeen him have a ſtick in his hand before, but I did not take any notice of it.

Mr. Garrow. Are you ſure you did not ſay to Scott, before God, here is Harris's ſtick?——I might ſay ſo; I ſaid to Mr. Scott, I have found a ſtick, and it is Harris's, I believe; when he came back from the watch-houſe I ſaid ſo, I did not ſay ſo when I firſt found it.

Upon your oath, did you ſay any thing to Scott about it, or did your miſtreſs ſay ſo?——My miſtreſs ſpoke firſt, and I ſpoke afterwards.

Court to Proſecutrix. Look at that ſtick; did you ever take notice of that ſtick?——It is Thomas Harris's ſtick.

One ſtick is exceeding like another; what induces you to ſay that is Thomas Harris's ſtick?——The girl went to ſhut the door, ſays ſhe, Madam, here is a ſtick, ſhe brought it in, ſays I, this is Tom Harris's ſtick.

Why did you ſay ſo?—Becauſe I ſaw it ſo often in his hand, I have had it in my hand when I have dreſſed him a bit of ſtake.

Did you ever take any particular notice of that ſtick, to be able to ſwear to it again?——Yes, that is the ſtick.

Mr. Garrow. You ſtick to that, that it is the ſtick?——Yes, Sir.

Yours is a very well accuſtomed houſe?——It is.

You have a good many cuſtomers?——No, I have neighbours ſhare, I do not ſerve any body in Field-lane.

How many perſons might come into your houſe with ſticks?—I do not know, I never minded any.

Now give us ſome reaſon why you minded Mr. Harris's in particular?—Mr. Harris brought a piece of beef on Wedneſday night, and deſired I would dreſs it for him, he came the next morning, it was a bit of briſket beef; I ſaid, what are you going to do with that, it is not fit to broil, and I propoſed to make ſome ſoup of it.

But how come you to take notice of that common aſh ſtick?——Becauſe I have had it in my hand, and I moved it when I went to lay the cloth for him.

Are there not a hundred ſuch?——Yes, thouſands.

Did you cut your name in it?—What ſhould I for.

What do you ſay about the tankard, did you hear what ſhe ſaid about the ſix guineas?——Yes.

Is that falſe or true?—It is not falſe.

Court. You have no right to make her accuſe herſelf.

THOMAS BESSETT ſworn.

I have found this pewter in a ruinous place, the 5th of this month, which was Sunday, between twelve and one, as near as I can recollect; I imagine it may be forty yards, as near as I can gueſs, from Mrs. Chapman's houſe, there was ſome rubbiſh lately thrown over it.

(The pewter produced and depoſed to.)

PRISONER THOMPSON'S DEFENCE.

As I was coming along, I heard the watchman call out watch ! and then afterwards thieves ! I run into this paſſage with the watchman, I got ahead firſt, and the watchman laid hold of me, and he took me into the proſecutrix's houſe.

PRISONER HARRIS's DEFENCE.

As I was coming to Mrs. Chapman's, I believe it was about one, I cannot particularly tell; I was rather diſguiſed in liquor, I wanted to go into the yard, I lifted up the latch, I knew this houſe, I went to the neceſſary, and there I fell aſleep.

The priſoner Thompſon called two witneſſes to his character.

BOTH GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

212. WILLIAM HOUGHTON and THOMAS HORTON were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Mary Humfries about the hour of two in the night, on the 15th day of January laſt, with intent her goods and chattels, in the ſaid dwelling-houſe then being, feloniouſly and burglariouſly to ſteal.

GEORGE LAW ſworn.

I live with Mrs. Humfries, a baker, in Bambridge-ſtreet, St. Giles's; on the 15th of January her houſe was broke open, about half paſt two on Sunday morning we were alarmed by the watchman, we got up and let the watchman in, and he came in and found two men in the ſhop, I never ſaw them before, the priſoners are the men, they never got away from us.

Was any part of the houſe broke ?——The bake-houſe door was broke, and I do not know whether it was faſtened up over night or not; when I ſaw it, the bottom was broke a piece off, this is the piece, I do not know how they got in, the door was wrenched open, and this piece was wrenched off.

MARY HUMFRIES ſworn.

I keep a baker's ſhop in Bambridge-ſtreet, St. Giles's; I have two parlours even with the ſhop, I ſleep in the back parlour; about half paſt two, on the 15th of January, I was alarmed by the watchmen and rattles in the ſhop, I called to my man, and came out of the back parlour, I miſſed nothing but two ſhillings and two-pence halfpenny that I left on the table on Saturday night, I looked about the parlour and found theſe pieces of wood that were broke off my beaufet, I ſaw the door and it was broke and a-jar, it joins the ſhop, it was under the ſame roof as the dwelling-houſe.

THOMAS SERJEANT ſworn.

I faſtened the door about eleven at night, the night before, and locked it.

Which door was it ?——The door that ſhuts to, I faſtened the door with a lock and key, I faſtened them both, I ſhut it down, I am ſure I faſtened it at that time, I tried it afterwards, and the board was ſhut down, I ſaw it the next morning and it was broke.

GEORGE THOMPSON ſworn.

I am the watchman that belongs to that round, and coming along pretty cloſe to this door, I found it broke and wrenched open, I knocked thinking ſome of the ſervants laid below, and one of the men aſked who that was; I anſwered, the watchman; he aſked what I wanted, I told him the place was broke, and the man aroſe and opened the ſhop door, while I ſtood at the ſhop door, while he was dreſſing himſelf, having no light, I put in the light, and William Houghton and Thomas Horton ſtood between the flower ſacks and the counter; I took them both there, I ſearch them for fear of my life, and when I found they had no fire arms, I thought my life was my own; I ſprung my rattle for aſſiſtance, we ſearched the houſe and found nothing elſe, only the beaufett broke, and this piece broke off; I took them both to the watch-houſe.

PRISONER HOUGHTON's DEFENCE.

I was going along, coming from the Running-horſe, I tumbled down the cellar, and could not get up.

PRISONER HORTON's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay.

Watchman. I aſked them no queſtions, and the priſoner Houghton deſired I would not uſe them ill.

JOHN BARLOW ſworn.

I know the priſoner Houghton about eleven or twelve months, he worked with me making ſcowering paper, he behaved very honeſtly to me; he left me five or ſix weeks ago, he left me on the Saturday morning, and on the Sunday I heard he was in trouble.

HARRY MOORE ſworn.

I am a weaver, I have known him about three years, a ſober, honeſt, juſt, and faithfull lad to me, while he worked with me, which was about ſixteen months.

BOTH GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

213. JOHN MEARS was indicted for feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Parr, about the hour of one in the afternoon, on the 17th day of January laſt, Elizabeth Parr, Peter Parr, and Ann Nicholas then being in the ſaid dwelling houſe, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, three pieces of gauze, containing thirty-ſix yards, value 3l. his property.

THOMAS PARR ſworn.

I live in Watling-ſtreet, I keep a gauze warehouſe, the priſoner entered my houſe about one in the day, on the 17th of January; this is the parcel I loſt.

(Depoſes to it.)

Court. How do you know they are yours?—By the tickets.

What is the value of them?——Three pounds, I ſaw theſe gauſes about ten minutes before the theft was committed, I never ſaw the parcel opened till now, ſince that time.

Mr. Peatt, Priſoner's Counſel. How many partners have you?——None.

You deal very largely in gauze?—I deal in gauzes, not very largely.

This gauze is a very common ſort?—Yes, I have ſold quantities of it.

Do you ever ſell goods with that mark upon them, Sir?——I always ſend them with the marks on, and with particular tickets.

If you had ſeen them three pieces of gauze, in any ſhop twenty or thirty miles out of town, a day or two after, ſhould you have known them from your ſhop mark to be the gauze you loſt that particular day?——I ſhould have known it to be my own mark, I ſhould have known it to have been gauze that was in my ſhop at that time.

There are other gauzes of that ſort?—I do not know that I ſhould have known it unleſs the tickets were on.

Now from the probability of knowing theſe figures, can you take upon you to ſwear they are yours?——I think I could, I can ſwear to the hand writing of my young man who made theſe figures.

Can you take upon you ſafely to ſwear that you would know the figures of your clerk in diſtinction to others?—I could be pretty ſure, I do not know I could ſwear to it.

Court. Have you any doubt about it?——None in the leaſt.

Is the mark the ſame as your ſhop mark?——The figures are the ſame, here is one of my own figures, I could not be ſure it was my gauze, unconnected with this ſtory.

Or that it was gauze that was in your ſhop, at that particular moment that you deſcribe?——No, I could not.

Court. If you had ſeen theſe figures at any other particular place, ſhould you have known them to be yours?—I ſhould.

Then having your figures to your gauze ſhould you have any doubt but they were your own?——No.

PETER PARR ſworn.

I live in Thomas Parr's houſe, being up ſtairs, I heard the garret door open, and I ſaw through the glaſs door, the priſoner running out, I purſued him, and at the corner of Bread-ſtreet, I ſaw him tying the parcel round his coat, he ſtruggled and tore his coat, he was brought back to the warehouſe, he fell down on his knees, and confeſſed he did it.

What became of the parcel?——I took the parcel, he delivered it up to me, I found it upon him, I carried it home to the warehouſe; this is the parcel.

Do you know whether the door was ſhut or open?——It was ſhut, I am ſure of it, for the bell does not ring otherwiſe, and I heard the bell ring; the priſoner was out of my ſight half a minute, I never ſaw the priſoner before.

Court. Do you know the figures on theſe gauzes?——Yes, ſome of them are mine, I know by the figures they are the ſame gauzes that were in Mr. Parr's warehouſe.

Did you ſearch in the warehouſe to ſee if any had been taken away?——I looked before I went, and miſſed that parcel.

Mr. Peatt. Can you know them figures from other figures that you have made on other goods?—Yes.

Who was in the houſe?——Elizabeth Parr was in the houſe, and the maid ſervant Ann Nicholas.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I leave it to my counſel.

JOHN WORRALL ſworn.

I was coming along Bread-ſtreet with my cart, when this young man took the parcel from the priſoner, and he broke looſe from him, and he called out ſtop thief! and I followed him and took him in Cheapſide, and brought him to the warehouſe of Mr. Parr, and there the priſoner owned in the warehouſe that he had taken a parcel out of the warehouſe.

Mr. Peatt. Did you ſay any thing to him?——I ſaid, if you are innocent of it, go back to the warehouſe where this young man lives, I made no promiſes nor any body elſe in my hearing.

The priſoner called one witneſs who gave him a good character.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

214. SARAH PARRY was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Owen Clutton in a certain dwelling houſe, on the 13th day of January laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, a ſilver watch, value 3l. a ſteel chain, value 6d. a ſeal, value 6d. and a key, value 2d. his property.

OWEN CLUTTON ſworn.

I am a gentleman's ſervant, I have ſeen the priſoner at the bottom of Oxford-road; and on the 31ſt of January, I was going to ſee a friend, this priſoner and another met me and laid hold of me, and aſked me if I would not give them ſomething to drink, I told them I could not very well afford it, I conſented to give them ſome porter, and I went with them to a room in Wells-yard, Bambridge-ſtreet; I do not know the name of the perſon that keeps the houſe, it was a private houſe, I ſtaid there till it was too late for me to go home, and the priſoner told me, I was welcome to ſtay there all night, ſo I thought as I was too late, I might as well ſtay and take a nights lodging, the other woman ſtopped and drank part of two pots of porter; they were whiſpering and then ſhe went away, and we went to bed, and had not been in bed above half an hour, I had not been in ſleep, when there came back the ſame woman and two men, and the priſoner jumped out of bed and let them all three into the room.

Was you awake then?——Yes.

You felt yourſelf in a very perilous ſituation?——Yes, one of the men when he came in, came and laid hold of my ſhirt collar, and threatened my life, if I did not get off the bed, and go about my buſineſs.

What did you do?——He pulled me up from the bolſter, and in the mean time my breeches were gone from under my head; and ſoon as I aroſe from the bed, I went to feel for my breeches and they were gone, I had my watch in my pocket, and a couple of ſhillings; it was a ſilver watch, I am ſure I had that when I came into the room, I put it into my waiſtcoat pocket, I found all the reſt of my clothes, but not my breeches, I went down ſtairs, and when I came up ſtairs again, this priſoner and the other woman were in the room, and I could not find my breeches, and I begged of them to get a light that I might find them: I had ſearched about, but when the light came I found them, and put them on, and was going down ſtairs to leave the place, I gave them very good words, and the priſoner pulled hold of me by the arm, and called the two men up ſtairs to come and ſearch me, becauſe I had ſaid before, I had loſt my watch and my money, thinking it was in my breeches pocket, and forgetting I had put it into my waiſtcoat pocket; when ſhe had hold of me, ſhe called in the other two men, and one of them came in, and ſwore a great oath, and ſaid he would pull my bloody life out, if I did not produce the watch; the priſoner had hold of me by the right arm at that time, ſo that I could not have the liberty of my arm, and he ſnatched my watch from me; that was the man that had hold of my throat, the ſhort one that took my watch, and the other went away; the two girls had hold of me, I tried to get after the men, and I believe I broke the hinge of the door, I went to call the watch, and the women came down, and before the watch came, they both run away.

Was this houſe inhabited by other perſons?——I do not know who was in it, I was in the one pair of ſtairs.

What became of your two ſhillings?——That was gone at the time I loſt my breeches from under my head; I found the patrols, and they came with me to the ſame houſe, by the deſcription I gave, and we found the priſoner wrapped up in the bed-clothes, with all her clothes on in the ſame room, I am ſure it was the ſame woman! I never got my watch again, the woman was taken by the patrols to the watch-houſe and lodged there all night, and the next day carried before a Juſtice of Peace.

Priſoner. I was not the perſon that laid hold of him, I was in the room ſome diſtance behind him.

Court to Proſecutor. Had ſhe hold of you at the time your watch was taken?—Yes, for I could not get my hand to my pocket to get it out, without ſome difficulty.

Priſoner. He delivered his watch out of his own hand, into the young man's hand, to ſee what what it was o'clock, and he went off with it.

THOMAS DALTON ſworn.

I am one of the patrols of St. Giles's, I know nothing more than the apprehending of this woman, and upon her examination ſhe begged the favour that we would ſearch for theſe other people, and ſhe gave us an account of their parties and directions, we ſearched for them but could not find them, William Dawſon was the perſon that ſhe lived with, Edward Oliver ſhe ſaid had the watch from him, and Sarah Oliver was the other woman.

JAMES DAY ſworn.

I am a patrol, I went with the gentleman, and found the priſoner rolled up in the bed clothes, and I could find no other perſon.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of Sarah Parry.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

That gentleman went home with me, we had two pots of beer, and two quarterns of gin; when we had been in bed about an hour, I was awaked out of my ſleep, and the door was burſt open, and two men and a woman came into the room, I could not tell who they were, and a light was produced in the room, then I ſaw who they were, and he had got his clothes on, and charged me with having his watch; he ſaid he had loſt two ſhillings; I inſiſted on his ſearching his pockets, and laid hold of his arm that he ſhould ſearch, and he took his watch out of his waiſtcoat pocket, and gave it to one of the young men to ſee what it was o'clock, and the man went off with it.

Jury to the Patrol. She gave you names that you were to make a ſearch after?——Yes.

Did you on your enquiry find that there were people of that name?——Yes, there were.

Jury to Proſecutor. After in your fright you had declared you had loſt your watch, who gave notice then?——As ſoon as ever I ſaid, I had found my watch, the priſoner ſaid, here, here, come and help and ſearch this man, he ſays, I have ſtole his watch; no, ſays I, I have it; then when the man threatened me ſo, I took it out of my waiſtcoat pocket, and he laid hold of me by the throat, and with the other hand ſnatched it away.

Court. Are you now in place?—I loſt my place on that account.

Jury to Proſecutor. Was you quite ſober when they picked you up in the ſtreet?—Yes.

Had you any gin?——There was one quartern of gin, and two pots of porter.

And you felt yourſelf quite ſober?——Quite ſo, I went to the watch-houſe, and gave a deſcription of the room, and the bed.

Jury to Officer. You ſaw the proſecutor at the watch-houſe, did he appear to be perfectly ſober?——He ſeemed to be rather flurried, but by no means in liquor, he gave us a particular deſcription of the room, a hole in the window, and the bed on the right hand.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury befor
Mr. Baron PERRYN.

215. JOHN LOCKLEY was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Lindſley, on the King's highway, on the 13th day of January laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, twelve pair of ſilver watch caſes, value 5l. and one bag, value 1d. the property of Thomas Gibband.

WILLIAM LINDSLEY ſworn.

I was fifteen the ſecond of laſt month, I know the nature of an oath; I ſaw the priſoner in St. John's-ſquare, Clerkenwell, the 13th of January, I am an apprentice to Thomas Gibband, he is a watch-caſe maker, it was between five and ſix in the evening; I had twelve pair of ſilver watch-caſes which I had been fetching from Goldſmith's Hall; the priſoner came behind me, and pulled me backwards, and when I was down, he ſtruck me about half a dozen blows on my head, I am ſure it was the priſoner, then he took hold of the bag where the watch caſes were, and dragged me along by it about two yards, and then he d——d my eyes, and gave me a ſudden blow on my ſide, and ſnatched the bag at the ſame time, he ran away with the bag, and I got up directly, and ran after him, and I cried out ſtop thief! and he ran up Badger-yard, and in the middle of that yard there are ſome poſts, and the poſts ſtopped him, then I got up cloſe to him; he got up to the poſt, and turned round the corner not ſharp, but into the road, ſo that I never loſt ſight of him; then he run up Red-lion-ſtreet, and was apprehended and ſtopped; Mr. Young ſtopped him, I ſaw him all the time, I came up and ſaw Young and him together, he had thrown the bag and watch-caſes down Mr. Haines's area, the corner of Badger-yard.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. This happened in St. John's-ſquare?—Yes.

Which ſide of the ſquare?—On the left hand ſide from here.

There the ſquare is open?——Yes.

What ſort of weather was it?—It was a remarkable light night.

What made that?—The moon juſt came out.

The perſon came behind you?—Yes.

What part of the ſquare did he come from?——I cannot tell that, I did not ſee him till I felt him.

He gave you ſome violent blows?—Yes.

Did not he ſtun you?——No, as ſoon as ever he got the bag, he ran away, and I got up and cried ſtop thief! he ran up Badger-yard, on the left hand ſide the ſquare, which is more than two hundred yards where we ran to Mr. Haines's.

How many corners might you have to turn?——One, out of Badger-yard, into Red-lion-ſtreet.

You went before the Magiſtrate that night?—Yes.

Do not you remember ſwearing before the Magiſtrate, that you only believed that to be the man?——No, Sir, I do not; when he dragged me along the ground, I had a full view of his face, beſides I never loſt ſight of him, the area of Mr. Haines's, is the corner of Badger-yard, it is not a twentieth part the length of this Court, not ſo far as from me to you; I did not ſee the caſes found.

SAMUEL YOUNG ſworn.

On the 13th of January I was going up Red-Lion-ſtreet, it was about half paſt five in the evening, it was a very light night, I had juſt paſſed the end of Badger-yard on the oppoſite ſide of the way, on a ſudden I heard the cry of murder and ſtop thief, I turned round as quick as poſſibly I could, and I could ſee nobody in the ſtreet but the priſoner at the bar running from the corner of Dr. Haines's houſe, running on the pavement, the priſoner ran up towards the ſide that I was on, and by the time that he got acroſs the way, the boy and three or four people came out of Badger-yard, and they cried out ſtop him, I then ſtood, and the man paſſed me, I was going to knock him down, but he paſſed me, I then ſtooped forwards wards and caught hold of him, and he ſaid let me go, and I believe he ſaid d—n you, or ſomething of that kind.

Did you ſee any other perſon running in the ſtreet?——My Lord it is ſo clear, and I believe Red-lion-ſtreet is well known in this court, I ſaw no man in the ſtreet, I could ſee from the top to the bottom, I had not been I ſuppoſe half a minute while I was ſtruggling with him, before the boy and the other people came up, and the boy ſaid give me my watch caſes, give me my watch caſes; the priſoner ſaid nothing to my recollection, only ſaid he had not got them, ſeveral people came round and wanted to ſearch him, and one of the perſons that came firſt up, that laid hold of him with me was accuſed of picking a gentleman's pocket, or his hand in his pocket, or ſomething of that ſort, I therefore thought I was in a ſituation I did not much like, and I deſired they would ſend for a conſtable, and that ſomebody would aſſiſt me, and nobody would, I then ſaid to the priſoner, friend as the boy ſays you have taken his watch caſes, I will take you to the magiſtrate myſelf, I then rather exerted myſelf, and took him to Juſtice Blackborough's; when we were there they propoſed to go back to the place to look for the watch caſes, and while we were there a meſſage came that they were found in Dr. Haines's entry.

THOMAS GIBBAND ſworn.

The firſt witneſs is my apprentice, I am employed in the watch caſe branch; on the 13th of January I ſent the lad at five o'clock to Goldſmith's Hall to fetch twelve pair of ſilver watch caſes that had been there to be ſtamped, and before ſix I was informed he was robbed, I immediately went out and met the priſoner in cuſtody of Samuel Young, I then went before Juſtice Blackborough, where my apprentice ſwore poſitively to the priſoner's being the man, I ſent ſome of my men to ſearch the areas from the parts he came from, and while we were in the Office news was brought that they were found in Dr. Haines's area, I went and ſaw them delivered from Dr. Haines to the conſtable.

(Produces the watch caſes.)

I received thoſe from Dr. Haines, and they have been ever ſince in my cuſtody marked T. G. and the ſtamp at Goldſmiths Hall.

(Depoſed to).

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going along Red-lion ſtreet, and a man caught hold of me and ſaid I was the perſon.

ROBERT ASHMORE ſworn.

I live in Bridgewater-ſquare, I am a watch-maker, I have known the priſoner five or ſix years in the ſquare; my opinion is this, I always looked upon him to be an honeſt hard working lad, and as good a lad as ever was, I have known him theſe ſix years very nigh, ever ſince his maſter came into the ſquare, he worked for Mr. Ward in the ſquare, Mr. Ward is a watch-maker, I know this, that if he had been a rogue he might have robbed me very often, he was the laſt perſon I ſhould ever have ſuſpected of robbing me, he might have taken many things, he had always acceſs to my houſe.

WILLIAM ELMORE ſworn.

I live St. Sepulchre's pariſh, I am a watch caſe gilder, I have known him ſeven or eight years, a very honeſt induſtrious young man as ever I knew.

THOMAS PAYNE ſworn.

I am a carpenter, I live at No. 4, Newin-ſtreet Shoreditch, I have known him ten years and upwards, his father worked with me, at that time as worthy a young fellow as ever I heard tell of, I never heard amiſs of him, he might have robbed me.

THOMAS WARD ſworn.

I am in the watch buſineſs, the priſoner now at the bar came to me as an errand boy, his behaviour was ſuch I took him apprentice, his time expired the 2d of laſt November, and ever ſince that time he has worked journeyman with me, and he was at work with me the day he was accuſed of that tranſaction, I have truſted him with a great many caſes, I have had half groſſes and dozens and dozens, and I never miſſed a caſe in my life, I look upon ſo him honeſt that I would take him again to day.

Court. Had you ſent him that day to Goldſmith's Hall ?——No, he never went of any errands for me after he was out of his time, he went to dinner about a quarter after one as near as I can tell, he loged ſomewhere in Holborn.

Was it the road to his lodgings to go through St. John's Square ?——He might or he might not.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutor and Jury.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

216. ROBERT DAVIS was indicted for that he not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the devil, on the 30th of January laſt, at the pariſh of St. Paul, Shadwell, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, in and upon one William Watſon, in the peace of God and our Lord the King then and there being, did make an aſſault, and that he the ſaid Robert Davis, with a certain gun, value 5s. loaded and charged with gunpowder and divers leaden ſhot, at to and againſt him the ſaid William Watſon, did ſhoot off and diſcharge, he the ſaid Robert then and there well knowing the ſaid gun to be ſo loaded and charged as aforeſaid; and he then and there by the force of the gunpowder ſo diſcharged as aforeſaid, him the ſaid William upon the left breaſt did ſtrike, penetrate, and wound, giving to him ſo as aforeſaid, in and upon the left breaſt, one mortal wound of the breadth of the eighth part of an inch, and the depth of ſix inches, and one other wound of the breadth of the eighth part of an inch, and of the depth of four inches, of which mortal wounds he languiſhed till the 31ſt of January laſt, and languiſhing did live, and on which ſaid 31ſt day of January laſt, he the ſaid William Watſon did die, and ſo the Jurors ſay that he feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, him the ſaid William Watſon did kill and murder.

He was alſo charged on the coroner's inquiſition with the ſaid murder.

SAMUEL CLIFTON ſworn.

I am a private in the Coldſtream regiment of guards, I live in New Gravel-lane, I am quartered in St. Catherines.

Court. On the 30th of laſt month was you at the houſe of a Mrs. Angus ?—Yes.

Does ſhe keep a public houſe ?——No, ſhe keeps a private houſe, there are ſome lodgers in her houſe, but I do not know how many.

Where does ſhe live ?——In the middle of New Gravel-lane.

What brought you there ?—I live facing there, and ſometimes I go to the houſe.

Do you know the priſoner Mr. Davis ?—Yes.

Where is his habitation ?——Facing her on this ſide the way.

What way of life is he in ?——He is a pawnbroker.

The evening of the 30th of January did you obſerve any thing reſpecting the priſoner ?—On the 30th of January, I went over to Mrs. Angus's at ſeven in the evening to ſupper, I ſtaid there till eleven; as I came down at eleven o'clock, I ſtopped the courſe of two minutes inſide the houſe, I was going home, and I heard the report of a gun, while I was withinſide the houſe, as ſoon as ever I heard the report of the gun, I went inſtantly to the door, I opened the door myſelf, and I ſaw the priſoner up one pair of ſtairs with his windows open, and a gun in his hand, and a light in his room; and I ſaid to Mrs. Angus, the gentlewoman of the houſe, for God's ſake!

here is Mr. Davis, he has got a gun in his hand, what he is going to do I cannot tell? and ſhe and her ſiſter both came to the door.

Was the deceaſed in the inſide of the houſe at that time?——Yes.

Did he come to the door alſo?—No, he was withinſide the houſe, and when we ſtood at the door, Mrs. Angus, and her ſiſter, Mr. Davis preſented the piece and pulled the trigger, he preſented it ſtrait acroſs.

Court. Then if it had been fired at that time, it muſt have taken a direction over your heads?—I do not think it would have touched us.

Did the gun go off when he pulled the trigger?—It did not, he pulled the trigger twice, then he dropped the gun down on the floor by the ſide of him.

You being on the ground floor, and he in the one pair of ſtairs room, can you ſay what he did?——I ſaw him very plain, he then went to the other ſide of the room, and picked up another gun.

Is Mr. Davis a dealer in guns?——Not that I know on, he then went and fetched another gun, and he preſented the piece at us, and it went off immediately, as we were ſtanding at the door.

Then that gun was preſented in a different direction than the firſt?—I cannot ſay it was pointed the ſame as the firſt, it was pointed ſtraight, but it came ſo quick, that I could not tell whether it was a piſtol or a gun.

What did you obſerve next?——While we ſtood at the door, the gentlewoman of the houſe was frightened, and at the ſame time, Mr. Thomas came up to us, and ſpoke to us, he is the beadle of the night, and Mrs. Angus ſaid to him, there is nobody here but this young man, and my lodgers.

What did the beadle ſay?——He ſpoke to Mrs. Angus, and ſhe ſaid there is nobody here but thoſe that belong to the houſe, as ſoon as Mr. Thomas went away, Mr. Davis fetched up the piece that he had had in his hand before, and that did not go off, and then I ſaid to Mrs. Angus, Mr. Davis has got another piece in his hand, and before I could ſpeak the words out of my mouth, he preſented the piece, and point it to the perſons at the door.

Was that piece preſented the ſame as the former?—It was preſented in a line to me, when he preſented the piece to me, it was not cocked, and while he was cocking the piece, I took one motion, a platoon exerciſe, to my left hand, then the gun went off, and this William Watſon received the contents, he ſtood inſide the houſe juſt behind me; while he was cocking the piece, I took a ſtep to the left, and as ſoon as the piece went off, Mr. Angus's ſiſter cried out, Davis has killed Mr. Watſon, and when I turned myſelf to the door, the man dropped down before my face, and ſhe cried O! you have ſhot my hand, the deceaſed lay on his back, he never ſpoke a word afterwards.

Did he live ſometime afterwards?——He lived till a quarter paſt ſix in the morning.

Did you ſee any thing of the priſoner afterwards?——When I ſaw the man fall, I cried out to Mr. Thomas directly, I cried out murder! murder! Mr. Thomas here is murder done! Mr. Thomas came up directly.

Did you ſee any thing of the priſoner?——We ſaw the priſoner, he came over directly as ſoon as ever Mr. Thomas came into the houſe.

What was his behaviour when he came over?——When he came over into the houſe, he looked at the man that was ſhot, and he ſays, the poor innocent man who never did me any harm in my life time, let nothing be wanting, but ſays he to me, I thought it was you.

Court. Let me take thoſe words correctly; he ſaid, I thought the accident had happened to you?——Yes, he thought the accident had happened to me, he ſaid, I thought it had been you, three or four times.

Then he addreſſed himſelf to you, he ſpoke to you?——He ſpoke to me.

He ſaid ſeveral times, I thought it had been you?—Yes.

Had any quarrel ſubſiſted between you and the priſoner at the bar, or any enmity between you?——No further than a pot of beer.

What do you mean?——We had a few words about a pot of beer.

When?——That day.

But was the quarrel of ſuch a nature or had proceeded to ſuch a height, that you have any reaſon to apprehend he ſought your life?—No, Sir, I cannot ſay I had.

Had he made uſe of any expreſſions indicating malice towards you?—No, Sir, not in the leaſt.

Then it was ſome trifling quarrel about a pot of beer?—Yes.

The priſoner when he came into the houſe and ſaw the unfortunate man in the ſituation that you have deſcribed, deſired that all poſſible aſſiſtance might be given him?——Yes, he did, and deſired that nothing might be wanted for him.

Was any body ſent for, any ſurgeon, or any perſon?——Yes, there was a ſurgeon ſent for before he came over.

That was immediately?—Immediately as it was done.

Did you ſee the ſhot?——I ſaw the ſhot in the ſurgeon's hand taken out of the man's heart, five ſhot.

What kind of ſhot were they?—I cannot ſay exactly, but I think they were No. 2.

That is a large ſhot?——Yes.

Did the priſoner at this time ſay any thing that he did not apprehend the gun was charged, or any thing by way of excuſe?——No, I heard nothing of that ſort, I ſaw no more; I ſtaid there till a quarter paſt ſix, and I ſaw the man die.

What were your apprehenſions of his death, that it was that ſhot?——There was a ſhot went in through his eye, and his noſe, I ſaw a great many ſhot down his arm and his body.

You have been in company with the deceaſed before this accident happened?—He had been backwards and forwards to my houſe before, then he was in perfect health.

Then you cannot have any doubt in your mind, but this ſhot was the cauſe of his death?—I cannot ſay.

JAMES HORSFALL ſworn.

I live in Ratcliff-highway, near Old Gravel-lane, I was the ſurgeon that attended this man, theſe are the ſhot, they have never been out of my poſſeſſion.

You are not ſportſman enough to know what number they are?——No, I am not.

(The ſhot ſhewn to the Jury.)

You attended the deceaſed?——I did; when I went to ſee him, it was about a quarter before twelve, he was then laying on the floor about a yard from the door, I deſired them to raiſe him up, and I examined the body; the priſoner Mr. Davis ſtood at my left hand, and obſerved to me, that there was no charge in the gun, to which I remarked, there appeared to have been ſome, for on removing his cloaths there were nothing but ſhot holes about his breaſt, the body was perfectly cold at that time, there was no pulſation in his heart, I ordered my aſſiſtant to endeavour to draw ſome blood from him, but he would not bleed; I had not the leaſt idea of his bleeding, but merely for form ſake more than from any expectation of his bleeding; I endeavoured to put ſome brandy down his throat, in order to ſtimulate the conſtitution, but there was no ſwallowing, there was not the leaſt ſenſibility remaining, he was dead to all intents and purpoſes, he barely breathed and continued ſo to do, till ſix in the morning, I ſtaid with him an hour; upon removing the breaſt bone, I obſerved the ſhot had penetrated the heart in ſeveral places, in diagonal lines, a great quantity of blood having extravaſated the cavity of the breaſt, in ſhort they paſſed right through the heart, and lodged ſomewhere in the back, the ſhot I have produced in Court, were the ſhot I took from about the heart and lungs, and there is not a doubt, I believe, remaining, but they were the cauſe of his death.

Mr. Silveſter. Upon the priſoner's telling you there was no charge in the gun, I do not know whether you went over to his room and found that the charge had been drawn?——No, Sir, I did not.

Had any number of robberies been committed in that neighbourhood, that required guns to be charged and kept in readineſs in caſe of attacks?——On the Saturday morning before the murder on the 28th, the houſe was robbed where this murder was done.

So that the keeping a number of guns charged for preſervation againſt thieves, was a neceſſary precaution?—Not to my knowledge.

ANN ANGUS ſworn.

I was preſent at the time of this accident, I ſtood at my own door.

Had you made any obſervations about the priſoner or his houſe before that accident?——I had ſeen him at the window, I ſaw him with either a gun or a piſtol, I really am not ſure which.

When you ſtood at the door, who was in your company?——The deceaſed was on the left ſide of me, and Clifton was there, he had bid me a good night.

Was your ſiſter with you?——I cannot ſay, ſhe ſays ſhe was, but there was another woman on the other ſide, that I have not ſeen ſince the next day, ſhe went away, her name is Elizabeth Dockettz; I was in the middle, and this woman was on the off ſide, and the deceaſed was on the left ſide.

Was it before the report of that gun, that the man was killed, or the former?—I cannot ſay that.

Was you preſent at the time, that the man received the wound?——I did not ſee him fall, I was cloſe alongſide of him, I might as well have been killed, and the woman and the gentleman that is at the door now.

Was there any quarrel or enmity ſubſiſting between you and the priſoner?——No, Sir, none.

You lived in harmony and friendſhip?—Always, Sir, I immediately called out, and ſaid, O dear! what have you done, you have killed a man, and he immediately came over to my houſe.

When he came there what was his behaviour?——He took up the man's head, and ſaid O dear! what have I done! I have killed a man that never gave me any offence; O what would I give, a hundred pounds, two hundred pounds, nay a thouſand pounds; O dear, fetch a doctor, ſpare no expences; Mr. Thomas, the beadle of the pariſh, he came and fetched the doctor, it was not altogether above a minute and an half from the beginning of the accident, then they put me into my own back room, and the deceaſed was put on a chair, he lived many hours after, I went to lay down being fatigued, the priſoner attended the deceaſed all night, and was very melancholy, and was ſorry for what he had done, and ſaid, he could not give that back which he had taken.

Mr. Garrow. The priſoner did not ſeem to be a man that had an intention to take away the life of this man?—No, Sir, I ſaw him in the morning about eleven, at a houſe that he uſes, and I believe, he was not out of his ſhop all day, beſides I never ſaw him ill treat any perſon, I did not know of any ill will between him and Clifton.

I take it for granted you was ſo taken up with the accident that you did not go over to Davis's houſe, to ſee if he had drawn out the ſhot of the piece?——No, Sir.

How long have you lived oppoſite to Davis?——I have been in the houſe nine years, I am a tenant to him, he is a moſt harmleſs inoffenſive man, bore no enmity to any body, very ready to ſerve, and very backward to do unkindneſs; my houſe had been lately robbed, that called me to the door, to talk to Mr. Thomas, my houſe had been broke open, and they had ſtripped me of all they could find, the neighbours have kept firing every night ſince Mr. Davis has been in trouble, for we are not ſafe in our beds.

Do you recollect whether this poor man had his ſhoes on when he came, or was in a ſtate preparing to go to bed?—I did not obſerve, he came over directly when he was called.

PETER HANSON ſworn.

I lodge at Mrs. Angus's, I was preſent at the time of this accident, I was at the door, and went from the door again, I ſaw the priſoner in his houſe.

Had he any fire arms in his hands?—I cannot ſay, I ſaw he had ſomething, but I did not know what it was, I returned to the fire place, and directly I heard the report of a gun.

Was that the report which immediately preceded the death of the deceaſed?——Yes.

After this did you ſee the priſoner?——He came over in his ſtocking feet, and took hold of the deceaſed, and lifted him up from the ground.

What did he ſay?——He ſaid, Lord! have I killed an innocent man.

Did he ſay any thing more in your hearing?——Yes, he cried out, ſend for a doctor immediately.

Did he ſay any thing more in your hearing?——No.

Do you know whether the priſoner had any ill-will to Clifton the ſoldier, or to any body elſe in that family?——No, I do not think he had.

Mr. Silveſter. I believe he is the moſt harmleſs man in the neighbourhood?——So far as I know.

Did he come without his ſhoes?——Yes, the moment he heard the accident, as faſt as poſſible.

JOHN THOMAS ſworn.

About half after eleven, I heard the report of a gun, I ſaw the flaſh, I and the officer of the night were going by, I ſaw Mrs. Angus at the door, and ſome other perſons with her, I cannot tell who, I ſpoke to her, I ſaid it is almoſt time for you to go in doors and ſhut up your houſe, and ſhe replied directly that ſhe had been robbed the Saturday before, I aſked her of what, and ſhe ſaid ſome braſs candleſticks, and different things what they could catch off the mantle piece, and I told her I was ſorry for it, and then I wiſhed her a good night; a little time after, when I got about twelve or fifteen yards from the houſe, I heard the report of a gun or a piſtol, I did not return immediately upon hearing the report, I went a few ſteps further, and then I heard a cry out Thomas, Thomas, murder, murder! that brought me back to the houſe, and there I ſaw the deceaſed laying on the floor; in the interim of time, Mr. Davis came in, and he exclaimed and lifted up his hands and ſaid, what have I done? and he deſired ſomebody to go for a doctor; and I aſked him if I ſhould go, and he ſaid yes, and I ſaid where ſhall I go, and he ſaid go to Dr. Glouſter, and there were two women knocked at the door, and I knocked, and he looked out of the window, and I told him to come directly, for there was a murder done in the lane, and he ſaid he would not come; I then went to Mr. Horſefall, and he came directly, I came back with Mr. Horſefall, and he looked at the man and told us to lift him up on a chair, and I ſtood alongſide of the man and he tried to draw blood, the priſoner was walking about the room all the time and wringing his hands, and expreſſed great concern.

Did you ſee any thing further?——Only the doctor gave him what relief he thought proper, he poured ſome brandy down his throat, then I carried him to bed, after I had put the man to bed, I ſaid Davis, how came you to do ſuch a thing, ſays he, God knows Thomas, I thought I had drawn the charge, the charge lays over the way now, if you will come and ſee it; and I ſpoke to the officer of the night, and I ſaid is it not better to take Davis into cuſtody, and he ſaid gentlemen I am here do any thing with me you pleaſe, I will go with you any where; and he offered to ſurrender himſelf directly, ſo we went our rounds and returned again, and he ſaid he would ſurrender in the morning, and I believe he did.

Mr. Garrow. You had no idea he would run away?——No, I had not, if I had thought ſo I would have taken him.

Do you know whether he had his ſhoes on?——I did not go over about the charge, Elby was not there, Stratford was there, he is in a dying ſtate, and his wife and child; there are plenty of thieves and whores too in Gravel Lane, there had lately been a robbery in the priſoner's own houſe, he told me they had taken ſome lead, he told me that night he was going to have a private watch; I have been a beadle for three years, I never knew any harm of the priſoner in my life.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I leave it to my counſel.

Mr. Silveſter. My Lord, I beg leave to quote a caſe as ſimilar to this, which Mr. Juſtice Foſter recites, fol. 263, and is reported by Keeling, "which, (he ſays) I think an extreme hard caſe and of very extenſive influence; a man found a piſtol in the ſtreet, which he had reaſon to believe was not loaded, having tried it with the rammer; he carried it home, and ſhewed it to his wife, and ſhe ſitting by him, he pulled up the cock, and touched the trigger, the piſtol went off, and killed the woman; this was ruled manſlaughter. It appeared that the learned editor was not ſatisfied with the judgment; it is one of the points he in the preface to the report recommends to further conſideration; admitting that the judgment was ſtrictly legal, it was to ſay no better of it ſummum jus. I cannot help ſaying, that the rule of law I have been conſidering in this place touching the conſequences of taking or not taking due precaution, does not ſeem to be ſufficiently tempered with mercy; manſlaughter was formerly a capital offence, as I ſhall hereafter ſhew, and even the forfeiture of goods and chattels upon the foot of the preſent law is a heavy ſtroke upon a man, guilty 'tis true of heedleſs incautious conduct, but in other reſpects perfectly innocent; therefore where the rigor of law bordereth upon injuſtice, mercy ſhould, if poſſible, interpoſe in the adminiſtration. It is not the part of Judges to be perpetually hunting after forfeitures, where the heart is free from guilt; they are miniſters appointed by the Crown for the ends of public juſtice, and ſhould have written upon their hearts that ſolemn engagement his Majeſty is under, to cauſe law and juſtice in mercy to be executed in all his judgments. This I have ſaid upon a ſuppoſition that the judgment reported by Keeling was ſtrictly legal; I think it was not, for the law in theſe caſes does not require the utmoſt caution that can be uſed; it is ſufficient that a reaſonable precaution, what is uſual and ordinary in the like caſes, be taken: the man in the caſe under conſideration examined the piſtol in the common way, perhaps the rammer which he had before tried was too ſhort, and deceived him, but having uſed the ordinary caution found to have been effectual in the like caſes, he ought to have been excuſed. I have been the longer on this caſe, becauſe accidents of the moſt lamentable kind may be the caſe of the wiſeſt and the beſt of mankind, and moſt commonly fall amongſt the neareſt friends and relations; and in ſuch a caſe, the forfeiture of goods rigorouſly exacted, would be heaping affliction upon the head of the afflicted, and galling a heart already wounded paſt cure; it would even aggravate the loſs of a brother, a parent, a child, or wife, if ſuch a loſs under ſuch circumſtances is capable of aggravation. I once upon the circuit tried a man for the death of his wife by the like accident: Upon Sunday morning, the man and his wife went a mile or two from home with ſome neighbours to take a dinner at the houſe of their common friend; he carried his gun with him, hoping to meet with ſome diverſion by the way, but before he went to dinner, he diſcharged it, and ſet it up in a private place in his friend's houſe; after dinner he went to church, and in the evening returned home with his wife and neighbours, bringing his gun with him, which was carried into the room where his wife was, ſhe having brought it part “ of the way; he taking it up, touched the trigger, and the gun went off and killed his wife, whom he dearly loved. It came out in evidence, that whilſt the man was at church, a perſon belonging to the family privately took the gun, charged it, and went after ſome game, but before the ſervice at church was ended, returned it loaded to the place from whence he took it, and where the defendant, who was ignorant of all that paſſed, found it to all appearance as he left it. I did not enquire whether the poor man had examined the gun before he carried it home, but being of opinion upon the whole evidence, that he had reaſonable grounds to believe that it was not loaded, I directed the jury that if they were of the ſame opinion, they ſhould acquit him, and he was acquitted.”

Court. If the jury are of opinion upon this evidence that the priſoner had an enmity to Clifton, and meant to kill Clifton, whereas he killed the other, I have no doubt but it is murder.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. If you obſerve, he tries the gun twice, and then lays the gun down, and fetches the other.

Mr. Silveſter. This was the gun that would not go off the firſt time.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I am on the ſame ſide with my learned friend Mr. Silveſter, and I hope you will forgive my ſaying a few words in addition to what he has ſaid: I do not conceive that my duty neceſſarily calls upon me to ſay a word, becauſe I am ſure I ſhould do injury to the impreſſion which the diſcourſe of the learned judge which he has juſt read muſt neceſſarily make on the minds of the jury. I conceive the argument goes the full length of aſking the Court for an acquittal; I had not the ſmalleſt conception that there was any thing in this caſe that could in any view of it in which it could be put, put the priſoner into the peril of being convicted of murder. I know if there was a ſtrong and conſcientious doubt whether the priſoner, intending to commit one illegal act, committed another, which was not in his contemplation, that that in the eye of the law would be murder; but is that at all like this, or rather is not this exactly like the caſe ſtated in Keeling: it is manifeſt that the priſoner's object was not to attack the peaceful ſubjects of the kingdom, but to give notice to thoſe that had already aſſaulted his peaceful dwelling, and it is in evidence by the beadle of the pariſh, that he had been driven to the neceſſity of appointing a private watch, and in the interim this man becomes his own watchman, which he had authority to do, in the doing of which he was committing no crime, he was committing no offence againſt the peace of the kingdom, and he diſcharges his firelock, either to try it, or to give notice to thoſe that were lurking thereabouts; this it appears was the priſoner's intention; and that his firſt piece was diſcharged without any thing that could do miſchief is manifeſt on the face of the evidence; for Clifton has told you, that the piece was fired off from a window of Davis's againſt the window oppoſite, and no accident happened; but then it may be ſaid, he afterwards tried another. My Lord, if it is lawful to have one inſtrument, God knows the miſerable ſtate of ſociety would very well juſtify him in having another: Mr. Davis diſcharged one piece, which he found fit for his purpoſe, and he attempts to diſcharge another; it does not go off; he then tries a ſecond piece which had once miſſed fire, he diſcharged it in the ſame ſituation, then this melancholy accident happened; and what is the conduct of Mr. Davis as ſoon as it did happen? is it the conduct of a guilty man? Is it the conduct of a man that meant to ſhoot Mr. Clifton? Is it like the conduct of a man that meant to commit an offence againſt any moral duty? Why, he goes over with as much anxiety as any of your Lordſhips would have felt to reſcue a man, who by accident in the ſport of the field you had been the occaſion of killing; he ſtays at the houſe all night; he offers to ſurrender himſelf to public juſtice; thoſe to whom he ſurrendered, did not refuſe to take his word, they were the jurors on the occaſion; they came to him in the diſtance of three hours, and they again refuſe his ſolicitation to be taken into cuſtody; he continues there ſtill till all the world are awake, and then he goes and ſurrenders himſelf into the hands of public juſtice. My Lord, take it upon the evidence of Clifton himſelf, this man had had a little quarrel with him; why, he is the beſt judge whether it was a malice of ſuch an extent as might provoke the very worſt man in ſociety to follow it up with a murder; Clifton ſays it was a trifling quarrel about half a pot of beer: your Lordſhip aſked him, "Whether the quarrel was of "ſuch a nature, or had proceeded to ſuch "a heighth, that you had any reaſon to apprehend that he ſought your life?"—He ſays, "No, I cannot ſay I had." "Had "he made uſe of any expreſſions indicating "malice towards you?" your Lordſhip alſo aſked, to which he replied, "No, not in "the leaſt." Then, my Lord, let us ſee whether this is not preciſely in point with the caſe in Keeling; in that caſe an accident happened, not with ſmall ſparrow ſhot like this, which pierces the heart and breaks ſome of the blood veſſels, otherwiſe there is not another part of the human body in which it could poſſibly have produced death; this man draws the charge, he ſhakes out the ſhot in order to diſcharge his piece to give the alarm; ſome few ſhot ſtill continue in the piece, without his knowledge. You may ſay, by his neglect death has enſued; I lament it, and ſo does the priſoner: All I aſk is, that neither his life nor liberty ſhall be in jeopardy. I know that Engliſh Judges and juries do feel the force of the maxim, that judgment ſhould be tempered with mercy; I know that juries rather prefer to find a man innocent than guilty, then I am ſure they will very gladly coincide with Mr. Juſtice Foſter, that it is a very hard law, becauſe a man has not examined his piece with that ſcrupulouſneſs which he ought, that therefore he is to be put in peril of being convicted of murder, and that at leaſt he muſt be convicted of manſlaughter. Your Lordſhips may have heard of a caſe at the proof of cannon at Woolwich; a man was found dead, he was at a great diſtance from the proof, upon examination of the body a pin's head was found to have entered into the heart of the man, a pin's head which had been in the cartridge; now would any body ſay, that if by accident a pin's head had found its way into this piece, which he had charged only with gunpowder, and that pin had found its way into the heart of the deceaſed, and therefore becauſe he had not examined that charge, with that ſcrupulous nicety, that he ſhould be put in peril of his life, or that any Jury ſhould convict him even of manſlaughter? My Lords, for theſe reaſons which I have had the honour of ſubmitting to your Lordſhips; I take the liberty with great deference to your Lordſhips, but with great confidence in the caſe, to ſubmit that he ought not to be put in peril, but if there is any doubt on the caſe, thank God, we are prepared with that ſort of proof, that will amply convince the Jury of the innocence of the priſoner at the bar!

Court. Then I deſire you will enter into that proof, for I am ſure there is no proof of it yet: let either Clifton or Mrs. Angus ſtand up.

Court to Clifton. What is the diſtance between the priſoner's one pair of ſtairs window, and the door of the houſe where you ſtood?—Twelve yards.

JAMES ALLEN ſworn.

I live almoſt oppoſite to this houſe.

Is it uſual to fire off their pieces in the evening?—It is, I have been robbed myſelf, in July laſt, and I diſcharge my piece twice or three times frequently in the courſe of a week: in the evening of the day after this accident, there was a mob collected round the door in the evening, and nobody there but a young perſon in the ſhop, a woman, I went over to deſire the ſhop might be ſhut up to keep the mob out, then one of the officers from Shadwell came in, I went up with him, and took the candle, and a little girl went up with me, and I deſired her to pick up the ſhot, which ſhe did, and it is here; ſhe picked up as much, I believe, as half the bowl of a tobacco pipe would contain, and there were two black marks which appeared to be circular, as if by the muzzle of the piece againſt the floor in order as I thought to knock out the ſhot.

What ſort of ſhot were they?——Four, I believe.

They were not twos, were they?——No, Sir.

Did you make any obſervation about any thing elſe?—No, when my houſe was broke open and robbed, I ſent to Davis, I was without fire arms, and deſired him to lend me one of thoſe pieces, which he did, I charged it to defend my property, when I came to draw it, there was no ſcrew to the ram rod, I got a ſcrew made to it, and afterwards when Mr. Davis wanted a gun I ſent it home with the new ram rod to it, and the new ram rod was much ſhorter than the old one.

How long have you known Mr. Davis?—Theſe four years.

What is his character for humanity and temper?—I look upon him to be a jocoſe ſociable man, I have rather ſeen him put up with inſults rather than return them.

Jury to Allen. How many guns were fired that night did it appear?——I cannot ſay.

Court. How many guns did you ſee in the room of the priſoner, at the time you went up?——No more than one, and that gun the officer took away from Mr. Davis's room that night.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. The ſurgeon ſays, he ſaw a good many ſhot holes, and he ſays he reckons there might be about thirty, now you ſee acroſs this ſtreet the ſhot cannot ſpread much, now ſuppoſing theſe thirty might remain: I ſuppoſe the whole charge of ſuch ſmall ſhot as that would contain at leaſt two hundred.

Foreman of the Jury. Aye, four or five hundred of this ſhot, I am ſure there muſt be in a moderate charge.

JOHN ORANGE ſworn.

I am an officer of the peace, I did not go to Mr. Davis's houſe that night, but the next morning I did, the 31ſt of January.

What did you find on the floor?——There were ſome ſhot laying on the floor, and a piece of paper on the ram rod, on the worm.

Did it appear to be the wadding, did you obſerve any marks on the floor?—No, no marks any further than this (Producing the piece of paper that laid on the floor) this paper was on the worm of the ram-rod, and the ram-rod was in a chair at the other part of the room.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

This is the gun I found, this is the ram-rod I had from Mr. Davis.

Where is the ſhot you found?——Here are ſome of them, but I left a good many more on the floor; there are ſo many thieves about, that the neighbours are not ſafe in their beds.

(The gun produced and the ram-rod being four or five inches too ſhort for the gun.)

DANIEL PRATT ſworn.

I was preſent at Mrs. Angus's part of this time, I went up ſtairs into Davis's room that evening, when they came there I obſerved the piece laying by the window, and the ram-rod on a chair by the bed ſide, and thirty or forty ſhot and a piece of paper and ſome oakham.

JOHN COOKE ſworn.

I live in the neighbourhood of Gravel-lane, next door to Mrs. Angus's, our neighbourhood has been very much infeſted by thieves, and in conſequence of that ſeveral of the neighbours have been provided with fire arms, I have been acquainted with the priſoner four years, and I never ſaw him any other than inoffenſive and harmleſs, that has been his uſual character, I never ſaw him in any quarrel.

Court. The fact of firing guns at night is ſufficiently eſtabliſhed.

THOMAS KENDALL ſworn.

I believe you happened to be the foreman of the Coroner's Inqueſt, on this occaſion? ——I was, I have lived in the pariſh of Shadwell twenty years, I have ſerved overſeer and church-warden, and I heard nothing but what he was an inoffenſive man, I look upon him to be a jocoſe merry man, but nothing revengeful in him, I have no further acquaintance, I live at a diſtance from him.

CHARLES MORGAN ſworn.

I am church-warden of this pariſh, I have known him ſeventeen or eighteen years.

What has been his general character for humanity?——I always looked upon him to be a very good ſort of a man, I never knew him in any quarrels.

RICHARD SUTTON ſworn.

I have know him I believe fourteen or fifteen years, I have had an opportunity of ſerving him with a commodity of goods, and have been a particular acquaintance with him, I never knew any harm of him.

Do you deſcribe him to be an inoffenſive good natured man?——As any I know, or ever I wiſh to keep company.

CHRISTOPHER WOODHAM ſworn.

I have known Mr. Davis, between ſeventeen and eighteen years, a very good kind of a man as ever I heard of, a very honeſt man.

Not a malicious, revengeful man?——His character ſtands very fair, I never heard any thing againſt it.

WILLIAM BUTLER ſworn.

I have lived upwards of ſeventeen years in the pariſh, I have known him that time, I never heard of his doing any malicious act in my life.

JAMES CLARKSON ſworn.

I have known him very nigh three years, I ſerve him with a commodity of goods, I never heard any thing but what was well of him, he always paid me extremely well, and behaved as one tradeſman ſhould to another; I took him to be a good natured well meaning man.

THOMAS WALE ſworn.

I have known the priſoner fourteen years and upwards, a worthy good neighbour.

Is he a quarrelſome man?——No, Sir, not at all; I never ſaw him quarrel with any body in my life.

ROBERT OLTS ſworn.

I have known him ſeventeen or eighteen years, I always found him a very honeſt man, a good natured man.

LANCELOT HENRY ſworn.

I have known him upwards of thirteen years, I always looked upon him to be a very inoffenſive induſtrious and humane man, a good kind of a man.

ANDREW BISHOP ſworn.

I have known him upwards of fourteen years, I have found him a harmleſs good natured man.

Not an ill natured revengeful fellow?——No, Sir, no ſuch thing.

JAMES NASH ſworn.

I have known him about twelve or thirteen years, I have been overſeer and collector of taxes, and the man always behaved very well, a good natured, worthy ſort of a man.

Jury. So far as character goes, the Jury muſt be ſatisfied.

Court. There is no doubt to be ſure, ſo far as character goes.

NOT GUILTY.

Not Guilty on the Coroner's Inquiſition.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

217. MATHEW, otherwiſe ROBERT MATHEWS, and JOHN MATHEWS, otherwiſe KING, were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th of February, one half guinea, value 10s. 6d. the monies of John Bowen.

JOHN BOWEN ſworn.

I keep the White Hart Tavern in Abchurch-lane; the priſoner Mathews came to my houſe yeſterday was a week, and aſked me for change for a guinea, and a glaſs of ſhrub.

Had he given you the guinea at this time?——Yes, the guinea was laying on the counter; I proceeded to count the half-guinea's worth of ſilver into his hand; he then recollected himſelf, by putting his hand on his left-hand pocket, and ſaid, I do not want change, I have enough; then as my hand was with my ſilver and other monies in it, he at that inſtant returned the money into my hand, and as I ſuppoſe——

Mr. Garrow. Do not tell us what you ſuppoſe.

Bowen. I had given him the half-guinea and the ſilver; he threw the money into my hand where my other monies was.

What money did he throw into your hand?——I do not poſitively ſwear that he threw the whole of the money into my hand, or that he did not.

At the time you returned the half-guinea in ſilver to him, had you any ſilver in your hand?——Yes.

Do you know how much more money you had left in your hand?—No.

Had you any ſilver left in your hand, when you counted the half-guinea to him?—Yes.

How much did you find returned into your hand?——I do not know.

What became of the guinea that was laid down on the counter?——He took the guinea back himſelf.

Did you ſay any thing to him when he took his guinea back?—No, nothing; he gave me two-pence for the glaſs of ſhrub, and took the guinea back. On Monday the 20th, the two priſoners both came up to me, and Robert aſked me for a glaſs of ſhrub, and change for a guinea, and laid down a guinea on the counter, and I gave half a guinea into Robert Mathews's hand, not into King's; I had counted that half-guinea and four, five, or ſix ſhillings in ſilver into his hand, when John Mathews nudged him on the elbow, and ſaid, you need not change.

Was it John that ſaid, you need not change?——Yes; King called for a glaſs of ſhrub, and Mathews nudged him over the ſhoulder, and he immediately threw the ſilver into my hand; but I watched him, knowing the manner in which Mathews had ſerved me before: he took the half-guinea between theſe fingers, and returned the ſilver back into my hand; that was King, the fat man; he conveyed the half-guinea into his right-hand pocket, and took the guinea off the counter with the other hand. I ſwear with certainty that he put the half-guinea into this pocket, and I ſaw his hand brought up afterwards, and he told me he had no half-guinea; I am ſure there was no half-guinea then; I ſwear that I ſaw him put his hand into his pocket: I had but one guinea and that half-guinea, and ſome ſilver, and I knew my half-guinea was not returned. I then called one of my ſervants, Thomas Read, and when he came near the bottom of the ſtairs, I ſaid to King, give me back my half-guinea; he ſhewed me his hand, and ſaid he had no half-guinea. I then ſaid to Thomas Read, look at theſe men; at the ſame time ſome gentlemen were in the bar, and I ſaid to him, you ſcoundrel, give me my half-guinea; he then put his hand into his right-hand pocket, and put down the half-guinea on the bar.

Are you ſure the half-guinea he pulled out, and put down on the bar, was your half-guinea?—I cannot ſwear that was the half-guinea I gave to him, for he might have other half-guineas in his pocket, and give me one of them.

Did he ſay any thing more than that?—Nothing more.

Repeat the words as exactly as you can?—He ſaid, when I aſked him for the half-guinea, that he had no half-guinea of mine; he ſaid nothing when he laid down the half-guinea.

Did you charge him at that time with taking your half-guinea ?—Nothing at all ; at firſt he ſhewed me his hands, and ſaid he had no half-guinea, and afterwards when I ſaid, you ſcoundrel give me the half-guinea, he was ſo confounded, he could not ſay a word.

Did the other priſoner do any thing but nudge him ?——No.

Did you hear any converſation between them ?——No.

They came in together ?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Juſt a word or two, that I may not diſappoint you : What houſe do you keep ?——The White Hart Tavern in Abchurch-lane.

Did you ſearch the pockets of the man that we have called King to-night ?—I do not wiſh to ſearch any pockets.

Did you ?——No.

You do not know then whether he had any other half-guineas ?——I do not know that.

How long before you aſked for your half-guinea had he put his guinea into his pocket ?—I cannot ſay to minutes, I cannot pretend to ſay to a minute.

You ſhall pretend to ſay ; how long was it after he put his guinea into his pocket before he gave you the half-guinea ?——The whole time they were at the bar till they were in the cuſtody of the officer, was not more than fifteen minutes.

I am not anſwered, and I will be anſwered ; I ſhall aſk you, till the Judge commits you, I will repeat it to you, and I will warn you, that I will aſk you, till the Judge commits you unleſs you anſwer it; how long was it after he put his guinea into his pocket before he gave you the half-guinea ?—I think I called my ſervant five times, and I do not know how long that would take me up ; but as ſoon as he was coming down ſtairs to the bottom of the ſtairs, I imagine it might be three minutes.

Did he put the guinea into the ſame pocket from which he afterwards took the half-guinea ?—He did not.

Did you give him the guinea, or did he take it up ?—He took it up.

Was not the half-guinea and the ſilver in the ſame hand of the priſoner ?—Yes.

Have you ſeen the priſoners ſince they were committed ?—I ſaw one of them.

Where did you ſee him ?——In the out-room at Newgate.

You went there to ſee him ?—Yes.

To drink with him ?—No.

Did not you drink with him ?—I did not drink with him ; I drank in the ſame room.

You did go to the gaol ?—Yes.

And you did drink in the ſame room ; what liquor was it, wine ?—It may be wine.

Then, peradventure, you drank out of the ſame bottle ?——I cannot ſay I did, or I did not.

Will you ſwear now that you believe you did not ?—I will not ſwear either way.

Do you mean to ſwear now poſitively that you do not know whether you drank out of the ſame bottle of wine or not ?—I do.

Who paid for the wine he drank ?—I paid for mine, I paid for ſome wine, and there was another perſon there that paid for the other.

You immediately got your half-guinea ?—How do you mean ; I aſked him for it the firſt time, and he ſaid he had it not ; then when my ſervant came down, I got between him and the door, and he gave it me.

Have you got the guinea ?——I never received a guinea from the priſoner ; there was a guinea put down upon the bar.

Did he take it back ?——He did.

And you took back your ſilver and your half-guinea ?——No, Sir.

Will you ſwear that ?——Yes, Sir ; I have ſwore already that I did not take back my ſilver and half-guinea.

Have not you the half-guinea now, man ?—Yes, after I challenged him.

You have never given him his full change ?——No, becauſe he would not allow me to do it.

THOMAS READ ſworn.

I am waiter to Mr. Bowen. On the 20th of February, my maſter called me down ſtairs, and he bid me detain the two priſoners ; and my maſter ſaid to King, now give me the half-guinea, you ſcoundrel, and he pulled out half a guinea from his pocket, and put it on the bar.

Did you hear him ſay any thing at all?——I did not; then my maſter ſent for a conſtable, and detained him.

Did you hear your maſter aſk him for it?——I did.

Did you hear him ſay any thing upon that?——I did not.

Did you hear any converſation between your maſter and him before you came down?——I did not.

Now recollect yourſelf whether King ſaid any thing upon this occaſion at all?—I did not hear him.

Did he make no reply to that you ſcoundrel give me my half-guinea?——I cannot ſay that he did.

If he had ſaid any thing, ſhould you have heard it?—I cannot ſay whether he might not deny it.

Can you ſay he did?—I cannot.

Did you hear any converſation between theſe two men, King and the other?——I did not.

Not at all?——No; he was very much confounded.

Did you examine either of them?——I did not.

Priſoner. My guinea lay on the bar a moment after the proſecutor had my half-guinea; he ſays he never had my guinea in his hand, but he took it in his hand, and what made me give him the change, he ſaid he could not conveniently ſpare the change, or elſe I ſhould have taken it.

Mr. Garrow ſubmitted that there was no caſe againſt Mathews to go to the jury: The Court over-ruled his objection.

Court to Proſecutor. You went to Newgate?—I did.

How came you to go to Newgate, to ſpeak to either of the priſoners?—The reaſon was this, an old woman of ſeventy years of age, with another woman, and three or four children, came to my houſe.

Was it in conſequence of any other application from any other perſon?—Yes.

You ſwear that poſitively?—Yes.

ADAM WALKER ſworn.

I live in Chandois-ſtreet, Covent-Garden, a peruke maker, and hair dreſſer, I am a houſe keeper; I know King, he belongs to the Free Maſon's Lodge, a good Maſon cannot be a bad man.

What is his character?—A very honeſt man, he is a printer by profeſſion, he bears an extraordinary good character as a man as well as a maſon; I have known him between three and four years, to the beſt of my knowledge, he has three or four children, he lives in Sutton-ſtreet.

For theſe laſt three or four years, has he followed that buſineſs as a printer?—Yes, both maſter and journeyman, I employed him to do my buſineſs for me.

The priſoners each called two more witneſſes, who gave them a very good character.

BOTH GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

218. WILLIAM LINCH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of February, two iron rails, value 5s. belonging to her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs Amelia, and affixed to her dwelling-houſe, againſt the ſtatute.

JOHN WILSON ſworn.

I caught the priſoner in the fact of wreſting theſe rails off, he had one in his hand, and was wreſting off the other at the Princeſs Amelia's houſe, I was going by on a meſſage, it was between ſeven and eight, on Thurſday laſt.

JOHN CROCKETT ſworn.

I am in the Princeſs Amelia's family, I ſpeak to the rail, I know nothing of the fact.

Priſoner. I found the rail in the ſtreet, and I kicked againſt it, and that young man came before and picked up the rail.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

219. JOSEHH HOBBS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th day of February, ſixty pounds weight of tobacco, value 5l. and one canvas bag, value 6d. the property of Thomas Milne and Timothy Stansfield.

SAMUEL CARPENDALE ſworn.

On Tueſday the 14th inſtant, a man came in for an ounce of tobacco, he aſked for Oroonoko, I ſaid, we had none, then he aſked for Virginia and herb, for he could not ſmoke all Virginia; then two more men rattled at the door, and came in while I was weighing the ounce of tobacco, and three more came in, and there were three bags of tobacco on the counter, and they took one; I called for aſſiſtance up ſtairs, and four of them run out of the ſhop, I purſued up Fenchurch-ſtreet, and was returning by the corner of Philpot-lane, when I met the priſoner with a bag of tobacco upon his ſhoulders, he was out of ſight about five minutes; he attempted to get away from me, he threw the tobacco upon my head, and got away from me, I cried ſtop thief! and he was ſtopped again in Philpot-lane, he got away again, and was taken on Dice key; I know he is the ſame man by his clothes, and his face, there was a lamp and a ſilverſmith's ſhop open, with a ſtrong light, I put the tobacco at Mr. Stevenſon's, a fruiterer, in Thames-ſtreet.

Mr. Peatt, Priſoner's Counſel. How long did you loſe ſight of the perſon that you ſuppoſe to be the priſoner?——I cannot tell; I ſuppoſe about ten minutes in the whole.

HENRY SHEPHERD ſworn.

About eight on Tueſday the 14th inſtant, there was a noiſe in the ſtreet, my man was in the ſhop, there was a cry of ſtop the raſcal, my man laid hold of the priſoner, and he fell into the kennel; I laid hold of the priſoner then, I ſaid you muſt be a raſcal for you are the firſt that has come down this lane, I held him about a minute, he had nothing in his poſſeſſion, the bag was right oppoſite my houſe at a neighbour's, I did not ſee him throw it; I ſaw the priſoner afterwards, and I knew he was the ſame man that I ſtopped.

——— DAVIS ſworn.

I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and I ſtopped the priſoner in Philpot-lane; he ſaid, he was not the man.

THOMAS GOODWIN ſworn,

Confirmed the above account of taking the priſoner.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I ran with the reſt, and they took me.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

220. MARY JONES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of February, one yard and a half of thread lace, value 2s. 6d. the property of Robert Earl.

JOSEH PINCHARD ſworn.

The priſoner came into the ſhop to bu a yard of linen, on Monday the 6th of February, and ſome lace lay on the counter, and at the ſame time I looked out the ribbon, I perceived her draw towards the lac box, I paid attention to her; in a littl time I ſaw her draw a piece of lace out o the box, and convey it under her cloak, then immediately charged her with it, an aft

and after that charge, I heard the lace drop down on the ground, it was rolled on a card, there were about a yard and an half, I went on the other ſide of the counter, and picked it up immediately, ſhe aſked me how I could think of taxing her with any ſuch thing.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. You are ſhopman to Mr. Earle?——Yes, Sir.

What ſort of a ſhop is yours?—I do not not know, it is like moſt other haberdaſhers ſhops.

You take that to be the anſwer I was ſeeking for?—I cannot ſay what you was ſeeking for.

What ſort of a ſhop is yours?——I cannot deſcribe the particulars of the ſhop, it is a common ſize ſhop.

How many men may be employed in it?—That is rather uncertain, according to the time of the year.

Lightiſh, I ſuppoſe, like other ſhops?—There is plenty of light in it; I am ſure there was never a piece of lace on the counter when the priſoner came in.

Are you ſure there was not one on the floor?——I did not go on the other ſide to ſee.

Court. Are you ſure of what you told me at firſt, that you ſaw the priſoner take it out of the box?——Yes.

Mr. Garrow. You ſent for a conſtable?—Yes, I do not recollect what he ſaid, I told him we had detected a woman taking a piece of lace.

Did not the conſtable tell you, that from your ſtory, you could not hurt a hair of her head?—He poſſibly might.

Did he or not?—I will not ſwear he did not, I do not know.

Do you recollect giving this anſwer to it, that whether you could or not, you would bring her here, becauſe you had loſt ſo many things in the courſe of the year?——I do not recollect.

ROBERT EARLE ſworn.

I was not in the ſhop when this happened, I came down, and the woman was in the ſhop, and a part of the lace lay in the box, and Pinchard told me, that the woman came in for a yard of ribbon, and that he ſaw her take out the lace, and put under her cloak, and the conſtable informed me, that I could do nothing with it, that I had better let her go about her buſineſs, I ſaid, I ſhould not let her go upon ſuch terms.

What did you ſay?——I gave an anſwer to this import, that as ſhe had been detected of ſtealing it from me, I certainly would have her to Guildhall, and purſue her as far as the law would allow.

JAMES GENTS ſworn.

I was conſtable.

Court. How came you to take upon you to adviſe any body not to proſecute?—Mr. Earle told me he did not find the lace upon her; I ſaid, then I doubted it would come to nothing.

So you do not like to take charge of a perſon, and do your duty, unleſs you approve of the evidence?—I aſked Mr. Earle, if he ſaw her take the property, he ſaid, his young man did.

Court. Learn your duty another time; your buſineſs is to execute the law, and to take charges.

Mr. Sheriff Sanderſon. What ward are you conſtable for?——Bread-ſtreet ward.

Do you ſerve in your own right, or as a ſubſtitute?—Subſtitute.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went to buy a yard of ribbon, and that gentleman ſaid, I had taken ſomething, and I ſaid, I have nothing belonging to you, here is ſixpence to pay for the ribbon; I told him I had two children at home, I might knock the card down, he accuſed me with taking two cards of lace; I ſaid, if there is any dropped look for it.

Court to Pinchard. Did you accuſe her of taking two?—No, Sir, I did not.

JAMES PULLEN ſworn.

I am a baker in Little Bartholomew-cloſe, Cloth-fair; I have known her theſe five years, her general character ever ſince

I knew her, was a very ſober, honeſt, induſtrious woman, and one that endeavoured to maintain her family, I never heard any thing amiſs of her before.

What is ſhe?——She takes in ironing, and clear ſtarching, her huſband had been dead about two months, and left her with two children, one about three years old, and the other about five.

Jury to Pinchard. Are you ſure that you ſaw her take the card out of the box?—I ſaw her take it out of the box, and convey it under her cloak.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

221. JAMES MASON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of February, one ingot of gold, of the weight of three ounces, value 10l. the property of Stephen Twycroſs, in his dwelling houſe.

STEPHEN TWYCROSS ſworn.

I live in Pemberton-row, Gough-ſquare, on Saturday the 4th of February, I brought home a ſmall ingot of gold to have it aſſayed, and I took it out of my pocket in my dining-room, to ſhew it to my daughter; I was ill that afternoon, I did not miſs it till the Tueſday following; I do not know what I did with it, but I rather think I laid it on a little table, near the edge of the chimney piece in my dining room; on the Tueſday following, I looked for it, and could not find it; on the next Saturday, I was informed that Mr. Heather had ſtopped a ſmall ingot of gold, and that the perſon was in cuſtody; I went to Mr. Heather's, in Long-alley, and I found that piece of gold, which appeared to be a part of the ingot I had loſt.

Had it any mark upon it?——No, it appeared to be the ſame ſize to it, I have had an aſſay ſince of it, and it appears to be the ſame quality of that within three pence an ounce, the other piece I have not been able to get; it is only from my carrying it in my eye.

Do you know the priſoner at all?—He lived with me at that time as a porter, to go of errands, and any thing of that ſort, I cannot ſwear to it.

JOHN HEATHER ſworn.

On Thurſday afternoon the 9th of February, about five, the priſoner brought this piece of gold to me to ſell, I aſked him how he came by it, he ſaid he had it of one Mr. Turner; I ſent to Bow-ſtreet for an officer, he told me he met a man coming into town, who got him to ſell it; but however, I heard the priſoner acknowledge before the Magiſtrate that it was his maſter's property.

Was there any promiſe made to him to induce him to confeſs the truth?—Not in my hearing.

Proſecutor. I was preſent when he was examined, I heard him acknowledge taking the gold.

Were there any promiſes made to him?——No, Sir; ſo far I told him, if he would give up the other part of it, I would ſhew him all the favour that lay in my power, but that was after he had made the confeſſion, I am very clear of it.

How large was the whole piece?—Three ounces one penny weight, the whole value is better than ten pounds.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of James Maſon.

HENRY GIBBS ſworn.

I was at the office when he was examined, I was a witneſs to his confeſſion.

Was it reduced into writing?——Yes, I ſaw the priſoner ſign his own name to his confeſſion (The confeſſion handed up) there was no promiſe made to him, or threat uſed in my hearing.

(Read.)

" Middleſex, the examination of James
" Maſon, charged with ſtealing, by James
" Twycroſs: on Thurſday evening the 9th
" of February inſtant, about four, he
" ſtole in his maſter's houſe one ingot of " gold, and delivered it to one Henry Tur" ner whom he does not know, nor where
" he lives, who broke it into three pieces,
" and gave this examinant one piece, with
" which he was ſtopped by John Heather."

Priſoner. I have only this to ſay, that that piece of gold is not belonging to the gold that Mr. Twycroſs loſt.

Proſecutor. He came out of the country to my ſervice, and therefore it is not to be wondered at, that he has nobody to his character; he lived with me two years, and then he went away, and then I took him again; I believe in the time he was away, he got ſome bad connections, but before that, he was a very honeſt man, and I ſhould be exceedingly happy to addreſs your Lordſhip in his favour.

GUILTY,

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

223. CHARLES HEWLINGS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Joſeph Marſhall, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 17th day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein one wooden till, value 2d. and ſixty-two halfpence, value 2s. 7d. and 10s. in monies numbered, his property.

ELIZABETH THOMAS ſworn.

I live with Marſhal in St. Clements-church-yard, he keeps a houſe there, he is a ſtationer and tobacconiſt; a few minutes before eight, I ſhut the ſhop door after I had ſerved a cuſtomer.

Did you faſten the door? I put the latch on, I did not lock it, and ſoon after I ſaw the priſoner at the foot of the ſtairs, with the till in his hand, I did not hear any body open the door, and the priſoner went out with the till in his hand, I followed him, and cried ſtop thief, he was purſued and taken, out of my ſight, but I am ſure he is the man; there was about 10s. in ſilver, and ſome halfpence, I am very ſure I ſhut the door, and put down the latch that I might hear it.

But you did not hear it?——I always can hear it.

Does the latch go hard?——Yes.

Then did not it ſtrike you at the time that you muſt have left it open, as you did not hear it?——No, becauſe I was ſure I ſhut it.

JONATHAN WHITE ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner on the cry of the laſt witneſs, and brought him back, there was no other perſon running near there at the time.

SAMUEL ALTON ſworn,

Produced the till and money, which he found at his back door, two doors from the proſecutor's.

Priſoner. I am innocent.

The priſoner called four witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

GUILTY

226. JOHN CRAWFORD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 1ſt day of February, one pair of men's leather pumps, value 2s. the property of John Dunlap.

The proſecutor loſt the pumps out of his ſhop window; the priſoner was taken with one of the pumps in his hand, and his hand bloody.

(Depoſed to.)

GEORGE DRYSDALE ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner take the pumps out of the proſecutor's window.

Priſoner. I picked up the ſhoe.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned three months in Newgate.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

---

227. MARY MARTIN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th day of February, fourteen yards of printed cotton, value 30s. the property of William Kitchen.

Matthew Holderneſs the proſecutor's man ſaw the priſoner take the cotton from the door, and took her with it under her arm.

Priſoner. A woman dropt it.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

---

228. SAMUEL DAVIS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 11th day of January laſt, one leaden pump barrel, value 8s. the property of William Beavan.

John Lambert took the priſoner juſt by the proſecutor's door with the property, which he dropped at his feet.——Thomas Edwards alſo ſaw him drop it.

Priſoner. A ſailor bid me carry it.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

---

229. JOSEPH TAYLOR was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 22d day of January laſt, one wooden ladder, value 1s. the property of Martin Free.

The priſoner was ſeen by John Marriott taking the ladder from the Black-horſe door.

Priſoner. I am innocent.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

230. JOHN BOYCOT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of February, eighteen pounds weight of mutton, value 6s. 6d. ſix pounds weight of beef, value 2s. and three pounds weight of beef-ſuet, value 1s. the property of James Alexander.

The Caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.

JAMES ALEXANDER ſworn.

On the 6th of February, between one and three, I ſaw the priſoner take one loin of mutton, and part of another loin, two breaſts of mutton, two joints of beef, and one pound of ſuet from the ſhop, and tied them up in his apron, to the ſlaughter-houſe, and laid them upon the tallow-board, and covered over with a cloth, I could not ſee into the ſlaughter-houſe; I ſent for a conſtable; he ſaid he only removed them for ſcouring the ſhop; that was not a proper time for ſcouring ing the ſhop, as there was a large quantity of meat in the ſhop at the time.

Mr. Scott, Priſoner's Counſel. How long has the priſoner lived with you?——About three months.

Did not the priſoner aſſiſt in ſcouring the ſhop?——Yes; the meat was tied up as tight as it was poſſible for a man's apron to be tied up.

Did not he tell you he carried it there becauſe it was dirtied, that it might be waſhed?—He did not ſay a ſingle word; I ſaw him take it, in the room of hanging it up, he took it to the ſlaughter-houſe.

Mr. Garrow. Did this meat either want waſhing or ſcraping?——By no means.

——— HOW ſworn.

I am a conſtable. I found this meat tied up in a blue apron almoſt at the parlour-door; he ſaid he did not mean to take it, he put it there to keep it clean; it was tied very tight.

Priſoner. I leave it to my counſel.

The priſoner called three witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

Mr. Garrow. Now the trial is over, I may ſay that I have a man here to prove that the priſoner has received thirty pounds at a time for fat.

Proſecutor. My loſs has not been ſo little as two hundred and fifty pounds in the whole.

Court. I am perfectly ſatisfied with the verdict; the offence of ſervants who are in truſt robbing their maſters, has always been conſidered of the moſt dangerous nature, and been uniformly puniſhed with the greateſt rigor; therefore let the priſoner be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

231. JOHN GILBERT and SAMUEL MILES were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th of January laſt, one ſow pig, value 40s. the property of Thomas Richardſon.

The priſoners were ſeen driving the ſow, the property of the proſecutor; they were taken into cuſtody.

BOTH GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

232. THOMAS TRAYNER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of February, one pair of men's leather ſhoes, value 4s. the property of Thomas Goodwin and John Mallam.

The priſoner came into the proſecutors ſhop to buy a pair of ſhoes, and was detected with a pair under his arm, which he dropped in the ſhop.

GUILTY.

To be whipped, and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

233. JOSEPH RYLAND was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of February, one white linen apron, value 2s. one cloak, value 5s. one coat, value 8s. one neck-cloth, value 1s. one cloak, value 3s. one hat, value 4s. the property of Thomas Pepper.

MARY PEPPER ſworn.

I am wife to the proſecutor. I ſaw the priſoner jump of our window; I called, ſtop thief! I miſſed a white apron, and the reſt of the things mentioned in the indictment; they were tied up ready in a corner of the window, which is about ſix feet from the ground; there was light enough to ſee him, I knew

I knew him before, he had lodged at our houſe.

THOMAS HERNE ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner come out of the window; I attempted to take him, but he was reſcued; I am ſure the priſoner is the man, he was taken the next day.

Priſoner. I was not near the place; I have neither witneſſes nor friends.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

234. SIMON SOLOMON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th day of January laſt, two copper coal ſhoots, value 20s. two ſtew-pans, value 15s. twelve copper tea-kettles, value 5l. ſix iron ſaucepans, value 44s. one baſket, value 8d. the property of William Cowland.

The Caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.

WILLIAM COWLAND ſworn.

My father is a brazier. I remember delivering ſome goods in our way of trade, the things mentioned in the indictment; they were to go to Broad-ſtreet, beyond the Royal Exchange, part of them there, and part of them to another place. My man came home, and gave me an account that he had loſt them. On the next evening, I went out with Lucy and the porters in order to apprehend the man.

——— HERITAGE ſworn.

On the 14th of January, I was to carry ſome goods, and I pitched my load in Bull's-head-court, Newgate-ſtreet; the priſoner at the bar was ſtanding there: I aſked him to give me a turn round; he helped me with it on my head, and he followed me into Cheapſide; he ſaid I was very heavy loaded, and he had juſt been giving his partner a lift, who was troubled with a ſhortneſs of breath. He aſked me where I was going to, I ſaid I was going to Broad-ſtreet; he had a knot on his ſhoulder, and had the appearance of a porter; I ſaid, I have only a penny, and that I will give you for a glaſs of gin, to give me a lift; he ſaid, No, I do not mind your penny, I do not mind giving a brother porter a lift; then he aſked me if I could give it a ſhove on his head, and a luſty man lifted it off my head on his head; and going between Foſter-lane and Gutter-lane, on that ſide Cheapſide, a genteel man ſlipped down, and he ſaid he had daubed himſelf very much, and aſked me if I would let him wipe his hands on my apron, and he felt firſt in one pocket, and then in the other, and he took out three halfpence, and two he let fall, and he ſaid, young man, pick them up; then I went after the man with the load, but I could find no more of him, I went as faſt as ever I could; this was on Friday night: on the Monday night I went out again, and took out a box, containing brickbats and ſtones; Mr. Lucy and my young maſter went with me: we went to Hatton-garden and down Holborn, and up to the Change, and came back, and about Foſter-lane, this priſoner, Solomons, met me, and ſaid to me, Young man, you are heavy loaded; he had his knot again; and I ſaid, Yes, I am, and I am very weary, for I have had the ague and fever, which makes me very weak; ſo I walked on towards St. Martin's Le Grand, and I pitched it down there, he helped me down with it; he ſaid he was only waiting for his maſter, and if he was gone home, he would give me a lift; he ſent me to the ſecond court, that was Bull's-head court, and I went and pitched in that court, and there was the halloo out, Shemar, for the ſpace of five or ſix minutes.

Who was hallooing out?—I ſuppoſe eight or ten gentlemen on the off ſide of the way; he came up ſoon afterwards, and ſaid, what, are not you got any further? No, ſays I, and he aſked me where I brought it from? I told him out of Leadenhall-ſtreet, and was going into Saint John's-ſtreet, and I took it down Giltſpur-ſtreet, and this ſame gentleman ſleman met us, and ſlipped down again, and he offered me threepence-halfpenny, and wiped his hands again; I told him I muſt not ſtop to take the money, and I followed the priſoner; he turned ſhort into the hoſpital; the gentleman told me he was gone on ſtraight forwards; I turned ſhort, and when I came to turn to ſpeak to him, ſays I, you are going, my cock, the wrong way; yes, ſays he, I forgot myſelf, I ſhould have gone ſtraight acroſs Smithfield; then he brought it, and pitched it by Hoſier-lane, and ſaid, you take it a little way; I took it up, and he was off in a minute. I am ſure the priſoner is the perſon. I went out again on the 26th with Mr. Lucy and young Mr. Cowland, and I ſaw the priſoner paſſing by St. Sepulchre's church, and I told the conſtable to meet me at Fleet-market, and we took him in Fleet-market; and before the magiſtrate he ſaid his name was Simon Solomons, he ſaid Shemar was only a nick-name that they gave him.

Court. Did this man know you a ſecond time?—Not at firſt; he ſaid afterwards, I worked in Fleet-market, I ſaid yes.

JOHN LUCY ſworn.

On Monday evening I went out with this man, and ſaw him accoſted by a porter, but I cannot ſay the priſoner was the man; I took him afterwards before the magiſtrate, and he ſaid as the laſt witneſs has deſcribed.

Proſecutor. I am ſure the priſoner is the man.——

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had been into Piccadilly, and was coming home.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

235. MARGARET PARR was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of February, eleven muſlin handkerchiefs, value 20s. the property of Edward Gibſon and Edward Nicholſon, privily in their ſhop.

EDWARD NICHOLSON ſworn.

On Monday the 13th of February, the priſoner came in, and deſired to ſee ſome handkerchiefs; ſhe looked at ſome, and borrowed a pair of ſpectacles to look at them; ſhe offered me two-and-twenty pence, and I ſhewed her ſome others, and ſhe went out of the ſhop: I miſſed one piece, and I purſued and ſaw her three doors from the ſhop; I told her to come back, and ſhe ſhould have one. I perceived ſhe had ſomething below her left arm behind her cloak, and as ſhe was going into the ſhop, ſhe dropped ten handkerchiefs; two witneſſes ſaw her drop them, I did not.

Did you ſee her take them at all?——I did not ſuſpect her in the leaſt.

What did ſhe ſay for herſelf?—She ſaid ſhe was very innocent; what did we mean by accuſing her with taking handkerchiefs, ſhe knew nothing of them.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. Have you ſince enquired who ſhe is?——No.

JAMES HUNT ſworn.

I was accidentally paſſing along Barbican on the 13th of this inſtant; juſt as I came oppoſite to the proſecutor's door, I ſaw him handing up this lady; I ſtood ſtill, and ſaw ſomething drop from her clothes, what it was I could not rightly perceive; but however I picked it up myſelf; I found it was a piece of muſlin handkerchiefs; I followed them into the ſhop, and gave it to the proſecutors; it was about ſix in the evening, between duſk and light.

Court. Could you obſerve particularly where they dropped from?—I cannot rightly ſay from what part of her clothes, they dropped from ſome of them.

MARY ALLEN ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner drop it from her clothes, from under her cloak, but what part I cannot ſay.

JOHN EDWARDS ſworn.

I am the conſtable. This piece of muſlin was given to me by Mr. Nicholſon at the time of the robbery; I have had it ever ſince: I ſearched the priſoner, and found two-pence or two-pence-halfpenny, which was all the money ſhe had about her.

(The handkerchiefs depoſed to.)

Mr. Garrow to Proſecutor. Have you ever chanced to hear that this woman was diſordered in her mind, on account of her huſband leaving her with a large family?——Her daughter ſaid ſo that evening.

Court. Whereabouts was this muſlin in the ſhop?—About one third in.

Was it poſſible it ſhould catch about any part of her clothes and attach, and then drop as ſhe went out?—It is not poſſible, without my perceiving it.

DAVID DEAN ſworn.

I am a cheeſemonger in Saint John's-ſtreet. I have known her for upwards of teen years.

What is her age?——Nearer ſixty than forty; ſhe has rented a houſe of me near fourteen years; ſhe always paid her rent and taxes, or I ſhould have heard; I never heard any thing amiſs of her; her huſband left her ſome years ago, and ſince that ſhe always ſeemed to be a very induſtrious careful woman; I apprehended her huſband allowed her ſomething after he left her; I aſked no queſtions, my rent was paid.

JOSEPH WALKER ſworn.

I have known her thirteen or fourteen years.

We have heard that her huſband has left her?—Yes.

What character has ſhe borne all the time you have known her as to honeſty?—An exceeding good one; I have lived in the houſe with her for the laſt ſix years; I have married a daughter of her's; I have kept her, ſhe was not in neceſſity, ſhe lived as I did.

What do you take her age to be?—Fifty-five; I believe her huſband leaving her has affected her a good deal.

WILLIAM HUNT ſworn.

I have known her about fourteen years; I lived in the houſe with her; I married her other daughter; ſhe is very honeſt and induſtrious, ſhe is about fifty-five.

Was ſhe ſupported by the aſſiſtance of her ſons-in-law?—No, Sir.

Court. What did ſhe do towards earning her livelihood?—Aſſiſting in the family; I have three children, I believe ſhe has had four or five children.

———— CLARKSON ſworn.

I live in St. John's-ſtreet, I am a glaſs and china-man; I have known her ſixteen years; if ſhe had come to my ſhop, I would have given her credit for a few pounds.

EDWARD HINDE ſworn.

I live in Monument-yard, I am a merchant; I have known her about eight or nine years, I never heard any thing to the contrary but that ſhe was an honeſt induſtrious woman; I have had ſeveral proofs of it, I have employed her myſelf; ſhe has had at different times forty or fifty pounds worth of mine in her hands in goods.

What ſort of goods?——Chiefly linens; I uſed to ſend linen abroad ready made, and ſhe did the needle-work; I employed her for ſeveral foreign gentlemen, to make up great quantities of linen, and ſhe was remarkably honeſt in bringing every little remnant, which is more than uſual.

So that you took her to be exemplary honeſt?——I did.

EDWARD KAY ſworn.

I live at No. 5, Cow Croſs, I am a grocer; I have known her near twelve years, ſhe has uſed the ſhop, and very punctual in all her dealings, that is her general character.

GUILTY, 10d.

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

(The witneſſes examined ſeparate at the requeſt of the Priſoner.)

JOHN CHANCELLOR ſworn.

I live at No. 2, Holloway Mount, near Shoreditch, I am a watch-maker. The priſoner Armſtrong was my finiſher; he was my ſervant. I went out about two on Thurſday the 9th of February; I had that day received three bank notes, and I told the priſoner Armſtrong that I had money in the houſe, before I went out to dinner, not ſuſpecting him, and when I returned, I found my houſe full of people, on account of the alarm given of the robbery by Armſtrong and my other ſervant, Elizabeth Johnſon; I loſt the things contained in this inventory.

Have you found any part of your property again?——There is a watch that is produced, maker's name William Caple, No. 145.

ELIZABETH JOHNSON ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Chancellor; my maſter's houſe was robbed on the 9th of February, as near ſeven as I can recollect. This young man that was in my maſter's houſe, that is Armſtrong, he and I were going to have our tea, and ſomebody knocked at the door; he got up, and went to the door; I ſays to him, aſk who is at the door; he went and aſked who was there, they ſaid they had ſome work, is your maſter at home? he ſaid yes, and he opened the door, and cried out, Oh, Lord! I was a little alarmed; I ſat in the kitchen to ſee who came in; I could not hear nor ſee any body come in for the courſe of a minute; then this man the priſoner Burdett came in, with his face half covered with a handkerchief; he preſented a piſtol to me, and ſaid, if I reſiſted he would blow my brains out; I told him I would not reſiſt, if he would ſpare my life; he then came round me, and put his hands over my eyes, and tied his handkerchief, or ſomething, I cannot ſay what, over my eyes; then he took my hands, and tied them down behind me; then he got a blanket I had been ironing upon, and threw that over my head, and took my apron, and tied that round me with the ſtring. I was in that ſituation while they robbed the houſe; they were in the houſe near a quarter of an hour, as near as I can recollect: while they were there, Samuel Armſtrong made uſe of the words, pray do not take that watch, that is my maſter's watch; that was a watch that was laying on the mantlepiece; then they d——d me, and aſked me what time I expected my maſter at home; I told them I expected him at the door every minute; then I heard them go out of the kitchen, and call Murphy; they came down ſtairs, and came round me, and opened the drawers of the kitchen; I heard them, and they told me if I did not tell them where my maſter's plate, and money, and notes were, they would blow my brains out; then I told them they muſt, for I did not know; then they went out, and I heard them bid one another good night, I cannot ſay I knew the voice; the young man Armſtrong I heard him the other ſide of the kitchen where I was, and he ſaid, Oh Lord! what have they taken? I anſwered, and bid him told his tongue; he then came round to me, and he put down his head, and I aſked him if they were all gone, and he ſaid yes, they were all gone. He took the blanket off me, and untied my hands.

How many did you obſerve in the kitchen?——I did not ſee any perſon but this Burdett.

Do you know him again?—Yes.

Priſoner Armſtrong. Whether before I I told you they were all gone, you did not bid me go and look?—I deny that.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. The kitchen is on the floor with the ſtreet-door?—Yes.

You ſaw but one perſon?—No.

His face was covered with a handkerchief?—Yes, the lower part of his face was covered.

Had he a round hat?—I cannot tell whether he had a round hat or a cocked one; I know his face, but I do not know his hat.

Conſider that the lives of three men depend on what you ſay; and you was a good deal frightened?——Very much.

Do you mean to ſay upon your oath that you are able to ſwear to the upper part of a man's face, whom you never ſaw before, and whom you do not know what ſort of hat he had?——I can; but I do not know what ſort of hat he had.

Had he any hat?——I do not know, I judge from the ſize.

There may be more of the ſame ſize; how long had you lived with the proſecutor?—I had been in my maſter's ſervice one month the 13th of February.

I believe you was taken into cuſtody?—Yes, I was.

Do you recollect that four other perſons, not the priſoners at the bar, were firſt taken into cuſtody on ſuſpicion of this burglary?——No, Sir.

Do not you know that other perſons, beſides the priſoners, were taken into cuſtody on this charge?—I do not know that they were.

Do you remember being at the magiſtrate's with your maſter, when he told you, you ſhould ſee the perſons that were accuſed?—I do not.

Did not your maſter, while you was in cuſtody, and before you had ſeen either of theſe perſons, tell you that there were perſons that he meant to ſhew to you?—They were not ſhewn to me, I was called on one ſide by the gentlewoman at Mr. Wilmot's houſe, and ſhe aſked me if I knew any perſon in the room; I looked through the glaſs over the door, and ſaw Burdett there.

Had you ever ſeen Burdett before in your life?—Never to my knowledge, I had a light on the table when they came in.

How much of a minute, or the third part of a minute, was it, before you was blindfolded?——I do not know.

May be he waited a quarter of an hour looking at you, and contemplating?——It was done as ſoon as poſſible.

Do you recollect your maſter's telling you that he had four perſons to ſhew you, and that you told him it was quite unneceſſary, for you ſhould not know none of them?—No, Sir.

Do you mean to ſwear that nobody ſaid ſo to you?——Yes, I do.

What ſituation was Armſtrong in, do you happen to know that a handkerchief was thruſt into his mouth, and that his hands and legs were tied ?—I do not know ; I heard him ſpeak, and deſire them to ſpare that watch which lay on the mantle-piece.

May be it was for you to cook the dinner by ?——I do not know.

Do you recollect any thing about Rapſon when theſe people came to the door ?——No.

Has you maſter a man of the name of Rapſon ?——Yes ; I heard the men ſay, I have brought ſome work, is your maſter at home.

Did not the man ſay that Rapſon had ſent ſome work for your maſter ?—Yes.

What was you doing ?—We were going to tea, I was making a toaſt.

Are you ſtill a ſervant in Mr. Chancellor's ſervice ?—— Yes.

Court. You have not lived a month in the ſervice ?——No, Sir.

How long had Armſtrong lived in the houſe ?—I believe he had been there about a fortnight, he came after me, he was a workman, not a houſe ſervant, he did not lay in the houſe.

They aſked you where your maſter's plate and money was, you told them very readily, that you did not know ; did you in fact, know where the plate and money was kept ?——I did not know where the plate was kept, I knew there were three dozen of ſpoons that were ſent from Dublin.

Mr. Silveſter. Was this your own watch ?——It was not.

Priſoner Armſtrong. She was taken to look at four men, and one of their names was John Grey, and ſhe ſaid ſeveral times in the hearing of Mr. Jones, that ſhe could not ſwear to any of theſe, it was uſeleſs to go look at them.——I deny that.

JAMES SHAKESHAFT ſworn.

I am one of the officers ; on Thurſday, the 9th of February, about half after ſeven, Mr. Harper, Onſlow, and I, and Mr. Bamford were at the office, and there came a young man, and ſaid there had been a robbery at a houſe in the Mint, it is not above five minutes walk ; he ſaid the houſe had been robbed, I went to the door, and there were the maid and Armſtrong, I made what enquiry I thought proper, I waited till Mr. Chancellor came home, he ſaw his houſe, was ranſacked, and I told him I ſaw plainly this robbery happened by ſomebody that knew the houſe, and I adviſed him to give charge of the ſervants, he did ſo, the next day they were fully examined, the girl was diſcharged, at dinner time; the priſoner Armſtrong ſays to me, I will make you a compliment, if you can ſet me at liberty, that was the next day after the robbery, Mr. Chancellor came at night to ſee how the buſineſs had gone on, I ſaid to Armſtrong, have you got any thing to ſay to the magiſtrate, before you go to gaol.

Mr. Garrow. This was after dinner ?—Yes.

Was not Armſtrong very drunk ?——He was as ſober as I am now ; I told him what he had to ſay, he might ſay before the magiſtrate.

Was not that ſo communicated to him, and ſo underſtood by him, to your knowledge, that any thing he ſaid might poſſibly be to his advantage, was not it under that impreſſion ; had not you previouſly prepared his mind by thoſe ſort of ſuggeſtions ?——I did not know but what the magiſtrate would commit him.

My queſtion is a very plain one, capable of a very plain anſwer ?—I told him with a view that he might be an evidence.

But do not you believe that what he ſaid was under an impreſſion that it would be better for him ?——He might ſay it with that view.

Was not it under ſuch an impreſſion ?—I cannot tell but what it might.

Mr. Garrow: I object to this confeſſion being received.

Court. I cannot receive his confeſſion under that impreſſion.

——— TRIQUET, Eſq; ſworn.

I am the magiſtrate before whom this young man was brought, he was brought to my houſe near nine at night, he was perfectly ſober, as much as I could diſcover, I could not perceive him to be at all diſguiſed in liquor, he was referred for a further examination, he came with two or three officers, I was informed that he wiſhed to ſay ſomething to me.

Court. Now before he told you what it was he wiſhed to tell you, did you ſay any thing to him?——I told him I would go to my office, the clerk being there, it would be more convenient, beſides there was a number of people; I went to the office, and when I came there, he wiſhed to open his mind to me, he aſked me if he could be admitted an evidence, upon telling me what he knew of the matter; I was a little cautious reſpecting what he might tell me, that perhaps it might not amount to ſufficient evidence, and therefore told him, that unleſs he could produce ſufficient evidence, with ſome of the property ſufficient to convict two of the offenders or more, I could not promiſe any ſuch thing; he then wiſhed to ſpeak to Mr. Chancellor; they went into another room, and had ſome converſation together; when they came in again, I aſked them both what had paſſed, Mr. Chancellor told me that the priſoner had wanted to extort from him a promiſe not to appear againſt him, if his evidence ſhould not amount to what we expected, and to bear him harmleſs.

Was that in the priſoner's preſence?—Yes; I underſtood that ſomething had been intimated by him on that ſcore, upon which I was rather angry with Mr. Chancellor for having held a diſcourſe of that nature, without acquainting me, for I thought he had no right or power to make any ſuch promiſe, nor would I conſent to undertake any thing for the priſoner, till he had abſolutely recanted that before me, and declared that he would make no ſuch promiſe; upon which Mr. Chancellor declared that he recanted what had paſſed, and that he would be under no kind of promiſe whatever.

Court. With the ſuppoſition you have ſtated, he had reaſon to expect he ſhould be admitted?——Undoubtedly.

Court to Mr. Silveſter. It ſeems to me that this confeſſion cannot be received, though Mr. Triquet proceeded with proper caution; as to the fact of admitting him an evidence, he is guilty of no breach of promiſe in ſuffering this priſoner to be brought to his trial; for he is not a judge of what evidence will be given, and he makes a diſcretional promiſe; I cannot receive that confeſſion.

Mr. Triquet. I meant to ſay, that when he was brought up again, he denied the truth of all that.

Mr. Silveſter. Tell us any thing elſe you know, but the confeſſion.

Mr. Garrow. You underſtand that you are to tell us nothing that he ſaid to you of any ſort, but you may tell us any facts?—I have a watch here which the proſecutor ſwore to; this watch was produced by one Hannah Oſeley when Knotely turned evidence, a week ſince, ſhe produced it before the Magiſtrates.

Were all or any of the priſoners preſent when it was produced?——They were preſent when it was produced by Hannah Oſeley; ſhe ſaid ſhe received it from Burdett, in Burdett's preſence; that he came to her about eleven on the night of the robbery, and brought it to her.

What did Burdett ſay to this?—He denied it all; this watch has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; it is the ſame.

HANNAH OSELEY ſworn.

Who do you live ſervant with?—With Mr. Knotely.

Which of the priſoners do you know?—Burdett.

When did you ſee him?——On the 9th of February, between ten and eleven; he gave me a watch, he told me to ſave it till my maſter came home; I delivered it to the officer; I told him my maſter was gone to a cock-fighting in Portpool-lane.

Did you ſee Burdett after that?—No.

Do you know any of the other priſoners?——I know Burdett and Brown by coming to my maſter's houſe; I know nothing of the priſoner Armſtrong, having never ſeen him before.

Mr. Garrow. Mrs. Oſeley, do you know Mrs. Moſes?——Yes.

Where does ſhe live?——In Woolpack-alley, Houndſditch.

What, with Mr. Knotely?——Yes.

She is your miſtreſs?——Yes.

Mr. Knotely is your maſter?——Yes.

Which of the Moſes's is this, is it the old fence or the young one?——She is no fence.

I ſee you know what the word fence is?——I do not.

No! why then how happened it, was it by intuition, or a ſtrange illumination, you ſhould know what I meant: how long have you been with this pious family of the Knotely's?—Off and on theſe two years.

Whenever Mr. Akerman did not find them ſervants, you attended them; how often has he been in trouble within theſe two years?——But once.

Only once! Was that for the aſſault with intent to rob, or for the burglary, or the murder?——Murder!

Oh, that you deny with both your hands; did you live with him when he was ordered for tranſportation for fourteen years?——No.

Did you live with him when he was ordered to the ballaſt lighters?—No.

Had you ever any converſation with Mr. Knotely about this watch?——When my maſter came home, he was very much in liquor, and he told me to ſave it till the morning.

The whole Friday intervened; now upon your oath, did not he deſire you to keep it, in order that it might be evidence againſt ſome other perſon on a proſecution?——I offered it to Mr. Knotely; he told me to ſave it till he aſked me for it; I never gave it to him afterwards. I kept it in my pocket, and directly as my maſter was taken, I put it under the ſtairs; my maſter ſent for it.

So when your maſter got into the hands of the traps, then he ſent for the tick; you underſtand that, it is no Hebrew to you; your maſter got into the hands of the traps?——Yes he did.

So you know what traps are then; upon your oath, did not he tell you that he ſhould not be believed by a jury of Engliſhmen, unleſs you ſhould confirm it?—He was going to make a preſent of it to ſomebody in the country.

You ſwear that?—Yes; I do not know the name of the perſon; I carried it to Mr. Wilmot's.

And there I ſuppoſe by a ſtrange accident you was laid hold of; what way of buſineſs is your maſter in?—I do not know.

(The watch ſhewn to Mr. Chancellor, and depoſed to.)

Proſecutor. This is one of the number that was loſt.

RICHARD KNOTELY ſworn.

Where do you live?——In Woolpack-alley.

Hannah Oſely is your maid?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Do not you profeſs to be a Jew?——I am not a Jew.

Have not you ſworn in the courſe of your life upon the Old Teſtament?—Not to my knowledge.

Have you never ſworn with your hat on; have you always taken the oath as a Chriſtian?——Yes Sir, I am one.

A great honour to any religious perſuaſion! What do you know of this robbery of Mr. Chancellor's?——On Thurſday night Thomas Burdett came to me, and told me that Armſtrong had been to tell him that his maſter and miſtreſs were going out at ſix o'clock, and that if we would come, he would let us into his maſter's houſe; he had been with Tom Burdett about three, and a little before ſix he came to us, and told us that his maſter was gone out, and his miſtreſs was going after him; we went and knocked at the door, and this Armſtrong he opened it, and let us in, and he told us that his maſter had been to receive ſome money out of the bank, and that he kept it all in the one-pair of ſtairs, backwards, and the watches were in the two-pair of ſtairs forwards. We went in; Tom Taylor and Burdett tied the girl's arms, and I tied Armſtrong's legs, he would not have his arms tied; and we went up ſtairs, and in the one-pair of ſtairs we found three ten pound bank notes, and ſome watches; I aſked to keep one of the watches, I gave them twenty ſhillings for it, they brought the money for the others; I gave the watch to the girl, as I was going to a cocking.

PRISONER BURDETT's DEFENCE.

I know nothing about it; I have three people I wiſh to call in.

Court to Proſecutor. What time did you dine out that day?——Between two and three.

You ſaid Armſtrong underſtood from you that you had money in the houſe?——Yes, I mentioned to him three ten-pounds bank notes.

Did he know that you would return after you had dined?——He might, or he might not.

(The witneſſes for the Priſoner Burdett called in, and examined ſeparate.)

LAWRENCE BRIEN ſworn.

I live at the King's Head, in Golden-lane.

Are you acquainted with the priſoner Burdett?——I have known him backwards and forwards ever ſince I kept the houſe; I remember his coming on Thurſday the 9th of February; he continued in my houſe half an hour or better; he went out, he returned again, and ſupped, and continued afterwards at my houſe till twelve o'clock.

Who ſupped with him?——I was backwards and forwards in the room with him and my wife; his wife ſupped with him, and nobody elſe, but me and my wife; I did not ſee Mr. Webber there; there were ſeveral in the tap-room; I am ſure as to the day, becauſe I received ſome money that day upon a bill that was owing me from a cuſtomer of mine.

Is that any thing particular?——I am ſure that was the day.

Are you ſure as to the time of night that he was there?—From nine till about half after nine, and then he went out, and then he came back, and ſtaid till twelve.

What time did he come back to ſupper?——It might be ten, or a few minutes after or before; he was about half an hour abſent from my houſe.

Mr. Silveſter. You live in Golden-lane?——Yes.

Have you got your books here?——No, Sir.

What had he for ſupper?—Some mutton ſtakes; my maid went to call him when the ſtakes were ready.

THOMAS WEBBER ſworn.

I live in Golden-lane; I am a butcher, I live with my father. I know nothing particular of Burdett, I have drank with him ſeveral times; I ſaw him laſt Thurſday fortnight, I promiſed to have ſome mutton ſteaks with him, but I did not; in about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes after, I went to Brien's, and there was Mr. and Mrs. Brien, and Burdett and his wife; I ſtaid drinking with them till twelve at night; he came in between nine and ten, and I ſuppoſe it might be twelve when he went away.

DIANA MASON ſworn.

I live in Golden-lane, I am a married woman. The evening of the 9th of February, I went into Mr. Webber's ſhop, and Mr. Burdett came in, and deſired ſome mutton chops, about half after nine, Mrs. Johnſon, that is, Burdett, I meant to ſay Burdett——

Who put it into your head?——I do not know that I ſaid Johnſon, I do not know a Mrs. Johnſon; ſhe went away, and came in a quarter of an hour after with the priſoner Burdett, and I left Mr. and Mrs. Burdett at Mr. Webber's; I believe they ſupped next door.

PRISONER ARMSTRONG's DEFENCE.

The circumſtances of the robbery have been miſrepreſented: I went down to tea, the maid was toaſting a toaſt at the fire, and there was a knock at the door, it was a gentle tap; the maid deſired me to go, I aſked her to make me ſome toaſt; ſhe ſaid, will you go to the door, I ſaid yes, without any heſitation: when I went to the door, I aſked who was there, I was immediately aſked if

Mr. Chancellor was at home; I ſaid no; ſomebody ſaid it is Rapſon; I opened the door, and one man ruſhed in, and put his handkerchief over my face, and immediately Knotely ruſhed in; they ſwore bitterly; then they hundled me into the kitchen, and then I ſaw the tail of the maid's apron over her face; they ſtaid about ten minutes up ſtairs, and came down; they wiſhed one another a good night: there was a watch on the mantlepiece, one of them, the man that ſtood over me, ſaid this watch was his; I ſaid, do not touch it, it is my property; they went out, and ſhut the door, I got one arm untied. What I wiſh to ſpeak is through humanity; when the maid was brought to ſwear to four men, ſhe ſaid it was all in vain, ſhe could not ſwear to any of them.

THOMAS BURDETT, GUILTY, Death.
SAMUEL ARMSTRONG, } NOT GUILTY.
WILLIAM BROWN, }

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

Court to Armſtrong. It will be happy for you, if the eſcape you have had ſhould be effectual to your amendment; but there is too much reaſon to fear that it will only operate to the commiſſion of freſh crimes, in which caſe you can expect no mercy; in the preſent inſtance, a ſtrict adherence to juſtice, on the part of the jury, has ſaved your life.

237. THOMAS JONES and GRAY BLANDFORD were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 12th day of January laſt, one half pound weight of ſtone blue, value 1s. the property of Edward Dyſon and Robert Boyfield.

THOMAS YOUNG ſworn.

I am ſervant to Meſſrs. Dyſon and Boyfield, grocers, on Ludgate-hill. I made out the bill of parcels which was taken from the priſoner Jones, and about half after ſeven at night, I tucked it under the ſtring of the parcel which the porter took, which was a paper of ſtone blue; it was twiſted underneath; it was impoſſible for it to tumble out, it muſt be taken out by ſomebody.

——— DENNER ſworn.

I am a porter to Mr. Dyſon. I left the ſhop about ten minutes before ſeven; I took ſome things packed in a baſket on my head, and half a pound of ſtone blue in my pocket: as I was going up Fleet-ſtreet, I miſſed it; I ſaw nothing of the priſoners, I do not recollect them at all; there was a bill of parcels tucked under the ſtring; this is the bill of parcels, I'll ſwear to it; I never ſaw the priſoners till I ſaw them at Guildhall.

WILLIAM MARCH ſworn.

I am conſtable; I only received this from the patrol, Mr. Woollet, which is ſome blue, the outſide paper is worn out, it is a whitiſh-brown paper, coarſe paper; I have kept it ever ſince.

JOHN BUTLER ſworn.

I am patrol of the pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt, on the 12th of February, we met the two priſoners the corner of Chancery-lane, my partner ſtopped Jones, and the other ran acroſs the way in Fleet-ſtreet, I ran after him, and oppoſite St. Dunſtan's church, I laid hold of him; I particularly aſked him what he had, and he ſaid nothing, I ſaid to him, then why did you run away? he made no anſwer; I took him to the watch-houſe with Woollett who aſſiſted me, there he was ſearched; and this blue found, and I aſked him how he came by it, and he ſaid he bought it in Cheapſide, and gave a ſhilling for it; I ſaw Jones ſearched, and there was a bill of parcels taken from him, he ſaid he picked it up; the priſoners were coming together in converſation, I knew them, they were both walking the ſame way.

RICHARD WOOLLETT ſworn.

At about a quarter after ſeven this night, Butler laid hold of Blandford, and I ſaw him run, and Butler after him; I ſaw Blandford put his hand in his pocket, I laid hold of his hand; and perceived he was pulling a paper out of his pocket, which I prevented, and juſt as I was going into the door, I pulled it out myſelf; Butler was cloſe to me at the time; I aſked him what it was, he ſaid it was ſome blue, he had bought for his mother, I do not recollect he ſaid where; when he came in Denner had brought Jones in, and we examined him, and found a bill of parcels which is now in Court, that was given to Mr. March.

Did either of them ſay any thing when they were examined?——Jones ſaid, he picked the bill of parcels up in the ſtreet; and we told him it was not likely that he ſhould pick it up in the ſtreet, becauſe it was a very wet night; there was not the leaſt ſoil on the paper.

PRISONER JONES's DEFENCE.

I found this bill on a cellar window in Fleet-ſtreet.

PRISONER BLANDFORD's DEFENCE.

I am out of work at preſent, I live with my mother; ſhe is out a nurſing a young woman in Wine-office-court, Fleet-ſtreet, and ſhe waſhes for ſeveral of us; ſhe has ſix of us to maintain, and ſhe told me ſometime in the day to get her ſome blue, and ſhe gave me a ſhilling; I bought it at a grocer's facing Woodſtreet, Cheapſide; I do not know his name.

March. There is a tea-dealer facing Wood-ſtreet, I am ſure he does not ſell ſtone blue; I called there, and they ſaid, they did not ſell blue.

BOTH GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before
Mr. ROSE.

---

238. JOHN KNIGHT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 21ſt day of February, one quart pewter pot, value 1s. and two pint pewter pots, value 1s. the property of Edward Witham.

EDWARD WITHAM ſworn.

I am a publican, I keep the Green Dragon, on St. Andrew's-hill, Black-friars; I ſaw the priſoner in my houſe on Tueſday laſt, the 21ſt inſtant, about three; I was ſhewn ſome pots by Mr. White, which were mine, I have ſeen the priſoner at my houſe before; he ſays, he is a bricklayer, I am ſure when I went out, the day I loſt the pots, I left him in the houſe.

JOHN WHITE ſworn.

I am a publican, I keep the Sun on Addle-hill, the priſoner came into my houſe laſt Tueſday the 21ſt, he ſat drinking in my houſe, I ſuſpected he had ſomething in his pocket that he ſhould not have; I ſaw the mark of a pot in his pocket, and I accuſed him, he took a quart and two pints out of his pocket, and he ſaid, he had bought them, there was the mark within on the pots, with the Green Dragon; I ſent to Mr. Witham that evening, and he came and ſent for a conſtable, the conſtable took the pots.

(The pots depoſed to.)

I was inſenſible, and I ſuppoſe theſe things were put into my pocket out of ſpite.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before
Mr. ROSE.

239. GEORGE LYONS and THOMAS HOPKINS were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Bowers, about the hour of eleven in the night, on the 9th day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, two leather pocket books, value 4d. a pair of leather ſhoes, value 2s. a guinea, value 1l. 1s. and eighteen ſhillings in monies numbered, and ſixty copper halfpence, value 2s. 6d. his property; a bank note, value 10l. a bill of exchange, dated the 30th of October, 1782, drawn by Edward Flanhagan, on Henry Evans Williams, at the Victualling-office, London, for 65l. thirty days after date, the bank note and the bill of exchange, at the time of the ſaid felony and burglariouſly, being the property of the ſaid Thomas Bowers, and the ſeveral ſums of money due and payable thereon, being then due and unſatisfied.

THOMAS BOWERS ſworn.

I live at No. 73, Cable-ſtreet, Whitechapel. I went to the other end of the town on ſome buſineſs, on the 9th of January, I went from home, about half paſt nine in the morning, I returned into the neighbourhood about ten minutes after ten at night, I went to the public houſe to pay the coachman that brought me home, and one of the evidences aſked me to give him ſomething to drink, and ſometime after, my wife came to me, and I went home about thirty-five minutes after ten; as ſoon as my wife opened the door, ſhe ſaid the place had been broke open, and I ſaw the top drawer of the room where I lay, broke open, the back window was broke open, and my back door that joins to the yard.

In what manner was the window broken?——The ſaſh was broken, and there was a ſhutter on the inſide that bars acroſs, and a ſoldier's bayonet was put through as a ſtaple, and that was broken; on the ground floor there are three rooms, and this was the middle room, and the drawers that were in it were broken open, when I lookin it, I miſſed my two pocket books, and a little box with a guinea in gold, and eighteen ſhillings in ſilver; one of theſe pocket books contained a bill, on Mr. Henry Evans Williams, at the Victualling-office, for prize money, for 65l. in the ſame pocket book, there was a ten pound bank note, I cannot ſay that I miſſed any thing elſe particular, but a new pair of ſhoes and a handkerchief, and a pan with ſome halfpence in it, I look upon it there might be three or four ſhillings worth, I cannot punctually ſay to the number.

ELIZABETH BOWERS ſworn.

My huſband went out in the morning of this day that I was robbed, I went out a little after ten at night, and returned in about half an hour, I left nobody in my houſe at all.

Did you leave your doors and windows all faſt?——Yes.

Do you recollect particularly, whether the back window was faſt or not?——Yes, it was.

How was it faſtened?—With two bayonets and a bolt, the bayonets were put through to keep the ſtaple as pins to the bolt, there was an inſide ſhutter.

What did you go out for at that time of night?——The priſoner Lyons came to my houſe, and told me that my huſband was come home very much in liquor in a coach to the Blakeney's-head at the corner of Shorter-ſtreet, Cable-ſtreet, and that he was going to fight with the coachman; there was another came with Lyons, they went away, and I went to look for my huſband directly.

How long was you gone?—About half an hour.

Did you find your huſband drunk as you had been told?——Yes, he was a little the worſe for liquor.

Was he quarrelling with the coachman did you find?——No, he was paying him when I came in.

Had there been any diſpute?——Yes, I believe there had.

Then what Lyons told you was true?—Yes, when I came home I found the houſe in the condition that has been deſcribed by my huſband.

Are you ſure that the back window was faſtened, when you went out?——Yes.

Was the back door of the houſe ſhut?—Yes, it was faſtened; I heard nothing more that night, I know nothing more reſpecting the robbery, or againſt the priſoners.

THOMAS TAYLOR ſworn.

On the 10th of January, at three o'clock, Mr. Bowers brought one John Farrel to our houſe, and inſiſted on my locking him up, for he ſaid he was one of the men that robbed him; my houſe is No. 8, Welcloſe-ſtreet, Shorter-ſquare; I am Headborough.

You had heard of the robbery I ſuppoſe before?—No; he charged him with robbing his houſe; I locked him up in the watch-houſe.

How came you not to carry him before a Magiſtrate?—There was never a one ſitting then, I kept him there till ſix o'clock, and Mr. Bowers came in, we were going to carry him to the Juſtice's, and he propoſed to Mr. Bowers, that he would make a confeſſion where his property was, provided he would admit him an evidence, and Mr. Bowers promiſed he would, if he could prevail on the Magiſtrate; then he told where the things were, and we took him to the Black-lion, Saltpetre-bank; and we found theſe two pocket books, and the bill on the Navy-office.

You found theſe two pocket books where Farrel had directed you?——Yes.

Whereabouts in the timber yard were they laying?——Cloſe by the wall, I ſaw them laying there; then we took him before the Juſtice, and he was admitted an evidence that night; I took George Lyon out of bed, I found him in an alley in Cable-ſtreet, juſt by the proſecutor's houſe, I ſearched him, he had about ſeven or eight ſhillings of his ſilver in his pocket; none of the property was found upon him.

Have theſe been in your poſſeſſion ever ſince they were found?——Theſe papers which belong to the Sun Fire-office were found at the ſame time, with the books, they were not in the books, they had laid all night in the rain, they were wet.

GEORGE TAYLOR ſworn.

Having information againſt Thomas Hopkins, I and two more went and took him at the Two Brewers, in the Maze, in the Borough.

When?——The 27th of January.

Did you ſearch him?——No.

Did you find any thing upon him?—No.

Did you ever hear him ſay any thing?—No further than I went into a public houſe, and I called for a pint of beer, and I ſaw him ſit, and he jumped up, and run out at the back door; I followed him directly, and he ſaid, if he had known what I had been after he would have cut me in pieces.

Did he ſay any thing about this robbery?——No, not that I know of.

BENJAMIN NASH ſworn.

On the 9th of January, I was in ſearch after Lyons and another man that had got away from me, and I found them both in bed together; I never heard Lyons ſay any thing concerning this robbery; I went after the other, I could not find him, on the 27th of January I apprehended him, I ſearched him, nothing was found upon him, I put him in the coach and Dorman, and he ſwore d—n his eyes, when I was bringing him in the coach from the Borough, he was talking about the robbery of Bowers's houſe; he ſaid, he could not blame Farrel for what he had done, for he had been cheated as well as him, for Lyons had cheated them both.

Was it mentioned before you, that Farrel had turned evidence?—He knew it.

How do you know?——He aſked me whether Farrel had turned evidence; I ſaid, I believed he had, but he had not been ſworn, nor I do not believe he had at that time; he then ſaid, he could not blame him for he had not above five ſhillings and three pence or five ſhillings and nine pence, or ſomething of that kind, any more than he had, for Lyons had ſlanged him out of the ten pounds note, I am not ſure to the exact ſum; it was above five ſhillings; he ſaid, that Lyons he had heard, had offered the note to change, but he would be d——d if he told where Lyons had offered it.

Did he ſay any more?——No more.

Had you, before he ſaid this, made him any promiſes of giving him any expectation of favour, if he confeſſed any thing?—No, my Lord, he did not expect it, he judged that Farrel had turned evidence.

RICHARD DENMORE ſworn.

I know nothing more, than on the 9th of January, I ſuppoſe it might be about twenty minutes before eleven, the two priſoners Farrel and another man, came into the Black-boy, Salt-petre-bank, where I lodge.

How came you to remember it was that particular night?——Becauſe I lodge in the houſe, I remember the day of the month very well, becauſe I ſaw it put down in the book before Juſtice Staples; I told it to the Juſtice the day after, the 10th.

What did you hear them ſay, or ſee them do, after they came in?—They called for a pot of beer, they drank once, and they called me by my name, and ſaid Denmore, will you have any beer; I ſaw them do nothing, but I could perceive them have ſome papers, but what they were I could not tell, I ſaw no more.

What ſort of papers were they?—I cannot tell.

Had they any book?——No, I did not ſee any book.

How long did they ſtay?—About ſix or ſeven minutes, they only drank once a piece out of the pot.

Did you hear any converſation about theſe papers?—No, I did not.

Did they all go out together?——Yes, they did, they came in together, and they went out together.

You did not obſerve what papers they were, nor you did not ſee any books, I think you ſay?—No, I could not perceive any books, but in the morning when I came down ſtairs, the boy ſhewed me a claſp of a pocket book, and he aſked me what it was.

Court. Is that boy here?—No, he was bound over, and he is gone out of the way; he picked up a claſp, and aſked me what it was, I ſhewed Bowers the claſp of the pocket book.

Did you ſee the boy pick up the claſp?—No, I did not, he ſhewed it me, at eight o'clock in the morning, when I came down ſtairs, he ſaid, he picked it up in ſweeping out the tap-room.

Do you know what is become of that boy?—He is gone into the country where he came from; he got too ſaucy, and the landlord diſcharged him.

How long ago was this that he went away?——I dare ſay it may be a month or better than a month.

How came the landlord to ſend him away?—Becauſe he found he would not do any thing that he bid him.

What part of the country did he belong to?——Some part of Eſſex.

The landlord knows, does not he?——I do not know.

Naſh. I went by order of the Juſtice, to enquire about him, and the landlord ſaid, he did not know any thing about him, he was gone away.

Court to Dinmore. You cannot at all tell what ſort of papers you ſaw them have?—No, I cannot indeed.

Nor you did not ſee them with any book?——No, I did not.

Jury. How old was that boy?——About thirteen or fourteen.

Court. That boy ought not to be out of the way.

CHARLES DORMAN ſworn.

I was at the apprehending of Hopkins, I know no more than Naſh has ſaid.

JOHN FARRELL ſworn.

Relate what you know of this matter?—

Pleaſe you, my Lord, about the 9th of January, a little after ten, as nigh as I can gueſs, Mr. Bowers came to the ſign of the Blakeney's Head, the corner of Shorter's-ſtreet; I aſked him for ſomething to drink, he gave me a pot of beer; he was a little in liquor, and he came there with a woman; and Lyons ſaid, let us go and put Bower's wife flaſh, it will be a good piece of fun, and make a blow up, and at the ſame time we may do his panney, and I ſaid it will do very well, it will be a very good ſcheme.

What do you mean by doing his panney? ——Panney is the meaning of the houſe, they call the houſe the panney; with that George Lyons and Thomas Hopkins went out to Mr. Bowers's houſe, but I ſtaid in at the Blakeney's Head; I cannot tell whether they went or no, and they ſtaid about two or three minutes, and Mr. Bowers came in, and I began to talk to him about his coming home, when Mrs. Bowers came in, George Lyons, Thomas Hopkins, and Thomas and I went out; I was the laſt; they went to Mr. Bowers's houſe immediately, and Lyons got over the yard, and opened a back gate, and from thence he went to the back of the houſe, and broke a little window that was at the back of the houſe, and opened the door; then he got in, and he opened the back door, I was in the yard at the ſame time; they all three went into the houſe, and Thomas Hopkins ſays to me, Jack, do you go and look at the front of the houſe, you need not be afraid, there ſhall be no flanging in the houſe.

What do you mean by that?—That there ſhould be no cheating, that I ſhould ſhare the ſame as they did; with that I went to the front of the houſe, and ſtaid about five or ſix minutes, as nigh as I can gueſs, and when I came back, they were all come out, and Thomas ſays to me, I have got a pan with ſome halfpence, and Lyons ſays to me, I have got the pocket-books, and under Thomas's jacket I ſaw ſomething bulky, and I aſked him what he had there, and he ſaid it was a new pair of ſhoes; then we went to the Black Boy, and had a pot of beer, and was overhauling the pocket-books; I ſaw nothing in the books, only two Inſurance policies, and ſome leaſes of houſes; and Lyons ſaid, I will go out and ding theſe things; we ſaid, do ſo; he went out, and he might be out about three or four minutes, then he came, and ſaid, I have dinged them over the wall into the Deal-yard; then we left the Black Boy, and left Thomas to ſell the ſhoes; Thomas came to the Shovel in Eaſt Smithfield, and he ſold the ſhoes for three ſhillings; and the halfpence were two ſhillings, and we ſhared fifteen-pence a man; then we came up to Blakeney's Head, and had two pots of half-and-half; and ſo after that we parted.

How did you know there had been any bank note in the book, and that Lyons had cheated you?—I did not know that there had been any bank note, before Mr. Bowers ſwore it at the Magiſtrate's; but as to the guinea, Lyons confeſſed to me in the watch-houſe, that Hopkins ſaw him fumbling; ſays he, I have got ſome loure here, we can have them for this, that meant, he could cheat us; with that, he pulled out twelve ſhillings, and gave Hopkins ſix ſhillings, and amongſt that ſix there was one guinea in gold, that Lyons confeſſed to me in the watch-houſe.

You do not know whether Hopkins knew any thing of the bank note?——No, I do not.

Continuation of the Trial of George Lyons and Thomas Hopkins.

PRISONER HOPKINS's DEFENCE.

When I was taken up, this man took me to the alehouſe to the other ſide of the water in Tooley-ſtreet, and he called for hot, and ſome gin, and ſome beer, and when we came in the coach, now, ſays he, I do not care, I want I new coat, I ſhall have a great coat this winter; ſays I, do you want my coat, for you have torn it very much; then he up with his ſtick, and hit me over the head.

Do you mean to ſay you were in liquor? Yes, I was.

Court to Naſh. Was he in liquor?—No, quite ſober, ſeemingly to me.

PRISONER LYONS's DEFENCE.

I have no more to ſay, than this man came and broke the door open where I was aſleep, and took me out of bed.

The priſoner Lyons called two witneſſes to his character.

Taylor. In the pocket-book I found this note on the Victualling-Office for ſixty-five pounds.

Court to Proſecutor. Look at this pocket-book, and at that note?—I have no manner of doubt, on looking at them; here is my name in this book in fifty different places.

Jury. Hand up the book and the claſp here.

GEORGE LYONS,
THOMAS HOPKINS, } GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

240. JOHN TOPING was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of February, one ſilver table-ſpoon, value 10s. the property of John Dixon, Eſq.

MARY GROVES ſworn.

I live with Mr. Dixon; the ſpoon was loſt yeſterday was a week, the 15th; the priſoner is a chimney-ſweeper; at ſeven o'clock he was in the kitchen; the boy went in the kitchen before me, and when I came in, I miſſed two table-ſpoons, which I left there the over-night; I am firſt up in the morning, and laſt a-bed; I miſſed the ſpoons, but thought he had not time to take them, when I miſſed them, I aſked him if he had ſwept any other chimnies in the court, he ſaid yes.

What court was it?——Church-row, No. 3; I went to Mrs. Solomons, to aſk if they knew the man's name that ſwept their chimney, and deſired them to ſend for him to ſweep another, by which means the man was taken.

You are quite ſure this is the man?——I am quite ſure of it.

JOHN PARRY ſworn.

I had an order from my maſter to fetch the ſpoon out of pawn from Mr. Davidſon's at London Wall; I found one ſpoon, with my maſter's creſt upon it, the other was ſold in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet.

BARTHOLOMEW SOLOMONS ſworn.

I took the priſoner, and put him in the watch-houſe.

MARY SOLOMONS ſworn.

Mr. Dixon's ſervant came to my houſe, and ſaid ſhe had loſt two ſpoons; I ſhewed the ſervant the priſoner, and ſhe ſaid that was the man.

Mr. DAVIDSON's SERVANT ſworn.

I took the ſpoon in of the priſoner, I know the priſoner; he brought the ſpoon on the Friday, and it was taken from us by Mr. Dixon's coachman, Parry.

Court to Parry. What day did you get the ſpoon from Davidſon's?—On Friday, and delivered it to Mrs. Solomons at Guildhall. Mr. Dixon gave his ſervant a pattern ſpoon to ſhew the Alderman, who gave them to Harriſon the officer.

—— HARRISON ſworn.

(The ſpoon produced.)

How can you tell which is the ſpoon; was the ſpoon that was ſtolen marked?

Mr. Dixon. The ſpoon I ſent by my ſervant has a dent in the bowl, which he has, and the ſpoon ſtolen, which was given to the officer, had no dent in it.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had ſwept ſeveral chimnies that morning; as ſoon as we have done work, we ſift the ſoot, among which I found this ſpoon, and not knowing whoſe it was, I pawned it in my own name; I never was before an Alderman in my life.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

241. JOHN HARWOOD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of February, a ſilver table-ſpoon, value 9s. a ſtone breaſt-pin, ſet in gold, value 5s. a linen ſhift, value 3s. a pair of cotton ſtockings, value 18d. a man's ſattin waiſtcoat, value 5s. a ſilk handkerchief, value 3s. a pair of ſhoes, value 6s. a pair of ſilver buckles, value 10s. a ſtone ſtock-buckle, ſet in ſilver, value 2s. twenty-one ſhillings in monies numbered, and one counterfeit ſhilling, the property of Joſeph Conſtable, in his dwelling houſe.

JOSEPH CONSTABLE ſworn.

I live at the Pied Bull at Holloway; on the 14th of February inſtant I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; about twelve at noon the ſpoon was found upon the priſoner; the priſoner lodged at my houſe; I miſſed the things the ſame night, the priſoner had left my houſe; the priſoner came in about eleven, and ſent for a pint of beer, and ſome bread and cheeſe, and then he left the bread and cheeſe, and went up ſtairs, and did this robbery: I came in from the garden, where I had been digging, and I met him coming down ſtairs; he then went and took his bread and cheeſe, and ſaid, landlord, I will ſettle with you to-night all I owe you, and he went out directly, he has never been at the houſe ſince, I never ſaw him after till he was brought up before my Lord Mayor.

Where was he taken up?—At London Wall; the pawn-broker ſtopped him.

JAMES CREIGHTON ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker at London Wall, I know the priſoner; on the 14th of February, about nine at night, he came into our ſhop with this ſpoon to pledge. (Produced.) I aſked him whoſe property it was, and he ſaid it belonged to his brother, and then afterwards he ſaid it belonged to his brother's maſter, that lived at Shoreditch; I told him I would go with him to his brother's maſter to Shoreditch, and going by Biſhopſgate church-yard, he ran down there; I miſſed him directly; he ſaid his name was John Harwood.

Did he tell you where he lived?——He ſaid he worked at a cow-houſe, he did not ſay where he lived; I ran after him down Biſhopſgate church-yard, and caught him juſt going into Broad-ſtreet; I then told him I would not go any further with him, but I would take him back to our ſhop at London Wall; we ſent for a conſtable, and ſent him to the Compter: the next day, we had him up before the Lord Mayor; he deſired us to advertize the ſpoon; we did ſo, and the proſecutor came and claimed it.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

On Monday I went to go to work at my maſter's at Iſlington, and he had nothing to do that day, and in my landlord's houſe we were playing at cards, and there came in a diſorderly woman and a man, I took them, my Lord, to be nothing but whore and rogue, for his breeches-knees were all over dirt; and we played at cards for three pots of beer, and I played with him, and in the mean time my landlord winked at me, and I winked at him, and he ſays I ſhould not grudge that woman ſixpence to go up ſtairs with me; the woman went out firſt, and he followed her, and we drank our beer; they were gone about half an hour, and I ſaid, where have you been? and he ſaid, what is that to you, and then the woman came in again, and they went up ſtairs together; the next morning I got up, in order to go to work; my maſter was gone to London, then I thought as I could not go to work, I would go and fetch me a clean ſhirt; and going along I found this ſpoon honeſtly, and will be bound for it, it had been hauled out by ſomebody that had ſtolen it.

Court. How long have you lived at Mr. Conſtable's?—Seven days.

What made you run away from the pawnbroker?——Becauſe they ſaid, they would keep the ſpoon, I have not a friend in the world but you my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, notwithſtanding that the proſecutor keeps a very bad houſe, and is never in bed till one or two in the morning, and laſt Sunday morning, he came to bed at two o'clock very drunk.

Proſecutor. I ſhut up every night at ten, I have nothing to do in the night.

GUILTY, 39s.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

---

242. WILLIAM ATTERBURY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th of January laſt, one piece of white baize containing forty-ſix yards, value 36s. the property of Thomas Bowerbank, and Samuel Hague.

HENRY BARRS ſworn.

I am a cartman, I was employed to carry theſe goods, I delivered them ſafe, there were four pieces, and I had ſeven pieces returned, it was about ſix in the evening, as I was returning in the Minories, the porter who was with me, ſays we are done, and I looked and ſaw a man taking a piece out of the cart, I ſaw the man while he was behind the cart with it, I ſaw the man run away, he took it in his arms, and put it upon his left ſhoulder, he croſſed the ſtreet, and whether he dropped it on the pavement or in the kennel, I cannot ſay, but it rolled in the kennel, I purſued him, the porter took up the goods, and carried them to the cart, and I ſaw the priſoner taken before I left him again.

Was he ever out of your ſight?——No, Sir, never.

Did you ſee him drop the goods?—Yes.

Mr. Silveſter, Priſoner's Counſel. What o'clock was it?—About ſix, the moon ſhone very bright, I was upon the pavement, the priſoner came behind on the off-ſide of the cart, it was wrapped up in a tilt, I was on the near ſide, the priſoner was taken, and carried to the watch-houſe, and he was reſcued.

JOHN PARTRIDGE ſworn.

I was with the cart, I ſaw the man take a piece out of the cart, and put it on his ſhoulder, and walk off with it, I was told by the carman, that he was taken directly after by the patrol; I took up the goods, I ſaw them drop off his ſhoulder, and I picked them up, I was cloſe by him when he dropped them.

Did you ſee him ſtopped?——No, I did not, the carman ſaw him ſtopped.

What were the goods?—They are here, it was one piece of baize, and I directly put the goods in the cart, and took them home and delivered them to the warehouſeman, his name is Sexton.

Mr. Silveſter. Then you ſaw ſome man take ſome goods, and then you took them, and put them in the cart?——Yes.

Court. Do you know the man by ſight who took them?—Yes, I ſhould know him.

Look round.

(The witneſs pointed to the wrong man, and ſaid, "To be ſure I was wrong.)

Court. Look round again?——That is the man.

Mr. Silveſter. How came you to pitch upon this young man?——He was laying down ſo, ſo I took him to be the man.

WILLIAM BOX ſworn.

I was one of the officers of the night, I took charge of the priſoner, it was the 10th of January, the man was brought before I got into the watch-houſe; one Solomon Davis gave me charge of the priſoner, we tied him with ſtrings round his arms, for fear he ſhould get from us, and at the end of Baſinghall-ſtreet, he was got from us; knives were drawn, and a gang met us, and cried d—n your eyes! come cut away, come cut away, and when he got away he turned round and ſaid d—n your eyes, what do you want with me, there were three that reſcued him, I am ſure this is the ſame man, he was taken up about a fortnight afterwards, we had him in the watch-houſe with a light, I ſhould know him from a thouſand.

Mr. Silveſter. Was it a moon light night?——I cannot pretend to ſay.

You had like to have got into diſgrace about this?——Yes, there were two of us, Davis and I, Davis is a conſtable.

The ward ſuſpected you had touched a little?——I believe they did.

But you are ſure you did not?——Yes.

SOLOMON DAVIS ſworn.

When I came into the watch-houſe, the man was in the watch-houſe.

Who elſe was in the watch-houſe?——I cannot particularly ſay, there was one Mr. Budgen, a coachman, a carman, and a porter, we gave charge of the priſoner, he got away afterwards, that is the ſame man, I am ſure of it.

Mr. Silveſter. You was ſworn upon the Old Teſtament, I hope?——Yes.

There were a great many people in the watch-houſe?——Yes, ſeveral.

Who brought this man in?——I cannot tell.

What are you?——A conſtable.

How many of you went towards the Compter?—William Box and me.

What light had you in the watch-houſe?—Only one candle.

JOHN DUNGEN ſworn.

I am a patrol, there was a hue and cry of ſtop thief! and I took the priſoner into cuſtody, to the watch-houſe.

Who gave you charge of him?——The carman and Mr. Birch, this is the carman, the priſoner is the ſame man I took to the watch-houſe.

Mr. Silveſter. What kind of a night was it ?—It muſt be dark.

Was it light ?—I cannot poſitively ſay whether it was light or dark; I did not know him before.

Court. Do you recollect whether it was moon light ?—No, I do not.

Mr. Bowerbank. The goods were brought back to my warehouſe that night.

Was the piece delivered to you, that was ſaid to be taken from the cart ?—It was a piece of baize, it had a particular mark upon it, it is my property, I am clear of that.

Priſoner. I never was in this man's cuſtody, I know none of them; I was apprehended by one Mr. Jealous walking along the ſtreet, and they ſent theſe men, and they came and ſwore to me.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

243. FRANCIS PHIPPS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Ward, about the hour of twelve in the night, on the 27th of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one wooden box, value 6d. a ſcrew, value 9s. an oil ſtone, value 8s. a chiſſel, value 8d. the property of William Margiſſon the younger; one hand ſaw, value 6s. another ſaw, value 5s. a wooden plough and irons therein, value 10s. an oil ſtone, value 6s. a ſaw, value 4s. a hammer, value 4d. a ſlide rule, value 2s. a broad axe, value 4s. the property of the ſaid William Ward.

WILLIAM MARGISSON the younger ſworn.

I am apprentice to Mr. William Ward, he lives at Great Ealing, and keeps a houſe there; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, the great box was found, and the things were loſt on the 27th of January, I ſaw them the ſame night, I put them in the cheſt and locked it.

WILLIAM WARD ſworn.

I am a carpenter and houſekeeper, my ſhop was broke open, my ſhop is a ſeparate building from the houſe, about ten feet, but all within the wall, the lad John Atkins that is here, was the laſt perſon in the ſhop; I aroſe a little before ſeven in the morning, and when I came there I found the tools of my cheſt on the bench all taken out, and the things mentioned in the indictment that belonged to me, all taken away; I never ſaw the tools again, I know nothing of the priſoner, I have no reaſon to charge him, but from the great box being found in his lodgings.

CHARLES YOUNG ſworn.

The priſoner was apprehended the 6th of February, he was offering three oil ſtones and a hand ſaw to pawn; he was brought to the office, and delivered into charge; I and another went and ſearched his lodgings, he told us where he lodged, and I found this great box, and this hammer, a pair of compaſſes, a rule and a chalk line, between the bed and the ſacking; and I found two duplicates; I went to the pawnbroker's, and I found ſome things, but I found no owner to them; upon further examination, I aſked him where he got this great box, and he ſaid, his brother gave it him; I aſked him how long he had had it, and he ſaid about a month, he ſaid, it was above three weeks; why, ſays I, the young man has not loſt it above a fortnight to day, then the young man came and looked at it, and he ſaid he had put in a ſcrew, and broke it, ſince that he had put a nail in; the things that were found were advertized, and the parties came in conſequence of that; he gave me that deſcription of the box before he ſaw it; he ſaid, the ſcrew was broke, and he had driven in a nail.

Margiſſon. This is my box, I know it from the nail, and the ſcrew that is in it.

Such a thing might happen to another box?——I made it, I am ſure this box was that evening in my cloſet in the ſhop, the evening of the 27th.

Atkins. I found this ſtick under the priſoner's bed.

(A large aſh ſtick.)

Court to Young. Do you know the priſoner?——He ſaid, he was going to work upon the keys, his wife ſaid, he was a carpenter, and his landlord ſaid, he was a wheeler.

WILLIAM PICKERING ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I ſearched the priſoner's lodgings, and I found theſe tools that are here produced, concealed under the bed, there was a baſket and bag, but nothing of any conſequence; and this ſtick was laying under the bedſtead, I aſked him what buſineſs he was, he ſaid, he was a working man on the keys, and his brother had given him theſe tools, they were his lodgings where we found the tools, the woman ſaid, they are my huſband's, he is a carpenter, but his landlord ſaid, he believed he was a wheeler.

I live with Mr. Ward at Great Ealing, I am his apprentice, he is a carpenter, his ſhop does not join to his houſe, but it is in a court-yard ſurrounded by a wall intirely; on the 27th of January laſt, I ſhut up his ſhop, it was locked and faſt about five o'clock, I kept the key of my maſter's cheſt, that was locked; one of the doors of the ſhop was faſtened with a bolt, the door I went out at was locked and faſt, the third door was faſtened with a ſtaple; I went to the ſhop in the morning about ſeven, I took the key out of the kitchen.

In what ſtate did you find the ſhop?—I got in at the window, and opened the two doors, there was a pane of glaſs to the window broken, and a board nailed up, and that board was puſhed down, that hole was large enough to get the priſoner's body in, when that board was torn down; theſe two doors were both faſt; when I ſhut up ſhop I locked the door next the kitchen: my maſter's cheſt and Margiſſon's cheſt were both open, the hinges were off Margiſſon's cheſt, and ſome of the tools were taken away; I had put my maſter's into the cheſt the night before, and the things belonging to him mentioned in the indictment were miſſing, I know nothing of the priſoner.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have a brother gone to the Eaſt Indies, carpenter's-mate, and theſe tools belonged to him, and he gave them to me.

Have you any witneſſes to call to prove this?——No, Sir, I cannot ſay I have, I am an entire ſtranger indeed, only my landlord.

Court to Young. How came you to ſearch the lodgings of the priſoner?—Becauſe he told me where he lived, he was ſtopped with three oil ſtones, and a hand ſaw which are not claimed at all, ſome carpenters who had loſt their tools, were going after their tools to different ſhops, and he run out of one of the ſhops as they came in.

Jury to Young. You ſay nobody owned this ſtock, and bit, and plough.

Priſoner. They all belong to my brother.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s. but not of the burglary.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

244. MARGARET DAWSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 12th of February two cotton gowns, value 12s. one pair of cotton ſtockings, value 10d. a black ſilk hat, value 12d. a cloth cloak, value 12d. a linen ſhift, value 10d. a pair of ſhoes, value 2s. a linen apron, value 12d. two check aprons, value 12d. three caps, value 12d. two muſlin handkerchiefs, chiefs, value 12d. a dimity petticoat, value 2s. three pair of lace robins, value 6s. a linen petticoat, value 5s. one ring, value 20s. one hoop garnet ring, ſet in gold, value 20s. one other ring, value 10s. a foreign ſilver medal, value 2s. ſix dollars, value 27s. a French crown, value 4s. 6d. a piece of foreign gold coin, value 3s. 4d. a guinea, value 1l. 1s. a quarter guinea, value 5s. 3d. twelve crowns, value 3l. nine half crowns, value 1l. 2s. 6d. thirteen ſilver threepences, value 3s. 3d. nine ſilver fourpences, value 3s. one ſilver twopence, value 2d. five ſilver pence, value 5d. two pieces of copper coin, called farthings, value an halfpenny, and twenty-one ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of Joſeph Shetley.

JOSEPH SHETLEY ſworn.

I know the priſoner, ſhe was ſervant to me; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment on the 12th of February. On Sunday laſt my wife and me went to take a walk after dinner; we went out between two and three, my wife came home firſt, I did not return till ſhe ſent for me, it was about ſeven, and when I came home, I found her in great confuſion, the houſe was robbed, and the girl gone away; I enquired where ſhe came from, and I heard ſhe came from Liverpool; I accordingly enquired at the Golden Croſs, Charing Croſs, and deſcribing her, I heard ſhe was gone off by the Cheſter coach, which went off that evening about ſeven; they ſaid I might overtake her at Mims; I took poſtchaiſe with Mr. Lowe, and at St. Alban's we overtook the coach, and on the roof of the coach we found the priſoner; I then deſired her to come down; ſhe had told the coachman ſhe had a bundle, and ſhe acknowledged that to be her's; we then went into the Bull, and when we came in, Mr. Lowe ſaid, you have ſome of your maſter's property about you; ſhe made no reply, but put her hands into her pockets, and took out theſe things, of which this is an account; I kept the things ſeparate till I returned, and I took the account of them myſelf; they were tied up firſt in the purſes, and theſe two boxes, containing the things in the indictment; I cannot ſwear to the money, but there is a three-and-fourpence-halfpenny piece which I know, and here is a remarkable mourning ring written withinſide, that I have no doubt of being my wife's, I have the fellow of it at home; there is another ring likewiſe, which has my name in it, J. S. In general, the things in the indictment were all found upon her, except a guinea which ſhe paid to the coach.

What did ſhe ſay for herſelf?—She ſaid nothing for herſelf; on coming home, I aſked her if any body was concerned with her, and if ſhe would let me know who was concerned with her, I would be eaſy with her, and ſhe ſaid no; when ſhe came back, I brought her back in the chaiſe, ſhe took out her own things, and left the remainder, which Mrs. Shetley will ſpeak to. This is the bundle which was taken from her.

FRANCES SHETLEY ſworn.

(Depoſes to the Clothes.)

Court to Mrs. Shetley. What may be the value of the things in the bundle?——Two guineas.

Proſecutor. I know we had all theſe crown-pieces and foreign coins, and we had not them on the Sunday night.

What may the value of the rings be?—Two guineas.

WILLIAM LOWE ſworn.

I went with the proſecutor, and ſtopped the woman, but I ſhould not know her again, ſhe is ſo much altered ſince; I ſaw the bundle produced, which ſhe acknowledged to be her's; I aſked her, when ſhe came off the coach, if ſhe had any thing about her; ſhe made no reply; I aſked her if any body belonged to her in the coach, ſhe ſaid no; then we took her into the houſe, and ſhe produced the purſes with the money, and the boxes with the rings, which have been produced.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY, Death.

She was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutor and Jury, on account of her youth, being only fifteen, and it appearing to be her firſt offence.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

245. JOHN KITSALL, alias WILMOT, alias SMITH, was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting James Grey, on the King's highway, on the 17th day of February, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, one gold watch, value 10l. one cornelian ſeal, ſet in gold, value 20s. one ribbon, value 1d. one key, value 1d. and one guinea in money, his property.

JAMES GREY ſworn.

On Friday was a week I was robbed, the 17th of February, I think it was a quarter paſt twelve at noon; it was within about ten yards of my Lord Mansfield's garden-gate; I was walking down from Highgate, towards the Spaniards, by Fitzroy farm-gate, I met the priſoner walking his horſe up the hill ſlowly, and he ſtooped and picked up a halfpenny, and gave it to a beggarman; he was walking his horſe ſlow, he did not ſeem to take any notice of me, but I walked on, and he paſſed me; when I came within about ten yards of my Lord's garden gate, I loſt the footpath of that ſide, and croſſed over to the other ſide, and was ſurprized to find myſelf ſtopped all of a ſudden by this perſon, with a piſtol at my head; he came up on my left ſide, and ſaid halloo! I immediately turned back, and the piſtol was within ſix inches of my ear; he ſaid, I am a gentleman in diſtreſs, pleaſe to deliver your watch and your money inſtantly; I looked at him, and I ſaw he was the ſame perſon I had paſſed before, which ſurprized me a good deal, and I was getting off my glove, but I did not pull it off faſt enough, and he began to uſe bad language; I took off my glove as quick as I could, and gave him my gold watch and ſeal, and a guinea and eighteen pence; he ſaid, this is not all the money; I told him it was all that I had; he then rode off a few yards, and I ſaw him, when he was five or ſix yards from me, look at the watch, and put it into his coat pocket; then he began to flog his horſe very much, and rode up the hill; I immediately loſt ſight of him, but I ran up the hill as faſt as I could, and I met a gentleman, whoſe name is North, and ſome other people, in a minute or two; I aſked him if he had been diſturbed by a fellow that rode up that minute upon a grey horſe; I told them I had been robbed, and he and a lady, and a gentleman that was with him, immediately turned and went with me to the Spaniards, and there they met with a perſon who lives in the neighbourhood, and he went to town as faſt as he could, and went to the office, and gave information.

Are you ſure of the perſon of the man that ſtopped you?—Yes, I am ſure of his perſon, perfectly ſure of him.

Are you ſure that that is the man that robbed you?—Yes, that was the man; but he is not in the dreſs now he was then; he had an olive-green great coat on; my watch has never been found, the ſeal has and the ſtring, the ſeal was found that night.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. The perſon that robbed you had an olive-green great coat on?——Yes.

Did you make any obſervation on the number of capes that coat had?—I knew it when it was ſhewn to me; I was not particular whether it had two or three when I gave the deſcription at Bow-ſtreet, where I have heard that I might ſay there were three capes.

I am told you did?——It certainly has three capes, there are two that laid down, and one that is the collar, that ſtands up.

That is a very diſtinct thing; what ſort of hat?—A round hat, down on the face, and down all round.

The perſon that robbed you, told you he was a gentleman in diſtreſs, and therefore aſked for your money?——Yes.

JOHN TOWNSEND ſworn.

On Friday the 17th of February, I ſaw Mr. Grey at a public houſe in Bow-ſtreet; I heard him ſaying he had been robbed by a highwayman near Lord Manſfield's houſe; as ſome of our people had been out that day, they had heard of it before me, but I heard from Mr. Grey that ſome of our people were waiting at the Catherine-wheel-yard, in Windmill-ſtreet; I believe it was about half after three when I went up, and I waited there in company with Atkins and Sayre, and Shallard, I believe till about half paſt eight, and at about half paſt eight, Sayre, who was ſtanding at the window, tapped at the window; there came in a grey horſe, the priſoner came on it, and turned into the yard; I was then in the road juſt as he came in, and he ſays to me, halloo, hoſtler; I ſaid, halloo, Atkins and Shallard, and at the moment he got off the horſe, from his left-hand great coat pocket I pulled out this piſtol, and called them to aſſiſt me; we ſearched him further, and in his right-ſide breeches pocket I pulled out a guinea, eighteen pence, and a half guinea, and this ſeal that was in his breeches pocket; he ſaid, what do you want with me? I hope you will uſe me well; and we ſaid we meant to take him to Bow-ſtreet.

Mr. Garrow. You have been now a good number of years in apprehending offenders?——Yes.

You have a pretty accurate knowledge of old offenders?——Certainly.

Had you ever this priſoner in your cuſtody before?—Never.

Had you the ſmalleſt complaint againſt him?—Never in cuſtody clearly.

He is not an old offender?—Certainly not; if he had, I muſt have known him.

JOSEPH LITHGOLD ſworn.

I keep a livery ſtable; I know the priſoner, he was taken at my houſe; I know the horſe he rode, he called on Thurſday the 16th, to engage him on Friday morning.

Did you know the priſoner?—Yes.

How long have you known him?——About three months only as a cuſtomer.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am innocent of the charge that is alledged againſt me,

Court to Mr. Grey. What ſort of ſeal was your's?—A red cornelian ſeal, with an anchor and cable, and motto, "Anchor faſt," with the cypher J. G. upon it; this is the ſeal.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

246. The ſaid JOHN KITSALL, otherwiſe WILMOT, otherwiſe SMITH, was again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Harper on the King's highway, on the 5th day of October laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, one metal watch, value 40s. a chain, value 1d. a ſilver ſeal, value 1s. a baſe metal key, value 1d. one half-guinea, value 10s. 6d. and ſix ſhillings in monies numbered, his property.

There was no evidence to bring this charge home to the priſoner.

NOT GUILTY.

---

247. VINER COOK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 25th day of January laſt, one wooden caſk, value 2s. and fifty-two gallons of Spermaceti oil, value 9l. the property of William Parker.

WILLIAM PARKER ſworn.

I live in Whitechapel; on the 25th of January, I loſt a caſk of oil from my door, and found it at the priſoner's houſe; he was at home when we firſt went there, but he made his eſcape; the caſk was ſtaved, and the oil running about the houſe, the caſk was marked C. H. A. M and R. but it is ſo imperfect, it would be difficult for any body elſe to make it out.

(The Caſk produced and depoſed to.)

JOSEPH

JOSEPH PARKER ſworn.

I went to the priſoner's houſe, and I looked through the key-hole, I heard a knocking, and ſaw the priſoner cutting the caſk; I knocked at the door, and the priſoner opened it; I went away, and when I returned, he was gone, and the caſk was cut, and the oil running about the cellar; about nine or ten gallons were taken out of the cellar.

CHARLES DORMER ſworn.

I attend the Rotation Office in Whitechapel occaſionally, I went with Mr. Parker to the priſoner's houſe, he applied his eye to the door and ſaid there he is now, I ſee he is chopping the hoops off; I knocked at the door, and the priſoner came and opened it; ſays I, Cook, what have you been about? he could could hardly make an anſwer, I aſked him for a light, he ſaid I have no light; I went for a light, and in the mean time the priſoner eſcaped; we ſaw the oil running, there was Mr. Parker's name on the caſk.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I wiſh to call two perſons that were preſent when the oil was brought in.

JAMES CHIDDAM ſworn.

Mr. Cook is my father-in-law, I am going on fifteen, I was in the houſe when the caſk of oil was brought there, it was about half paſt two.

Were thoſe men that brought it, ſervants of the priſoner, or employed by him?——No.

Did he receive it?——No; he was not in the houſe when it came.

The priſoner called four witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

248. CHRISTIANA FITZPATRICK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th day of January laſt, two canvas bags, value 1d. and two guineas, value 2l. 2s. the property of William Morgan, privily from his perſon.

WILLIAM MORGAN ſworn.

I know the priſoner; on the 18th of January; about twelve at night, as I was going home, the priſoner ſtood in the ſtreet, near Mile-end Turnpike, I was at a benefit club in Butcher-hall-lane, Newgate-ſtreet; ſhe ſays, as I was going paſt, how do you do; and I ſtopped, ſo I catched hold of her; ſhe aſked me if I wanted a night's lodging, and I ſaid I had one to go home to; I never ſpoke more words to her; I turned round, and was going off, and I put my hand into my pocket, and miſſed my property. I had two guineas in a ſmall canvas bag, and ſome ſilver in another canvas bag, I was not above four yards from the woman when I miſſed my money; I went to the woman, and ſearched her, I could not find it, and the watchman was coming by, calling twelve, and the watchman came and ſaid, let me ſee if I cannot find it on her; he ſearched her, and found the two guineas and the bag upon her; I was preſent at the time; the watchman took out the money into his hand, and took her to the watch-houſe; I told him, before he ſhewed the money to the night conſtable, that if there was any more than two guineas it was not my property; the conſtable has the money.

You are ſure you did not make her a preſent of this bag and money?——No, my Lord, I did not.

MATTHEW HENRY ſworn.

I am the watchman; I ſearched this woman in the preſence of the proſecutor; I was crying paſt twelve, the proſecutor called out, watch! and two watchmen had got up before me, and the proſecutor had got all the priſoner's things off, and could not find it, and the proſecutor ſhook out a canvas bag from her petticoats or ſomewhere, and he ſaid, that was the bag that had the other bag with the money in; and with that, I ſaid to them, do not take her to the watch-houſe yet, ſhe muſt have the property about her, I kept looking about to ſee if ſhe chucked the property away; and going to take her to the watch-houſe, I ſaw her put her hands quite through her pocket hole to her p——e p—-s, and I ſaid do not ſearch her, and a gentleman that ſtood oppoſite held the candle, then I laid her down on the ground, I took the property out, rolled up in her ſhift, and after that I kept it in my right hand, till I gave it to the officer of the night; it was a little brown canvas bag.

Did you examine the contents of the bag?—No, not till I gave it to the officer of the night, the proſecutor told me if there was any more than two guineas in the bag, it was not his property: when the bag was opened, there was the two guineas and nothing elſe.

DAVID MILDROM.

The way of ſwearing in my country, is by holding up the hand, I am a North-Briton; it is not the common cuſtom of the country to kiſs the book, I have no objection to the words.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I ſwore a man ſo, with the book before him, and I ſtated it afterwards to all the Judges, I remember perfectly well there were a ſet of thieves coming through Scotland, and they made a general ſweep, and then came into a place called Long Town, which is the firſt pariſh in England, the Scotchmen found theſe people at a public houſe, and they were committed to Carliſle gaol, and they were tried before me at the aſſizes, the proſecutor objected to being ſworn, and I ſent to Mr. Lockhart, and he told me that there was a particular ſect in Scotland, that would not take the oath by touching the book or kiſſing; I took his oath by holding up the hand, and I afterwards ſtated it to the Judges, and their opinion was with me.

DAVID MILDROM ſworn

(In the following form by Mr. Shelton.)

“ You ſwear according to the cuſtom of “ your country, and the religion you profeſs, that the evidence you ſhall give, “ &c.” I am an officer of Whitechapel, I was in the watch-houſe when ſhe was brought, I received a canvas bag with two guineas in it, from the watchman.

(The bag depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going home, and the corner of Ducking-pond lane, I pulled up my ſhoe at heel, and this man came up and laid hold of me, he pulled me to the ſtep and threw me down acroſs the ſtep, and I ſaw him put his hand into his pocket, and lay ſomething down; I ſaid, if I am an unfortunate woman, I am not to lay down my carcaſs for nothing, he ſaid, he would have connections with me, whether or no; I ſuffered them to ſtrip me, and they pulled and hauled me from one place to another, the watchman came up, and picked up the outſide canvas bag, the proſecutor very well knows he pulled me about, I never ſpoke to him; and if he has forſworn himſelf, God Almighty forgive him! I am very willing to ſuffer what you pleaſe, I have nobody but God and you Gentlemen, to take my part.

Court to Morgan. You ſuſpected that your purſe was gone preſently?—No, my Lord, not then, till I put my hand in my pocket, then I miſſed it directly, and I knew it was there the minute before; I was no ways in liquor.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not privately.

To be fined 6d. and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

249. PETER WHITMORE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt day of February, four pounds nineteen ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of Edward Taylor, in the dwelling-houſe of William Clark.

EDWARD TAYLOR ſworn.

I loſt four pounds nineteen ſhillings, on the 1ſt day of February, from under my bed, I live in the houſe of William Clark, in Ferrets-court, in Holborn, it was in a canniſter nailed down on the floor under my bed, nobody in the world knew of it, but the priſoner, he laid with me, I took him out of diſtreſs, becauſe he was poor, the priſoner knew I had ſome money, but did not know I had ſo much, he has ſeen me put ſome in, I had been acquainted with him about two months, he had been with me three weeks, the priſoner abſented himſelf after I loſt the money, he owned he took ſix ſhillings of my money, in my miſtreſs's parlour, before another gentlewoman, and he offered to pay it at two ſhillings and ſixpence a week.

What did you ſay to him?——He ſaid, he had friends, and he would ſend to them in the morning; I never ſaid any thing to him, the acknowledgment was made at my miſtreſs's ſhop, where I work, in Cary-ſtreet, a tin-ſhop; he ſaid he would be very willing to pay the money before he would go to trouble; and he ſaid, he took it out of the ſide of the canniſter, he was not promiſed nor threatened by any body in my preſence, he was ſpeaking of the four pounds nineteen ſhillings which I had loſt.

WILLIAM FALKNER ſworn.

I am a patrol in Lincoln's-Inn-fields, I heard the priſoner ſay at the watch-houſe, he would pay the money belonging to Edward Taylor, which was four pounds nineteen ſhillings, at half a crown a week.

CATHERINE CLARK ſworn.

I am wife of William Clark: the proſecutor lodges at our houſe, in Ferrets-court, I never ſaw the contents of this canniſter.

MARGARET WELCH ſworn.

I live at Mr. Bennet's, tinman, the priſoner came in there, when the proſecutor took him, he ſaid, he did not take all the four pounds nineteen ſhillings, he only took ſix ſhillings out of the box; he ſaid, he would freely pay all the money back at half a crown a week; and I aſked him how he could ſecure it.

Court. So you was aſſiſting as far as you could in compounding this felony?—No, Sir.

Had he made him any promiſe?—No.

JAMES BENNET ſworn.

Depoſed to the ſame effect.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never took any money.

The priſoner called four witneſſes to his character.

Court to Proſecutor. In what ſtate was the canniſter in which your money was put?—It was nailed down, and a hole at top to put the money in, I ſaved it to buy me a bed and bedſtead, the nails were drawn out. I kept an account of it in my head, I am ſure there was that ſum.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

250. ELIZABETH PEARCE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of January laſt, one ſilver watch, value 2l. four guineas, value 4l. 4s. one half-guinea, value 10s. 6d. one dollar, value 4s. and twenty-ſeven ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of John Ford.

JOHN FORD ſworn.

I am a barber and peruke maker, and houſekeeper, in Cable-ſtreet, Roſemary-lane; I am a ſingle man, I was going up Roſemary-lane, on Friday night, I believe it was the 27th, I met the young woman, and I ſpoke to her, and I ſaid, how do you do young woman, and ſhe ſaid pretty well thank you, Sir; ſo I ſpoke a word or two to her, where do you live, where are you going, ſhe ſaid, I live in Buckle-ſtreet, with my father and mother; ſays I, will you go home with me to night, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would, I told her I was going into a public-houſe a little further on, and if ſhe would come and ſtay in the tap room while I had a pint of beer, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would, ſhe came to the Queen's-head, and waited there, I ordered her to have ſome purl and gin, and I paid for it; ſhe came home with me, and ſomehow or other in the morning, when I was aſleep, ſhe got up unknown to me; when I went to bed, I put my watch in a chair, by the bedſide.

Before you went home with her, was you quite ſober?—I think ſo, I was ſober enough to take care of myſelf, and every thing I had about me; I went out about three or four o'clock, I came home from the firſt houſe to my own houſe, and ſtaid there ſometime, then I went out again, deſiring the man to put up the ſhutters, and ſaid, I would be in inſtantly; I will ſwear I was ſo ſober as to know what I was about when I came home, when I went to bed, I put my watch in a chair by my bedſide; I had ſix guineas in my waiſtcoat pocket, four guineas and a half in gold, and a dollar, and twenty-ſeven ſhillings in money; I am ſure I had this money in my pocket when I picked up this girl; I pulled off my clothes, and laid them on the bed, when I awoke in the morning, I felt with my hand about the bed, and I was ſurpriſed there was nobody there; I got up and came down ſtairs, I believe in my ſhirt, if I do not miſtake; I found the door open, and the young woman gone; I loſt nothing out of my ſhop, thank God! then I called my man who ſlept in the houſe, Tom, get up, I am ruined! and I went to Buckle-ſtreet, where ſhe ſaid ſhe lived, but I could not find her; I found her afterwards, ſhe had bought a parcel of clothes with the money that was miſſing.

CHARLES DORMER ſworn.

I took the priſoner between eight and nine in the morning, ſhe was putting on this new petticoat, I put my hand in her pocket, the firſt thing I found was this watch (Depoſed to.) then I took out this little box, with two guineas and a half in it, and two half crowns, and ſixpence, and a dollar.

Proſecutor. The guineas have no mark; the dollar is marked in two or three places, black as if it was burnt, I have had it a long time, I can ſwear to it.

Dormer. I found this new gown and ſtays, and a cloak, and a new ſhift, ſhe had the fellow to it on, and the proſecutor's handkerchief, and a new apron and two new caps; when I took her into cuſtody, ſhe deſired me to try, and ſettle it with the proſecutor, and ſhe would return the things, ſhe ſaid, it was the firſt fault, and ſhe would never do the like again; I did not promiſe her nor threaten, ſhe ſaid, ſhe had laid the reſt of the money out.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The money was my own, I was on board a ſhip with a young man ſix weeks, and when he got his impreſs money and wages, he gave me ſome money to buy me ſome clothes, and he told me to bring him ſome things which he wanted, and the ſame night I came from on board of ſhip, I met the proſecutor, he aſked me to drink, and went to the public houſe, and he gave me this dollar, and he promiſed me half a guinea; I went home with him, and he ſaid he had no money, and he gave me his watch, I told him where I lived, and he was to come for his watch.

Court to Proſecutor. What did you give that girl?—No money at all.

Did you ever give her your watch in pledge?——No; I never told her I had no money, I had plenty of money.

Dormer. We took her in Plow-ſtreet, not a hundred yards from Buckle-ſtreet.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

251. SAMUEL HIGBY was indicted for feloniouſly returning from tranſportation and being found at large the 26th day of January laſt, without any lawful cauſe, before the expiration of the term of ſeven years, for which he was tranſported.

PETER GOFF ſworn.

Here is a certificate of the conviction of the priſoner, which I had of Mr. Shelton.

(The certificate of the conviction read and examined by Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel, with the record, dated the 23d of July, 1783, for ſtealing a cart, value 4l.)

(The other witneſſes were ordered out of Court.)

I was ſent for, and informed the priſoner was at home; I and ſome others went for him, the ſtreet-door was upon the latch, the parlour-door was faſt, and one of the men ſhoved it open; we went into the room, and Bryant laid hold of his ſon-in-law, not knowing the priſoner; ſays he, I will go for him, and we went into the ſtreet, and there we found the priſoner; I am one of the conſtables of the pariſh of St. John, Weſtminſter; Sir Sampſon aſked him how he came here? he ſaid he came to ſee his children.

Mr. Garrow. You do not know this is the man that was tried?——I was not here at the trial.

JOSEPH PERCIVAL ſworn.

I am conſtable; I have ſeen the priſoner before; I knew him perfectly well; I found him the 26th of January at No. 3, Prince's Rents, in the pariſh of St. John the Evangeliſt; I was ſent for to Tothilfields bridewell, and they told me to fetch Goff, and we went to apprehend the priſoner, and we took him to Tothilfields bridewell, and the next day we took him before Sir Sampſon.

Was what paſſed there taken down in writing by Sir Sampſon?—No; Sir Sampſon ſaid, as the man does not deny it, there is no occaſion for any thing further; he acknowledged that he had been tranſported, and he had left the ſhip; he ſaid he ſtood by the captain, while the others aroſe; Sir Sampſon aſked him how he came there, he ſaid he came to ſee his children and grandchildren; I know he was tried here.

Mr. Garrow. Was you here?—No.

Court. Did this man ſay he was on board when the crew aroſe on the captain, and made their eſcape?——Yes.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, they ſhould prove that he was ſentenced to be tranſported, and delivered to the captain.

For the Priſoner.

I am a farmer of turnpikes; I think the firſt of my knowing the priſoner was in Auguſt 1784; he came into my buſineſs the 1ſt of September, he had been in my buſineſs before.

In what employment did you then engage him?——To keep a turnpike at Sutton, near Biggleſwade; I think he kept it one year and three months, his goods are now in my houſe; he conducted himſelf like an honeſt, careful, induſtrious man; I would entruſt him now if he was at large, he had a wife and two children there with him.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, according to my idea, there is a defect in the evidence here; for it is not proved that he was the ſame perſon that was convicted of the ſpecific offence mentioned in the indictment.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

252. RICHARD STEVENS, THOMAS HERBERT, and WILLIAM HARDY, were indicted for felonioſly ſtealing, on the 9th day of February, one deal caſe, value 2s. and one iron wheel, called a wallower wheel, value 39s. the property of Gilbert Handyſide and Thomas Prickett.

GILBERT HANDYSIDE ſworn.

I am in partnerſhip with Mr. Prickett; I loſt a wallower wheel, value 12l. it was in a deal caſe; it was loſt down below bridge.

ROBERT WALKER ſworn.

I am a waterman, I ply down below bridge; I know the three priſoners, I never ſaw them till this evening, I went from King's Stairs to Rotherhithe, between ſeven and eight, on the 9th of February, and rowed as far as Hanover Hole, and from there I drove up with the tide to King's Stairs again, and I ſaw the three priſoners in a boat, with this caſe; as I was an officer, I aſked them what they had got, and they ſaid it was nothing to me, and they put the caſe out of the boat they were in, into the boat I was in.

(The Caſe produced.)

Proſecutor. I had leave of the Magiſtrate to ſhip the wheel, becauſe the ſhip was ſailing; there was the wheel, coggs, wrench, and turnſcrew.

What is the uſe of the wheel?——For a ſugar-mill to grind cane.

Did the priſoners ſay any thing how they came by it?——They ſaid they picked the boat up adrift with that caſe in it, which I cannot diſprove: the mark of the caſe, W. V. J. I ſaw the wheel on the wharf the 9th of February; our waterman carried it down on board the ſhip.

WILLIAM WATSON ſworn.

Between ten and eleven, I took a lighter with this box and ſome other goods, to a ſhip at Prince's-ſtairs, Rotherhithe.

Court to Walker. Where did you take that box?——On the water on the Middleſex ſide.

Watſon. I went and told the mate I had goods for the ſhip; he ſaid he could not take out the goods that day; the name of the ſhip was the Generous Planter; I had two ſmall parcels, which I thought were moveable, I locked them up; there was no one ſingle article which any one man, or even two, could move; I told my maſter what I had done; I left this caſe and another on board the lighter; my maſter aſked me if it was neceſſary to watch the lighter; I told him I thought not, and I left it without any body to watch it during the courſe of the night, for I could not move it myſelf; the next morning I went down to get the things out; the firſt thing I miſſed was theſe two caſes; I aſked the mate, he ſaid he hoiſted out one, and no more; to be ſatisfied of it, I went on board the ſhip, and enquired, and there I found the maſter, and I deſcribed the caſe at the Cuſtom-houſe before I ſaw it, and it was the ſame I miſſed from the lighter.

Court to Walker. When you ſaw theſe three men in that boat with the caſe, and they put it into your boat, what became of the men?—They gave me no account of themſelves, and they had but one paddle in the boat, which I knew was not fit to ſmuggle with, and I took them as diſorderly people; I called for help, and they were taken to Gun-dock, Wapping; I am ſure theſe are the three men.

CHARLES JOHN WATMAN ſworn.

I came to the aſſiſtance of Mr. Walker; I knew the priſoner Stevens, he was taken in the Dock, I am ſure he was one of the three men that was in the boat; I attended them to the Juſtices, and they were committed.

Was you on the Middleſex ſide or the Surry ſide?——On the Middleſex ſide.

STEPHEN HOWARD ſworn.

I ply at Cherry-garden ſtairs, that is on the Surry ſide, I am a waterman; between eight and nine, Mr. Walker cried out, ſtop thieves! I immediately rowed off, and Walker he calls out, is that Howard? I ſaid yes; he ſaid there were four thieves in the boat, he deſired me to row after them; I chaſed them to ſhore to Gun Dock, and three went into the boat; who took them, or whether theſe are the men, I cannot tell.

JOHN ARCHER ſworn.

I am a labourer at Gun Dock; I was there, and the priſoner Stevens aſked me if the gate was open at Gun Dock; this was the 9th of February, between eight and nine; I directly heard the cry of ſtop thief! and I ſaw one of them, him in the blue jacket, that is Stevens, in the dock, and I took a candle, and found the other man ſtepped over the crane; I ſaw nothing of Howard then; Walker helped me to take one.

PRISONER STEVENS's DEFENCE.

I had been on the other ſide of the water; I live in Gravel-lane; I had been in the hoſpital five or ſix weeks, I went to ſeek for work, as I was coming back about ſeven over the water, I came to Execution Dock to get myſelf put over; I waited for a quarter of an hour; I had but a halfpenny, and theſe two priſoners came down to the ſtairs, and they aſked me if I had any halfpence to lend them to go over, I told them I had but one myſelf, and this man being a waterman, he aſked me if I would take a walk with him to Church-ſtairs, as he had an acquaintance a waterman, he would give him a caſt over; I went with him to Church-ſtairs, and there this wherry was laying, with the box in it and one paddle in the boat; we got in the boat, and this man was to go with him, and I gave him the halfpenny to work himſelf over again.

PRISONER HERBERT's DEFENCE.

I juſt come from Greenland Dock, I met this young fellow, and I aſked him if he had his boat, and he ſaid he had not; I ſaid I would go with him to the ſtairs, and ſome waterman would give me a caſt over; I went with Hardy to Prince's-ſtairs; when we came to the ſtairs, he could ſee nobody that he knew, then we went to Church-ſtairs, and there was the boat laying, and we all got into the boat, and this young fellow, Stevens, gave me a halfpenny to bring the boat back, and we met the waterman, and he ſaid he was a King's officer, and he had a right to it, and we put it in his boat.

PRISONER HARDY's DEFENCE.

I ſay the ſame as he has ſaid.

Court. What right had you to take a boat at all to go over, without the conſent of any body that belonged to it?——There was nobody in it, ſhe was drifting about along-ſide the barge.

When you came to Gun Dock, how came you to run away?——I did not think what trouble might come of it.

(The priſoner Herbert called five witneſſes, who gave him a good character.)

ALL THREE GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

253. SARAH LYON and ANN GIBSON were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of February, nine yards of thread lace, value 20s. the property of Thomas Hatterſley, privily in his ſhop.

PETER HARDY ſworn.

I am journeyman to Mr. Hatterſley, he is a haberdaſher oppoſite Red-lion-ſtreet, Holborn; the priſoners came together into my maſter's ſhop, on Monday the 13th of February, between twelve and one o'clock, under pretence of buying thread lace; I was in the ſhop, and two or three other perſons; I ſhewed them a box of edgings, and after that, a box of broader lace; they did not buy any, we could not agree for the price; they bought ſome thread, ſome tape, and ſome ribbon, and they went away;

I miſſed ſome lace, and I went after them; I did not ſee them take any, I miſſed it while they were in the ſhop, I purſued them when they were about five yards off, and brought them back; they denied having any lace; I took them into a back ſhop, and ſent for an officer; he came, and ſearched them, and found the lace upon the priſoner Lyon. (Produced and depoſed to.) I was with the priſoner Gibſon while the officer was ſearching Lyon; ſhe went down on her knees, and begged for mercy, and ſaid ſhe would pay for the lace, or any expence, if I would but let her go; ſhe was taken to the Juſtice, and was committed. I know the lace by the pattern and the private mark. I believe it was Lyon that purchaſed the thread and things.

Priſoner Lyon. Whether he did not ſay he could take his oath that he ſaw me take a piece of broad lace?—I thought ſo then, I did not miſs two pieces, I only thought there was one piece of broad lace.

EDWARD TREDWAY ſworn.

I belong to Mr. Walker's office; I ſearched the priſoners; I found this lace in the right-hand pocket-hole of Lyon, half in and half out, when he pulled off her apron, and began unpinning her gown, then I ſaw it; ſhe opened her cloak, I told her to undo her apron; it has been in my cuſtody ever ſince.

Did it come there by accident, or was it put there by deſign?—She had no pocket, it was in the pocket-hole, it was half in and half out; it was when ſhe was ſtripping herſelf, I perceived the lace, and ſhe ſaid, Oh, Lord! how came it here, I cannot think how it came here; I ſearched Gibſon, and found nothing upon her; the money for the tape and things was furniſhed by Gibſon.

PRSIONER LYON's DEFENCE.

That bit of lace hung at the bottom of my petticoat; I had a child with me, and ſhe pulled it out of the box.

Tredway. Gibſon had the child, ſhe had no child.

Proſecutor. Gibſon had the child.

Priſoner Lyon. I came into this gentleman's ſhop to buy a bit of edging for a child's cap, I bought the lace for my own cap; he ſhewed me ſome, I ſaid I did not want to go to above four ſhillings and ſixpence; the child ſat on the middle of the counter, the child got hold of the lace in the box, and pulled two or three pieces out of the box; I deſired him to take care of the lace; I bought ſome ribbon, and went out of the ſhop, and they came after me; they kept me an hour and a half in his parlour, while he ſent for a conſtable; the conſtable came in, and ſearched me, and this piece of lace hung at the bottom of my petticoat.

Court to Proſecutor. Did the child meddle with the lace in the box, and pull them about?——The child did not touch a piece of lace.

Are you ſure of that?——I am ſure of that; it touched the box, and I moved the box a little further; I took great care the child ſhould not touch the lace.

Court to Peter Hardy. You was not without your ſuſpicions that there was a piece of lace miſſing, you ſay; did not you ſee her take this lace, or touch it?——No, I did not.

You find ſhe is indicted for a capital offence, for ſtealing it privately; had you any intimation of her taking it?—I did not obſerve any lace that ſhe did take, but I believed there was a piece of lace gone; ſhe had in her hand at one time I believe three pieces, and I obſerved, when ſhe put them into the box, that there were but two, but I was not ſure.

Court. I do not think there is ſufficient ground to put Ann Gibſon on her defence.

SARAH LYON, GUILTY
Of ſtealing, but not privately.

To be privately whipped, and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

ANN GIBSON, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before
Mr. Baron PERRYN.

254. JAMES BUTTERSWORTH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of January laſt, two live ducks, price 3s. one live drake, price 2s. the property of John Cole.

There being no evidence the priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

255. The ſaid JAMES BUTTERSWORTH was again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of February, one glaſs lamp with a tin rim, value 1s. the property of William Coulderoy.

ALEXANDER BARKER ſworn.

I was ſtanding at my own door, on Friday the 10th of February, in Charles-ſtreet; I ſaw the priſoner take the lamp, it was quite looſe, and eaſily taken out.

What houſe?—No. 10, Charles-ſtreet, Bridgewater-ſquare, it was over an empty houſe; I was conſtable of the night, and one of the lamp-lighters men told me he had loſt four lamps, I thought the priſoner was a lamp-lighter; in three minutes after I ſaw him with three lamps under his arm.

MARY DEAN ſworn.

I keep a green ſhop, on Friday the 10th the priſoner aſked me to let him leave three lamps with me, I never ſaw him before, he was quite a ſtranger to me; I was juſt going to work, and he aſked me to let him leave them, he ſaid, he ſhould be gone about two hours, he came in and put them under my window; Mr. Rogers took them away, here is one of them here.

WILLIAM FISHER ſworn.

I am the lamp-lighter, I had the care of theſe lamps, I know this lamp to be one that I had the care of, it belongs to Mr. Coulderoy.

Priſoner. I never left any ſuch thing.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

256. ALEXANDER M'KENZIE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 10th day of February, eighteen pounds weight of ſugar, commonly called Muſcovade ſugar, value 6s. the property of Samuel Key and others.

The priſoner was taken with the ſugar upon him.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

257. THOMAS LINDSAY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d day of January laſt, one linen bag, value 3d. a cloth waiſtcoat, value 1s. a pair of breeches, value 1s 6d. two ſhirts, value 4s. two pair of ſtockings, value 2s. a pair of boot ſtockings, value 1s. the property of John Shelley.

WILLIAM HASLET ſworn.

On the 27th of January laſt, I being clerk to a benefit ſociety of poor, went to fetch a young man from Bethnal-green madhouſe, to ſend him into the country by the waggon; I brought him into the Caſtle inn, in Wood-ſtreet, where his clothes were delivered to one of the porters of the inn, to go by John Shelley's waggon, and there was a bag put into his waggon, containing the things mentioned in the indictment; I delivered the bag to one of the porters, who put it into the waggon when it was ready to go away, they deſired us not to put the young man into the waggon there, but to put him in at the Stones-end; I went with the young man into Goſwell-ſtreet, and I helped him into the waggon; the priſoner was an aſſiſtant to the waggon; on the 28th being Saturday, I was informed of the waggon being robbed, and the young man who was out of his mind, was loſt; on the Monday following I went to the ſitting Alderman at Guildhall, and there I ſaw the things, they were produced by Taylor, I can ſwear to one of the ſhirts, it is a particular colour, and particularly folded up at the mad-houſe, I found it pinned up in the ſame way it was at the mad-houſe, it was remarkably brown; when I ſaw the things on Monday, a pair of ſtockings were miſſing.

WILLIAM TAYLOR ſworn.

I am porter to the waggon, it is John Shelley's waggon, nobody has any intereſt in it but himſelf, I was going to Harrow on the hill, on Saturday with a load, and I met the priſoner, he had been with the waggons ſome time, and I aſked him the reaſon why he was not along with the waggons, whether they had had any misfortune, he ſaid, no, but the waggoner found fault with him, and he would not go any further with him; I was then going to Holborn Bridge with a load, and when I returned my maſter had had a letter from Colney, that the waggon had been robbed, my maſter ſent me for the priſoner, and I went and found him, and brought him back to the Caſtle in Wood-ſtreet, he had the linen bag under his arm at the ſame time, I found him in Newgate-ſtreet.

ELIZABETH WEST ſworn,

Depoſed to the things which ſhe carried to the waggon.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was following the waggon, and it ſtopped at the turnpike, and I found the bundle in the middle of the road.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

258. JOSEPH BROMLEY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of February, one quart pewter pot, value 10d. the property of Charles Freeman.

The pot was taken out of the priſoner's pocket.

GUILTY, 10d.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

259. THOMAS BRETT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of January laſt, twenty-ſix pounds of pork, value 14s. the property of William Cooke.

The priſoner took the pork, which hung at the proſecutor's door, and was taken with it when he had got about ten yards off.

Priſoner. I had had a drop of rum, and I was ſtark mad.

GUILTY.

To be whipped and impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

---

266. SAMUEL BISHOP was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 3d day of February, one quart pewter pot, value 10d. and a pint pewter pot, value 8d. the property of Charles Morgan.

CHARLES MORGAN ſworn.

I keep a public houſe, on the 4th of February; a quart pot, and a pint pot were found in the priſoner's apartment; I do not know when they were loſt, I have ſeen the priſoner paſs my door.

WILLIAM CLARKE ſworn.

I am a watchman of St. Mary, Iſlington, I was going twelve, and Mr. Adams's ſiſter ſays, watchman, ſtop, I believe there is a fire at the George, ſhe knocked at the door very hard, the man of the houſe came directly, we ſearched the houſe and could find none, but the kitchen was very full of ſmoke; then we went into the yard, and in a little while I ſaw a light, and we went round into a little ſhed, where the priſoner was laying on his back all along, and his boy at the feet of him, that was about half after twelve; and Mr. Barker ſays, I believe you are a great rogue; he took off a cloth from him, and he was pots from his waiſtband to his ſhoulder, I ſaw the pots told, there were ſeventeen quarts and pints, and I believe they belonged to eight publicans, they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; here are two belonging to Mr. Morgan (A pot and pint depoſed to.) it was a little ſmall ſhed that the priſoner had put his foot in, he is a chimney ſweeper.

THOMAS BARKER ſworn.

I was with the witneſs, the priſoner had got a candle in his hand, and had juſt lighted a fire: I ſaw him through a hole in the wall; I aſked him what he did there, he ſaid, he was in bed; I ſaid, I would come round, and then he put the candle out, and covered himſelf up with the ſoot ſack, and there were theſe ſeventeen pots.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was at London all day at work, and I was locked out, I went into this ſhed, which I had, and I made a fire to warm myſelf.

Court. How came theſe pots there?——That I do not know, there are people comes in there.

——— GLOVER ſworn.

I know that the priſoner employed me to take theſe pots, I cannot ſay what day it was, I was with him, I ſaw him take them from the door.

SARAH SPARKES ſworn.

I am a chimney-ſweeper's wife, he has hired a boy of me between three and four years; I never knew any thing amiſs of him in my life, the boy has been at work, where he was entruſted with plate, my boy is a very good boy.

JOHN TAYLOR ſworn.

I am a carpenter, in Stone-cutter-alley, Gate-ſtreet, Lincoln's Inn Fields. On Thurſday the 16th of February, I went out to work about twenty minutes after ſeven, I locked the door, and put the key under it, as I uſually do, I left my wife behind me, I came back on information from my wife, that ſhe had been robbed of ſome things by Tramp; when I came back I found ſome things thrown about, and ſeveral things miſſing; I can ſpeak to the breeches.

ELIZABETH TAYLOR ſworn.

I was in bed, and this lad came into the room, and pulled down all my candleſticks and flat irons; it had juſt ſtruck ſeven; moſt of the things I ſaw the day before, and when I got up, ſeveral things in the room in which I ſlept were tumbled about; I know the priſoner, I have ſeen him many times, his father and mother live in our ſtreet; there was a little horſe, and he moved that, and that waked me; half the window curtains were drawn, there were no ſhutters; I had the things to waſh; the priſoner did not live with his mother, he was a boy that lived abroad; he ran away the minute I turned round; I looked at him, and ſaid, oh, you tramping dog! do you come to rob me? The apron and things were laid ready; I am very ſure he is the perſon.

Priſoner. What time was it in the morning?——Seven o'clock.

Priſoner. I have a witneſs, if he is here, to prove that I was in bed at ſeven o'clock.

Mrs. Taylor. I went and called my huſband directly, and ſaid to him, come home directly, for young Tramp has robbed me of my things.

JOHN COLEMAN ſworn.

Court. Do you know the nature of an oath?——Yes, Sir.

What is it?—To ſpeak the truth between man and man.

What will be the conſequence, if you do not ſpeak the truth?——It is a very bad thing to take a falſe oath.

Do you know what becomes of bad people?——They come into bad places, and bad company.

No, but after they die, do you know where they go?—I hope to go to Heaven.

If you tell the truth, you will; but if you do not tell the truth, where ſhall you go?——If I do not tell the truth, I look upon it I ſhall go to hell. I am a ſhoemaker, I keep a kitchen in Monmouth-ſtreet, No. 10, rent nine pounds a year; I work for myſelf, I have no father or mother; I mend ſhoes, and hang them up at the door, I have lived there about three months.

Who elſe lives in the houſe?—I do not know the landlady's name, ſhe ſells gowns and things; I pay my money every Monday.

Have you no receipt for it?——No.

Who does the reſt of the houſe belong to?——The gentlewoman lives up ſtairs, I do not know her name, I have not lived there long.

Why, you have lived there three months?——No; I never trouble myſelf about the names of the people, I mind my work.

Who lives in the next houſe?——I do not know, I never lived in the ſtreet before.

What kind of ſhop is it next door?——A ſhoemaker's ſhop next door, one Mr. Foſter keeps it; this lad was in bed along with me that morning.

What morning are you talking of?——That morning when they ſaid he got theſe things.

Where were the things taken away?——I do not know.

Who brought you here?—I came along with the boy's mother.

When did ſhe firſt ſpeak to you?—The day that the lad was firſt taken up.

How long was it before he was taken up?——I do not know the day of the month.

What day of the week was it?—Thurſday, I think, but I cannot ſay rightly, to ſpeak the truth.

Did this boy conſtantly ſleep with you?——Yes, Sir; he has ſlept with me about three weeks; the priſoner lives with me, and minds my place when I am out, and runs of errands, and I learn him what I can of my buſineſs.

What time do you get up in a morning?——I get up at ſeven, and this morning he was up after me, he was not up till paſt eight o'clock; generally ſpeaking, I get up firſt, I always do, I open the door, and hang out my ſhoes; he never ſlept from me for three weeks together.

How long is this ago that he was with you?——Five weeks.

How long has he left you?—A fortnight to-day; but I cannot tell the day with certainty, I cannot read or write.

Was he never abſent one night?—No; he ſlept with me the night before he was taken up.

Are you ſure of that?——Yes I am ſure of it; during this three weeks he never was out before ſeven in the morning; I have no clock, but I can hear the town clock go, St. Giles's church; he never was out before me in a morning, and I have pounds worth of goods in my place; I never loſt any thing.

Court to Taylor. When was it that this boy was taken up?—This day fortnight.

Was he taken the ſame day?—Yes.

Court to Boy. Will you ſwear that you heard the clock ſtrike ſeven?——No, Sir, I will not ſwear that I heard the clock ſtrike, but I will ſwear that he did not go out that morning till between eight and nine, he went for ſome bread and cheeſe to the chandler's ſhop.

Court to Mrs. Taylor. Did you hear the clock ſtrike ſeven?—I did not hear it; but when I was waked, and pulled my curtain back, it was between ſeven and eight.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

271. THOMAS BURDETT, WILLIAM BROWN, and HENRY FAWCETT, were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Ann Palmer, about the hour of four in the night, on the 1ſt day of February, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein a woollen great coat, value 10s. and a man's hat, value 2s. the property of Thomas Hinchcliffe; and a ſattin cloak, value 2s. two ſilver caſtor ſpoons, value 12d. and one iron key, value 1d. the property of the ſaid Ann Palmer.

WILLIAM LEE ſworn.

I live in Old North-ſtreet, Red-lion-ſquare, I am now a ſervant to Mrs. Palmer. My miſtreſs's houſe was broke open the 1ſt of February, I cannot ſay the hour, between going to bed and riſing; I was laſt up in the houſe the evening before, I went to bed between eleven and twelve; I faſtened the door and windows up ſtairs, the parlour, the hall, and the ſtore-room; the cook faſtens below, but I ſaw it was all faſt.

Who was firſt up in the morning?——The maid; ſhe is not here; the public-houſe-man alarmed us about ſeven in the morning, ſeeing the kitchen window open; they came and called me, and I got up directly; the cook-maid came down firſt on the alarm, and let in the public-houſe-man; ſhe called me up, and when I came down, I found the lower part open entirely, one of the kitchen windows broke open; it was faſtened with two bars and an inſide ſhutter, one ſide of the ſhutter was broken off entirely, one of the bars broke, and the other taken away entirely.

What things were miſſing?—Two ſmall ſilver caſtor ſpoons, one a pepper, and the other a muſtard ſpoon; an old ſattin cloak, that hung in the hall; a gentleman's great coat, a hat, and the key of the door. The officer came to let us know that the priſoners were taken; it was one morning after, but I cannot tell how long.

About how long did you underſtand that it was that ſome perſons were taken up?—I really cannot ſay, nor I will not pretend to ſay.

Was it yeſterday?——No.

Was is it the day before?——It is about a week ago, or very nigh ten days; a coat only was found.

Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner Fawcett's Counſel. You was not at the finding of the coat?—No; I have ſeen it ſince it was found.

Court. Did you know the great coat, whoſe was it?——It was one Mr. Hinchley's, who was on a viſit at the houſe at the ſame time. I have a crow that was left behind; there was one inner door broke open, and the crow was cloſe to the door.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I produce a coat and hat; I found the coat in the priſoner Burdett's houſe, up ſtairs in the bed-room, on the 20th of February, Monday was a week; I went by order of the Magiſtrates to fetch them up, and in the morning I ſaw Fawcett with a great coat on; then I went to fetch the great coat by order of the Magiſtrates, and I ſaid to the priſoner Fawcett, Harry, I am come for the great coat; he had no great coat on then; ſays Fawcett, I was aware of that, I knew that Nodely was a rogue, and I have ſent it to hell by this time; I then went to the houſe of Burdett, and there I found the great coat hanging up in his room; I carried it to the houſe in Red-lion-ſquare; I ſaw a great coat on Fawcett that morning, but I cannot ſwear it was the ſame I found at Burdett's, it was a coat like it; this is the coat I found in Burdett's lodgings.

Mr. Knowlys. What are you?—I am an officer belonging to St. Leonard, Shoreditch.

What office do you generally belong to?——Mr. Wilmot's.

How much will the reward for the conviction of theſe three men amount to?——If convicted, the reward will be paid by the county.

What will it amount to?—It will amount to a hundred and twenty pounds.

How long have you been in the habit of receiving theſe rewards?—I have been an officer theſe three years; but I neither took Fawcett nor Brown.

Fawcett and you may not have agreed lately?—I never ſaw any miſbehaviour in the priſoner Fawcett in my life; I have had him in cuſtody, but he always behaved extremely well.

Look at Fawcett now; do you think the great coat he has on now, is not pretty much like that he had on that day?—I will not undertake to ſwear, that the great coat he had on that morning, is not the great coat he has on now.

He knew you was an officer?——Yes.

He ſaid this to you alone?—Shakeſhaft was with me; he is gone to Hertford.

Court. Where was that hat got?——It was delivered to me by the evidence, Nodely.

Who was at Burdett's houſe when the coat was found?——His ſervant, a little girl, and a woman that was ironing.

Now confine yourſelf to the queſtion I am going to aſk you; did you receive any information, but do not tell me what information, how the great coat came to Burdett's houſe?——Yes, I did.

From whom?—From the ſervant of Burdett, a girl about fourteen.

There is nobody from Burdett's houſe to account how the coat came there?—No.

——— HINCHCLIFFE ſworn.

Look at that great coat?——To the beſt of my knowledge, this is my great coat; here is a particular mark on it, a piece was fine-drawn in my coat, juſt by this button, it was ſo in this great coat. I was at this houſe upon a viſit; I heard a great deal of noiſe, I was extremely unwell; I got out of bed, and whether that alarmed them, I cannot ſay; it was a very windy night, and that made it uncertain where the noiſe came from.

RICHARD NODELY ſworn.

It was propoſed to go to this houſe in Red-lion-ſquare, we ſaw it was eaſy to get in.

Court. Give a full diſcloſure of all you know?—It was not me that fixed upon it.

You know the reaſon for fixing upon it?—They ſaid it was a good-looking houſe, it was eaſy to get in.

What obſervations had been made on the houſe, to induce you to fix on that particular houſe? come, Mr. Nodeley, if your life has been ſpared, that you may give information, the Court will expect that you give full information; it is never too late to proſecute an evidence that holds back, you muſt diſcloſe the whole truth; what was the inducement to ſingle out this houſe?—Only the eaſe of getting in.

What was obſerved with reſpect to the faſtenings of that houſe, and the eaſe of getting in?—There being nothing but inſide ſhutters, and them we put our feet againſt, and ſhoved them in.

How long time had theſe people and you been connected?—Seven months; we uſed to take it in turns to go round, and ſee how we could get in, in the night; we fixed to go to this houſe at three in the morning.

Did you go?——Yes, three of us, Burdett, and Brown, and me; we went, and ſhoved the window up, and I put my feet againſt the ſhutter, and ſhoved them open, and Burdett and me went in.

Did you make uſe of any crow, or any inſtrument, to force open the ſhutters?—We made uſe of no inſtrument.

What means did you make uſe of, not to alarm the family?——It all tumbled down together; there was noiſe enough, but nobody heard it.

What did you do upon its tumbling down and making a noiſe?—We came out again, and ſtaid ſome time to ſee whether any body was alarmed, before we went in.

How long did you wait?——About half an hour.

What became of the watchman all that time?——He was in his box, about fifty or ſixty yards diſtance.

Was this window in the ſquare, or in the ſtreet?——In the ſquare. The watchman came round, juſt as we were coming out of the houſe; we came out before that, to ſee if any body heard us, and he never came out of his watch-box; we were at the door coming out when he was coming by, while he was feeling the ſhutters, we let him go away.

Was not it very eaſy for him to have ſeen this window open if he had looked down the area?——Yes; that was what we came out for; for we were afraid that he would come round there, and ſee that window open.

Did not he go round that ſide to look?—Not that I know of.

How long after he had left the ſhutters of the hall, did you come out?——That minute, after he got into the ſquare.

Had any body ſpoke to the watchman that night?——No.

Are you ſure of that?——Yes.

Which of the watchmen was it?——At the right-hand corner of the ſquare.

Was it the corner going towards Bloomſbury?—I do not know which is Bloomſbury.

Will you tell me that?——I do not, indeed.

Priſoner Burdett. He knows Bloomſbury well; for he was one of thoſe that broke into the Lord Chancellor's houſe, and had the grand ſeal, and the Speaker's gown he had.

Court. Do you mean to ſwear that you do not know the way from Red-lion-ſquare to Bloomſbury-ſquare?——If I was there, I could know the way, I never lived up that way.

Mr. Hinchcliffe. It is the houſe neareſt Bloomſbury-ſquare.

Court to Nodeley. Was it the watchman the ſame ſide of the way that the houſe is?—Yes.

That is the corner of Orange-ſtreet?—It is the weſt corner of the ſquare.

Court to Mr. Hinchcliffe. This examination has been directed for the ſecurity of the neighbourhood; have any ſteps been taken with the watchman?——The watchman ſaid he had been eight years employed, and I told the perſon who regulated the watch, that I thought the watchman did not do his duty.

Court. You may inform them, that if they do not diſmiſs this watchman, I ſhall direct a proſecution againſt them for groſs neglect of their duty; for it appears, that this houſe was broke open in a manner that any paſſer-by might ſee, and though they were half an hour in the houſe, he came by in the mean time, and took no notice.

Nodeley. We broke open the kitchen-door with a crow, and went up ſtairs into the hall and parlour; we found two little tea-ſpoons, I do not know whether they were in the parlour or no; we took ſome new linen, and a hat and a coat.

You did not get ſo good a booty as you expected?——No.

Who watched, while Burdett and you went withinſide?—Brown.

Without?——Yes.

Did Brown join you when you came out again?—He and Fawcett were at the top of the ſtreet; he was to have come at three o'clock, but he failed in his appointment; Brown was obliged to walk away, when the watchman came round; there was an argument held between us, what we ſhould do with the things, ſo it was agreed that Brown ſhould have the linen; we toſſed up for the linen, and he won it; Burdett won the ſpoons, and I had the coat, and Fawcett he put a crown againſt it, and toſſed up who ſhould have both, and he won the coat; Fawcett was in the priſon with me, he had got a coat on like that, which we took out of the houſe, but I cannot ſwear it was the coat, he had two or three of them.

Mr. Knowlys. You come here to-day by the name of Nodeley?——Yes.

You have anſwered to that name?——Yes.

Where did you come from?——From Hertfordſhire.

That will not do for me; where was you laſt night?——At Clerkenwell.

What part of Clerkenwell?——In the priſon.

How many names may you have gone by in your life-time?—By no other.

Have you never gone by the name of Country Dick?——Yes, they have called me ſo.

Were you never convicted by any other name than that of Nodeley?—No, never.

Do you not recollect your ſtanding at that bar, and being convicted under the name of Nathan?——I dare ſay it has been ſo reported to you, but it is very falſe; I never was convicted, but as a vagrant.

How long ago was that?——About two years.

Never convicted of picking pockets?——No, Sir.

Court. It is loſs of time to impeach his credit; he ſtands here as an abandoned thief, who has ſaved his neck from the halter, and it will be happy for him if it is a warning to him.

All Three Not Guilty.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

272. ELIZABETH JONES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 22d day of January laſt, a ſilver watch, value 50s. a chain, value 2s. a ſtone ſeal, value 6d. and a braſs key, value 1d. the property of Richard Moore.

RICHARD MOORE ſworn.

I am a cabinet-maker; I was coming along Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, on Sunday the 22d of January laſt, near the new road; ſhe pretended to know me, and aſked me to go home with her, ſhe lived in Dunnage-alley; ſhe opened the door, and ſtruck a light, and I gave her a ſhilling to lay down with her; ſhe ſaid I uſed to give her more.

How long did you ſtay?—Not five minutes; as ſoon as ſhe laid down, and put the candle out, I heard a rumbling noiſe in the paſſage, upon which I got up immediately, and took my watch from off the head of the table bedſtead.

What ſort of watch was it?——A ſilver watch, a cornelian ſeal, and ſteel chain; ſhe got off the bed, upon hearing the noiſe, and ſtruck a light; ſhe opened the door, and looked out, and faſtened the door again; I then laid down again, not being contented; ſhe begged earneſtly, and intreated I would permit her to get up; upon which ſhe opened a trap-door in the wainſcot, where ſhe threw the watch, and put my hat over my face, that I ſhould not ſee what ſhe was doing, after taking it from off the bed; well, ſays I, there goes the watch, and I kicked the door to, and ſaid, I will take care of you; I ſent for a conſtable, and I ſaw two or three friends.

EDWARD TRUSTY ſworn.

I am one of the patrols, I had only charge of her, to take her to the Poultry Compter, the proſecutor gave charge of her, he ſaid, ſhe had ſtole his watch, and juſt by the ſide of the bed, there was a trap-door, and a ſquare of glaſs, and to that there was a ſtring, which went down and draws a door open, which gives a ſignal to the perſons below to come to this trap door.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The proſecutor followed me home, and as ſoon as I opened the door, he ruſhed in upon me, and threw me on the bed, I told him I would not, he immediately got off the bed, and offered me a ſhilling and ſome halfpence, and I would not; he then took hold of my petticoat, and pulled me till he tore it off my ſides.

Guilty.

To be privately whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Rose.

273. JAMES PILKINGTON and GEORGE CHARLETON were indicted for that they, on the 11th day of February one piece of falſe, feigned, and counterfeit copper money, to the likeneſs, and ſimilitude of a halfpenny, unlawfully, and feloniouſly did make, coin, and counterfeit againſt the ſtatute.

(The witneſſes examined apart.)

(The Caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

JAMES SHAKESHAFT ſworn.

On the 11th of February, Armſtrong Harper and I, receiving information of coining being carried on, in Old Nicholas-ſtreet, we went there, and they let Armſtrong into the back yard of the next houſe but one, then Harper and I knocked at the door of the houſe itſelf, a woman looked out of the window, I told her to open the door, ſhe ſaid ſhe would, and ſhut the window; I thought her a long time coming, and I liſtened at the ſtreet door, and I heard a buſtle below ſtairs, I told her again to open the door, or elſe I would break it open; finding her not come to the door, at laſt I forced it open, Harper and me went in, I ſent him up ſtairs, and I went down in the cellar; there were two candles burning, one was on the table, where the halfpence was made up in papers; we looked round the cellar, but could ſee no one, I then looked to ſee where they made their eſcape, and I found a hole that came into a cupboard in the lower room, where the coining was carried on; and then Armſtrong cried out, I have got one of them here backwards, I immediately jumped out of the window backwards, and Armſtrong had got Pilkington in cuſtody, I immediately looked at his hands, and all down to the tip of his fingers, were all greaſe and black; I ſaid, I ſhall ſearch you; he ſaid, you may, but you will find nothing upon me; I ſearched him, and found four bad halfpence blackened with brimſtone, the halfpence matched exactly with thoſe found in the cellar; there are two different ſorts, ſome have letters and ſome have none, they match with both ſorts; I found a large ſtamping preſs, in which theſe dies were fixed, I found theſe two halfpence and a pot on with brimſtone in it, and water or ſome other liquor, there were theſe five pair of dies, and theſe halfpence ready to be coloured; it is uſually done with brimſtone to take off the new look; I found ſome blanks on the ſide of the preſs, and ſome halfpence ready made, and a candle; there was a cutting-preſs, and ſome cecil, and two ſheets of copper laying by the cutting-preſs ready to put in it, a ſieve underneath, ready to receive the blanks when cut; here is a bag with five pair of dies, and this is a ſmoothing engine, where they put in the halfpence to take the rough edge off; the priſoner Pilkington lives next door to where this was carried on, ſo he ſaid himſelf; he took me into his houſe after he was taken, and I ſaw the hole in the cupboard, they had broken the partition between the two houſes, and one could ſtep into Pilkington's houſe juſt by the fire place; I ſearched Pilkington's houſe, and in the two pair of ſtairs room, there was a very dirty jacket; I did not bring it away, but the window was open, and I ſaw a great deal of ſoot in the room, and I looked up the chimney, I thought ſomebody might have got out there, and the priſoner Charlton was brought to me as black as a chimney-ſweeper; and he owned before the Magiſtrate, he had been to this houſe where the coining had been carried on, and had thrown a bundle down a hole in the cellar, and that he met two men in Moor-fields, who aſked him to carry a load.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. You have ſaid that his hands were dirty?—Yes, they were dirty, all his fingers greaſe and oil.

Had Pilkington his hat on when you took him?——Yes, I think he had.

And his coat?——Yes.

Have you been much accuſtomed to the apprehending of coiners?——Yes, I have been at the places where they are.

You then know that they do not uſually work with their hats on?——They work at different parts, ſome tie up the papers, there are generally two, one to turn the fly and the other to feed the preſs.

The man that got away had not his hat on?——No.

Nor his coat?——No, I think the coining was carried on at No. 18.

Are you ſure?—It was the middle houſe of the three.

Who lived in that houſe?——There was a woman that was big with child, and another in her arms; the priſoner Charlton when he was brought to me, was worſe than a chimney-ſweeper.

Do not you know that Pilkington lived at No. 19?——Yes, he did, when I ſaw Pilkington's wife, I knew her, and was not ſurpriſed.

Are you ſure the breach in the wall was not ſecured and nailed up with boards, ſo as no perſon could paſs through it ?——No, it was not, the communication was open by Pilkington's fire place, there are three that work at the ſtamping preſs, two at the fly, and one to feed it.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I ſaw Pilkington coming out of his back window, he told me he was an officer going to take one of the men, I told him I knew one of the officers, and I would not let him go, his hands were dirty; I heard ſomething thump as I was looking there, and found the window open, the firſt man that came out, had a check ſhirt, purſuing him I met Pilkington, I believe it was ſix feet from the ground.

SUSANNAH HAYES ſworn.

I live in Old Nicholas-ſtreet, I do not know Charleton, I never ſaw him before as I know of; I ſaw a man that came from the houſes, I believe it was Pilkington.

BARNARD FAY ſworn.

I am a carpenter, I live about five doors from Pilkington, I apprehended Charleton, I ſaw him when he had got acroſs the paling of my yards, he came in at the back door, bolted the door after him, and went out at the fore door, he was as if he had come out of a chimney; I repaired this houſe ſome time ago, I had not ſeen it for ſix months, but I know it was in ſufficient repair, both as to the wall and the floor; and in the wall there was a hole big enough to go through.

JOHN CLARK ſworn.

I have ſeen all theſe inſtruments, they are the neceſſary apparatus for coining halfpence.

——— FRANKLIN ſworn.

I am one of the moniers at the Mint, theſe are counterfeits.

Priſoner Pilkington. I was up one pair of ſtairs ſhaving myſelf, my wife ſaid, Jem! Jem! there is ſomebody running paſt, and I run, and ſaw a little fellow in a check ſhirt; and Armſtrong came and laid hold of me; I deny, I ſaid, I was an officer, he knows me better himſelf than that; he ſearched me, and found ſome halfpence in my pocket, which I received in change, and Harper opened the cupboard, and found this breach; it is my daughter's houſe, I was in the country when it was taken.

The priſoner Pilkington called three witneſſes to his character.

Court to Charlton. Can you give an account how you came in that dirty condition?——I was no dirtier than commonly.

What buſineſs do you follow?—Working in a rope-ground, and turpentine manufactory, and coal-heaving, and different ſorts of work.

BOTH GUILTY.

To be fined 1s. and impriſoned twelve months in Newgate.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

274. HENRY BRIDGES was indicted for that he, on the 4th day of February, one piece of falſe feigned, and counterfeit copper money, to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of a halfpenny, unlawfully, and feloniouſly did make, coin, and counterfeit, againſt the ſtatute.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

WILLIAM WEAVER ſworn.

I am one of the conſtables, I had information of this houſe, at Cook's-gardens, Haggerſton, it was on Saturday night, the 4th of February; I went with Lucey and others, and his dog barked very much, we went firſt cloſe to the door, and drew back, and a woman opened the door, and I ſtopped her being the firſt, and at the time that the door opened, I ſaw ſome men, one of whom, I think, was the priſoner, but I cannot take upon myſelf to ſay, with that poſitive punctuality, as if I had ſeen him more diſtinctly, another man came out who is the accomplice, his name is William Parſons; I forced into the houſe, I run up ſtairs, and ſaw a window open that I had juſt before ſeen ſhut, I therefore concluded they had got out of that window; that window looks next the fields, the garden is encloſed with a wall, ſo that if he had got into the garden, he could not get away, I then went down ſtairs, and there was a hole in the floor in the cloſet, on the ground floor, and there I ſaw a ſtamping-preſs, a fly with dies fixed, and the halfpence about.

Was this hole concealed at all?——No, we found a quantity of halfpence in hand-baſkets, ſome were made up in five ſhilling papers, and one large paper parcel containing ſix five ſhilling papers, all tied up in ſtrings; we then took the evidence, and brought the things away in a cart, the next day we went to Carolina-court, Saffron-hill, I went up ſtairs and opened the door which went with a ſpring lock, and the priſoner was in bed at nine o'clock; I told him he muſt get up, he ſaid, he could not, I told him he muſt, ſays he, if I get up I cannot walk or ſtand, ſays I, then we will have a coach, for you muſt go with me; ſays he, what ſhould I go with you for, I was not in the houſe; in his waiſtcoat pocket I found theſe halfpence.

There was no appearance of any body having been at work that day?——None at all.

Mr. Garrow. I believe Parſons was a good deal frightened, was not he?—Yes.

You told him he would be tranſported?——No.

You told him he would be a fine?——No.

You told him he would be ſent to quod?——No; if you muſt have it, he was aſked who the men were that was up ſtairs.

I did not aſk you for his anſwer, that is not evidence, Parſons's wife was there, was not ſhe?——Yes.

Did not they keep the houſe?——I do not know.

JOHN LUCEY ſworn.

I am an officer, I was at this houſe, I have the dies as they were found in the ſtamping-preſs; there was a quantity of halfpence packed up, and ſome in a baſket ready for packing.

(Shewn to the Court and Jury.)

Mr. Garrow. There are no heads on thoſe dies, hand them up to the Jury, you will find a button on the coat of one of the Jury that will fit that die; who was in the houſe?—Only the evidence, Parſons, there were thirty-five ſhillings-worth of halfpence tied up, and I believe the ſame quantity looſe.

You found no cutting-preſs?—No.

Nor no cecil?——No.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

Is this a complete apparatus for carrying on coining?—Yes, all but the large preſs, which I ſaw at Mr. Lucey's houſe.

Court. Do you not conceive it poſſible that the blanks and cecil may be cut at one place, and be brought to another?——It is generally ſo, they do it for their own ſafety.

Look at theſe dies, and that halfpenny; will thoſe dies make a piece of coin like that?—Not a doubt of it.

Can you ſay whether they were made by that?—It is impoſſible to do that, becauſe two dies may be made as near as poſſible ſo that your eye cannot diſtinguiſh; theſe fit that die exactly.

Did you ever ſee any buttons of this kind?—Seldom or hardly ever.

PETER COOK ſworn.

I live at Haggerſtone; I know the priſoner, he took a houſe of me at Chriſtmas, an old man and an old woman, his ſervants lived in the houſe, I ſaw the priſoner in the garden of that houſe, either on the Thurſday or Friday, I ſaw him and Parſons at different times bring goods into the houſe, Parſons and his wife lived there conſtantly; I let this houſe on a written agreegreement (Produces it.) he never did come into the houſe to live.

Mr. Silveſter. Was there any converſation about the houſe, when he was taken before the Magiſtrate.

Mr. Garrow. Now was not all he ſaid before the Magiſtrate taken in writing?—He did not ſhew it to me.

Do not you know it was taken in writing?—I did not read it.

Do not you know it was taken in writing?—I look upon it, it was.

What do you believe?—I believe it was, upon my oath.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, then I object to his parol evidence.

Court to Clarke. Was you preſent when this man was examined?—I was.

Was the converſation between the priſoner taken in writing?—No.

What was ſaid?——He ſaid, he would keep in the houſe, I told him, he had better not, but give up the key; he ſaid, I will ſend a man to take away the goods, and he gave me this key, which was the key of the garden gate.

WILLIAM PARSONS ſworn.

I have known the priſoner three months; I went to live at Haggerſton, about three weeks before I was taken up, there was Bridges, Heron, a little girl, and my wife.

What did you amuſe yourſelves at?—I am a painter, I uſed to go and ſee for work, and go of errands.

What was done in doors?——Coining, your honor.

How was this buſineſs carried on in this houſe?——A little girl put in the money, Bridges and myſelf pulled, and Heron worked the edges.

How long had you carried on this buſineſs?—About three weeks, I believe.

Who was in the houſe when the officers came?—Mr. Bridges, Mr. Heron, the little girl and my wife.

What became of Mr. Bridges, and Heron?——They went out your honor, Heron went out into the yard, my wife and little girl went out at the ſtreet door.

Which way did Bridges go out?——I think he went backwards apparently to me to go to the cellar.

Do you know his handy works again, when you ſee them, were thoſe the grand things you uſed to make, look at them? (Shews him the halfpence.)—They appear to me to be like them, there was about half a ruſh baſket full, and ſome that were told out, I received no money only a bit of victuals, I was to receive nothing, only what my wife gave me, I could not work at the buſineſs to get money, I have loſt one of my arms.

Then you never worked at it?—No, I could not.

Who pulled the fly?—Mr. Bridges, and a little girl put in.

You ſwore juſt now, that Bridges and you pulled the fly, did you never pull the fly with Bridges?——About half an hour, he aſked me to try to pull, to lend him a hand, but I never earned any thing at it.

Did you ever lend him a hand?—Once, your honor.

Who uſed to do it in common?——Bridges, and Heron aſſiſted him.

Mr. Garrow. Mr. Parſons, you was the only one of the covey that did not eſcape?—Yes.

They frightened thee pretty much, did not they, they talked of tranſporting thee, did not they, do not I ſpeak loud enough for you?—Yes, your honor.

Did not they threaten you, they would tranſport thee?—I was affraid, your honor.

Did not they tell you they would tranſport you, if you did not tell?—No, your honor, not that.

What made you ſqueak then?—Becauſe I did not know the conſequences of it; they told me to ſpeak every thing that I knew.

You was a good deal frightened, cockey?——Yes.

They have kept you in limbo ever ſince?——Yes.

You had not been uſed to theſe ſort of things?——No.

What may you have been formerly?—I have been a glazier and painter; I fell out of a window, and cut my arm to pieces, and they cut it off in the hoſpital ; me and my wife lived in this houſe conſtantly ; Bridges was to come at Lady-day.

How is your eye-ſight ?——Very indifferent.

What light did you uſe to have when you was at work in the cellar ?——I am rather deaf.

What light had you to work by in the cellar ?——Candle-light.

How many candles ?—One at the preſs, one at the ſmoothing-engine, and one for the putting-in girl.

Did you never ſee Mr. Williams there ?——No.

Did you never call Williams by the name of Bridges, and your wife has mentioned it to you ?——Yes.

RICHARD FRANKLIN ſworn.

I am one of the moniers of the Mint ; theſe are all counterfeits.

Priſoner. I leave it to my counſel ; when I took this houſe, I told Mr. Cooke I ſhould not occupy it till Lady-day, and that I ſhould let that part to John Williams ; then I put this Parſons's wife to look after it at five ſhillings a week ; I have proof that I was in another place at the time that the officers came to the houſe.

MARY ROGERS ſworn.

I live at No. 104, on Saffron-hill ; I waſh for the priſoner.

Priſoner. Do you remember me coming to your houſe at ſix o'clock on Saturday ?—Very well ; and you remained till almoſt eight ; I had not ironed it when he came, and he ſtopped till it was done.

What Saturday night was this ?——The evening before he was taken up ; I did not attend the Juſtice ; I did not know it till the Tueſday the priſoner ſent to me.

To Weaver. What time did you go to the houſe ?——It was about eight in the evening ; he endeavoured to prove at the Juſtice's that he was at another place in Fore-ſtreet, at a public houſe, in company with one Williams.

JAMES WOOD ſworn.

The priſoner lodged with me at Mr. Whitby's public houſe in Carolina-court ; I remember the priſoner ſtanding in the taproom on the evening on the Saturday night ; he was taken out of bed the next morning.

The Priſoner called two other witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

Fined 1s. and impriſoned twelve months in Newgate.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

ELIZABETH KIRBY ſworn.

On Tueſday the 7th of February, at ſeven at night, I went to the George and Gate, in Gracechurch-ſtreet; I went into the houſe with the coachman, and left my box in the boot of the coach; the man in whoſe care the box was left, cried out, ſtop thief! and ſaid, ſome of the coaches was robbed, and it proved to be the coach my things were left in. (The box produced, and the contents enumerated.) I put them in my box between eleven and twelve, before I left my place, and I examined it after it was found, and every thing was right, nothing was miſſing; as ſoon as the priſoner was brought in, and knew me, he begged for mercy.

—— PAYNE ſworn.

I am the coachman; I brought the lady from Croydon; this is the box I put in the boot; the priſoner was brought into the houſe by How the conſtable.

JOSEPH NOVELL ſworn.

I look after the ſtages, as they come in; the coachman ſays, do not leave my coach, for I have got a box; I was aſked by ſomebody, where the Camberwell coach was? I ſaid it was the third coach off; I turned about, and ſaw the priſoner with two others; and I ſaw the priſoner take the box out of the boot of the Croydon coach, and him and another were carrying it away; I cried out, ſtop thief!

Was he out of your ſight?—Yes, my Lord, but I am ſure he is the man; I ſaw his face by the light of the Apothecary's ſhop.

WILLIAM HOW ſworn.

I am the conſtable. On the 7th of February, I met the priſoner at the end of Gracechurch-ſtreet, and hearing the cry out, ſtop thief! the priſoner tried to trip up my heels, but I was too heavy for him, and I ſecured him, and took him to the Compter.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing of the matter; but being running, the conſtable laid hold of me.

The priſoner called ſeven witneſſes, who all gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

278. ROBERT DUKE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 31ſt day of January laſt, three dozen and four bunches of onions, value 5s. two dozen bunches of leeks, value 1s. and one wicker baſket, value 6d. the property of Robert Made.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

279. Thomas Fiſher was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of February, one calf's ſkin, value 5s, the property of Simon Hawkins.

The priſoner was taken with the ſkin.

GUILTY.

To be whipped and impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

280. RICHARD SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th day of February, one iron kitchen range, the ſame being an utenſil and fixture, value 8s. belonging to Iſaiah Buckhurſt, he having no title, or claim of title thereto.

ISAIAH BUCKHURST ſworn.

I live at Hampſtead; on Saturday the 11th of February, I was going to the Spaniards, between three and four, I ſaw two fellows coming with ſacks, I thought I ſaw them coming through my fields, which joins the Spaniards; they went round the houſe, I went to the Spaniards, and ſtaid an hour and an half, and coming back, I met the ſame two men juſt on this ſide the houſe; they were without ſacks; they run away to hide themſelves, and I went and hid myſelf too, to ſee what they were going about, and then they run away through a barn; the next morning, a conſtable and watchman came and aſked me if I had loſt any thing out of that houſe? I ſaid I did not know; I went along with them to ſee, and I miſſed my grate; I ſwore to it when it was found on the Monday morning; I am ſure the priſoner is one of the two men I ſaw.

A WITNESS ſworn.

About nine, to the beſt of my knowledge, I ſaw the priſoner with the range on his back, in the road between Tottenham-court-road and Mother Red-cap's; he was coming to town; I ſtopped him, he ſaid he came from Mr. Lomax's at Hampſtead, and was going to carry it to Snow-hill, to have it mended, and I called Croker to aſſiſt me, and left the grate at the toll-houſe in his charge.

HENRY CROKER ſworn.

I went with the watchman; I aſked the priſoner where he brought the range from; he ſaid from a gentleman at Hampſtead, one Mr. Lomax, and was going to carry it to Snow-hill; he ſaid Mr. Lomax lived there; I then aſked him what Mr. Lomax was? he ſaid he was a linen-draper; I took him to the toll-houſe, and aſked him the ſame queſtion; I made a memorandum of what he ſaid; I marked the grate, and left it at the toll-houſe, and went with him towards Snow-hill; when we got two hundred yards from Tottenham-court turnpike, I ſaid I am poſitive this is a ſtory; immediately he ſaid he found it in the field; I took him to the watch-houſe, and going along, I ſaid, my friend, you muſt have ſome accomplices; he then fell a-crying, he ſaid he had a wife and five children, and an accomplice; and there was another man coming along with a ſack, and an iron bar, and other things which he deſcribed, I went to the turnpike in order to ſtop the man that was coming, the priſoner told me the houſe where he had taken the range from, and I went to the houſe.

JOHN DUCK ſworn.

I lived with Mr. Buckhurſt at that time, I took care of the range (The range produced and depoſed to.) It was fixed with brick and mortar, as other kitchen ranges are; I believe they did not break open the door.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay; I only beg for favour of the gentlemen all round; I was brought in a ſnare by this man.

Jury to Proſecutor. What time was it when you firſt ſaw him?—It was half paſt three; I am ſure he is the perſon.

How long previous to that did you ſee the grate?——We are repairing the houſe; I ſaw the grate that morning.

GUILTY.

To be whipped, and impriſoned twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

281. ROBERT FINSHAM was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th day of February, four pounds weight of loaf ſugar, value 5s. and half a pound weight of green tea, value 4s. the property of Richard Redhead and William Birch.

RICHARD REDHEAD ſworn.

The priſoner quitted my houſe at half after twelve at night; he was my porter between two and three years; after he was gone, I found the ſugar miſſing; I went to the watch-houſe at a quarter before one, and there I found the priſoner, with the ſugar; he ſaid he bought it; I aſked him where, and what he gave a pound for it; he made no anſwer; nothing was found at his lodgings. I am ſure of the ſugar.

Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner's Counſel. Had he been out that evening?——Yes.

You looked upon him to be a perfect honeſt man?——Yes.

You have entruſted him before this time with conſiderable property at his own houſe?——I have.

You had never miſſed any thing before?—No.

He, as your porter, was liable to go out of errands whenever you choſe to ſend him?——Certainly.

Then it was poſſible this man might have made purchaſes for himſelf in the courſe of that day?—He might.

ANTHONY HARRISON ſworn.

I took charge of the priſoner; the ſugar lay in a chair; Mr. Redhead ſaid it was his property; we looked at the marks at the bottom of it; the priſoner ſaid nothing material.

Three other witneſſes aſſiſted taking the priſoner, with the box.

The priſoner called two witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

282. THOMAS STRATFORD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 26th day of January laſt, four bars of wrought iron, value 10s. the property of Samuel Parker.

There being no evidence, the priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

283. ANN CHADDOCK, alias CHARLOTTE WATERS, was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th day of January laſt, one pair of fuſtian breeches, value 15s. one pair of ſilver knee-buckles, value 3s. and ſixteen pounds in monies numbered, the property of George Summerline.

GEORGE SUMMERLINE ſworn.

I am a married man. On the 13th of January laſt I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; I was going to Fleet-lane, we had had a bit of a feaſt, and I ſtaid rather later than ordinary, it was pretty nigh one; I was rather in liquor, as it might happen, but I was ſober enough to know what paſſed; nobody was in company with me but this young lady; I was going by the Orange-tree in Fleet-lane, and ſhe ſaid, Summerline, you ſhall go along with me, you are a little in liquor, I will ſee you ſafe home; I knew her for four years, I have ſold her fruit, I ſell fruit by commiſſion.

What is the priſoner a fruit girl?——Sometimes, not always; I went to her room in Seacoal-lane, there was nobody elſe in the room that I ſaw; we ſat by the bedſide, and I being a little ſleepy and tired, ſhe got to work, and pulled my breeches off directly, and put the candle out, and away ſhe run with them; they were fuſtian breeches, and ſilver knee-buckles, and this money, and a crown-piece in particular; I ſaw my money juſt before I left the houſe where we had the feaſt, for me and three more paid the reckoning; I had fifteen guineas in gold and ſome ſilver; I could not tell how much; there was a crown-piece that I had taken that very morning; I did not meet above one perſon, and that was a gentleman going home; I ſaw nine guineas and ſome ſilver before the Lord Mayor; I cannot ſwear to a guinea; the crown-piece I could have ſworn to, but it was not there. I was obliged to ſtay till I could borrow a pair of breeches the next day; the priſoner never returned.

ANN WISE ſworn.

I live three doors from the priſoner; I ſaw her bring a pair of breeches of a browniſh colour, and a pair of ſilver knee-buckles in them, ſhe had only her under-petticoat on; I heard the chink of money, and ſaw her put money out of the breeches into the tail of her gown; it was about one on Friday morning.

JOHN NEWMAN ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner very much in liquor on the morning of this robbery, paſt five, it was at the King's Head; I ſearched her, and found twenty-five or twenty-ſix ſhillings, a crown-piece, and half a guinea, tied up in the corner of her handkerchief.

ROBERT LYLE ſworn.

I ſaw her pull out eight guineas and two half guineas from her cap.

Priſoner. I ſhall ſay nothing till my property is returned.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and confined twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

284. GEORGE PRESTON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d day of January laſt, two quart pewter pots, value 18d. ſix pint pewter pots, value 4s. and one leather ſtrap, value 4d. the property of William Smith.

The priſoner was taken with the property upon him.

GUILTY.

To be whipped and confined twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

285. JOSEPH FULLER and JAMES SEXTON were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th day of January laſt, two wooden beetles, value 2s. and one iron mattock, value 4s. the property of George Hedges.

The proſecutor found the mattock in the hands of the priſoner Fuller, the two beetles lay between the two priſoners.

JOSEPH FULLER, GUILTY.

Whipped.

JAMES SEXTON, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

286. JOHN WHITE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th day of February, one cheeſe, containing eighteen pounds weight, value 10s. the property of William Gibſon.

The priſoner was taken with the cheeſe by Thomas Naſh the watchman, who ſaw him take it.

GUILTY.

To be whipped and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

287. JAMES ROW was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of February, twenty-eight pounds weight of leaden pipe, value 3s. 6d. belonging to Henry Charles, and then and there fixed to his dwelling-houſe againſt the ſtatute.

The priſoner was taken with the pipe upon him.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

288. JAMES POLLARD and ROBERT WILTSHIRE were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of January laſt, two plate coach glaſſes, value 5l. the property of James Smith.

JOHN WILLIAMS ſworn.

I drive for Mr. Smith of Chelſea, on the 13th of January, I left my coach at a public houſe door in Piccadilly; and I was called out, and Stephens had the priſoner Pollard by the collar, and the glaſs was at the bottom of the coach unbroke.

JOHN STEPHENS ſworn.

I left the coach a minute, the coach door was open, and they ſtooped down, when I came up the priſoner Pollard threw ſomething into the bottom of the coach, I went up to ſee what it was, and there was the glaſs and nothing elſe; I went after him, and brought him back, and ſent for the coachman, he was never out of ſight, I know nothing of the other, only he was in company with him.

Priſoners. We know nothing about it.

Jury. What ſituation was Wiltſhire in?—He ſtood by the left-hand ſide of Pollard as cloſe as he could ſtand.

BOTH GUILTY.

Each to be whipped and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

289. LEONARD STONE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th day of January laſt, eight yards of woollen carpetting, value 42s. the property of Edward Johnſon and Thomas Butler, in their dwelling-houſe.

The proſecutor Johnſon ſaw the priſoner take the carpet out of his ſhop, as he ſtood oppoſite with Mr. Suffrey, who alſo ſaw him.

GUILTY, 38s.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

290. JOHN MOODY and PETER (a black man) were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th day of February one hundred and fifty-ſix pounds weight of lead, value 10s. belonging to James Benſon, and then and there fixed to a certain houſe of his, againſt the ſtatute.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

The Caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.

JAMES HASTINGS ſworn.

On the 24th day of July laſt, I went into the Park, to know what time the King went to the Houſe; I was looking for the King, and I was accoſted by a perſon who looked like a gentleman, extremely well dreſſed, who aſked me what time I thought the King would come paſt; I ſaid I imagined he would be coming ſoon; he ſaid he ſhould be very glad to ſee him, for he was but lately come from the country, not above a week, from Nottingham, and muſt return the week after; ſays he, I think by your language you are North country; yes, ſays I; what part? ſays he; near to Berwick-upon-Tweed, ſays I; ſays he, I came from the next pariſh; and ſeveral circumſtances he mentioned, made me believe that he came from that country; he ſaid he came from Nottingham, and had married an heireſs, and was now in poſſeſſion of an independent fortune of four hundred a year.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. You are ſpeaking now of the man you call Jones? —He ſaid his name was Scott; and when the King came paſt, he ſaid, we muſt drink together, and I ſaid, with all my heart; and he took me to a houſe in Hedge-lane, and when we had been there a little while, he ſaid, have you had any dinner? I ſaid, no; he ſaid, I will go out and get ſome pork chops; he went out, and returned, and ſaid he could not get any, but he brought ſome ſauſages; then came in that gentleman, the priſoner Lycett, and he ſaid to the priſoner Jones, I have got a part of your money, and he threw down a fifteen-pound bank note, and told out fifteen guineas, and the reſt you are to have next week; then, ſays Jones, that is one of the clevereſt fellows in England, I ſhould never have got this money, if I had not been recommended to him, he is Sir James Eſdaile's out-door clerk; ſays I, I have a kinſman in a banking-houſe, a teller at Mr. Caſtle's; oh, yes, ſays he, I know him very well; from that I looked very earneſtly at them, to take very particular notice of them; and this Mr. Jenkins he came in, and ſaid he wanted the way to the Park, where the officers walk; why, ſays he, I came up from Worceſter, and one of the officers that wears red clothes has run away with my laſs, and I will give all my money to find him; then he took out a pocket-book, containing a parcel of bank notes, as I thought, and threw down a quantity of gold; he ſaid we were all a parcel of poor taylors and barbers, and he had an aunt that belonged to the work-houſe at Worceſter, and he had more money than any one, and if he could meet with his girl, he would give it her all; he ſaid he would give a ſhilling if we could produce five guineas; he threw down a ſhilling; ſays Jones to me, have not you got five guineas? No, ſays I, I have but two guineas and a half; then, ſays Jones, I will make up the reſt, and he took up my half-guinea, and put down three guineas, and I believe he took up all the reſt afterwards, for I did not think to aſk for it; then he flung down a ſhilling, as he had done to the other man; ſays I, I will have none of your ſhilling, it ſhall not go into my pocket; but then, ſays they, them two ſhillings ſhall go for the reckoning; then, ſays he, I will lay you five guineas that you cannot ſhew one hundred pounds a piece; Mr. Jones ſays to him you are an impudent fellow, I can produce two or three, and alſo Mr. Lycett ſaid he could, and then they applied to me, could not I find it; I ſaid I had no ſuch thing; after a great many intreaties of them two, I ſaid, to be ſure I could do ſuch a thing if I was to go for it; they preſſed me very hard to go, they ſaid I might as well have the five guineas as not, and Jones would go along with me; I was fooliſh enough to go; I went to Lombard-ſtreet, I had a twenty-pound and a thirty-pound note at Caſtle's and Powell's, and the fifty-pound note I had at Mr. Bland's, that was Mr. Grey and Freeman's, but they went and got it for me, while I ſtaid there; then we came back to Hedge-lane, Jones and me; we had not been in one minute, Lycett and Jenkins were ſitting, and Lycett ſaid that Jenkins had loſt ſeventy guineas at a coffee-houſe with ſome officers; they ſaid he was a fooliſh country booby, and did not know his letters; he ſaid he thought he did as well as they; with that they got a bit of chalk, and marked A. B. C. D. then Mr. Jones made a letter, and Jenkins he turned about, and did not win it; they were to make a letter, and put a bottle over it, there was ſome guineas on the table, but how many I do not know; Jones won that bet, and I believe there was another bet, I believe Lycett won the next, but they inſiſted upon my making a letter, they ſolicited me to make a letter, I did make a letter C, ſo ſays Jones, put down one of the bank notes; I was fooliſh enough to put down one of the bank notes, a twenty pound; I made a C, and covered it with a bottle, I believe the bet was four or five guineas, but which I cannot ſay.

How came you to put down a bank note?——I had no caſh, and they ſolicited me very hard to do it, and I had abſolutely forgot he had taken up the two guineas and a half of mine; I made the letter C, and put the bottle over it, and then Jenkins turned round, and Jones ſays, once, twice, thrice, and off; ſo Jenkins pointed to C, and this Mr. Lycett ſays, it is all your's, it is all your's, and he puſhed my bank note and money to him, and Jenkins whipped up the note, and out he runs out of the room; I was thunderſtruck; then up the reſt got, and away the other two run after him; my pocket-book was laying at my left hand, and as ſoon as ever they were gone, I looked into my pocket-book, and the thirty and fifty-pound bank notes were gone too.

Look at thoſe men, are you ſure that thoſe are the men?——I am very ſure of it, I took a great deal of time to look at them.

How long was you in their company?——I was in their company above an hour; it is impoſſible for any man to ſee theſe men an hour, and be in their company, and not know them again; I took particular notice of Mr. Lycett, when he ſaid he was Sir James Eſdaile's clerk, ſo particular that he had a pair of corderoy breeches, and they looked very ſhabby, it is a face that no man can be deceived in, and his voice, I am ſure of them, that they are the two men.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. I recommend it to you not to conclude too ſoon that no man can be miſtaken, perhaps you will hear twelve men upon their oaths ſay, you are miſtaken?—Perhaps not.

I rather think you will, do you know the number of the notes at all?——This is my hand writing.

Taken from the banker's ſince you loſt your notes?——Yes.

Then you may put it in your pocket.

Mr. Silveſter. The notes you had, who had you them from, the banker?——I had the fifty pounds note from Mr. Gray's clerk.

Is that clerk here?—Yes, and the other clerk.

Mr. Garrow. Now, Mr. Haſtings, what countryman are you?——I told you I came from the neighbourhood of Berwick.

Had you been long in town before this King went to the Houſe?—Thirty-eight years.

That is marvelous! did you know Hedge-lane?——I know Hedge-lane, for I lived in the neighbourhood of Hedge-lane many years, I have connections with Mr. Roberts in Oxendon-ſtreet, a lawyer there.

May you be of any trade Mr. Haſtings?——No, I am in no trade, I have an employ in the cuſtoms.

That is more marvelous ſtill?——I am not aſhamed.

There is nothing to be aſhamed of, not even your folly; you like the reſt of the loyal ſubjects, were gaping for the King?—I had not much to do that day.

So I ſhould ſuppoſe; the man you picked up was a perfect ſtranger?——I knew Jones before, I had ſeen him walking upon the change then, and I ſaw him twice ſince.

Did you lay hold of him?——He is a very tall man, and he had a great ſtick in his hand, I went to get a conſtable firſt.

I think one came in that was the clerk to Sir James Eſdaile, and afterwards there came in the booby, a ſort of lout, a thing that had not much brains, you thought?—He had too much for me.

He had too much for you! you took him to be a ſort of lout, you took him to be a fool of a fellow, that was ſquandering his money?——I did, and theſe people plied me ſo very hard.

In ſhort, to make very ſhort of the ſtory, you thought there would be no harm in having ſome of the fool's money?—I had a very great ſcruple.

However, you put yourſelf to the trouble of going to Lombard-ſtreet, to get more money, to win ſome of the fool's money; why the biter was bit, north countryman as you are, you do not come far enough north yet?——No anſwer.

Ha! not a word, perfectly dumb, thunder-ſtruck; why Mr. Haſtings, I ſhall not get forward at this rate at all, we ſhall ſit here till this day month, we are likely to ſit long enough without it; what bet did you win?——I received none.

That is well, then you never ſaid, you won five pounds?——I never ſaid ſo.

Did not you win five pounds by producing the hundred pounds, you know the firſt heat?—I did not receive it.

I know that very well, you produced the hundred pounds?—I ſwear it never was produced, the hundred pounds upon the table.

Now, I aſk you, and attend a little, upon your oath, was it not ſo produced, as that the wager was declared to be won by you?——No, it was never mentioned after we came into the room, for they began, Lycett and he upon the A. B. C. and it was never mentioned.

You ſaw that ſomebody had won at the A. B. C. very eaſy, you ſaw they beat the fool at it?—They beat him.

You thought you could beat him too, ſo you made your letters?—Yes.

Will you ſwear that you did not depoſit the whole hundred as a bet againſt your hundred?—I will ſwear that, if I was to meet my God this moment.

You muttered ſomething, that you was bebewitched, we know that love bewitches men; I take it, it was the love of gain that bewitched you; you thought you could get a cool hundred out of the fool, it was better than that he ſhould ſpend it at that houſe; did not you mean to win the hundred from the fool, you was in love with the fool's fortune, and you got it at laſt; now do you mean to ſwear poſitively that you took the hundred pounds to Hedge-lane?—Yes, I ſaw the the bank-notes after I came there, when I took them out to lay the twenty pounds down.

You put up your pocket book again?—No, I did not, it was not a minute, I was ſtanding, and my pocket book was there, and the letter was before me, in a minute's time it was gone.

When you had put your letters under the bottle, the next thing was to make the depoſit?——Indeed the depoſit was down before the letter was made, the depoſit was down, for Mr. Jones inſiſted upon my making it.

The twenty pounds was the ſtake?——Undoubtedly the twenty pounds was put down as the ſtake.

Do you mean to ſwear that you carried the thirty pounds and fifty pounds with you?——I ſwear that I carried the thirty, and fifty, and the twenty pounds to Hedge-lane.

Are you ſure that you did not pledge the whole upon that ſtake?——No, I am very ſure I did not.

Before theſe perſons went, did they tell you for what purpoſe they were going?—No.

How long did you continue in the houſe?—I do not know, I was ſurprized, I ſaw what company I had been in, I was not in the houſe half a minute.

Will you venture to ſwear that you did not continue in the room waiting for theſe people ten minutes?——I will ſwear that I did not continue there five minutes, I am ſure it was not two minutes; after I recovered myſelf, I ſaid, to the man of the houſe, do you know theſe men; ſays he, I do not know them; ſays I, ſurely you muſt have ſeen them, he ſaid, he had ſeen the little one ſomewhere in Holborn, well ſays I, they have robbed me.

You ſaid ſo cooly, juſt as a man would talk of being cheated at play?——I ſtaid but a very little, I dare ſay, I did not ſtay there above ten minutes, and the man aſked me where I lived, in caſe he ſhould hear of any of them; it was a fortnight before I divulged it to any perſon upon earth.

How ſoon after the fortnight was it before you went to the houſe of Lycett?——I cannot poſitively ſay the day.

Was it a week, or three weeks?—It was not above three or four days.

Now you have told us you was directed to the houſe of Lycett?—Yes.

You went in diſguiſe, and you found him in the buſineſs, and it ſtruck you directly as ſoon as you ſaw him?—Yes.

Who gave you the information?——I do not know the perſon that gave it me.

Was it not one of the thief-takers that told you?—No, it was not.

Can you tell who it was?——I do not chuſe to tell you.

Will you ſwear that that perſon did not tell you, that at the houſe you went to, you would find the perſons who had defrauded you?—No, he did not ſay I ſhould ſee the men in Lycett's houſe, there were more houſes that he directed me to.

Did you go to theſe other houſes firſt?——I had been in ſeveral houſes.

Did not you go there to find the men that defrauded you?—I have been looking for them ever ſince I loſt it.

Upon your oath, did not you go to Lycett's houſe to find the men that defrauded you?—I went into many houſes.

Court. That is a very fair and plain queſtion, did not you go to look for the people that defrauded you?——Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Garrow. Had not you gone to the other houſes firſt?—I am conſidering which of the houſes I went to firſt; I went into the Brown Bear, Bow-ſtreet, and from there I went to the Queen's-head, Chandos-ſtreet, and from thence I came down Holborn to Chancery-lane, and went to Mr. Lycett's.

Did not the perſon whoſe name you chuſe to conceal, and who gave you the information, tell you that at Lycett's houſe you would ſee the men that had defrauded you?——No, he did not ſay I ſhould find them there, he ſaid there were houſes to which I might go, but the moment I came in I knew Lycett, there was a perſon talking with him, and Lycett ſaid, I know all the ſpies are out; thinks I, it is high time for me to get away; I ſaw Jenkins ſitting in the ſame box, I knew his eyes directly, his is a remarkable face; I was not ſatisfied with that, I would not have them taken up till I ſaw them once more; either the next day or the day following I went to Lycett's and had a pint of beer.

What ſort of room was it, where you loſt your money?——A little room below ſtairs from the tap room.

How many people were in the tap-room?—I cannot ſay.

Suppoſe you had called out ſtop thief! would they not have been ſtopped; did not this man go through the tap room; a man muſt come into the tap room to get out?——Yes.

Court. Then this door opens into the paſſage?—Yes.

Mr. Silveſter. When the bet was made for the twenty pounds, they put down four or five guineas?—Yes.

You did not bet the whole twenty pounds?—No.

RICHARD GWILLY ſworn.

I am clerk to Caſtle and Co.

Do you know the number of the note from your memory?——I cannot ſay I do.

Have you examined the books?—I have.

Mr. Garrow. Did you compare that with the number on the book yourſelf?—The number of the twenty pounds is 2137, 8365 the number of the thirty.

THOMAS FLOWER ELLIS ſworn.

The number of the fifty pounds is 5754; I am clerk to Mr. Bland.

Court. Let all the witneſſes go out, and let them be examined ſeparate, I have a queſtion to aſk of the proſecutor firſt; Haſtings, can you recollect what time of day it was, when you went to this public houſe?—It was almoſt four o'clock when the King went, it was very late, I know it was after three when I went to the public houſe.

How long had you been there, when Lycett came in?—I ſuppoſe half an hour, or three quarters of an hour, it was before, becauſe I was in the city I fancy before that time, I fancy it might be between four and five when Lycett came in.

How ſoon might Jenkins come in?——I cannot poſitively ſay whether it was before Lycett or after, but I think Lycett was the firſt, becauſe he aſked for the parcels, and they aſked what parcels, and he ſaid there were three parcels; then Jenkins came in after, I think it was after, it was not many minutes.

About what time was it when you went to the banker's?——It was about five o'clock.

Court to Gwilly. Do you recollect what time it was theſe men came to your ſhop?——Between four and five.

Court to Ellis. It muſt have been in banking hours, I ſuppoſe?——Certainly, Sir.

Conſequently before five.

Court. Let Mr. Haſtings go out of Court, and go into the parlour, I ſhall have a queſtion to aſk you after they are examined.

BENJAMIN BROWN ſworn.

I keep the Horſe and Groom, in Hedge-lane.

Do you remember Mr. Haſtings that you have ſeen here, ever at your houſe?——Yes, Sir.

Was it the day the King went to the Houſe, the 24th of January?——Yes.

Was he in your parlour any part of the day?——Yes.

Was there any company with him?——Yes, another gentleman came in with him.

How is that parlour ſituated with reſpect to the fire and the tap room ?——Cloſe to the tap-room.

Can any perſon go into the ſtreet, without going into the tap room ?—Yes.

Did you ever recollect ſeeing him before ? —I did not.

Do you know the two priſoners at the bar, or have you ever ſeen them ?—No, Sir.

Upon your oath was either of them at your houſe with Haſtings ?——I never ſaw them before, I am clear they were not in company with Haſtings at my houſe.

Whoever the people were that were in the parlour with Haſtings, do you remember their going away ?——Yes.

How long after was it you ſaw Haſtings ? ——It may be ten minutes.

You think it was ?—I think it was, he came out of the parlour once or twice, they came out of the parlour, and left the door open, and he ſat in the parlour facing the tap room, he came into the tap room, and ſeemed very uneaſy, and aſked where thoſe gentlemen were that were in the parlour.

What did he ſay to you when he ſpoke to you ?——He aſked me whether I knew theſe gentlemen, I told him no, ſo he began to hang his head, and ſaid, he had met with ſome bad company, I aſked him why, what is the matter, he ſaid he was taken in.

Did he tell you how ?——Yes, Sir, he came to the bar, and leaned over the bar, my wife and I was in it, and he began to tell us the caſe, that he had laid wagers on figuring, and that he had loſt a quantity of money.

How many people were in the tap room at that time ?——The tap room was pretty full.

Then he leaned his head over to you that the company in the tap room might not hear ?——Yes, I went into the parlour after that, and he told me the whole how it was; he ſaid, he was aſhamed of himſelf and did not know how to make mention of it; he ſaid, he was never ſo deceived, and taken in ſo in his life; he could not have thought that he ſhould be led into ſuch an error.

Did he ſhew you how he had loſt his money ?—He told me by figures or letters by writing ſomething on the table with chalk, I think it was letters, I do not recollect ſeeing the remains of any, there was ſome little daſh of chalk, but I do not recollect what it was.

Did he complain any thing of being robbed or any force being uſed to him ?—Not that night.

How long did he ſtay after they were gone ?——I cannot ſay, but I dare ſay, he was there good part of an hour talking about this.

Mr. Silveſter. You are the landlord of the Horſe and Groom ?——Yes.

You had a good deal of buſineſs that day ?—I was pretty buſy.

Who was your company in that little room that day, do you ſee any of them in Court ?—No, I do not ſee them.

Do not look always at the bar for your friends ?——I know that the priſoners are not the men, I ſhould know the men if I was to ſee them.

How long had you been in the room ?—I ſent out for ſome ſauſages and pigs kidney, and I ſerved them with beer, I have a boy, I never ſaw this Mr. Jones or Mr. Jenkins or the other in my life; when this man ſaid he was ſadly taken in, he ſaid, he had loſt his money.

Court. Had you occaſion to be much in the room with theſe men ?—No, Sir, no more than waiting on them.

Had you any reaſon to obſerve them particularly ?——By his telling me of them, made me recollect more.

When you was in the room with theſe people, had you any particular reaſon for obſerving them ?—None at all.

You never ſaw them before ?——Not to my knowledge.

Have you any doubt about it ?—I might ſee a perſon in the ſtreet, I do not know that I have, I may and I may not.

Do you know that you had ever ſeen them before that day ?—Not that can recollect.

Do you recollect that you have ever ſeen them before?—I never did.

Were you acquainted with the two priſoners before that time?——No, nor ſince.

When did you firſt ſee the two priſoners?—I believe it was the day they were taken up, they came down to our houſe with the officer; I do not know how he came to bring them to my houſe; the priſoner Lycett came to tell me he was going to the Juſtice's, he brought the conſtable to my houſe to know whether I knew him, I told him I did not; I ſaw them go out, they all three went out together, it was in the evening.

What time?—We had lighted candles, it might be five o'clock, or between five and ſix, I cannot poſitively tell the time.

Do you remember their coming in?—Yes.

Did they all come in together?—No, they did not.

Who came in firſt?—This Mr. Haſtings and another.

Did they come in, firſt one and then the other?——I think they did.

After they were all four in the room, was there any other company with them?——No, not to my knowledge; Mr. Haſtings and one of the others went away; the perſon that came with him, went away with him.

What drink had they?——They had ſome porter, and ſome rum and water; I do not recollect they had any ſpirits, I ſaw the three men go out.

Who paid the reckoning?—They paid the reckoning as they went out.

Did you ſtand in the paſſage to take the reckoning?——The bar door was in the paſſage, and they gave it me as they went out at the door.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

Did Haſtings ſee that they paid the reckoning; or did you tell him that they had paid the reckoning?—I dare ſay I did, I do not recollect he aſked me that queſtion.

Did you tell Haſtings that you had ſeen them go out?—Yes, he came and aſked me, and looked about and aſked if they was there, and I told him I ſaw them go out.

No, but did you tell him?——I did not tell him.

Did you tell him you had ſeen them go out at all?——He knew I muſt ſee them go out.

Did Haſtings pay the reckoning over again?—No queſtions were aſked by him about the reckoning, the laſt time they came in, they had two ſixpenny-worths, and they paid me the other when they came out.

Being a round ſixpence it was ſoon paid?——It was paid in a ſixpence, they gave me ſixpence.

They paid you firſt one ſixpence and then another; ſo then they had no occaſion to ſtop for change?——No.

Who paid for the ſauſages and beer?—They paid for that before they went out, they paid their dinner ſcore before.

Did Haſtings pay his part?——I do not know.

Did you receive the reckoning in the room with them all?—Upon my word I do not know whether they came to the bar, as they came out of the room to pay me the laſt ſixpenny-worths.

Then the reckoning was paid at three different times?——I cannot tell whether they had ordered a pot of beer or not, their dinner ſcore was paid together.

When did you firſt ſee Jenkins?—I never ſaw him him in my life ſince, when I ſaw Lycett, Jenkins was not with him, they were both at our houſe, but not together.

What brought them to your houſe?—I did not aſk them.

Is there any body of the name of John Brown, that keeps a houſe in Hedge-lane?—No.

Your name is Benjamin you are ſure?—Yes.

Have you never told any body it was John?—No.

There is a blank left for the name, and filled up with inſtructions, poſitive inſtructions for the proſecutor.

I live at No. 36, Iſlington Road; I am a carpenter; I know the priſoner Mr. Lycett; he lives at the Hole in the Wall, Chancery-lane; I made a new bar for him; I remember being employed by him on the 24th of January, and for fourteen days before, I had not finiſhed it but a few days; on the 24th of January, I breakfaſted with him, and I had a bit of luncheon, and I drank ſomething with a gentleman belonging to the Royal Circus, I continued in the houſe till nine at night, he was there all the time, he was very lame, he told me it was by wreſtling; he aſked me to go on the Saturday night, I found him lame when I came to work, and he was lame the remaining part of that week.

Can you ſay, that from one o'clock on the Tueſday, till eight o'clock at night, he did not leave you?——I can venture to ſay it, Sir, upon oath; I wiſh to be put to the ſtricteſt oath you can give me, I am able to ſay he was not from home; I have no particular reaſon for recollecting the day, till they aſked me if I remembered his being at home; I was ſerved with a ſubpœna to attend this Court.

What means did you take in order to recollect?——I could tell by my work, and his being lame, I was there at work every day in that week.

But how was you able to recollect this lameneſs was in that week?——I recollect it chiefly by being the time the King went to the Houſe; I know the day before he was lame, I heard alſo a talking of it at that time; I am poſitive he was at home, I dined with him, and I recollect what I had for dinner, there was a gentleman belonging to the Royal Circus, his name was Mr. George Brett; about eleven, or between eleven and twelve, there was a gentleman, who is a cheeſemonger, and there were gentlemen, who were butchers, had a luncheon, and Mr. Lycett aſked me to come and have a bit.

Mr. Silveſter. When did you begin this work, repairing the bar?——I made a new bow window and ſhutters to the bar againſt the ſtreet; I took out two other windows, and put in a bow window; I began the work ſome where about the 18th or 19th, but I cannot be certain, without my book; I was at the houſe about a fortnight before I finiſhed it; the latter end of that week, on a Saturday, I brought away my tools, I think I left off working the 28th.

You have been there backwards and forwards?—No, I have not been there above once or twice ſince; I recollect the King went to the Houſe, becauſe we were having a reliſh, and we were talking about it; I did not hear when he was taken up for this; he was backwards and forwards in the parlour to the tap-room; he had a cut ſhoe, without a buckle.

Court. How long did this gentleman's lameneſs continue, how long did he wear the cut ſhoe without the buckle?——To the beſt of my knowledge, as well as I can recollect, about a week, he had not left it off till Saturday night; to my knowledge, he wore it the whole week; but not thinking of any circumſtance, I did not take ſuch notice to remember the particular day, but by the King going to the Houſe, and the croud of people that was there, and there were two chairmen there, and they ſaid they ſhould get a job, and I heard different people talking about it.

Was this the ſubject of converſation at dinner?——I do not recollect the circumſtance of that paſſing at dinner, I cannot charge my memory that it was.

This is a houſe of pretty full cuſtom, pretty much frequented?—I do not know, I never ſaw any body there but tradeſmen.

Is not it a houſe much reſorted to by cuſtomers?—It was.

Then there were different ſorts of people might ſee this man in his cut ſhoe?——I never ſaw many ſtrangers come in.

Is not this houſe reſorted to by all the porters and ſervants of Lincoln's Inn?——Not to my knowledge.

JOHN BURROWS ſworn.

Where do you live?——The corner of White's-alley, Chancery-lane, I am a butcher; I know Lycett, I have dealt with him, I went there about eleven, and ſtopped there a bit the day the King went to the Houſe, I was there from eleven till one, and one Hayward, Edwards, Northover, and Lycett were there together; I ſaw Lycett there about eleven o'clock, his leg was ſwelled very much, he reſted his hand on a ſtick; one Edwards, a cheeſemonger, came in with the leg of a gooſe, I have ſeen that gentleman, I drank with him out of the ſame cup, I am ſure it was the 24th of January, becauſe of the cheeſemonger's being in company with me, I told him to ſend me ſome butter, he ſent it in the next morning, and that was the 25th.

EDWARD EDWARDS ſworn.

I was out on Tueſday the 24th of January laſt, about ſome particular buſineſs; upon my coming home, I called at Lycett's, between eleven and twelve, I ſaw ſeveral people in the back room, I ſaw Lycett at home all the day, he had ſlippers, I think his leg appeared to be a good deal ſwelled; I ſtaid there till near two o'clock, we had our beer together.

How ſoon after this did you hear that Mr. Lycett was accuſed of this affair?—A party came to me, and aſked me if I could remember the day when I brought a part of a gooſe? I ſaid I could tell the day by my day-book, becauſe that day Mr. Burrows gave me an order for ſome cheeſe and butter; I was there between half after eleven and two; I do not believe he was able to go out of his houſe, he had been making an alteration in his houſe.

OLIVER MARSDEN ſworn.

I live in Ray-ſtreet, Clerkenwell, at No. 29, I am a carpenter, I know Lycett, I remember being in his houſe the 24th of January, from twelve to twenty minutes paſt one; I went to dine there, I had beef-ſteaks and onions; he was very lame, he could ſcarcely walk acroſs the tap-room, I cannot ſay what ſort of ſhoes he had on, he had a ſtick in his hand.

Could he have walked far?—Not as he appeared to me; I remember Northover the carpenter being there; I worked in Lincoln's Inn, when we quitted work, we went to Lycett's houſe to have ſome beer.

Did he appear to have his lameneſs ſtill?——Yes, he was lame for two or three days together.

Mr. Silveſter. How do you recollect this 24th of January?—Becauſe we were talking about going to ſee the King, and I ſaid no, becauſe we were too much in a hurry.

How ſoon after this was it that you heard that Lycett was accuſed of any offence?—I cannot recollect.

Why cannot you recollect ſo remarkable a thing as hearing that your friend was accuſed of an offence?——I recollect dining there, and the King's going to the Houſe, and talking about it, but there was very little ſaid to me; when he was accuſed of the crime I cannot ſay to the day, it might be a fortnight, I cannot ſay.

Then you have no recollection before that particular day, nor no recollection of any thing that happened ſince?——I cannot recollect; the people ſaid that ſuch a night there was ſuch a man came in diſguiſe, and I recollected being there.

What coat had Lycett on?——A black coat.

GEORGE BRETT ſworn.

I profeſs muſic, I was employed at the Royal Circus; I dined at Lycett's with him and his wife, the carpenter that was putting up a bar in his houſe, and another gentleman that was a ſtranger, and after that I drank tea with Mr. Lycett and his wife; I was there from about half paſt one till after nine at night, Lycett was very lame.

Mr. Garrow. He could not have danced to your muſic?——No, Sir, he was very lame, his ſhoe was a ſort of ſlipper; to the beſt of my knowledge he was not abſent half an hour together, I am perfectly convinced of it, he could ſcarcely walk along the place, his leg was reſted on a chair the beſt part of the day; he had on that day a black coat, I believe he does generally wear a black coat; I called on Mr. Lycett on the Monday, my benefit was on the 16th of January laſt at the Royal Circus, and we had not ſettled, and he was very lame; he ſaid, I am ſo lame, I cannot look for the tickets that were not taken, and he wiſhed me to call again in a day or two; I called on the 24'h, and dined there, and we ſettled; I have the tickets he returned me, I am ſure it was the day the King went to the Houſe.

Mr. Silveſter. After dinner, what became of Mr. Lycett?—Him and me, I ſuppoſe, ſat ſmoaking our pipes.

The carpenter drank tea with you, I underſtand?——Only with Mr. Lycett and his wife.

Did you eat a bit of ſupper there?——No, Sir, I went home to ſupper; I ſtaid till paſt nine, I believe the carpenter ſtopped till he had done his labour.

Did not he take a pipe with you?—I will not ſay particularly; there was a man, or two or three at work there, but whether they were carpenters or not, I cannot ſay.

Were there more carpenters than Northover that day?——I cannot anſwer for that; the laſt day that I dined at Lycett's was the day that the King went to the houſe, ſome people came in, and ſpent the evening.

THOMAS HAYWARD ſworn.

I am a bricklayer in Bell-yard; I was there, and we had a hind quarter of a gooſe; there was Northover, the cheeſemonger, and a butcher, and the landlord, he brought the beer; we had our reliſh, and ſtaid there till towards one.

How was Lycett that day?——He was very lame, ſeemingly to me, his ancle appeared to be ſwelled.

Had he a ſtick with him, could he have walked from Chancery-lane to the Park with great eaſe?——I do not know how long his lameneſs continued; I ſet down in my caſh book money received of Lycett, the entry is on the 24th of January, I am poſitive of it.

And you referred to your book, hearing he was charged?—Yes.

Mr. Silveſter. How came you not to bring your book?—I did not know it would be wanted.

Did you obſerve his ſhoes or ſlippers?—No, I did not obſerve particularly, only his walking lame.

JOHN HALLING ſworn.

Where do you live?—At Mr. Lycett's, I am a chairman, I ply and lodge there; I was there the 24th of January, I think on the Wedneſday, the day the King went to the Houſe, we uſed to carry a fare out that day, and I got up and got my chair ready, and was diſappointed; I ſaw my landlord there all day long, he was never out of the houſe at all, he was ſo lame he was not able to walk acroſs the room, he hurt his foot the Saturday before, he could not wear his buckle at all, his heel was vaſtly ſwelled; I had opportunities of ſeeing him from one or two in the afternoon till paſt ſix; I can ſwear he was not from home for a quarter of an hour.

If he had gone from home, muſt he have limped ſo that every body muſt obſerve it?—Yes; he could not walk ten yards without a ſtick; I believe he had on a blackiſh coat that day; Northover the carpenter was there ſeveral days before making a new bar.

Mr. Silveſter. How long have you lodged there?——Between eight and nine years; this lameneſs was in his foot, it was got by a ſtrain; I was ſent with no meſſages to Lincoln's Inn.

Had you part of the reliſh of the leg of gooſe?——No, Sir; but I know them that had; they were in the parlour, and I was in the tap-room, it is a houſe much frequented by people, all the ſervants of Lincoln's Inn and porters.

WILLIAM HUNT ſworn.

I am a chairman, I am partner with Halling, I ply at Lycett's, I was there the whole day the King went to the Parliament Houſe, I ſaw the landlord there all day, to the beſt of my knowledge, he was never out the whole day, I muſt have miſſed him if he had been from home but half an hour; I am ſure he never was abſent half an hour, his leg was ſwelled a good deal, I am ſure he was at home the whole of that day.

Mr. Silveſter. You do not live there?——I live at No. 6, Crown-court, Chancery-lane.

Court. If you, gentlemen, have reaſon to think his witneſſes are right, you need not call to character.

Priſoner Lycett. I went to Hedge-lane, to know whether Brown knew me, and the gentleman aſked him, whether he knew me, he ſaid he did not know me.

THOMAS SMITH ſworn.

I live in New Gravel-lane, I am a carpenter and undertaker; I know Jenkins ſeven weeks or two months, he called at my houſe the 24th of January, between one and two, and dined with me, and remained in my company till between ſeven and eight, and then left me; my reaſon of recollecting it was the ſecond day of term, and I had ſome buſineſs with Mr. Willey, an attorney, and I was to have gone, and Jenkins coming, I omitted going, on account of his coming, as he knew my friends and relations; I am very poſitive to the day he dined with me, on the 24th of January, my wife and family dined with me, and George Sibley.

Mr. Silveſter. What is Jenkins?——I do not know; he enquired for a waiter's place; he brought a meſſage from my brother about ſeven weeks ago, I am poſitive as to the time, becauſe of neglecting going to the place I mentioned.

Mr. Garrow. He kept a coffee-houſe at Briſtol, did not he?—I do not know.

Mr. Silveſter. What had you for dinner?——A piece of pork and ſome greens.

What had you to drink?——Porter.

Any thing elſe after dinner?—Yes, beer repeated.

Did you drink tea in the evening?——No.

How came they to ſit ſo long with you?——We were in diſcourſe about the country and relations; we had five or ſix pots of beer.

Did Sibley ſtay there all the time?——No, he did not.

What time did he go away?——I cannot ſay.

How long before Jenkins?——I ſuppoſe an hour before, more or leſs.

Who came firſt?——Sibley.

GEORGE SIBLEY ſworn.

I live in Ratcliff-Highway, No. 102, I am a patten-maker and ſaleſman; I went there the 24th of laſt month, we had a pint of beer; a young man came in, his name was Jenkins, he ſaid, let us have a pot of beer, for he is a countryman, and Mr. Smith ſaid, ſtop, and we had a bit of dinner, pork and greens, and ſome beer and a pipe; I ſtaid till ſeven.

Was you a countryman?—Yes; we had no tea at all, only ſome beer; we were talking about ſome friends, I recollect it was the 24th, for I went to fetch my grandſon to ſee the King go to the Houſe, that was the reaſon, or elſe I ſhould not have taken any nomination of it.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you ever dine there before?——No, I came from Tewkſbury, in Glouceſterſhire.

How many pots of porter had you?—I cannot ſay, we might have three or four; we dined at two o'clock, we ſtaid till ſix, we had boiled pork and greens; the company conſiſted of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and Mr. Jenkins.

Court. Did any body elſe dine with you?—Nobody elſe.

Man, woman, nor child?—No.

How long had you been acquainted with Smith?—Three or four years.

What does his family conſiſt of?—His wife and a ſon, I cannot tell the reſt of the family; the ſervants I did not take any notice of.

Are you rated?—Yes.

What is your name in thoſe books?—George Sibley.

Have you never been known by any other name?——No.

Jury. What coloured clothes had the priſoner on that day when you dined?—A blue coat; it may be the ſame coat, but I am ſure that's the man, I never ſaw him before in my life, I never was in this Court in my life.

Not upon any account?——Is this the King's-Bench Court, I have been there?——No, it is not.

Then I never was here in my life.

(The priſoner Jenkins called two more witneſſes to his character.)

(The priſoner Lycett called one witneſs to his character.)

JOHN PITT ſworn.

I know that man they call Sibley; I am poſitive he never was in this Court before; his real name is George Sibley, he comes from Tewkſbury.

Court. Call in the Proſecutor Haſtings.

Court to Proſecutor. When was Jenkins taken up?——They were taken up in one day; he was taken at the Queen's Head in Great Queen-ſtreet, Lincoln's-Inn-fields.

Had you ever ſeen Jenkins and Lycett together, except when you loſt your money?——Never, till I ſaw them at Lycett's houſe about two or three days before they were taken up; I went in there, and he was playing with a turn-about thing with a man that ſells gingerbread; when he was taken up, the landlord of the Queen's Head wanted to perſonate Jenkins; I am equally clear to the perſons of both the priſoners.

How were they dreſſed at the time you loſt your money?—Lycett had a black coat on, and the ſame kind of button, and as to his face, I am poſitive ſure of it; I made quite ſure of them, before I would have them taken up.

Theſe two priſoners came in after you and Jones?——Yes.

Who went off with the money?—Jenkins went firſt, Lycett followed, and then Jones.

Did you obſerve any thing of any of them being lame?——When Lycett ſat, he had his leg up, and his breeches very ſhabby.

Had he ſhoes or boots on?——He had ſhoes on.

Were his buckles ſilver or yellow?—I cannot tell, Jones had boots on, I did not obſerve Jenkins.

Who paid the reckoning?——The landlord told me they paid it as they went out.

Priſoner Jenkins to Brown. Do not you know one Burbeck?—Yes.

Was not he one of the three that was in the room?——That was the man.

Priſoner Jenkins. My Lord, I am informed there was a man of the name of Burbeck, who is very much like me.

William Lycett, }
John Jenkins, } Guilty

Of ſtealing, but not in the dwelling houſe of John Brown.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

292. JOHN VANDERPORT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th day of February, one boiling copper, value 10s. belonging to Hugh Mucklanetod, and then and there affixed to his dwelling-houſe againſt the ſtatute.

HUGH MUCKLANETOD ſworn.

I live in Barrett's-court, Marybone, No. 25, I loſt this boiling copper, on the 11th of February, I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and I opened my door, I went down directly and found the copper miſſing, I had not ſeen it for two days before, when I ſaw it, it was fixed in brick work, it appears now as if it was lately taken from the place, I can ſwear ſafely it is my copper; I found the priſoner at the door with one Hamilton, the priſoner ſaid nothing, I took him into cuſtody.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner coming from this man's door with the copper in his hand, I aſked him where he was going with it, he ſaid he was carrying it home; I aſked him whether he had a right to take it home, he ſaid, he had; I let him walk till he came to the end of the court, and there I ſtopped him, and he ſet the copper down, and ſaid, he would go and call a woman that would ſhew his right; I deſired him to lift up the copper and take it back, he did not move the copper, but walked towards the houſe, I took the copper, and followed him, when we came near the houſe, he ſet off as faſt as he could; I flung down the copper, and ran after him, and took him, I gave him to the cuſtody of the watchman, after I brought him back, there were four places in the copper marked, where he had raiſed it up.

Priſoner. A man aſked me to carry it.

The priſoner called three witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

To be whipped, and confined twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

293. THOMAS JEFFRIES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 22d day of February, one wicker baſket, value 6d. one linen cloth, value 6d. and forty-four pounds weight of butter, value 40s. the property of Joſeph Davis.

JOSEPH DAVIS ſworn.

I loſt a baſket of butter, on the 22d of February, I came down ſtairs about a quater paſt ſeven, in the morning and unlocked the back door of the ſhop, I expected a baſket of butter, I never recovered the bſk et, but in conſequence of the information I received, the priſoner was taken.

WILLIAM DELAHAY ſworn.

On the 22d of February, I laid down a flat of butter at my maſter's ſhop door, between the hours of ſeven and eight in the morning, upon which I went into a private door to get the key to open the ſhop door, and when I opened the ſhop door it was gone.

CATHERINE OLDING ſworn.

I was coming acroſs the way, and I ſaw the priſoner take the flat off his head.

Which is he?—That is he.

(She looks the wrong way.)

Go to him and touch him.

(Goes to Harvey the conſtable and touches him.)

What did he do with it?——I had nothing more to do with it, I am ſure that he is the man.

What opportunity had you of obſerving him to know him again?—By his face.

You know his face again perfectly well?—Yes.

And that is the man?—Yes.

JOHN DOWNE ſworn.

I live at the houſe where the priſoner lodges; on the 21ſt of February, the priſoner ſlept out all night, and on the 22d, between ſeven and eight he came home, and he brought home a flat of butter with him, and ſet it on the table, he aſked me for a knife, I lent it him, he then cut the parcel open, he carried the parcel up ſtairs and went to bed; I went up ſtairs, and in the parcel I ſaw a note, the 19th of February, ſent to Mr. Davis, three dozen and eight pounds of butter; and in the evening I heard a baſket rattle, it was taken out of the back part of the houſe.

Proſecutor. I heard no more of my butter, the next evening the priſoner ſent to me, and aſked if I would mitigate matters if he paid for it, he ſaid, to be ſure it was a very fooliſh thing.

Had any thing been ſaid to lead him to any expectations of favour?——Not one ſyllable, he ſaid that another man had deſired him to carry the butter home; and he took the butter up at my door, and they took it to my houſe, and went to bed together, he ſaid the other man had the property and not him, he acknowledged the taking of it, and offered to pay for it.

Priſoner. Whether I did not ſay the baſket was in the room where I lay, which is a common lodging room.

Proſecutor. No, I ſwear that he told me he took it.

PATRICK DIVINE ſworn.

I am door keeper to the Rotation-office, in Litchfield-ſtreet; I had this man in cuſtody, he was brought to the Rotation-office and examined, and ſtood committed; he aſked me to look to ſee whether Mr. Davis was gone, I did, I aſked him what he wanted with him, he ſaid I ſhould be glad to ſee him to try if we could ſettle matters, for although I took the butter as the man deſired me, I did not know whoſe butter it was; I went to Mr. Davis, no promiſes were made to him.

Court to Downe. When he came home that morning, was any body with him?—Yes, there was the other man had a pint of beer in the tap room, the other man did not go up ſtairs at firſt, but he went up afterwards.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had got out, and was coming to my lodgings, a man called out, that I had been drinking with at the Coach and Horſes in Welbeck-ſtreet, he had a baſket on his head, he aſked me where I was going; I told him I lodged at that houſe, he called for a pint of beer, he ſtaid, I was ſleepy and went to bed; he ſlept in the bed the boy ſlept in, with another man, there were three men in the room, the man got up and brought up the baſket, they had been playing at Juſtice Jarvis or ſhove-halfpenny, he played for ſome hours, and loſt ſeveral pots of beer, he had no money to pay for it, he went out and brought in ſome money, where he got it I do not know, he went away, I never appeared before a Court of Juſtice before; I leave it to the Court and Gentlemen of the Jury, for upon my honor I am innocent of the affair.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character, who ſaid, he was a ſtay-maker, but could not work on account of his eyes, and that he maintained himſelf by writing letters and petitions.

Proſecutor. His own account that he gave of himſelf at the Magiſtrates, was that he played the Clown at the pantomime at Mr. Aſtley's, and was articled to Mr. Aſtley for three years.

GUILTY.

To be whipped and impriſoned for ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

294. CHARLES FLETCHER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 29th day of January, one iron gate belonging to Ann Gee, then and there fixed to a certain iron fence belonging to the dwelling-houſe of the ſaid Ann Gee.

ANN MYERES ſworn.

I live with Miſs Gee, in Red-lion-ſquare, I am cook; the area gate was loſt the 29th of January, we were alarmed at eight, with an account of its being loſt, I know the gate.

WILLIAM ANDREWS ſworn.

I am a peace officer, about eight on Sunday morning, I took the priſoner with the gate.

RICHARD BAKER ſworn.

On the 29th of January I was going through Red-lion-ſquare, about ſeven, and after I got to this ſtreet, I ſaw two men buſy at this houſe, on the right hand of the ſquare out of Fiſher-ſtreet, and ſaw the priſoner and another take away this gate, the priſoner carried it into a public houſe; I ſent for a conſtable and took the priſoner, I am ſure he is the man, I never loſt ſight of him, but it was two or three hundred yards diſtance, I went to the pump, on the other ſide of the ſquare, and he went into Fiſher-ſtreet.

Then you loſt ſight of him?—Yes, for a little while.

ROBERT HURST ſworn.

I ſaw two men pitch an iron gate, the priſoner was one, I did not ſee whoſe ſhoulder it was pitched from, I was within twenty yards of him in a blue coat and a red cape, I paſſed them twice afterwards, I ſecured the property.

Andrews. I took the priſoner in his own houſe in Newtoner's-lane, he keeps an old iron ſhop, he put on his coat, either brown or blue, I cannot be poſitive which, there were two ſuits of clothes in the room, I cannot tell what colour.

(The gate depoſed to.)

The priſoner called four witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

295. SARAH SEAVES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 3d day of February, one woollen jacket, and trowſers, value 18d. the property of William Harris.

The priſoner was taken with the things upon her, which Elizabeth Fiſher ſaw her take.

GUILTY, 10d.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

296. ALEXANDER FALCONER and JAMES TURNER were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Benjamin Salmon on the King's highway, on the 16th day of February, on the river Thames, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taken from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſilver watch, value 30s. one ſeal, value 1d. one key, value 1d. and eleven halfpence, value fivepence halfpenny, his property.

BENJAMIN SALMON ſworn.

Between twelve and one, on the night of the 16th of February laſt, I was robbed off New Crane-ſtairs, on the river, I was on board a lighter, and a boat came alongſide with ſix people, and five came on board, one remained in the boat; William Terry was with me in the barge, I was getting out of my cabin to go upon deck, when the dog alarmed me, I did not ſee the priſoners come alongſide, I ſaw five people upon deck, four of them came down into the cabin, I ſaw thoſe that were upon deck out of the hatches, I aſked them what they wanted, and they took my watch out of my pocket, Falconer did.

What did they ſay to you?—When they came down, they ſaid they wanted their property, or property; then they went to the other part of the cabin, and they had got a dark lanthorn, and they told us to ſhut our eyes, and ſaid, fire on them you b—gg—rs, fire on them! it might be one or two that ſaid ſo; then the priſoner Falconer flaſhed a piſtol at me, I am ſure of that, and it did not go off, with that he flaſhed at me a ſecond time, he preſented a piſtol, I am ſure ſnapped it a ſecond time.

Did it flaſh a ſecond time?——Yes.

How could that be?——He primed it again.

How do you know?——He did, to be ſure, it ſeemed to flaſh.

Did it flaſh a ſecond time?——To the beſt of my knowledge I think it did, I believe I ſaw it the ſecond time.

Did you, or did you not?——Well, I am ſure it did, it flaſhed the ſecond time, after he had taken my watch; then three of them went to our little bit of a cabin, and opened the drawers, and took a pocket-book out, and they drew the lights of the dark lanthorn, and ſhewed themſelves, and two of them ſtood up at the part I was at, and looked at the pocket-book by a glimmering light, and took the notes out of it, and left the book in the cabin; after they had ſo done, they went upon deck, and they drew the captain out of his cabin; for any thing I know they did, they ſaid they did, I did not ſee them, they ſaid they hauled him out by his legs.

What did you ſee them do, did you ſee them haul him out of his cabin?——Yes, I did.

Court. If you come here to tell a true fact, why all this heſitation about it?——(No anſwer.)

Who brought you here to give your evidence?—To give my evidence! I was not deſired to come here by any body.

Who carries on this proſecution?—Who carries it on!

Who indicted thoſe men, who pays the expences of it?——I have nobody to carry it on, but myſelf.

Do you pay the expences?——I do not know that.

Who does then?—I paid the expences, what was laid on me; the priſoner drew the cabin ſlide upon us.

Was Terry in the ſame cabin with you?——Yes.

Then he could hear and ſee all that paſt?—For any thing that I know; there are two places in the cabin that we call bed-cabins; they hauled him out of his bed-cabin, I ſaw them, that was after they took my watch.

You ſaw them do that?—Yes.

How came you, when you firſt ſpoke of hauling Terry out of it, to ſay you knew nothing of it, but as he told you?——As he told me!

Aye; how came you to ſay that?—To the beſt of my remembrance.

Are you ſober?——I am not drunk.

Have not you been drinking this morning?

Court. He is not in a condition fit to give evidence againſt two men for their lives.

WILLIAM TERRY ſworn.

Three or four men came into the cabin, but I do not know any of them, I ſaw nobody, but they took and rifled me of my handkerchief and breaſt-buckle, there are two bed places.

Could you ſee and hear all that paſſed?—They threatened him; he had a watch when he went to bed, I know he had not it afterwards, but I did not ſee him take it, nor who they were I do not know; they put a blanket over me, there was a piſtol ſnapped in the cabin; I know they had piſtols, by putting them cloſe to my face; there was no light at all, I was in bed, and aſleep.

Did you ſee them have any lanthorn?—No.

Did you hear or ſee any piſtol fired before you was blinded?——No.

Did you hear any thing afterwards?——I heard them make uſe of theſe words, Murder him! I cannot ſay I heard any arms ſnap; I am a lighter-man, Salmon is maſter of one of our crafts.

Why did you let him get into a condition not to be fit to give evidence in a Court of Juſtice?—I cannot ſee he is drunk.

JOHN ORANGE ſworn.

On the 17th of February, I received information early in the morning, of a frigate being robbed; Mr. Elby and me went in purſuit of the people, and on information we found Falconer in bed, and the other priſoner at another place; I found a knife upon the ſhorteſt, which Mr. Terry has ſworn to. I ſaw no watch found.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

On the 17th of February, I heard of the brig being robbed; nobody was on board but a boy; after that it ſtruck Mr. Orange and me who it was; I was not at the taking of Falconer, I was the firſt apprehender of Turner.

Do not you know that this was a common lodging-houſe?——There might be diſorderly girls kept there.

I aſk you again have you any doubt that this houſe where you found this man, is a common lodging-houſe?——I look upon it it was.

Have you any ſort of reaſon to believe that it was his own ſeparate lodging?——No. I found nothing upon him concerning this robbery.

MARGARET BOWERS ſworn.

I live in Wilmot's-court; I got up to go to market between four and five, and going down the court, I ſaw three men ſtanding by Mr. Chaffey's door; I aſked them what it was o'clock? they ſaid it was pretty nigh five; I ſaw one of them with a bag.

Who were the three men?—Theſe two priſoners were two, and another a kind of a Jew ſort of a man.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, excluſive of this drunken man, there is no evidence at all.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

296. The ſaid ALEXANDER FALCONER and JAMES TURNER were again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Terry, on the 16th day of February, on the river Thames, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, a ſilver breaſt-buckle, ſet with ſtones, value 10d. a ſilk handkerchief, value 2d. one claſp knife, value 1d. and four ſhillings in monies numbered, his property.

WILLIAM TERRY ſworn.

I loſt an old black handkerchief off my neck, and a ſilver breaſt-buckle, with ſome ſtones in it, about four ſhillings in money, and two or three halfpence.

Were there any other things you loſt?—No, not belonging to me.

Did you loſe any knife?—That was my knife, but I do not know how they came by it; I had a knife in the day-time.

Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner's Counſel. After you had dined, you went on ſhore?—Yes, we went to waſh our dinner down.

You drank pretty freely?——We had a pint or two of beer.

Have not you ſaid, that that very evening you was exceedingly tipſey; have not you ſaid to ſome of his friends, that you wondered any body ſhould have ſworn to the perſons; that you and Salmon were both too drunk to know any body?——Not to my knowledge.

Did not you ſay ſo to Mr. Lucas?——Not to my knowledge, I will not be poſitive.

WILLIAM ORANGE ſworn.

I found the knife in Turner's coat-pocket with another.

Terry. A knife is a hard thing to ſwear to.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, there is no evidence.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

297. The ſaid ALEXANDER FALCONER, JAMES TURNER, and ELIAS ABRAHAMS, were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of February, one cloth coat, value 10s. three rules, value 2d. two iron gimblets, value 2d. two linen bags, value 6d. the property of John Richardſon.

JOHN RICHARDSON ſworn.

I loſt my box about ſeven on the 17th of February; it contained the things mentioned in the indictment; the veſſel was at Rotherhithe, the box was upon deck, there was no room to put it below, the ſhip was ſo lumbered; I ſaw it the night before.

Did you ever hear of it again ?—I heard of the rules and great coat at Shadwell. I believe them to be my rules, for my name is upon one of them.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

On the 17th of February, I was at New Crane, and I heard of a boat being ſtolen from there, that was loaded with cotton; I took Falconer, who was a-bed at Mr. Chaffey's, and when I came down ſtairs, there were two women in bed, and I found theſe tools up one pair of ſtairs in a cupboard on the landing place, and this dark lanthorn, and ſome gimblets, and ſome rules.

I think you told us, on a former indictment, that this houſe of Mr. Chaffey's was a lodging-houſe ?—There is only one bed in the houſe; the two girls lay in another chamber; Falconer ſaid he knew nothing about the things; it is a diſorderly houſe, I am informed, and from the company I ſaw in it, I know it to be ſo; here is a coat which was up in the one pair of ſtairs at Chaffey's, in the room where the girls were.

Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner's Counſel. In fact, you have known a number of people aſſemble in that houſe at different times ?——I have ſeen other families there.

——— FORRESTER ſworn.

The priſoner Turner and Abrahams were in a garret there, and there I found this great coat, in the room where they were, it is all over cotton; Turner and Abrahams were in the room together; there was a girl of the town put a handkerchief round the Jew's neck, and they denied any knowledge of the great coat, but the Jew lad ſaid this was his bag; they did not ſay how the great coat came there; the girl of the town ſaid that two ſailors had brought it a day or two before.

Richardſon. This is my coat.

What do you know it by ?—I have had it eight years, there is no ſleeve-linings, and it is moth-eaten on the right ſide, and ſeveral of the buttons ſhelled; I cannot ſwear to the bag.

Priſoners Turner and Abrahams. There are witneſſes on the outſide of the door, about the great coat.

COLLET MOORE ſworn.

What do you come here about ?——It is enough to ſhock one to ſpeak among all you gentlemen, but if you will give me time, I will ſpeak.

Let me caution you to ſpeak the truth ?—Very well gentlemen, I will ſpeak as far as I do know; I live at No. 8, and this coat was brought by two men into my ſiſter's houſe, where I live, Sir.

What coat was it ?——A light colour dirty coat, it was before theſe two men were taken up.

Who were the two men ?—I cannot ſay they came to their lodging, and went away the next morning, and they left their great coats behind them.

Did they leave it to pay their lodging or what ?——They paid for their lodging, and they aſked leave to leave it.

What ſort of a great coat was it ?——A lightiſh dirty ſort of a drab colour, juſt like this man's coat, but only it may be dirtier, I will not ſay.

What became of the coat afterwards ?—Mr. Forreſter came on the Friday morning, and took it out of my ſiſter's houſe, it was the very ſame coat that the men left, which Forreſter took out on the Friday morning, I am quite ſure it was the ſame.

You were in the room with theſe two men when they were taken ?—Sir, I was not in the room, when theſe men firſt came up, I went up after.

Do you think you ſhould know the coat if you was to ſee it ?—I never took it up in my hands.

Court to Elbey. Shew her the coat you produced ?—That is not the coat.

Court. Shew her the other ?——Yes, I will ſwear to the coat, it was much ſuch another as this.

Can you ſwear the coat that Forreſter took on Friday morning was the ſame coat the man left?—No, only it was the ſame colour.

301. HENRY HALL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d day of January laſt, one wicker baſket, value 2s. ſeven quartern loaves of wheaten bread, value 3s. 6d. the property of Chriſtopher Nichols.

CHRISTOPHER NICHOLS ſworn.

I am a maſter baker; on Monday the 23d of January laſt, my ſervant took ten quartern loaves of wheaten bread out with him, he went from my ſhop a quarter before twelve, and returned without his bread a quarter of an hour after.

JAMES GIFFORD ſworn.

I left my baſket the corner of North-ſtreet; I left ſeven quartern loaves in it, I found them at Juſtice Walker's, I know the bread and the baſket, I made the bread; I ſaw the priſoner at the Juſtice's about ſix in the evening.

(Depoſes to the Bread and the Baſket.)

——— CUMMINGS ſworn.

I took the priſoner with the baſket in Dyott-ſtreet; he dropped the baſket, I took him to the round-houſe, he ſaid before the Juſtice, a man gave him the baſket, and that he knew him, and had drank with him ſeveral times.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Coming down Tottenham-court-road, a man hired me to carry the baſket, I had not broke my faſt for three days; the man was a ſtranger to me.

GUILTY.

302. BENJAMIN BULL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of February, twelve pennyweights of ſilver cuttings and turnings, value 3s. and thirteen pennyweights of ſilver ſolder, value 2s. the property of Heſter Bateman.

PETER BATEMAN ſworn.

I live in Bunhill-row, I carry on buſineſs as a working goldſmith for my mother Heſter Bateman. On Friday the 24th of February, being at dinner in my back parlour, in conſequence of an information, I ſent for an officer, and ſent for the priſoner; ſaid I, Mr. Bull, you have ſome of my mother's property; he denied it; I told him, it is in vain, we have proofs of it; he then acknowledged it, and he put his hands in his pocket, and produced a ſmall bit of ſilver ſolder; he preſented it to me: immediately I gave him in charge of the officer I ſaid this is not all, do you ſearch him; upon which the officer felt in his pocket, and another piece was produced; upon which I ſaid, that is not all; ſays he, I aſſure you it is, Sir; ſays I, I am informed there were ſome turnings, he denied it, I deſired the conſtable to ſearch him again, and in his other pocket I found ſome turnings and cuttings looſe together, upon this, he was committed: there were, I think, twelve pennyweight of ſilver, value 3s. and thirteen pennyweight of ſolder, value 2s.

ABEL BECK ſworn.

I work with Mr. Bateman. Laſt Monday, the 14th of February, I went up into the ſhop, and got under the board after dinner; in about two or three minutes, the priſoner came up, and he came to the board as I ſat down, for we had miſſed things very often before, and the priſoner came and cut a piece with the ſhears, this was the firſt piece he cut, this is the piece that was left; then he went into the ſhop, and went to my lathe where I work, and took ſome turnings, then he went to the box, and put theſe turnings and cuttings in his pocket; then he came back to the board again where he cut the firſt piece of ſolder, and then went down ſtairs; and I informed my maſter, and the things were found upon him.

CHARLES MOSELEY ſworn.

I am the officer, I produce ſome ſilver; theſe are the things that were found in my preſence.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

To Proſecutor. How long has this man lived with you?—Four months conſtantly; in our buſineſs we may be robbed every day of our lives, and loſe three or four pounds in a day, and not miſs it; we employ forty men. I had a very high opinion of that man, but ſince he has been taken up, I find there has been very bad connections; he lived with another man's wife, and that very man is brought into Newgate.

303. ANN MEADS, wife of Thomas Meads, was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Moore, in the dwelling-houſe of William Maſon, on the 23d of January laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, ſeven guineas, value 7l. 7s. two half-guineas, value 1l. 1s. ſeventeen copper halfpence, value 8½d. one copper farthing, and twelve ſhillings in monies numbered, his property.

On the 24th of January I was robbed in the houſe of one William Maſon; he told me it was his houſe. I was at a ſhoemaker's ſhop, upon ſome buſineſs, and the priſoner came in, and ſaid, how do you do, Tom? ſhe clapped me over the ſhoulder; ſays I, I do not know you, I never ſaw you in my life; and there were three more men and I went into the public-houſe, and preſently a pot of beer came in, and this priſoner came in, and placed herſelf by me; ſhe ſaid, will you give me ſome beer? you do not know your neighbours; ſays I, I do not know you, but you may have ſome beer; ſhe ſtaid there ſome time, and went away; I went to another public-houſe, and the priſoner came there, and ſaid to me, is your buſineſs done? for your wife and me, and Mrs. Horſenail, are to drink tea together, and we want your company; I ſaid, there is a gentlewoman of the name of Horſenail oppoſite to me, but I have no buſineſs with my wife's companions, nions, but I ſhall come as ſoon as I can; ſo I ordered a boy to call Mr. Croker to come and ſpeak to me; the priſoner heard me, and ſhe ſaid, Mr. Croker is a friend of mine, I will go and call him, and ſhe went and came back again in ten or twelve minutes, and ſaid, Mr. Croker is at a private houſe, and does not chuſe to come to a public-houſe, if you'll go, I will ſhew you where he is; I went with her, and when I came there, I ſuſpected it was not a good houſe, and I would not go up; ſhe prevailed with me at laſt, and I did go up to the top of the ſtairs; ſhe ſhoved the door open, and a man came to the door with a bludgeon, and knocked me down, and another man came directly to his aſſiſtance, and held me ſo that I could not cry out, and in this violent manner the woman ſays, gag him, and I will do him; upon which, ſhe got my pocket turned inſide out, and I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; the man held me in that ſituation, and the other man ſaid, get his tick, and ſhe ſaid the man has no watch; ſhe ran down, and got a light, and the two men made their eſcape, I cannot ſwear to the men; when the men run away, ſhe laid herſelf down a little way off on the floor, as if aſleep; my head has never been right ſince I felt the blow; I cried out, and Mr. Croker and ſome others came to my aſſiſtance, and they looked about, and found a ſhilling and half a crown.

MATTHEW CROKER ſworn.

Here is the money, ſealed up before the Magiſtrate, which I found in the apartments of the priſoner; I found the proſecutor ſtanding in the priſoner's room, I aſked him what he did there? he ſaid he was introduced by the priſoner, ſhe was laying on the floor in the middle of the room, the proſecutor ſaid he had been robbed by the priſoner, and two more men aiding and aſſiſting; I aſked him what money he had loſt? he ſaid, a quantity of gold, ſome ſilver, and ſome halfpence, I forget what quantity; the priſoner ſeemed ſtupified, ſhe pulled out a ſhilling and ſome halfpence, ſhe went and ſat down on the ſide of the bed, and I ſaw her put her hand on ſome ſilver halfpence, which were on the ſacking, and I took the ſilver immediately, and there was a half-crown with a black ſpeck on it, which the proſecutor ſaid was his, the proſecutor was neither quite drunk nor quite ſober, the houſe has thirty rooms in it or more, it is a common lodging houſe, there were many people in it, we found no gold; when we were taking the priſoner before the Magiſtrate, ſhe ſaid, if he would give her an hour's liberty, ſhe would produce all the property.

Priſoner. I have people that will give you a full account of the whole matter, I am as innocent as a child unborn.

THOMAS SMITH ſworn.

I am the officer that took the priſoner into cuſtody; I was ſent for by Mr. Croker, I found the woman and man in the room, the money was found before I came in the room; I ſearched the woman narrowly and found nothing more; and the woman ſaid, there were in the room two men one named John Smith, at Mile-end, a cow-keeper, and the other a poulterer; and the man ſaid one of them knocked him down; ſhe was very much in liquor; as I took her to the Juſtice, going along ſhe ſaid, if they would allow her to go home to her huſband, ſhe would make the money up in half an hour, I went after the men ſhe named, but could not find them.

JOHN GAYMORE ſworn.

I was coming along Baker's-row with my wife and child, I ſaw a man ſtanding at the door with a candle in his hand; I heard ſome perſons ſay the woman had got a cull, and I heard murder from the houſe where the priſoner was, and I ſaw a woman that lives in the lower part of the houſe, run out, I went in with a man, and there came in a woman, who ſaid, is there ever a man that has got a heart, then I got a weapon, and when I found ſo many people to back me, I went up one pair of ſtairs into the entry, and the door was ſhut, I puſhed it open, and ſaw the proſecutor laying on the ground, he ſaid, he was robbed, I helped him up; the people laughed, and Mr. Croker came up, and they could not make the priſoner ſpeak, only hem, and ſhe took out a ſhilling and ſome halfpence, Mr. Croker picked up ſome more, the man appeared to be drunk, and the woman very much in liquor, I ſaw nobody run away; after I went in, the proſecutor ſaid, his half-crown had a black dent.

MARY RATTY ſworn.

I ſaw this man and woman in the paſſage below ſtairs, he aſked her if ſhe had got ſome tea ready for him, and ſhe ſaid yes, ſhe ſaid, Mr. Croker was there, and the proſecutor went up, and ſhe came down again to light a candle, and as ſoon as ſhe returned up ſtairs, the proſecutor cried out murder! and watch! he was robbed, and I called for aſſiſtance; nobody was up ſtairs then, but ſhe and him to my knowledge, nobody came down ſtairs after the cry; if there had been two men up ſtairs, they could not have made their eſcape without my ſeeing them, I do not believe there were any men concealed up ſtairs, when I went up they lay about ſix feet aſunder, he with his breeches looſe, and ſhe in a moſt woful ſituation.

Court to Proſecutor. What became of theſe two men?—One man held me ſo that I could not cry out; the robbery was committed before the candle was brought up.

(The half-crown depoſed to and the ſhilling.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have been married theſe eighteen years, we had two pints of beer, the proſecutor was gaming with five or ſix men, I told him I was a married woman, and he would follow me up ſtairs, and he threw me down on the floor, and wanted to uſe me ill; and when he found he could not gain his ends, he ſaid, I robbed him, and called the people up ſtairs; they ſtripped me naked in the room, I never had any of the money, ſo help me God! this man offered twenty guineas to a woman to come to Hicks's-hall, to hang me.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to her character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

304. THOMAS BURDETT, HENRY FAWCETT and WILLIAM BROWN were indicted for burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Eaton, about the hour of four in the night, on the 2d day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one hundred and fifty-nine pair of ſilver knee-buckles, value 70l. eight pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles, value 10l. one watch, value 40s. a chain, value 10d. a ſeal, value 6d. a key, value 1d. two hundred and eighty-eight baſe metal coat buttons plated with ſilver, value 50s. and one pair of ſtone knee buckles ſet in ſilver, value 40s. his property.

There being no evidence but that of the accomplice, the Priſoners were

ALL THREE ACQUITTED.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

305. The ſaid THOMAS BURDETT, HENRY FAWCETT and WILLIAM BROWN were again indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Carter and William Wake, about the hour of three in the night, on the 1ſt day of December laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, thirty pieces of black ſilk, value 200l. and ſix pieces of Florentine ſatin, value 100l. their property.

A ſecond count, Laying it to be the houſe of William Carter only.

There being no evidence but that of the accomplice, the priſoners were

All Three Acquitted.

Priſoner Burdett. My Lord, I hope you will indulge me with a few words, with regard to this Nodeley; one houſe we robbed was my Lord Grantham's, of all the gold medals, he had the Speaker's gown, and the grand ſeal, and the gold off the gown he burned.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

---

306. GEORGE BROOK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of February, one carcaſe of mutton, value 18s. the property of Edward Cox.

The priſoner was taken with the mutton upon his ſhoulder.

Guilty.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Rose.

---

307. WILLIAM STEERS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Ann Crutchley, on the King's highway, on the 21ſt day of January laſt, and putting her in corporal fear and danger of her life, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon and againſt her will four linen gowns, value 40s. a black callimanco petticoat, value 10s. a ſtuff petticoat, value 4s. a linen ſhift, value 1s. two pair of cotton ſtockings, value 3s. three pair of worſted ſtockings, value 4s. two check aprons, value 3s. a cloth apron, value 1s. five caps, value 1s. 6d. two muſlin handkerchiefs, value 18d. and three ſilk and cotton handkerchiefs, value 4s. the property of the ſaid Ann.

ANN CRUTCHLEY ſworn.

Do you know the priſoner?——I never ſaw him before he ſtopped me, he ſtopped me in the Pancraſs-road.

What time of day was it?——Half after four in the afternoon.

Where was you going?——I was going to Mr. Wright's, Kentiſh-town, I live there; I had the things mentioned in the indictment, I was going to ſervice, they were my own wearing apparel, the priſoner was walking in the road to Kentiſh-town, and he ſtopped us; he ſaid, ladies, your money or your lives! I told him I had no money, he put a razor to my throat, and ſaid, he muſt have my money or my life; I told him I had no money, he might ſearch me if he pleaſed; he did not ſearch me, then he ſaid, he muſt have my bundle, then he took my bundle, and he dropped the bundle after he took it away from me, and dropped ſome of the things out, and in dropping the bundle, and picking ſome of the things up, he dropped the razor, which he held up to my throat, I am ſure it was the priſoner, I ſaw nobody elſe nigh at that time, I ſaw him when the patrols took him, and carried him to the George, at Pancraſs.

When was he taken?—On the Thurſday night, this was on the Monday, I told the patrols, what ſort of man he was.

When did you give this information to the patrols?——The ſame night.

Did you wait till they firſt came?—Yes, they came at about a quarter before five, on the Thurſday following, I had information from the patrol, that a man was taken anſwering my deſcription; I went to ſee him, at the George, at Pancraſs, the priſoner was there when I came, I knew him again.

How long did the robbery take up?——As nigh as I can gueſs, about five minutes.

Was there any diſguiſe on his face?——No, he was in the ſame apparel as when he was taken.

I ſuppoſe you was very much frightened and alarmed at his behaviour?—Yes, my Lord, I was at firſt, but being ſo long, I took particular notice of him, the time I was with him.

You will conſider upon your teſtimony the man's life depends; will you venture to ſwear he was the perſon that ſtopped you and took your bundle?——Yes.

Had you ever ſeen him before that time? ——No.

Was anybody in company with him?—No, not that I ſaw.

Mr. Peatt, Priſoner's Counſel. How old are you, young woman?——I am eighteen on the 11th of this month.

What part of the road to Pancraſs did this happen in?——Between the old workhouſe and the George.

Is that on this ſide Pancraſs or the other towards Kentiſh-town?—On this ſide.

Did you obſerve or ſee the perſon that came cloſe to you, before he came to you? I did not, it was like turning a corner, he met us as we were going up the road, he was coming down, Sarah White was with me, I met her at the bottom of the road; and was aſking her the way to Kentiſh-town, I never ſaw her before.

How long might it be from the moment you firſt ſaw him to the time of his putting the razor to your throat?——Directly, as I ſaw him.

You was exceedingly intimidated?—I was frightened at firſt.

How near did he hold the razor at your throat?——Cloſe to it.

You was exceedingly frightened?—Yes.

Ready to fall down I preſume?——I was not.

What religion are you?—A Chriſtian.

When he dropped the bundle, how far might he be from you?——He was cloſe by me.

Was his back to you or the ſide of him? —No, his face; he dropped it as ſoon as he took it out of my hand.

I believe when you firſt ſaw him, you heſitated a little as to his being the perſon that robbed you?——No, I did not.

Did you ſay at that time, that you knew him?—Nobody was in the room but him.

You was ſent for there, was not you?—Yes.

And the perſon that you ſaw there, was juſt ſuch a ſized man as met you on the road?——It was the ſame man.

You are determined not to depart from the perſuaſion, that you knew him?——I could not when I was ſure I knew him; I never ſaw him before.

Court. When the patrol ſent for you to the George, it was for the purpoſe, that you ſhould obſerve the man that was in cuſtody, in order to inform yourſelf whether he was the perſon or not?—Yes.

Not to fix on the man you was to ſee? ——No.

Are you ſure the man you ſaw in the room was the man that did in fact rob you?—Yes.

SARAH WHITE ſworn.

I never ſaw the laſt witneſs till the night we were ſtopped on the road.

Where was you going?—To my place, I live at Kentiſh-town.

What time of day?—It was about half after four in the afternoon.

Did you ſee Ann Crutchley, the laſt witneſs, on the road that day?—Yes.

Did you join and walk with her?—She met me, ſhe was ſaying ſhe was afraid of being put out of her way to Kentiſh-town, and before that word was out of her mouth the priſoner at the bar ſtopped us, he laid hold of me firſt, and he ſaid, he muſt have my life or my money; and I ſaid, I had none for him, I had no bundle, then he put a razor to my throat, and ſwore he would cut my throat, he then put the razor to Ann Crutchley's throat, and he took a bundle from her, which ſhe was going to carry to her place.

Did he at firſt demand her money?—Yes, and ſhe had none for him, ſhe ſaid you may ſearch me if you pleaſe, and he took her bundle from her.

How long was this robbery committing?—About five minutes.

What paſſed after the bundle was taken from her?——He dropped a bundle, and while he was picking it up he dropped a razor, he went off with the bundle, nobody was in the road at this time.

Whereabouts was it?——Between the old work-houſe, and the George.

Was you at the George, when he was in cuſtody?——Yes, I went with Ann Crutchley, he was in a room by himſelf when I ſaw him there, I knew he was the man, I am very ſure he was the ſame man, he was in the ſame dreſs, as he was the night he ſtopped us, and I took particular notice of him.

Was not you much frightened and alarmed at this time?—I was very much frightened and alarmed at firſt, when he laid hold of me, but I recovered myſelf ſo well, that I took particular notice of him; I am now very ſure he is the man, I had no acquaintance with Crutchley before in my life.

Mr. Peatt. I ſuppoſe he laid hold of you?——Yes.

Did he lay hold of your companion?—Yes; he preſented the razor to me firſt; he took hold of my handkerchief, and he ſaid, I ſhall not be above a minute about what I have to do to you, I ſhall be very quick in my motions.

Are you a Chriſtian?—Yes.

Were you born of Chriſtian parents, or of Jew parents, were your father and mother Chriſtians?——Yes.

Do you expect any thing to happen to you, in conſequence of a conviction, if one ſhould take place?——No.

ANN MITCHELL ſworn.

To the beſt of my knowledge, I ſaw the priſoner paſs by the George a little after four on this day, my huſband keeps the George, it was on Monday afternoon; I did not take notice of the day of the month, it was the day the young women were robbed; I cannot ſwear to the priſoner.

Mr. Peatt. Who brought you here?—I was ſubpœned.

Priſoner. My Lord, I never was at Pancraſs, but the patrols took me there, I never ſaw the proſecutrix before in my life, I was never out of my lodgings from Sunday breakfaſt till Tueſday breakfaſt.

AGNES SMITH ſworn.

Was you in company with the priſoner any time laſt month, and where?—On the 16th of January, and the 15th likewiſe, I was at the Brill at Pancraſs, the 16th was upon the Monday; he never was out of the houſe the whole day; Mr. Towers keeps a houſe at Pancraſs, and I was there the whole day.

Was you in the ſame room with the priſoner?—The ſame room the whole day.

Then, how late in the evening was you in company with the priſoner?——Till between ſeven and eight, when we went to bed.

Court. Do you live at Mr. Towers's?——Yes, I did then, when I was out of place.

Are you any way related to the priſoner?——No, Sir.

How came you to be in his company the whole courſe of the day, that you can ſpeak to his being there all day?——I was in the ſame room, he lodged there alſo, he lodges there now.

Could not he be abſent for the ſpace of half an hour?—No, Sir, he was not; he never was abſent a quarter of an hour the whole day.

What buſineſs had you to be in the room all day?—I had no particular buſineſs.

Have you no buſineſs of your own?—No, Sir; there were more rooms, but we had only one room with a fire in it.

Where were you on the 15th, the day before?——I was in the ſame houſe then; I went out in the morning, he was there all the time, I was there all the afternoon of the 15th; he is a ſawyer, he is out of place, he was at home every afternoon: I remember the 16th, becauſe he was taken up, he never was abſent half an hour.

MARY TOWERS ſworn.

I live next to the Brill, I never was over the door threſhold on Monday the 16th of January, he was taken ill on the Sunday night, he was in my preſence all the time; he is as honeſt a man as ever lived, he never was out of my ſight, nor the witneſs Smith neither.

After the Judge had ſummed up the evidence, the Patrol deſired to be examined, which the Court refuſed. The Jury retired for ſome time, and returned with a verdict

Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron Perryn.

308. STEPHEN GOLD was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Shakeſpear on the King's highway, on the 11th day of January laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, a boy's ſuit of clothes, value 5s. the property of William Shakeſpear.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEAR ſworn.

I am ſon of John Shakeſpear, I live with my father; on the 11th of January I was going from my father's, No. 12, in the Strand, to Prince's-ſtreet, and in a paſſage, the corner of Catherine-ſtreet, I ſaw three men ſtand, I was going to take a boy's ſuit of clothes to be preſſed, which were ſent to my father to be made up, and I paſſed them, and going up Catherine-ſtreet, one of the three men took the bundle from me, and I run after him, and in the paſſage another man came and knocked me down; he was not out of my ſight, and I purſued him; he run up Eagle-court, and when I came up to him, I paſſed two women, they aſked me what was the matter? and they ſaid, your mouth bleeds; and I told them what was the matter, and they told me where to find him, and I loſt ſight of him after I paſſed theſe two women; I found him afterwards in Newtoner's-lane, at a houſe where a woman directed me, her name is Ann Chapman.

Did you find any of the clothes again?—No, Sir; it was a day or two afterwards.

JOHN SHAKESPEAR ſworn.

The laſt witneſs is my ſon, I ſent him with the clothes to be preſſed, and ſoon after he returned, with his mouth bleeding, brought by three ſtrange men, and they told me that the perſon that robbed him would ſoon be taken, if he ſtaid in London; I never got my clothes again. This is the ninth time I have ſuffered by houſe-breakers or ſtreet-robbers.

ANN CHAPMAN ſworn.

I live in Eagle-court, Catherine-ſtreet; I was ſtanding at my door the night the robbery was done, and that gentlewoman talking to me, the priſoner ran by as faſt as he could run; he had a bundle with him, but I could not tell whether it was black or brown; I ſaid to the women, there is Stephen Gold running, he has been at no good; I know the priſoner before this time, he lodged at a houſe near me up two pair of ſtairs; the boy came up immediately, crying, for God's ſake, give me my clothes; his mouth was all over blood; ſays I, little boy, what have you loſt; ſays he, that man has robbed me of my clothes; he ſaid Stephen Gold was the man that robbed him; I did not ſee him rob him; then Gold run away, and got out of ſight.

Court to the Boy. Did you tell the ſame ſtory before the Juſtice of Peace?—Before the Juſtice of Peace, there was a boy threw a marble at the window, and his head was out of the window, and he did not hear a word I ſaid, and he turned his head, and ſaid, commit him for diſorderly.

Court. Had you loſt ſight of the priſoner before you came up to Ann Chapman?——No, Sir.

You had not?—No; the gentlewoman ſaid, let us cry ſtop thief! as you know him; I ſaid, no, do not.

Priſoner. They did not tell the ſame ſtory at the Juſtice's, Juſtice Walker acquitted me.

ELIZABETH LAYTON ſworn.

I live in Eagle-court; on the 11th of January I was preſent when the boy came into the court, I ſaw the priſoner run paſt as I was in converſation with Mrs. Chapman; he had a bundle, I ſaw the little boy come up, he was running after the priſoner, and he ſaid he had been robbed by that man; I have frequently ſeen the priſoner about the neighbourhood, and I am ſure that was the man; I ſaid to Mrs. Chapman, cry out, ſtop thief! but ſhe ſaid not, and we followed the boy into Swan-yard, and Mrs. Chapman informed him where he lived.

I know nothing further than apprehending the priſoner in Short's Rents, on the 17th of January.

Court to Boy. When the priſoner ſnatched away the bundle from you, did he ſtrike you, or uſe any violence?—No; he only ſnatched it away, and I was knocked down afterwards by another perſon that I think had a wooden leg.

Then it was that you received a blow which made your mouth bleed?—Yes.

Before he ſnatched the bundle from you, did he uſe any words?——No.

He only came up and ſnatched the bundle away?——Yes.

Jury. What time of night was it?——Between ſix and ſeven, it was dark, I followed the priſoner till I got paſt theſe two women, I ſaw his face afterwards, I know him to be the perſon that took the bundle.

Priſoner. I have not a word to ſay, only that I am innocent, I have not a ſoul in the world; he ſaid before the Juſtice that the man had either a white coat, a brown, or a black one, he could not tell which, and that he could not ſwear to his face.

Young. He ſaid either brown or black.

Court. What is the value of theſe things?——Five ſhillings.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

309. JOHN M'COUL and BENJAMIN M'COUL were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th of January laſt, two guineas, value 2l. 2s. two half guineas, value 1l. 1s. a piece of foreign ſilver coin, called a rupee, value 2s. a pair of Mocoa ſleeve-buttons, ſet in ſilver, value 1s. a ſilk purſe, value 1s. a counterfeit ſixpence, of no value, and three ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of Thomas Furnace, privately from his perſon.

THOMAS FURNACE ſworn.

I went to Drury-lane playhouſe to ſee half a play, I meant to pay half price, for which I preſented half a crown, the box-keeper gave me eighteen pence in return; I went into the two-ſhilling gallery; I had been there but a very ſhort time, before I wiſhed to come out again; I was then oppoſed coming out again by the two priſoners, firſt by John and then by the other; they joſtled me, I ſpoke to them, and told them I wiſhed to come out, I was extremely crowded, and very hot; I got through, and came out; I puſhed John with my arm, and the other then put himſelf entirely in my way, then I ſpoke to him, upon which I got out paſt them, and the door immediately flapped on their backs, there is a ſtep or two down as ſoon as you are out of the door, and I ſaw my breeches-pocket lay upon my thigh; I naturally concluded theſe men had picked my pocket, in conſequence of which I was determined to purſue them, finding it impoſſible they could have got out of the gallery, I called to a conſtable to go and ſeize the priſoners behind the door, I deſired that they might be examined, and there was a kind of a partial examination, which I found would never anſwer; I then deſired they might be carried to Bow-ſtreet, and I would attend them; I perceived then that the Juſtice was not ſitting, then I deſired we might go into ſome drinking-houſe to have them examined properly; they were carried into a drinking-houſe, there they were examined, and the money was produced; there was found upon them a purſe, with ſeveral guineas in it, but amongſt them there was a half-guinea which I will ſwear to, and a ſixpence, of baſe metal, which I can ſwear to; the purſe was found on John; after this, I left them in charge of a conſtable at this houſe. On Monday morning I went to Sir Sampſon's; theſe men were unknown to me before, but Sir Sampſon thought proper to commit them to Newgate. Previous to my going to the play-houſe, I took out my purſe; I had a friend or two with me, I took twelve guineas out of my pocket, and delivered them to my friend, telling him I was going to the play-houſe; then I looked at two guineas and a half, two ſhillings, and a bad ſixpence, which I know as well as I do myſelf, and a rupee, and a pair of ſleeve-buttons.

Was the rupee in the purſe?——No.

Were the ſleeve-buttons?——No, nor my purſe; the purſe that was found on the priſoner, was not my purſe.

Was there any thing found on the other priſoner?—Nothing.

One of the half guineas and the ſixpence you know?—Perfectly ſo.

Mr. Silveſter, Priſoner's Counſel. It was at half price you were going to the play?—Yes.

Many other people were there?—Yes.

There are three doors going into the gallery?——Yes.

How many of thoſe doors did you attempt to go in at?——Only one.

When you came out, you was oppoſed by perſons going in?——They were in the gallery as well as myſelf.

Was you further in than they?—I was on the inſide of them.

They ſtood between you and the door?——John laid his hand on my ſhoulder; I thought that rather rude behaviour.

By the box-keeper you mention, you mean the gallery-keeper?—Yes.

Your direction was to take the two men behind the door?—Yes; I told them they had picked my pocket of money.*

How much money?——I cannot recollect whether I ſaid the quantity of money.

You did not ſay five guineas?——I had not five guineas in my pocket.

That may be; a man ſays he has money in his pocket, when he has not; did you ſay ſo?—I will not ſay that I did.

Theſe men were taken to one of the beer houſes, and there they were examined?—Yes.

What ſort of a purſe was your's?——A mouſe-colour purſe, and the buttons were at one end, and the money and rupee at the other.

None of theſe were found, but in this man's purſe were found ſome guineas?——Yes.

How many guineas?——Seven, eight, or nine.

You did not know the guineas again?—Some of them may be mine.

Now as to the half-guinea, was there any mark upon that?——There was a ſufficient mark upon it that I know it, it has a caſt upon it.

What do you mean, did it ſquint?—A bend it has got; it is a very freſh half-guinea.

What year was it coined in?—That I will not pretend to ſay.

Do you know what King?—It was King George.

Was it George the Second?——That I cannot tell.

Was it George the Firſt?——I believe not; I know it when I ſee it, and I ſwear to it.

That is right. Did you ever ſee a bent half-guinea before in your life?—Yes.

Now, as for your bad ſixpence, what is the mark upon that?——Mark upon it! I cannot ſay the mark; there is a ſcratch, it is an extreme bad one, an old traveller of mine, I know him perfectly well.

You muſt know all its faults, becauſe you know it as well as you know yourſelf; is there any particular mark, beſides it's being bad?——I cannot tell; there is no mark upon it in particular, but I know it when I ſee it, it travelled with me all the way from York, I had it in town too.

How long had you been out of the gallery before you took this man up?—I never went out of the gallery at all; I took them inſtantly, I conſidered a little.

Court. On the Saturday evening, when this purſe was taken, and the gold was produced, did you, when the money was turned out of it, expreſs to the officer your knowledge of theſe pieces?—I ſaid immediately to the conſtable, I will ſwear to the half-guinea; ſays I, take charge of him this moment, then I ſaid about the ſixpence.

When the priſoners were brought out of the gallery, had you a recollection of their perſons as the men you ſaw before?——I cannot poſſibly ſwear that.

For inſtance, if you had not ſeen them again for a day or two after, ſhould you have known them?—I cannot ſay that.

JOHN SHALLARD ſworn.

I ſearched the priſoners; I found nothing upon Benjamin, but I found a purſe and ſome gold upon John; the purſe contained nine guineas, he took it out of his pocket, when I ſaid I ſhould ſearch him; there was ſome halfpence in his pocket.

(The Money handed to the Court.)

Court. Had you ever obſerved in what part of the coin your half-guinea was bent?—I do not ſo far recollect it.

Suppoſe any gentleman here had a new half-guinea that was bent, by what means could you diſtinguiſh them?——The ſixpence and half-guinea are ſo ſtrong in my mind, that they have made a very great impreſſion.

Mr. Silveſter. It is very unfortunate for me that I ſhould have a bent half-guinea.

RICHARD BLANDY ſworn.

I took John M'Coul; Mr. Furnace told me he had been robbed, and his pocket picked; to the beſt of my knowledge he mentioned five guineas.

JOHN BARRET ſworn.

I was the firſt officer.

Who did Mr. Furnace deſire you to take?——Benjamin, he told me he had had his pocket picked, and pointed to Benjamin, he was then in the lobby coming out of the gallery, I ſearched him, they were both on the ſteps of the lobby outſide the door.

Priſoner John. I am perfectly innocent of the charge, the gentleman at firſt ſaid five guineas.

Barret. He mentioned more money than he had in his purſe.

Mr. Silveſter. I will not call any witneſſes in ſuch a caſe as this.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

310. JOHN MURREY was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Launcelot Davidſon, about the hour of three in the night, on the 6th day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, three hundred pounds weight of tobacco, value 40l. three ſilver tea ſpoons, value 5s. and one watch, with the inſide caſe made of ſilver and the outſide caſe covered with fiſh-ſkin, value 30s. his property.

A ſecond count, For the like burglary, and ſtealing the ſame things, the property of Joſeph Sales and Benjamin Parnell.

LAUNCELOT DAVIDSON ſworn.

I live at Cock-hill, Ratcliff, I keep a houſe there; on the 6th of January laſt, between three and four in the morning, my warehouſe belonging to my houſe was broke open, and a great quantity of tobacco taken out.

Did that warehouſe communicate with your houſe?—It joins to the houſe, there is a partition wall between the warehouſe and the houſe, there is a door opens from thence into the yard; they opened that door, and from the yard they went to the kitchen window, and broke a pane of glaſs, and the upper bar was taken down, they went through the kitchen into the cellar.

When had you laſt made any obſervation on theſe ſeveral places you ſay was broken?——I ſaw them every night of my life, I ſaw it all ſafe when I went to bed, which was about eleven or rather before, we were diſturbed in the morning by hearing people in the cellar; my wife awaked me, I heard a noiſe, I got a light as ſoon as I could, and came down ſtairs, and ſaw what I have told your Lordſhip; this was pretty near four in the morning, I went down ſtairs, I miſſed nothing in the parlour, and looked and finding the window left open, I thought it had been the ſervants, but when I ſaw the iron bar broke, I ſaw it was thieves, there was a great deal of tobacco taken away, but I cannot tell the quantity, from the parlour there were three tea-ſpoons taken, and a ſilver watch of my wife's, in a fiſh-ſkin caſe, which hung by the fire ſide.

What was the value of that tobacco that you ſuppoſe was taken away?——It might be two hundred pounds weight, or five hundred pounds weight, I cannot be ſure, there was more than two hundred pounds, it was worth thirty pounds I think, it was fine tobacco; three or four days after, I heard the priſoner at the bar was taken up for a watch, and my wife went and knew her watch, it was at the watch-maker's to be mended, the watch-maker has the watch; I never got the tea-ſpoons, nor any part of the tobacco.

CATHERINE DAVIDSON ſworn.

I am wife of the laſt witneſs, on the morning of the 6th of January, I was awaked with a noiſe in the houſe, I immediately got out of bed, I heard ſomething tumble down ſtairs, like one man over another; there is a ſtep in our paſſage, that deceives any body that is not acquainted with it, and I imagined that was the caſe, for I heard four or five; my huſband loſt tobacco out of the warehouſe, and two or three tea-ſpoons, I am only ſure to two, my ſervant ſays, there is three; my watch I did not miſs till after the hand-bills were printed in the evening, and then it was too late to inſert them in it.

Did you in fact loſe a watch?—Yes, I have ſeen it ſince, I knew my watch, it was at Mr. Allen's, the watch-maker's.

Was it in the ſame ſtate as when you loſt it?—No, the ſpring was broke, but the outſide fiſh-ſkin was there, but the woman's chain was taken off, and the paper taken out.

——— ALLEN ſworn.

I am a watch-maker, I have this watch.

(Produces It.)

Court to Mrs. Davidſon. Do you know the number of this watch at the watch-maker's?—No, Sir.

Will you venture to ſwear to it?—Yes, Sir, it is very particular, there are many marks about it, I had the caſe made to my own fancy and the lining.

Allen. On the 11th of January, the priſoner brought this watch to my ſhop, to get it repaired; I looked at it, and told him the main ſpring of the watch was broke, he ſtood motionleſs, and almoſt ſpeechleſs, he made no reply to that, I aſked him when he wanted it done, he told me to ſuit myſelf, he was in no hurry; I made him for anſwer, he ſhould have it the latter end of the week, he went out of the ſhop, I ſaw him no more till I ſaw him at the Juſtice's; one of Juſtice Green's men came to me on Thurſday and enquired about the watch, his name is John Orange, in the evening he came with the Juſtice's compliments, and deſired me to attend at the office, I was very unwell, and deſired he would bring down the party, this was on Friday night; on Saturday morning, Mrs. Davidſon came down herſelf, and deſcribed the watch, ſhe ſaid, it was a ſilver watch, with a green fiſh-ſkin caſe; I aſked her the name and number of the watch, ſhe told me ſhe had had the watch twenty years, but could not tell me the name or number; I then aſked her what kind of a dial plate it had, ſhe ſaid, it was an old faſhioned dial plate, an enammelled dial plate, I then gave it into her hand, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would ſwear to it. (The watch ſhewn to the Jury.) It is exactly in the ſame ſtate as when I had it; I am ſure the priſoner is the perſon who brought it to me to repair.

Did he leave his name with you?—No, on the Friday when the officer came to me and acquainted me, John Murray had ſent him for a watch that I had to put a main ſpring to, I ſaid, I did not know the name of Murray; and about half after ſeven came a young woman into my ſhop, and aſked me if the watch was done belonging to John Murray, ſays ſhe, I am John Murray's ſiſter; ſays I, you ſhall not have the watch nor any body elſe, out of my poſſeſſion, till I know who is the right owner of it.

JOHN ORANGE ſworn.

I am the conſtable, on the 13th of January, Murray was brought into the Virginia Planter, on ſuſpicion of another robbery, he was left in my cuſtody, and while I was ſitting with him, he ſays to me, Mr. Orange what ſort of watches are theſe that Mr. Hamilton loſt? ſays I, ſome are ſilver and one is gold, then ſaid he, I have not got the watches, for the only watch I have got, is a ſilver watch with a ſilver caſe, ſays I, where is that, ſays he, I broke the main ſpring, and left it at Mr. Allen's to be mended, upon that I went to Mr. Allen's, the priſoner was committed that night, and brought down the next day, then Mr. Allen attended, and Mrs. Davidſon; before the Magiſtrate, he ſaid, he bought the watch of the Jew, and gave him half a guinea for it.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

A man that belonged to this office ſtopped me and ſearched me, I told him I had a watch that I bought the 9th of January, and I aſked him if he would go himſelf and ſee the watch; he came back, and ſaid, he could not get it, and then this young woman came on purpoſe to convince him I knew nothing of the other watches, I ſent her and one of the watch.

Have you any witneſſes to call relative to your purchaſing this watch of a Jew?—I have a woman.

ELIZABETH LLOYD ſworn.

All I have to ſay, is, John Murray came into the houſe where I live, on Old Chriſtmas-day at night, and he was in liquor, he went to bed, and on the Monday morning following, he bought a green watch, that was in Denmark-ſtreet, at one Mr. Bagg's, I was nurſing a woman; on the Monday following another young man came in, and brought in a green watch without a chain and glaſs, and he deſired me to go down and get a glaſs, and I did ſo.

What day of the month was that?—I believe it was the 9th.

It was a watch with a green ſhagreen caſe?——I am no judge of watches, I do not know that I had ever one in my hand before, there was no glaſs in it nor chain, and I got a glaſs put in it, there was another man with him, one Joe Phillips, that worked along with him, and he ſaid, he gave half a guinea for it.

Priſoner. The man that was along with me when I bought the watch, has ſet ſail for the Eaſt Indies, in the Europa Indiaman.

The Priſoner called three witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

311. THOMAS CHANT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d day of February, one ounce ſeven penny weights of ſilver, value 6s. and two ounces ſeven penny weights of ſilver wire, value 10s. the property of William Eaton.

(The Caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

(The witneſſes examined apart.)

WILLIAM EATON ſworn.

I am a buckle maker, I live in Addleſtreet, on the 2d day of February laſt, my men were all at work about a quarter before eight, and I went up ſtairs with a candle in my hand, and I went to Chant's vice, and while I ſtood there, I ſaw there was a good deal of ſilver cuttings, which they get off the buckles, which he had got that day, I went down ſtairs and in about a quarter of an hour after, he came down ſtairs and went away; I went up ſtairs to ſee what he had done with the cuttings he had got that day, and I looked for the cutting, and I found the bench was ſwept down, and the cuttings were ſwept off the bench, and not in the trough; I looked into a little box, and they were not there; I looked into the hubbing lathe box, and I found there about a penny weight of cutting which he had got me that day; I thought that was not all, I came down ſtairs, and went to ſee for a conſtable whoſe name is Harding, and I took him to Chant, and before I came down, I called to my apprentice, and told him to ſtand by the vice till I came back, I went to the public houſe to his brother, and he had not been there; we came to his own houſe, the conſtable knocked at his door, and aſked if Mr. Chant was within, Mr. Chant anſwered him, and ſaid that no ſuch perſon lived there; I then ſtood at the door, and when I heard him ſay the words, I went in to him, ſays I, this is the man we want, I puſhed him into the parlour, and I ſaid, what have you done with the cuttings you have got me to day, he ſaid, he had left them in the box underneath the trough; I ſaid they were not, he was much frightened, he ſaid, they were in a piece of paper behind the blocks on the bench, I told him they were not there, for I had looked; he then ſeemed very much frightened, and ſaid, he believed he had put them into the hubbin lathe box; I told him there was ſome there, but not what he had got me, I ſaid I muſt ſearch him, he ſaid, I ſhould not, for he had things about him, he then ſaid, I have only one thing about me, if you will let me deſtroy that, you ſhall ſearch me, he did ſo, he had his hand in his breeches pocket, and I ſaw him draw out his hand, and give it a ſort of chuck; I found nothing upon him, I went to the bed and found three pieces of ſilver wire, and I looked at it, and ſaid, I think this is my property; I gave it to the conſtable, then I went to ſearch the drawers, there I found nothing; I pulled out one of the little drawers, and there I found ſome papers that were pinned up.

Whoſe wire was that?—I believe it to be mine.

What quantity of it, do you know?——Rather better than two ounces, but I found one piece in a cupboard, which he ſaid belonged to the other, and it was put to the other, which made four pieces in the whole: the cuttings are off the buckles, little bits about half as big as a pin's head.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. It is not wire?——No, I did not go after wire.

Are you a wire drawer?—I draw for my own uſe.

Are you at all able to identify this wire, to ſay that it is yours?——I cannot ſay I have any knowledge of it.

Do you happen to know whether his brother was at the houſe at this time?——No, Sir, I do not believe he was.

Do you know whether in fact there was an execution, either againſt the perſon, or the effects of that perſon in that houſe?—Not that I know of, I have not heard any ſuch thing.

I believe before the Magiſtrate, you only charged this man with ſuſpicion of this?——Yes, Sir, but my man ſwore to this property.

Are you ſure of that?——I will not be poſitive of it.

Do not you know that he was committed on ſuſpicion, and has been out upon bail, and has ſurrendered himſelf to day?—Yes.

Was not that becauſe no creature could venture to identify this wire?——I could not ſwear to it.

Do not you know now that nobody could?—I cannot be ſure.

You heard your porter examined?—Yes.

Look at this inſtrument, is it an inſtrument for wire drawing?—Yes.

Is it poſſible for any man to ſwear to wire of any ſize; would not a like wire be produced by an inſtrument of that ſort in any one's hands?——It may be poſſible to produce the ſame, and I have a drawing plate of the ſame kind as this.

How is it poſſible for any man to diſtinguiſh a wire, which is drawn through a drawing plate of the ſame ſize?——The purity of the ſilver is much the ſame.

I fancy it muſt; had not your houſe been robbed?—Yes.

Did not you make ſome application to the priſoner?—Yes.

What application did you make to him or what offer did you make to him?——I told him, if he would tell me, and act the honeſt part, that I would help him, and do him all the ſervice I could; on finding the wire upon him, he told me he would give me an account how he came by the wire.

Did not you offer him thirty pounds, if he would give you ſome information that you wanted?——No, Sir, no ſuch word, none at all, not a farthing.

Tell us what you did ſay to him?——The words I repeated before.

Let us hear them again?—I told him I was informed he knew ſomething of my robbery, he ſaid, he did not, I told him if he knew any body that would tell me, I would be his friend, I believe that was what I ſaid, I am ſure it was.

How many men were left there, when the priſoner went away that evening?—All my men but four.

Did not you tell Mr. Yardley you delivered out your ſilver to your men, and received it back by weight from them?—I never ſaid any ſuch word to him.

Had you any converſation with him about the weight?—None at all.

I believe you had ſome reaſon to know that the priſoner was not the man that committed that robbery?—I believe the people are taken.

It is a very near relation of yours that committed that robbery?—No, Sir.

Court. There is not the ſmalleſt ſuſpicion on the priſoner about that.

Mr. Garrow. Then I am content.

THOMAS HARDING ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I went to Chant's houſe, I firſt of all went with Mr. Eaton to Chant's brother's houſe; he told me he was not there, but he expected him there in a little time; I knocked at the door, the priſoner came to the door, I aſked him if his name was Thomas Chant, he ſaid no, he rather equivocated and ſaid his name was Joſeph, Mr. Eaton ſtood at the door, he immediately came into the houſe, and ſaid to me, this is the man I want, I immediately went into the room, and Mr. Eaton told him he wanted to talk with him, that he ſuſpected he had robbed him of ſome ſilver that day, he ſeemed rather confuſed about it; immediately Mr. Eaton ſaid, Chant we muſt ſearch you, I ſaid ſo likewiſe; he inſiſted he would not be ſearched, he equivocated a long time with his hands in his pockets, and he ſaid if he might deſtroy a piece of paper he had in his pocket, he might ſearch him; Mr. Eaton ſearched him in my preſence, and after finding nothing, there was a little bed in the corner of the room, and Mr. Eaton ſaw ſome ſilver wire which he immediately caught up, and ſaid he believed it was his property, he looked about, and in a little cupboard he found another ſmall piece; Chant ſaid he hoped Mr. Eaton would forgive him, as it would ſadly hurt his character, if he made any kind of ſtir about the buſineſs, that he would prove how he came by it, that he bought it of ſomebody; then Mr. Eaton began to accuſe him about ſome cuttings; he ſaid the cuttings he had cut him that day were in a drawer under the bench, he went home with us, there was none there.

Mr. Garrow. How ſoon after this was the priſoner bailed?—On the Monday after, this was on the Friday; he was committed only on ſuſpicion.

Did Mr. Eaton ſay any thing to you about any ſilver wire?——No.

How many men were in the ſhop when you went back ?——Two, and a young lad; Matthews was there.

EDMUND READER ſworn.

The laſt piece of wire I miſſed was about five weeks ago, which I drew myſelf about a week before the priſoner was taken up; I think, according to all appearance, this is the wire; I know none of the others.

Mr. Garrow. How long have you worked for Mr. Eaton ?——Thirteen months this laſt time; I worked for him formerly.

That was before you took apprentices perhaps ?——Yes.

How many apprentices have you had from the pariſh of St. Luke ?——None.

What pariſh have you had laſt from ?—St. Sepulchre's.

What name did you take them in ?——In my own name.

What name was that ?——Reader.

Are you ſure of that ?——Yes, I have no other name.

Where is he now ?——I do not know, he came to me when I lived in Long-alley, when I worked with Mr. Eaton.

Did you not repreſent yourſelf in the name of Read ?—No.

Why you ſtripped the boy and left him naked, and the pariſh officers are after you for it ?——God forbid I ſhould ! I deny it with a ſafe conſcience.

If this piece of wire had not been rough, could you have diſtinguiſhed it from any of theſe that I ſhew you as to ſize ? (ſhews him ſeveral.)—No Sir, I cannot ſay I could.

So that a little accidental roughneſs at the bottom of the piece is the only thing by which you can ſpeak to it ?——Yes.

GEORGE MATTHEWS ſworn.

I ſtood by the vice till they returned, as I was directed.

Court. He does not ſwear poſitively to the wire, nor can he.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before
Mr. RECORDER.

312. ROBERT THOMPSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th of Auguſt laſt, one cloth great coat, value 10s. the property of William Smith.

(The caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.)

(The witneſſes examined apart.)

WILLIAM SMITH ſworn.

I drove a waggon to town, it was a hired waggon, came from Workſop, Nottinghamſhire, we came with furniture, we came to the George Inn in Drury-lane; we came on the 27th of Auguſt, when I came to the inn, my great coat was in the waggon-tail, I did not ſee it after I came to the inn; when I miſſed it, I enquired of the priſoner and all the men in the yard, and they none of them knew any thing about it, and the priſoner ſaid he knew nothing about it; I ſaw my coat again, three weeks to-morrow, in the cuſtody of the pawnbroker, his man is here, and the man that took it to pawn; I knew my coat again.

Mr. Silveſter, Priſoner's Council. Mr. Smith, you are a ſervant to a waggoner at Workſop, one hundred and forty-ſix miles from London; who brought you up to town on this buſineſs ?—His waggon.

Who was at the expence of this proſecution ?——I hope the Court will be at the expence, or elſe I ſhall be wrong.

Who pays counſel and attorney, now, Mr. Smith, upon your oath ?—I have not paid them at preſent, but I may do.

Does not Mr. Thorne lend the money ?——I ſuppoſe it is not material, I have not paid it; I ſuppoſe Mr. Thorne will pay it.

Did not Mr. Thorne write to you to come up about it ?——Yes.

Did not he write to you that he would be at the expence of your coming up ?—Yes, he did.

Mr. Garrow. Have you got his letter ?—No.

Mr. Silveſter. Did not Mr. Thorne advance the money to proſecute this man ?—I underſtood that he would pay, he knew that I was not capable.

Will you anſwer the queſtion ?—I have been at part of my expences.

You underſtand the queſtion perfectly well; is not Thorne at the whole expences of this proſecution ?—I have been at ſome expences myſelf.

Has not he paid both counſel and attorney ?—Yes, I ſuppoſe he has.

Do not you know, is not there a diſpute between Thorne and this man ?—I do not know of any diſpute, except that he found out this coat.

Did you never hear Thorne ſay this man had an information againſt him ?—No.

And that he would hang him if he could? ——No, I never did.

How came you not to come up before ?—I could not come before I heard any thing about it.

Then the firſt news was a letter from Thorne ?—Yes.

And he wrote you word, that if you would come up, he would pay the expences? ——Yes, he did, or it would have been badly worth fetching, though it coſt me eighteen ſhillings; I had not worn it a great deal, perhaps ſix or eight days, or a fortnight.

Mr. Garrow. You came to do your duty to the public to proſecute ?——Yes.

And you thought it would have been a very bad thing, unleſs Thorn would pay your expences ?——Yes.

JOHN MOSELEY ſworn.

I am a ſervant of Mr. Thorne's, I am hoſtler at the George Inn in Drury-lane; the priſoner was hoſtler there in Auguſt laſt, I remember Smith coming up with the waggon; I do not remember any enquiry about a great coat.

Had you ſeen ſuch a thing at any time? ——I went into the ſtable on the 18th of Auguſt, on the Sunday morning, and I ſaw a great coat rolled up in the ſtable, it was a brown great coat; I aſked the priſoner if he knew whoſe it was, and his anſwer was, it belonged to himſelf.

Have you ſeen ſuch a great coat ?——I have ſeen that many times ſince; I have ſeen the coat which Smith ſays is his, I believe that to be the coat that I found under the manger; this was the ſtable that the priſoner had buſineſs in, but not the ſame ſtable that the countryman's horſes were in.

Mr. Silveſter. Did you take out the great coat ?—No, I did not meddle with it, it was rolled up.

You could not tell whether it was a looſe or a tight coat ?——No.

Has not that great coat been worn by every ſervant in the inn ?——Only by the priſoner; he wore it publicly of cold mornings and evenings.

I believe he laid an information againſt your maſter ?——Yes.

For running his chaiſe without a ticket? ——Yes.

What did your maſter ſay then ?——I cannot tell.

Did not he ſay, he would be d——d if he would not hang him ?——I never heard him ſay ſo, I never heard him ſay he would do any thing to him; he never knew any thing about it, till my fellow-ſervant told him; I never heard him ſay at any time what he would do to him.

THOMAS CARTER ſworn.

I am hoſtler at the George Inn in Drury-lane, the priſoner was hoſtler.

Did you ever pawn any thing for him? —Yes, a great coat.

What ſort of one ?——A drab-coloured one.

Where did you pawn it ?—At Mr. Cowper's in Wych-ſtreet; he told me it was his own coat. (The coat produced.) I know the coat again; I pawned it in my own name.

Did you redeem it ?—No, Sir; it was not redeemed till it was taken to priſon.

Mr. Silveſter. What had you on the great coat ?——Three ſhillings.

How much did you keep for yourſelf ?—One ſhilling; I was diſtreſſed for a ſhilling, he ſent me for two ſhillings, and I got three.

What was the other two ſhillings ſpent in?——Nothing.

Why did you pawn the great coat?——By his deſire; he uſed to wear it, I do not think any body elſe ever wore it; he wore it of nights, when it was cold weather, and wore it publicly.

Did you know whoſe great coat it was?——No.

Do you remember any enquiries made about it?——When the farmer went away, he enquired about his great coat; I knew nothing about it, I never wore it.

Was not you threatened to be proſecuted?——Yes.

How many people were preſent when you had it of him to pawn?——Nobody, that I know of.

Was you committed?—No, they acquitted me of the affair as againſt me.

Mr. Garrow. Do you remember the farmer enquiring for a great coat?—Yes.

Did he enquire of the priſoner?——He was out of town at the time, he was gone down to Egham races.

Was the priſoner in town when the farmer went out of town?——Yes.

When you was taken, did you tell immediately who pawned it?—Yes, Sir.

WILLIAM JORDAN ſworn.

I was ſhopman to Mr. Cowper, a pawnbroker, in Wych-ſtreet; I remember Carter, I have received ſeveral things from him, and amongſt the reſt, I find I took a coat of him, one of my billing; I left it in pledge when I left Mr. Cowper; I lent him three ſhillings upon it on the 7th of December.

——— MOLD ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Cowper, I have lived with him four years; I produce a great coat which was pledged at Mr. Cowper's, in the name of Thomas Carter, for three ſhillings, the 7th of December; I had it in my cuſtody ever ſince; the 7th of this month, I took it to the office, there was application made to us that the coat was ſtolen, and deſiring us to go to the office with it, I took it there.

To Jordan. Is that the coat you took from Carter?——Yes.

To Carter. Is that the coat you received from the priſoner?——Yes.

To Moſeley. Was it ſuch a coat as this you ſaw under the manger?—It was much ſuch a colour, I have forgot rightly the colour.

Proſecutor. This is my coat, any man might ſwear to this bit, and the buttons were great part of them off when I loſt it, here is a remarkable button in a remarkable place, it is different from the others, I obſerved that before I loſt it; I knew if that button was upon it, I could ſafely know it was my own coat, it was very near off when I loſt it; I am ſure it is my coat that I loſt.

Mr. Silveſter. That new coat of your's had loſt all it's buttons?—They ſoon broke off.

Thorne came down to you at Workſop, did not he?—Yes.

Then he deſcribed the coat?——He had no occaſion, he knew it was my coat; he ſaid, that if I would come up about it, I might have my property again.

He told you it wanted buttons?——He never told me any ſuch thing, I remembered the buttons.

Where have you lived ſince you have been in town?——In many places.

At the George in Drury-lane?—Sometimes.

Only meal times?——No.

Do not you breakfaſt with Mr. Thorne?——I have, I have not dined with him very often; I lay at the George Inn.

JAMES THORNE ſworn.

The priſoner was a ſervant of mine; I remember Smith the waggoner coming to my houſe the 27th of Auguſt, I remember his enquiring about a great coat, I know Smith aſked the priſoner in my preſence, and I likewiſe aſked him, and he ſaid he had not ſeen it.

You went down to Workſop about this buſineſs?——I did about three weeks ago, I cannot ſpeak exactly to the time.

What induced you to go down?—I will give you my reaſon for it; the yard I lived in has been repeatedly robbed, and other yards had been robbed; theſe two men, Carter and the priſoner, had quarrelled about a robbery before, and I thought it my duty to take them into cuſtody; I did not think about going, but the Juſtice ſaid the waggoner muſt be produced; I went down after the priſoner was committed.

Had the priſoner given ſome information againſt you for penalties?——There was a report ſo.

Did you encourage this proſecution out of ſpite and malice towards him?——Upon my oath, I have no kind of malice againſt him, neither do I know he is the man that did lay theſe informations; I ſhould rather have dropped the proſecution.

When you went down, did you give any particular deſcription of this coat to the man?——I never ſaw it.

Mr. Silveſter. Your love of public juſtice induced you to take a ride down there?——Nothing more than that, and wiſhing to be ſecure.

Your love of public juſtice induced you to lay down the money for this proſecution?—I am not at the expence of this proſecution.

Who has paid the counſel and attorney?—The money came out of my pocket; this man is a man that does not carry a great ſum of money about him, and he is a ſtranger to law. I would lend the man money.

You advanced the money, did not you?——I did, Sir; I advanced it upon the credit of Mr. Smith, I offered to pay his carriage to town, becauſe he was not willing to lay out the money, I advanced it upon this credit, and this only, it was from the Juſtice's telling him when the man was committed, he was very loth to be bound over to proſecute, and the Juſtice informed him, and his clerk likewiſe, that if he proſecuted, the Court would pay his expences.

The Juſtice could not tell you that, before you paid the carriage?—No, Sir.

Have not there been a few informations againſt you for running your chaiſes?——No.

What was it for, then?——For filling up a ticket for twelve miles inſtead of thirteen.

You have declared, upon your oath, that you would be revenged of this man?——Never before this proſecution.

Did you ever declare you would be revenged of him?——Never, that I know of.

Recollect yourſelf?——I do.

Have not you declared you would ſell your beſt chaiſe and horſes to be revenged of this man?——Never, that I know of.

Will you ſwear you never did?—I will ſwear I never did.

Do you know a woman of the name of Curl?——Yes, I do.

Did you never declare, in her preſence, that rather than not be revenged on that man, you would ſell your beſt chaiſe and horſes?——Never, that I know of; ſhe is beneath my notice.

Did you never declare you would be revenged of him?——Never before the proſecution.

Did you ever declare ſo at all?——I never made uſe of the expreſſion, nor a word to that purpoſe.

What could induce you to go to Workſop, if not out of revenge?—It was not; I did not know Smith the proſecutor till he came up that day.

Who has ſupported that man ſince he came to town?—He lived at our houſe all the time, except when he has been out any where.

Do you know a man of the name of Taylor?——Yes.

Do you know a man of the name of Wing?——Yes; he keeps a public houſe in our neighbourhood, and Taylor drives a poſtchaiſe.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of Robert Thompſon.

ANN CURL ſworn.

I never heard Mr. Thorne ſay any thing about the priſoner.

THOMAS TAYLOR ſworn.

I am a poſt-boy; I know the George in Drury-lane, I do not know the great coat; I was left to take care of this man's buſineſs while he was gone, he was abſent three days the laſt Egham races, I do not know when they began; when he went out of the yard, he deſired me to take care of his things, and there was a great coat in the ſtables, and he deſired me to take care of it, for if Carter got hold of it, he would pawn it.

Mr. Garrow. How long had you known him before Egham races?—I lived fellow-ſervant with him.

Mr. Silveſter. What is his character?—A very good character as ever I heard.

Mr. Garrow. Did you know him when he lived at Dartford?—Yes; I came away before him, I do not know why he left it, upon my oath; I know no further about him.

How many days had you been at the George, before you went to Egham races?——Backwards and forwards a few days.

Have you ſeen that coat before?—Never; he deſired me to take care that Carter ſhould not take it to pawn it; it was under one of the mangers, I never looked to ſee what ſort of coat it was.

JOHN STEVENSON ſworn.

I am ſervant to Lord De Spencer, and have been near twenty years; I have known the priſoner fourteen or fifteen years, his general character has always been very good, he lived near four years in the ſervice, when he was diſcharged, he lived with one 'Squire James, he had a very good character from my Lord; his father has lived with the family upwards of forty years, and is now in the family; he has always born a good character, I never heard any thing in the world againſt him.

The priſoner called three more witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

313. JOHN PEAZY was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of John Granger, about the hour of three in the night on the 16th day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein five pounds thirteen ſhillings and ſixpence, in monies numbered, his property.

JOHN GRANGER ſworn.

I was robbed on the 16th of January laſt in the morning, being Monday.

Court. Deſcribe how it happened?——On Sunday night, I went to-bed at half after eleven; I live at the Peacock in the Minories; I was the laſt that went to-bed; my wife and boy went up together; I faſtened the front of the houſe myſelf, the windows were all ſhut, but the back part of the houſe has no faſtening; I locked my till, I faſtened the bar door, all the houſe went to bed before me; my wife came down at half paſt ſeven in the morning; there were three or four pounds worth of halfpence in the till; I ſaw the priſoner frying beefſteaks on the fire; the parlour window was not quite ſhut when I came down in the morning, the bar-door was wrenched, and I found the till had been unlocked, and money taken out; I went to Mr. Evans's at the Three Kings in the Minories, and the priſoner was there; I ſaid, John, you have been robbing me; and he ſaid immediately, I am very ſorry for it; he did not deny the charge; I ſaid, Jack, you have got my halfpence; he began to cry, and ſaid, Sir, I hope you will not hurt me; I ſaid, John, you muſt ſuffer the law now, and I ſent for a conſtable; there was a box which belonged to the priſoner, and we examined it, and there was my property in it, I ſaw a great quantity of halfpence, part in a handkerchief, and part in a blue apron, and I ſaw his linen with a mark on it, I. P. There were ſix or ſeven ſhirts in his box, I will not ſwear they were my linen; amongſt the halfpence, I found a button, a gingerbread nut, and a ſcrew, which I believe were in the drawer when I went to bed.

Mr. Chetwood, Priſoner's Counſel. This young man, I believe, was a ſervant to you?——Yes.

He lived with you twice?——Yes.

Who had you a character of him from? He lived with Mr. Button, who kept the houſe when I took it of him; he then was out of place, and went and lived with Mr. Parker, at the Angel and Crown in Whitechapel.

Do you know how he came to leave Mr. Parker?——No.

Upon your oath, do not you know?——No.

Do not you know he was ſeduced from that place?——No.

Did you never hear that?——No.

Then you will preſently; he left your houſe with credit that time?——He uſed to get drunk ſometimes.

I aſk you the queſtion, did you, knowing him to be a drunken lad, give him a good character?—I gave him a character of being obliging and civil.

Was he a ſervant at Ratcliff-croſs at Dr. Horſefall's, when this robbery, as you call it, was committed?——I do not know.

Was not he ſeduced from that place by any part of your family?—No, Sir.

Pray, before any talk or any pretence of the robbery or burglary, had you any quarrel with your wife?——No, never in my life.

Had you no jealouſy concerning this young man?——No, Sir.

Nor have had none ſince?—No.

I aſk you whether or no you have had jealouſy of him?——I never expreſſed any jealouſy, not to my knowledge.

You muſt know whether you have, or have not?—I have not.

You have had no jealouſy or ſuſpicion?—No, Sir; becauſe I never had any proof.

Pray, did you never viſit him in the Poultry Compter?—I went there once, by the deſire of Mrs. Davis; ſhe ſent for me.

Did you, or did you not, in the Poultry Compter, tell him, if he would confeſs whether he had ever been great with your wife, you would maintain him, and get him out of his troubles?—Never in my life, ſo help me, God!

That you ſwear poſitively?—Certainly.

Did you or not turn your wife away?—I ſay that, and inſiſt upon it.

You know Mrs. Davis?—Yes.

She was there, and her two daughters?—Yes.

And no ſuch converſation paſſed?—I never was jealous of my wife.

You think the parlour windows were down?—I am ſure they were ſhut.

Your ſervants might have lifted them up, for what you know; was there any appearance of force to the windows?—Not to my knowledge; he could not come into any other part of my houſe.

Will you ſwear that?—I have no other reaſon to think he got in any other way, my ſervants were all locked up that night.

Who ſent for the box?—I did not; I aſked the priſoner, I ſaid, John, how came you to rob me? ſays he, I do not know; ſays I, how did you get in? ſays he, at the parlour window; I had no reaſon to quarrel with him about it; the halfpence were taken out of the box by the conſtable.

Do not you know how he came by them?—Upon my oath I do not.

Might they not have been given him?—A great many things happen that we do not know of.

Did not your wife leave you that day?—Yes.

For what?—I do not know.

Was it not for quarrelling with the black?—I did not quarrel with him, we had no words at all.

What did your wife leave you for?—For fear I ſhould ill treat her; I cannot tell her reaſons for it.

Upon your oath, cannot you aſſign any reaſon for it, why ſhe ſhould be afraid of your ill uſing her?—No, I cannot.

Cannot you gueſs?—I cannot.

You have treated her roughly before?—Yes; it is too hard a queſtion for me to anſwer.

You muſt give the Court an anſwer; what was the reaſon why your wife ſhould think you would ill treat her that morning?—Becauſe I had ill treated her before; I cannot anſwer that queſtion, I cannot do it.

Did you ever ill treat your wife, on account of this boy?—Never on his occaſion, in my life.

You ſwear that?—I have ſworn it before.

You dropped a word of his being let in the over-night?—I know nothing of it; I have received information from my wife that he was let in; I heard of his coming in over-night, I heard from my wife that he had been aſking her to give him lodging; he had no place nor money, and ſhe gave him permiſſion to ſleep there.

Did not your wife tell you, that he was diſtreſſed for a lodging?—Not in the dwelling-houſe.

She had given him leave to come upon the premiſes?—Yes.

Upon your oath, did not your wife tell you that ſhe had ordered him to be let into the houſe, becauſe of his diſtreſs?—She told me that ſhe had given him leave to ſleep in an out-houſe, ſhe mentioned that at my Lord Mayor's the morning ſhe was examined.

Was it denied by your wife; was there not mentioned that the halfpence were made a preſent, becauſe he was out of bread?—No, Sir, my wife never gave him a farthing.

Court. Did the maid ſay that this man was let in, by order of her miſtreſs, into the houſe, or into the out-houſe?—Into the out-houſe.

Mr. Chetwood. Did not it come out before the Lord Mayor, that your wife had ſent him money very frequently while he was at Mr. Parker's?—No, Sir.

Was it not in evidence, that ſhe had ſeduced him from that place?—No, Sir.

Did you, or did not you not, promiſe the young man to pay his expences, and get him ſafe out, if he would inform you how often he had familiarities with your wife?—No, Sir, ſo help me God!

There were a good many people there? ——No doubt of it.

Did not you ſay no harm ſhould happen? —No, Sir, I never mentioned it.

Jury. You talk of a back houſe?—— Our houſe is a narrow houſe in front, and we have a way to come in through a neighbour's houſe; it was a place where he had an indulgence to ſleep.

Is it cuſtomary for your wife to go into the bar when ſhe comes down ſtairs?—— Yes.

You ſay the bar-door appeared to be wrenched open?——Yes.

Did not ſhe give you notice of it?—— She ſaid ſo when I came down.

Court. I underſtood by you, that it appeared to be wrenched open?——The bottom part of the door has a ſingle lock, and the top part was forced from the bottom; there is a wrench in the bar-door now.

REBECCA GRANGER ſworn.

I am wife to the laſt witneſs; I ordered the priſoner to be let in to ſleep in one of the out houſes, on the night the robbery was committed.

Did your huſband know that at the time? ——No.

Did you ſee the condition of this houſe before you went to-bed on the Sunday night?—No, I cannot ſay I did; my huſband ordered us to go to-bed, and he would ſee that every thing was faſt; we all went before him.

Did you come down firſt in the morning? ——When I came down, the ſervants had been into the bar, and had ſerved; it was open when I came down.

Did you ſee them at the bar when you came down to the bar?—No, Sir; I knew they had been ſerving, by the money they gave me; I did not think there had been any robbery committed, as I had no occaſion to go to the till; the bar-window which looks into the paſſage was bolted; I did not take notice whether all the windows were ſhut, I did not go into the parlour; the maid had cleaned the parlour before I went in; I did not ſee the till wrenched at all.

Did no perſon in the bar ſhew you the bar, and tell you it was wrenched?—No.

Did your huſband tell you that the money had been taken out of the till?—No, not till he was ſent for out; then he ſaid he had been robbed.

When had you laſt any communication with the till?—An hour before I went to-bed; my huſband had the key of me to lock the door; I went to the till for what I wanted, but I cannot tell what money was in it, there were halfpence in it.

How much do you think there were?— Two or three pounds worth there might be, I cannot ſay.

Were they looſe, or in papers?—Looſe.

Had any body that day the key, but you or your huſband?—No.

Was there any thing beſides money in the till?—No, without it was bits of ginger or chalk.

Was there no ſcrew there?——I cannot recollect.

Did you never ſee a ſcrew there?—There were ſcrews and nails there; there was ginger and chalk.

Did you ſee a button, or button ſtone there?——No, I cannot ſay I did.

Mr. Chetwood. When you came down in the morning, you found your ſervants had been ſerving in the bar?—Yes.

That was no more than uſual?——No.

Who had the key in the morning?—— They came into the room for the key; they had it from my huſband.

Do you ſwear that?—Before he was up.

As for the window of the bar, that you found bolted?——Yes.

And as for the opening of the door, can you account for that?—I did not ſay the key of the bar, but the key of the croſs door my huſband gave to the ſervants.

How did they open the bar-door?—By taking down the ſhutter.

Then it opens of courſe?——Yes.

There was no breaking or wrenching ſhewn to you?——No.

THOMAS SHAW ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Granger, on Sunday day night we all went to bed at the ſame time, I faſtened the houſe, and it was all ſafe, I was down firſt and the maid came not a minute after, I went to my maſter for the key of the bar door, becauſe we wanted ſome gin; and it was not faſtened, we could not find the key of the bottom door, I did not examine the till; I went into the bar to ſerve a glaſs of gin, the bar was upon the jar, it did not appear to me to be wrenched at all, I did not take particular notice of it.

Were there any halfpence in the bar?—I did not ſee a farthing but what I took.

Did you examine the till at all?——No, Sir.

Did you examine the bar at any time?—No.

Did you ſee how the window was?——No, I did not mind it, coming through the paſſage, I ſaw the priſoner behind the paſſage door, and he aſked me for a glaſs of gin.

Had the door been open then?——The door had been open, and I had been up I ſuppoſe three quarters of an hour.

Which way did he come from?——He came in at the back door, that was open, and he was behind it; my miſtreſs came down about a quarter of an hour after I ſerved him with a glaſs of gin, I took a penny of him for it, and he went away, and my miſtreſs aſked me who it was for, and I told her for Jack.

Mr. Chetwood. It was half an hour after you came down, before your miſtreſs came down?—Yes.

And ſometime after your miſtreſs came down, your maſter came down?——Yes, my maſter came down about half after eight.

Court. Was it light enough to ſee a man's face, when you came down ſtairs?—No, Sir, it was not.

Was it light enough when your maſter came down to ſee a man's face?——Yes.

Did you ſerve him by candle-light?—No, Sir, it was by day light.

WILLIAM BOX ſworn.

I am a conſtable, Mr. Granger came to me about eleven, and told me he had been robbed, he ſaid, he had loſt ſome brown paper off the ſhelf, and he believed he had got the thief; I went to the Three Kings, in the Minories, and there was the priſoner; I ſearched his coat pockets, and found a few halfpence, his waiſtcoat pockets, and breeches pockets were full of halfpence, his box was on the tap-room table, he ſaid, it was his box, and I opened his box, and found a quantity of halfpence in a blue apron; ſome in papers and ſome looſe, and I found this ſcrew, and button, and ſtone, and a bit of ginger; I aſked him how he came by them, he owned he had taken them from his maſter that morning, he told me, that at five in the morning he got in at the window, the people were talking to him.

Did any of theſe people ſay any thing to him?——I did hear the people ſay it would be better for him, and they ſaid he had better ſay how it happened.

Recollect whether ſome of theſe people did not tell him, it would be better for him if he did confeſs the whole truth?——Upon my word I cannot be ſure, but I think they did.

The halfpence ſhewn to the proſecutor: and the button and button ſtone, and other things depoſed to.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you hear any perſon offer favour to him?——No, I did not.

Mr. Chetwood to Conſtable. What time did he come to you?—About eleven, Mr. Granger was preſent all the time, I was preſent with the priſoner, he did not attempt to make his eſcape, he did not appear drunk.

GEORGE EVANS ſworn.

I am a cooper, the priſoner came into the Three Kings, in the Minories, and aſked for lodgings, this was on Friday evening, before he was charged with this affair, on Saturday he ſtaid there all day, on Sunday night he went out and came home on Monday morning when it was light, about half after ſeven, he called for a pint of beer, he gave me all bad halfpence to pay for it, I am not ſure that they were bad, he laid down on the bench, and aſked for the maid, he ſaid, he was up at three in the morning and wanted me to ſend my boy for the girl, accordingly the girl came, and ſaid to him, all I know is, you are as drunk as an owl, I ſee; I went out of the tap-room, and left him ſome time, and ſhe went out, he lay ſometime, he then took out a ſilk handkerchief from his box, with a parcel of halfpence and farthings, and he was over-hauling them, and I was looking at him; there was a gingerbread nut, and a good many trifling things, I ſaw part of a button or a whole button, I could not ſwear to it, he ſaid, he had them of his maſter for wages, then I ſent to Mr. Granger who came in the morning.

ANN BOYCE ſworn.

I was ſervant to Mr. Granger ſix weeks, I came after the priſoner went away, he was a ſervant to an apothecary's ſhop in Ratcliff-highway.

How came you to know that?——My miſtreſs ſent me on Sunday afternoon, to tell him, ſhe would be glad if he would come and take a walk with her that afternoon; he came after my maſter went out, and ſhe left word for him to knock at her mother's door, I gave that direction to him, but whether he went or no, I do not know, he came to our houſe on Sunday evening, and I was ſent four Sunday evenings running on the like meſſage, and he came every Sunday evening; my miſtreſs was up, and he came and knocked at the door, I told my miſtreſs, black John was at the door, and ſhe deſired me to go out, and open the back door and let him in; I let him in, and faſtened the door after him, he then went through our back kitchen and there ſtaid, and I went and told my miſtreſs that he was there, and ſhe went and ſtaid about half an hour, and came back again; I do not recollect any trunk being carried out; my maſter came home in about a quarter of an hour after, and at twelve o'clock we all went up ſtairs together, I do not know whether any body came down that night after we went up ſtairs to bed; my miſtreſs went into the bar firſt that morning.

Did ſhe ſerve the liquors?——Yes.

Was there any notice of the bar being in any unuſual ſtate that morning more than any other?——None at all.

Did you hear of any ſuch thing then?——No.

Was there any mark or break of any kind complained of?—No.

Did you ſee black John there that morning?—Yes, my miſtreſs gave him a glaſs that morning of the queen's cordial, my miſtreſs gave it him, and ſhe has given him many; I went to him to the Three Kings, he was very much in liquor.

Had you any meſſage from him?——He ſaid he wanted to ſee my miſtreſs, I aſked him what he wanted, he ſaid, my miſtreſs knew what he wanted, I told my miſtreſs, and ſhe ſaid ſhe would give any money if he would go any where elſe, for ſhe could not go to him; my maſter and miſtreſs had ſome words that day, and ſhe left him, and did not come home till that day week, the words were concerning this lad.

I believe there was ſome jealouſy between them?——I do not know whether it was jealouſy or the money being miſſing.

Do you know that he was jealous of this man?—I do not think my maſter was.

What were the words about?—About the money, that was the reaſon.

You ſwear the words were about this lad?—I believe it was concerning the money.

Was it about the lad, or the money, or both?——I believe it was about the money being miſſing.

Did you hear the black's name mentioned that morning while they were diſputing?—No, Sir, but about the money, I cannot tell the particular converſation, ſhe left my maſter juſt at Guildhall, directly as the lad was put into the Compter, and did not return for a week.

Court. This back kitchen is a part of the houſe?—Yes.

Do you know whether he had leave to ſleep in the houſe that night?——Yes, my miſtreſs gave him leave to ſleep in the houſe that night.

Did you hear your miſtreſs give him leave to ſleep in the houſe that night?——Yes, he had ſlept there ſeveral nights before.

Was it in the houſe or the out-houſe?—In the out-houſe.

The out-houſe has no connection with the houſe?——This out-houſe as we call it, is the back kitchen.

Do you mean to ſay, you call this out-houſe the back kitchen?——Yes.

Is it uſed as a back kitchen?——Yes.

Has it any connection with the houſe at all?——No.

Is it under the ſame roof?——I do not know.

Is there any roof that goes from the houſe to connect this with the building?—No.

Is it under the ſame roof?—No.

Is it all covered from the houſe to this, is there any wall or communication that joins the houſe to the out-houſe?——I do not know.

Pray does not the window of the back parlour look towards this houſe?—Yes.

Did your maſter ſit up that night?—No, we all went up ſtairs together.

And the back doors to the houſe were faſtened, and this man was not then in the houſe?—No, Sir, he was not in the houſe, he was in the back place.

Mr. Chetwood. You did not ſee him in the back place when you left him?—No.

Then might not he come into the houſe from this back houſe without your ſeeing him?——Yes.

MARY DAVIS ſworn.

Mr. Chetwood. Was you at either of the Compters when Mr. Granger was there when this lad was in cuſtody?—Yes, the boy came in, and he was a priſoner; and his maſter came in, and I ſaid, walk into our parlour; I was arreſted that night, and his maſter ſaid to the boy, you have robbed me, he ſaid, I did not rob you maſter, I have no more than my miſtreſs gave me; ſo his maſter ſaid, if you will confeſs what concern you have had with my wife, I will forgive you; that is all I know and heard; then I went down and left them there, and the maſter ſaid to the boy, how many times have you laid with my wife; then after this, he ſaid, ſend for my miſtreſs to give me ſome money; ſo he ſays, cannot you bail me, and ſo his maſter ſaid no, but I am very ſorry for what I have done.

GEORGE BAILLIE was ſet to the Bar, whoſe Caſe was reſerved for the Opinion of the Twelve Judges, which Opinion was delivered by Mr. Juſtice Gould, as follows:

This priſoner was indicted at the Seſſions at this place, the 14th of September, 1785: the indictment ſet forth that at the quarter Seſſions, holden January the 31ſt, in the 23d of his preſent Majeſty; the priſoner who had been committed by a Juſtice of Peace, had been charged upon oath with being a rogue and vagabond, being found in an incloſed yard belonging to Mr. William Swan's dwelling-houſe, and the Seſſions having upon examination adjudged him to be a rogue and vagabond, ordered him to be detained in the Houſe of Correction for the ſpace of ſix months: then the indictment ſtated that at the Seſſions of the Peace, holden by adjournment, on the 12th of December in the ſame year, the ſame priſoner was brought before that Court, committed by a warrant of two Juſtices as an incorrigible rogue, having eſcaped from the Houſe of Correction before the expiration of ſix months, for which he had been committed; and theſe two Juſtices on his examination adjuged him to be an incorrigible rogue, and to be detained in the ſame Houſe of Correction for two years; then the indictment further charges, that the priſoner, on the 14th of May did offend again in like manner, as a rogue and vagabond; having upon him a certain implement called an iron crow, with an intent feloniouſly to break and enter a coach-houſe and ſtable; and alſo having upon him a certain offenſive weapon called a piſtol, with intent feloniouſly to aſſault ſome perſons. Upon theſe charges in the indictment at the Old Bailey Seſſions, in September, 1785, he was tried and found guilty, but two objections were taken by his Counſel, firſt that the offence deſcribed being created by the ſtatute of the twenty-third of his preſent Majeſty, cannot ſupport an indictment under the act of Parliament, made in the 17th of King George the Second: the next objection was, that the words in like manner, in the act of the 17th of King George the Second, referred to offences committed as an incorrigible rogue, whereas this priſoner offending on this indictment is ſtated to be offending in like manner as a rogue and vagabond not ſaying as an incorrigible rogue. Theſe two objections were by the Recorder laid before the Judges for their conſideration, and as to the firſt objection, which is, that the offence deſcribed being created by the 23d of his preſent Majeſty, cannot ſupport an indictment under the 27th of George the Second; all the Judges are of opinion that there is no ground for this objection: the ſtatute of the 23d of the preſent King, enacts that a perſon under the circumſtances therein deſcribed (among which the caſe of the priſoner as ſtated in the indictment expreſly falls) ſhall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the intent and meaning of the ſtatute made in the 17th year of King George the Second; the Judges think this proviſion has the ſame operation, as if the deſcriptions in this act of the 23d of his preſent Majeſty, had been originally inſerted in the firſt ſtatute in addition to what is therein ſpecified to conſtitute the offence: The title of the act, though not regarded as a part of an act of Parliament, yet may ſerve in ſome degree, to point out the intent of the legiſlature, and in the preſent caſe, the title is "An Act to extend the "proviſions (or an act deſcribing the 17th "of King George the Second) to contain "caſes not therein mentioned." Upon this objection therefore, all the Judges concur in opinion, that the ſtatute of the 23d of George the Third, is to be conſidered as incorporated into, and making a part of the 17th of his late Majeſty: as to the ſecond objection, which is that the words in like manner of the 17th of George the Second, refer to offences committed as an incorrigible rogue, whereas the indictment ſtates the priſoner to have offended in like manner, as a rogue and vagabond, and it therefore does not follow in the words or intention of the act of parliament; the Judges are unanimous in opinion, upon weighing the ſeveral proviſions in the act of the 17th of George the Second, applicable to the caſe of the priſoner, that this indictment is ſufficient.—The act of the 17th of George the Second divides the offences into three claſſes; firſt, idle and diſorderly perſons, theſe are to be puniſhed by one or two Juſtices with one, or more, months impriſonment; the ſecond are rogues and vagabonds, puniſhable by one or more Juſtices, by whipping, or to be committed to the next general or quarter ſeſſions; the next are incorrigible rogues, who it ſeems are to be committed till the ſeſſions, and not puniſhable before. At the firſt commitment of the priſoner, the quarter ſeſſions adjudged him to be a rogue and vagabond, which is one of the offences mentioned in the act of the 17th of King George the Second, and detained him in the Houſe of Correction for ſix months; after this, he is brought before the Seſſions again, having eſcaped before the end of the ſix months, and on his examination, is adjudged by the Seſſions to be an incorrigible rogue, and ordered to be detained in the Houſe of Correction for two years; then it appears by the indictment, that before the expiration of the two years, he was guilty of another offence ſpecified in the act of the 23d of his preſent Majeſty; for by that act, it is declared, ſuch perſon ſhould be deemed a rogue and vagabond, within the intent and meaning of the 17th of George the Second; the proviſion of that act, in the 8th ſection, is, that if an incorrigible rogue, ſo ordered by the Seſſions to be detained, ſhall, before the expiration of the time, break, or make his eſcape, from the Houſe of Correction, or ſhall offend again in like manner, he ſhall be deemed guilty of felony. The context, which adopts the words in like manner, refers to breaking, or eſcaping, from the Houſe of Correction; therefore, recourſe muſt be had to another part of the ſtatute for the meaning of thoſe words: now, the third ſection provides, that all rogues and vagabonds, who ſhall ſo break or eſcape, and all who, after having been puniſhed as rogues and vagabonds, and diſcharged, ſhall again commit any of the ſaid offences, ſhall be deemed incorrigible rogues; to which proviſion in ſection the 3d, the words in like manner in the 8th ſection, muſt, in my opinion, neceſſarily refer; then the ſituation of the priſoner is, that having been adjudged an incorrigible rogue, and having been committed for two years, he eſcapes, and is at large before the expiration of the time, and commits a new act of vagrancy, he thereby becomes an incorrigible rogue the ſecond time, and ſo incurs the guilt of felony: theſe facts being diſcloſed in the indictment, and no technical terms or words of art being neceſſary for the deſcription of the offence, the law muſt draw the inference from the words, and that is, that by what the priſoner has ſo done, he becomes an incorrigible rogue a ſecond time, and conſequently has offended in like manner, and has ſo been guilty of the felony; he is therefore in ſuch a caſe as the act declares his perſon ſhall be deemed and taken to be guilty of felony. It is the opinion, therefore, of all the Judges, that this priſoner is liable to the ſentence impoſed by the act of parliament for ſuch a felon.

Mr. Recorder. Priſoner, the Judges having unanimouſly declared their opinion that your conviction was legal, the ſentence of of the law upon you is, that you be tranſported beyond the ſeas for the term of ſeven years, to commence from the time of your conviction, to ſuch place, or places, as his Majeſty, by the advice of his Privy Council, ſhall think proper to declare and appoint.

MISDEMEANOR.

317. BENJAMIN WOODMAN was indicted for attempting to obtain, by means of a falſe, forged, and fictitious letter, a firkin of butter, value 30s. the property of William Che.ke.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned one month.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

318. DOROTHY HANDLAND was indicted for wilful and corrupt perjury in her evidence on the trial of William Till, at the Old Bailey, in the month of December laſt.

The Caſe was opened by Mr. Knowlys.

THOMAS SHELTON, Eſq. Clerk of the Arraigns, ſworn.

(Produced the Record, which was read.)

RICHARD FINCH ſworn.

I had this from Mr. Shelton, Clerk of the Arraigns; this is a certificate of the acquittal of William Till.

THOMAS RUSSEL ſworn.

You attended here upon the trial of Till in December ſeſſion?—Yes.

Look at the priſoner, did you ſee her ſworn here on that indictment?——Yes, I was ſtanding here; ſhe was ſworn, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Did you ſee her take the book?——I believe ſhe took the book, to the beſt of my knowledge.

You ſaw her?——I think ſo.

The queſtion to you is, whether you ſaw the woman take the book, and ſwear; can you ſay it, without any doubt?——I did not take any notice.

——— JONAS ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner, I ſaw her ſworn, I heard the oath adminiſtered to her, and ſhe was ſworn.

(The Short-hand Writer then read his Notes on the Trial of William Till.)

WILLIAM TILL ſworn.

Do you remember being charged with robbing the priſoner?—Yes.

What day did ſhe charge you with robbing her?——On Saturday the 5th of November.

I mean, on what day did ſhe ſay you robbed her, when ſhe gave her evidence in this Court?——I do not know the day of the month.

Do you remember the day when this woman firſt came, and ſaid in your hearing that ſhe had been robbed?——She came in about nine o'clock in the evening; ſhe ſaid ſhe had been robbed between the hours of two and four.

Are you ſure ſhe fixed that time?—Yes, I am.

Do you know where you were that day, between the hours of two and four, will you tell us upon your oath?——I was in at Mrs. Wolf's, when ſhe came in to complain of this robbery; I had been there from ſeven till nine, I did not go out till eleven, when I went home to-bed.

Then from that were you in Robinhood-yard at any time between nine and eleven that evening?——No, I went home to-bed at eleven. I did not go out of Wolf's houſe from ſeven till eleven that evening; I live in Robinhood-yard with Mr. Ruſſel, coach-maſter.

Do you live over the ſtables belonging to Robert Beach?——No.

Then in fact, any time between ſeven and eleven, were you in Robinhood-yard with any bundle of woman's clothes?—No, Sir, I never was out of Mr. Wolf's houſe.

I need not aſk you, if the priſoner called to you between that time in the yard?——No, Sir, ſhe never ſaw me till ſhe came to Mr. Wolf's.

Court. Did the priſoner know you before?—Yes; ſhe was a lodger of my maſter's.

Then, ſhe knew your perſon before?—Yes.

Was ſhe a lodger at this time that ſhe charged you with this offence?—Yes.

Previous to this offence, had you had any quarrel with her?—No, Sir.

Never have had a word with her?—Not a word.

Mr. Keys, Priſoner's Counſel. How long have you been employed in that yard?——Upwards of five years.

Has Dorothy Handland lodged in that yard all the time?—No, Sir, ſhe has not been a lodger to my maſter ſo long as that; ſhe left my maſter's apartment about a year ago, and then ſhe came back again.

How long have you been acquainted with her?—Ever ſince I have been in the yard, and longer.

That is five years and a half?——Yes.

What buſineſs is ſhe?——An old clothes woman.

When ſhe goes out about her buſineſs, her room is left locked up?——Certainly; there have been ſeveral people after her, and ſhe has told me to take their names, and to deliver meſſages, and ſhe ſhould be at home at ſuch a time; but I never ſhewed any goods for her in my life; when I have been in the yard doing my horſes, ſhe has come down in the yard, and ſaid ſhe ſhould be at home ſoon.

You knew her little ſtock was there?—I cannot tell.

Is this alehouſe, the Robinhood, cloſe to the yard?—It joins the yard.

What diſtance is it between the Robinhood and that ſtable-door, where ſhe ſwore ſhe ſaw you paſs?——I ſuppoſe, a hundred yards.

When you was in this public houſe, what time did you go there?——At ſeven in the evening.

What time did you go there at dinner-time?—Before two.

What time did you leave the houſe?——About five, my maſter came home.

What is your maſter's name?—Beach.

Then you went into the yard?—Yes; I was there about half after ſix.

You ſwear, theſe four hours, from ſeven till eleven, you was not out of the public houſe?—I was not.

What part of the houſe did you ſit in?—I went to the chimney, to the box next to the jack-weight, where I always lay down.

How long did you ſtay there?—Why, I ſuppoſe till about eight in that box.

Was you alone in that box?—No, Sir.

Who was with you?——Three or four people; there were two Mr. Goffs, and two Quakers, one of their names is Meredith.

What is the other's name?——Charles Tippy, and one of Mr. Giles's men, his name is Thomas; and there was one Mr. Trott, a watchmaker.

How was you employed at this time from ſeven till eight?—In drinking two pints of beer; I had one pint of beer alone.

Who did you drink with afterwards?—With Mr. Trott and the other.

How much had you with them?—One pint of beer.

How much had you in all?—I was two pints, and they was a pint a-piece.

Had you any liquor beſides beer?—No.

And all that time you ſat in that box?—At eight o'clock, I went next to the fire, and ſtaid there till eleven; Trott and I went away together; two of them that lodge in the houſe went to-bed at ten, Tipping and Trott were there the whole time.

Mr. Knowlys. Have you any doubt that you was there from ſeven till a conſiderable time paſt ten?—I have no doubt of it.

Have you many more men in the yard?——Yes.

Is there any man like you in the ſame yard?—There is one about my bulk, he is a gentleman's coachman.

Does he wear his hair round as you do, without powder?——Yes.

Mr. Keys. Pray, does this public houſe admit diſorderly people, all ſorts of company?—I never ſaw any in my life.

Court. Were there any lamps in the yard?—There was not, nor has been theſe two years.

Is there any lamp near the loft-door?—No, nor any under the gate-way.

Do you recollect, on that evening, whether there was any moon?——I brought the watchman's lanthorn to light my candle; there was no moon, it was very dark, I am poſitive of it.

Do you think there was light enough that evening at half after eight, to diſcover the perſon of any body?—No, Sir.

Do you think you could have diſcovered any body you had known?—No, Sir.

MARY WOLF ſworn.

What houſe do you keep?—The Robinhood and Black Boy in Leather-lane.

Do you know the priſoner?——I know her living in a yard adjoining my houſe.

Do you remember the evening ſhe came to you, and complained to you of the robbery?——Yes; it was on Wedneſday.

Was William Till in the houſe at that time?——Yes.

Was he near to Mrs. Handland?——He was ſitting in a box, and ſhe was ſtanding in the tap-room.

Did ſhe ſay any thing to him ?—Nothing at all ; ſhe ſaid ſhe had been robbed.

Do you know, whether at that time ſhe ſaw Till ?——I imagine ſhe ſaw him, ſhe could not be off ſeeing him, the tap-room is not very large.

Did ſhe at that time ſay thing of Till having robbed her ?——Not at all.

Court. You ſay it was between eight and nine ?——Yes.

Can you tell with any certain accuracy whether it was eight or nine ?——It was nearer nine than eight.

When did ſhe next come to your houſe ? —I believe it was the next day ſhe came, and had ſomething to drink at the bar.

When ſhe was there the ſecond time, was Till there ?——I do not recollect he was.

On the Wedneſday, do you know where Till was, any time between eight and nine, or how long he was in your houſe that evening ?——He came near two o'clock to dine off roaſt pork, with his fellow-ſervant, and he went to ſleep after dinner, in a box that we have under the jack-weight, and then his maſter came home with the coach, which was pretty near five, and he went to do his buſineſs, and he came into the houſe again between ſix and ſeven, and he ſtaid there till eleven.

Are you ſure of that fact ?——I am ſure of that fact ; I believe I ſwore it before in Court on Till's trial.

Who were there beſides ?——There were ſeveral people in the houſe ; there was one Mr. Trott and one Mr. Meredith, and Mr. Tipping ; my niece was there, ſhe lives in the houſe with me.

I believe when you was here before, you ſaid Till was a very good lad ?—Yes.

Mr. Keys. This Robinhood-yard is a public common yard, any body may go in ? —Yes.

And ſometimes men and women go down there, that have no buſineſs there ?—Very poſſibly, it is not locked up.

MARY GIBSON ſworn.

Do you know the priſoner ?——I do.

Do you remember the firſt time ſhe came to your houſe, and complained of being robbed ?——I do ; that was Wedneſday evening, I think it was the 2d of November.

What time in the evening was it ?—— About nine.

At that time where was William Till ? —Sitting in the tap-room.

Do you think Mrs. Handland muſt have ſeen him when ſhe came in ?—I think ſhe did, ſhe looked at him.

Did ſhe at that time ſay who had robbed her ?—No, ſhe did not ; ſhe ſaid ſhe had been robbed ; I ſaw him in the houſe about eight, I went to-bed pretty near eleven, I left him in the houſe then.

Do you know whether he was out of your houſe during that time at all ?——I do not recollect he was.

Did you ſee Mrs. Handland at all at your houſe afterwards ?——On the Thurſday or Friday morning ſhe came in.

Did ſhe complain of being robbed ?—— Yes ; Till was in the box facing her, and Mrs. Wolf was preſent.

Did ſhe mark Till out then as the man that robbed her ?——She did not.

Were there any others preſent with Till at this time ?——No, Sir, nobody in the houſe, as I know of.

Who was in the houſe the firſt evening with Till ?—There was Tate, Meredith, and Trott.

Mr. Keys. What time did you firſt come into this houſe ?—About eight.

How long did you ſtay in the tap-room ? —All the evening, till I went to-bed, that was almoſt eleven.

Was you in the tap-room all that time? —Sometimes in the tap-room, and ſometimes in the parlour.

Then he might go out into the yard ?— I do not know that he did ; he was aſleep part of the time.

Mr. Knowlys. If he had been out for any conſiderable time, ſhould you have miſſed him ?——I ſhould.

Court. When you was in the parlour, could you ſee what paſſed in the tap-room?——Yes, without I was by the fire-ſide; I do not think I was in the parlour two minutes the whole time; I had cuſtomers to mind in the bar, and ſometimes in the tap-room; I am niece to Mrs. Wolf, and ſo I aſſiſt her.

Mr. Keys. Mrs. Wolf, how was you employed from the time that Till came in, till the time he went away at eleven?——Sometimes in the bar, and ſometimes in the tap-room.

Was you in the parlour any part of that time?——No, I do not recollect I was; the tap-room was full of people, and nobody was in the bar.

Sometimes you was employed about the ſcores?—I had my eye all the time upon Till, I am very ſure he did not go out all that time.

Then you had your eye on him all the time?—Yes, he was ſitting in a box adjoining the fire ſide.

Court. Can you with certainty during the whole of that evening, and the buſineſs, and attention you paid to your buſineſs, ſay that this man did not go out?—I am ſure he was not out from the time he came in, 'till he went out to go to bed.

JOSEPH RICHARDSON ſworn.

Do you know the priſoner?—Yes, between one and two he came into the tap-room, and he ſtaid 'till about half after four or five, and he never was out of the houſe, he fell aſleep part of the time; I was at his trial, and gave the ſame evidence, I was not in company with him in the evening.

Did you hear what Mrs. Handland ſaid of her being robbed?—Yes, ſhe told me of her being robbed, this was the night before ſhe took him up, that was on the Friday night, I aſked her who robbed her, ſhe ſaid William Till, I ſaid I do not think he would rob you, he was in company with me; he went to the Juſtices on Saturday, and came again on Tueſday, and on Wedneſday he was fully committed.

Is Handcock here?—No.

WALTER RAWLEIGH TROTT ſworn.

I know William Till, I was preſent when Mrs. Handland complained of being robbed, William Till was aſleep under the jack, that was on Wedneſday night at nine o'clock that ſhe came in.

Do you know how long on that Wedneſday night Till had been there?——I came in about a quarter paſt eight, and ſtaid till eleven or a little after, when he and I came out together, he drank no beer with me till Mrs. Handland came in, and ſpoke to him.

Was that the evening that Mrs. Handland complained of being robbed?——She ſaid ſhe was robbed by a friend and not by an enemy, ſhe mentioned no names.

Was Till near her at that time?—He was, ſhe looked towards him.

Did he go out for any purpoſe?——No Sir, from eight till nine he was aſleep, then Mrs. Handland came in and ſpoke for her boy; and ſhe ſpoke of the robbery.

Court. Might he go to the ſtable yards without your knowing it?—No Sir, it could not be done, he could not go ſo far as the ſtable door.

Do you mean to ſay, when ſhe ſaid ſhe was robbed by a friend and not by an enemy, ſhe then looked towards Till?—Yes, I ſuppoſe ſhe muſt, ſhe looked towards Till undoubtedly at times.

Now did not you underſtand and conceive at the time that ſhe alluded to Till?——I ſuppoſe ſhe thought it might be Till.

Did you underſtand ſhe meant to charge Till?—I did.

Mr. Knowlys. Did any body elſe at the time expreſs ſuch opinion?——No, there were two others ſitting with him at the time, and I endeavoured as well as I could to prevent their ſpeaking to her, for fear ſhe ſhould get warrants.

I believe the priſoner is an old clothes-woman?—She is.

Court. You ſay ſhe came in between eight and nine?—It was full nine, if not paſt.

Was Till aſleep at the time ſhe ſaid this?—He was aſleep when ſhe firſt came in.

Was he aſleep when ſhe ſaid this?—He appeared to me to be aſleep.

THOMAS MEREDITH ſworn.

I remember ſeeing the priſoner at Mrs. Wolf's, when ſhe came to complain of the robbery.

Do you remember what day it was?—I think it was on Wedneſday, the 2d of November, it was when Trott was there, Till was there when I came in, and when Mrs. Handland came in.

Was Till near her?——He was faſt aſleep when I firſt went in, to appearance; then he got up ſome time after, I cannot be accountable for the time, then he went to the corner of the tap-room and ſat down, and in ſhe came, and ſaid ſhe had been robbed, ſhe was very near Till at that time; I did not hear her make any charge againſt him.

Should you have heard her make any charge againſt him if ſhe had?—I certainly muſt, but I heard her make no charge againſt him, I came in about ſix; Till was in when I came there, and I did not miſs him out of the houſe while I ſtaid, which was till a quarter paſt ten or more; Till was there all the time to the beſt of my knowledge, I certainly muſt have miſſed the man if he had been abſent at any time.

Mr. Keys. Did he go out for a few minutes?—To the beſt of my knowledge I ſwear that he did not.

Will you ſwear poſitively he did not?—I cannot be accountable for it particularly.

Then he might to the beſt of your knowledge?—If he had been in my company I ſhould have miſſed him, I did not ſee him go out, certainly I muſt have ſeen him if he had gone out.

Court. You ſwear to the beſt of your knowledge, which is very different to the ſwearing to the fact; now Sir, I wiſh to know of you, whether you can ſwear poſitively that he did not go out; anſwer me, yes or no?——To the beſt of my knowledge he did not; I will ſwear that he did not go out no further than where I ſat on the ſeat; I never went out, and believe he did not, if he had gone out I muſt have obſerved him, I left him in the houſe.

Mr. Knowlys. He was awake when Mrs. Handland called out a robbery?——He was ſitting in the corner, he might be aſleep, he was a yard or two from Mrs. Handland, I remember her very well ſaying ſhe had been robbed, but I do not remember the words, ſhe looked round the tap-room when ſhe ſaid ſo, I believe, but I did not take particular notice.

Court. If ſhe ſaid ſhe had been robbed by a friend, and not by an enemy, muſt you have heard it?—I think I ſhould, but I do not recollect it particularly, I was in a box with a different company.

CHARLES TIPPING ſworn.

I was at Mrs. Wolf's houſe when ſhe came in and complained ſhe was robbed, Till was there on Wedneſday at the time ſhe came in, it muſt be a little after nine, ſhe aſked for her little boy Bobby.

Did ſhe complain then of being robbed?——Yes, ſhe ſaid ſhe had been robbed.

Was Till there at the time?——He was.

Did ſhe ſay that Till had robbed her?—No ſuch thing, I came into this houſe a little after ſeven, and ſtaid till after ten.

During all that time, was Till there or not?——He was.

Are you quite ſure of it?—Yes Sir, to the beſt of my knowledge I am.

If Till had gone out of the tap-room for any time, do you think you muſt have obſerved him?—I think I muſt have obſerved him, and I am pretty confident I ſhould have obſerved him.

Who was in company with you?—

My partner Mr. Meridith, who works with me at the ſame ſhop, he was firſt in the box on the left hand ſide, he then moved and came under the jack, and ſat there, and there he was when the woman came in.

Court. As you was ſituated, could you ſee Till in the box during the whole time, in every box in which he was ſituated?—Yes, I was directly oppoſite, I was in company with Meredith and Trott.

Mr. Keys. You was in converſation all the time?—Yes.

Then ſometimes you looked at Meredith?—Yes.

How long was you looking at Meredith?—I cannot ſay, perhaps a quarter of an hour.

Will you ſwear you was not more?—No, I cannot.

Then during all the time you were looking at Meredith, Till might have gone out of the tap-room?——I think if he had gone out, I muſt have ſeen it, he was under the jack; he was by me all the time.

Might not he go out, and you not have ſeen him?—No.

Mr. Knowles. Now you have ſworn, and you are to ſpeak to the utmoſt of your knowledge, do you think he could have gone out without your obſerving him?—No, Sir, upon my ſoul I do not.

Court. Then if that is the caſe, you can ſwear poſitively he did not go out?—I am ſure he could not well go out, becauſe he was facing of me.

You may ſwear you never ſaw him go out, and will you ſwear he did not go out?—I cannot go to ſay that.

You did not obſerve that he did not go out, but you will not poſitively ſwear that he did not?——No.

ELIZABETH COHAN ſworn.

I know the priſoner.

Did ſhe ever apply to you about an indictment againſt Till?—I am an old clothes woman, I dealt with Mrs. Grey, that's her name; I am a Jeweſs, I never deny being a Jew; ſo, ſhe ſaid to me, Bet Cohan, I have been robbed, William Till has robbed me of every thing I have in the world, I have nothing but what I ſtand upright in; ſhe told me this on the Friday morning, and ſhe had been robbed on the Wedneſday before; ſhe ſaid nobody elſe could rob her, nobody elſe knew the way of the houſe; ſhe ſaid ſhe would give me two guineas if I would go up to the houſe, and ſay I ſaw the man come out with a great bundle of clothes wrapped up in a ſheet, and ſaw one or two gowns hanging out of the bundle.

Court. Did ſhe deſire you to ſwear that it was a man or William Till?——She ſaid William Till; and I was to ſay, I ſaw him come out, and Mrs. Grey, the priſoner, ſhewed me a bit to look at to ſee what ſort of a gown it was, that was hanging out of the bundle, and ſhe told me ſhe had loſt a yellow gown, the bit ſhe ſhewed me was a ſtriped colour.

Court. What colour was it?——I cancannot tell directly, it was a very pretty pattern.

Was it a figured pattern?——There was no particular pattern that I took notice of, it was a new bit of cotton.

Let me look at the indictment againſt Till, is there any cotton gown in that?—There are three linen gowns in it, but no cotton gown.

Cohen. She ſaid ſhe had loſt ſeveral things, and ſhe told me if I would go with her, ſhe would give me two guineas, and if the man was convicted, there would be forty pounds, twenty pounds for her, and twenty pounds for me; I told her I would not be guilty of any thing of the kind, and ſhe d—nd my eyes, and ſaid, I robbed her, then ſhe followed me down into Holborn, and ſhe ſaid, you did not rob me I know, and ſhe ſaid, come your way with me, and ſhe wanted me to get drunk, ſhe called for a pot of hot and paid fourteen pence of it; and ſhe called to a man, and ſaid, I want a warrant for a man that robbed me, I caught him robbing me; ſo when I heard her ſay that, I thought I would ſee the end of this, I would go over with her, ſhe went acroſs the way from the Brown Bear, and ſhe went into the office, and ſaid, I want a warrant, ſays the man for what; ſays ſhe, a man has robbed me, and ſhe made ſuch a blundering ſtory, that they would not grant her a warrant, ſo ſays the man, if you will give me half a crown, I will go with you.

Did ſhe ſay who had robbed her at that time?——No, I cannot ſay ſhe did, ſhe only ſaid a man aſked for half a crown, and he would go with her, ſhe would not give it him, but ſhe told him, ſhe was a woman of great ſpirit, and if he did her buſineſs, ſhe would pay him well, he ſaid he wanted nothing but half a crown, I have known Mr. Till twelve months, I have known her ſixteen years.

Did you ever ſee this man carry a bundle, as ſhe wanted you to ſwear?——I did not, I told her it was falſe, and I would be hanged before I would do it, ſhe told me ſhe had loſt a yellow gown at that time, and that if I would be good to her, I ſhould never want bread.

Mr. Keys. My Lord, I ſubmit this evidence is not relative to the preſent charge, it is not ſpecified in the indictment, was this to be the caſe, any ſort of evidence might be produced, as it may ſubject the the priſoner to another indictment, that of ſubornation of perjury, I never remember any ſuch evidence admitted, the caſe is, whether ſhe ſwore falſly before the Court, when ſhe ſwore ſhe ſaw this man with the bundle.

Court. The queſtion here is, not whether this woman has ſworn falſe, but whether ſhe has ſworn corruptly, and this is certainly evidence to be received to ſhew the intention of the party, and it is a circumſtance to be left to the Jury.

Mr. Keys. Pray madam, who are you?——I am a Jeweſs.

That I know, where do you live?——No. 6, Roſemary-lane.

What do you deal in?—Old clothes.

How many times have you been an evidence in this Court?——Never but once, about ſome ſhoes I bought of a neighbour.

You was ſuſpected of buying them knowing them to have been ſtolen?—No, Sir, I came up as an evidence.

When was it you ſay you told Till of this?—The very day I knew of it.

What day of the month was that?—It was the Friday after the Wedneſday that ſhe told me ſhe had been robbed.

How came you not to have been here, upon Till's trial?——He never ſent for me or elſe I ſhould have come.

Who was preſent at that time?—There were were a good many people at once.

Who was preſent?

Ruſſell. I was preſent for one.

Priſoner. Aſk that witneſs Cohan, how long it is ſince her huſband was hanged?—I am a married woman, my huſband is alive now, he has not lived with me theſe ſeven years.

Was ever any man hanged that paſſed as your huſband?——I never lived with no man but my huſband, I know better than that.

Court to Priſoner. What was the name of that man that was hanged?——She had two children by him at a birth.

Do you know any thing of that?——I know of no man in the world that was hanged, belonging to me.

Do you know any man that was hanged for ſtealing a hat?——No, my Lord, I do not, I never knew a man that was charged with ſtealing of hats in my life.

Did you never hear of any ſuch charge of any man of your acquaintance?—No.

——— BLACKETER ſworn.

I took a man from Litchfield-ſtreet office; he was tried and convicted; I have ſeen this woman come to Newgate to ſee him, but I do not know there was any connection.

Cohan. My Lord, I knew a man that was taken up for robbing a baker's ſhop in Rupert-ſtreet, and this was the man I came to ſee, but I never knew a man about a hat.

Was that man convicted?—Yes, he was convicted, and died for it.

Now, I aſked you if you knew any man that was tried and convicted here, and you ſaid, no?——That was about a hat; you would not have me ſay any thing that is not right; this was for a ſuit of clothes; he was no more my huſband than any other man that is here; I knew that man's mother, ſhe nurſed me; I have been parted from my huſband theſe ſeven years, I defy the world to ſay any thing againſt me.

WILLIAM HANDCOCK ſworn.

Who do you live with?——With the priſoner's ſon-in-law.

Was you examined at the laſt trial of Till?——Yes.

Was there ever any application made to you to give evidence againſt Till?——Not before ſhe brought a ſummons to me.

At what time was that?——Between ſeven and eight at night.

Who brought that?——Mrs. Handlahd.

What paſſed between you and Mrs. Handland about that ſummons?——It was on the night that Till was to go to Juſtice Blackborow in the morning, and ſhe told me to come and breakfaſt with her the next morning, which I did, and ſhe ſent me out for ſome liquor, and I drank part of it, and I went with her to Saffron-hill, to carry ſome rags to ſell, and then we had another quartern of gin; and then we went to the Sun at Clerkenwell, and there we had another quartern of gin; and then Mr. Chambers came in to us, and then we had another quartern of gin; and then Mr. Chambers aſked me, if I knew what I was come upon? I told him, no; ſays he, do you know you are come to take an oath? I ſaid, no; he ſaid, you are, and you muſt ſtand to it; the priſoner was by, and ſhe went to the Juſtice's.

Had ſhe and you, before you went to Chambers's, had any converſation about what you were to do?——All that was, ſhe told me, I think, as far as I know, I cannot tell what I did, nor what I ſaid then, ſhe never told me what I was to do, before I got down the ſteps to go in; ſhe then told me, now, ſays ſhe, you muſt ſay that you ſaw this William Till laying aſleep in a hay-loft, and when he awaked, you ſaw him come down, but you would not come down for fear; you muſt ſay you ſaw William Till open the door with a knife, and in opening the door with a knife, he took out a bundle of clothes in a ſheet, and took them away.

This time, were you ſober, or in liquor?——I was in liquor.

Are you ſure ſhe told you that?——I am certain ſure of it.

Did you do any thing in conſequence of her telling you to ſay that?—I cannot tell what I did; I told what ſhe bid me ſay before the Juſtice, as I was told the next day by other people; I did not know the next day.

Where were you the day the robbery was committed?——I was at home at work.

Did you ſee any thing of what ſhe deſired you to ſay you ſaw?—I did not.

Did not you ſay, upon your oath, that what you ſaid at the Juſtice's was not true?——I did not know, but as I was told the next day.

Did not you ſay here, upon the trial of Till, that what you ſaid before the Juſtice was not true?——It was not true, that I know of; I was this day the robbery was committed at my own work in the ſhop, I am poſitive of it.

Did you beg pardon of the Court for what you had done?——I did.

Should you, of your own account, have gone before the Juſtice, if this woman had not deſired you?——No, I am ſure of it.

Should you have gone without a ſummons to the Juſtice?—No, I ſhould not.

Was Mrs. Handland by when you aſked pardon of the Court?——Yes.

Did ſhe attempt to contradict you then,

before the Court?——I do not recollect now.

Did ſhe, at the time you aſked pardon of the Court for what you ſaid before the Juſtice, attempt to contradict you?——No, not at all.

Mr. Keys. Did this lady take you before the Grand Jury to find the bill againſt Till?—No.

I believe you have been tried for ſomething?—I have ben tried, but not for any thing out of the way; I was tried for my wages.

Was not you tried for a fraud?—They made a fraud of it.

I believe you was acquitted through defect of evidence?——I do not know how it was, but I know very well I did not mean to make it a defraud, I meant for the gentleman to have the money, if I had thought on it.

So, now you come here to ſwear that what you have ſworn before the Juſtice, was falſe?——Yes.

You was very drunk, you ſay?—Yes.

How came the Juſtice to take your evidence?——I do not know; I do not know now what I ſaid, any further than I was told the next morning.

Do you remember the Juſtice's clerk was here on the laſt trial?——Yes.

Did he ſay you was drunk or ſober, when you was before the Juſtice?—He ſwore I was ſober.

Did you contradict him?——I did not, but I was not ſober.

319. JAMES HATTER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of March laſt, forty pounds weight of lead, belonging to James Armſtrong, then and there fixed to a certain houſe belonging to the ſaid James Armſtrong, againſt the ſtatute.

ROBERT JENKS ſworn.

Two young men who lodge at my houſe, hearing a great noiſe at the top of the next houſe to mine, they alarmed me about ſix in the morning; I came down directly, and ſaw the priſoner come out of the houſe with the lead in his hand in a bag; he was ſtopped by a young man who ſleeps at my houſe.

Do you know where it came from?——It was taken from the gutter between the two houſes; he went up, and would have put it in its place again.

THOMAS COBB ſworn.

I heard a great noiſe at the next houſe; I got up immediately and came down, and met the priſoner with the lead, and called the watchman, who took him.

—— BROOKS ſworn.

I fitted the lead, and it matched exactly.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going by this houſe about ſix in the morning; it is an empty houſe, the door is always open, and children are often playing in it; I have been in it often; I know nothing of the lead: they gave me in charge of the patrol, who knew me very well.

GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

320. JOHN GREEN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of February laſt, twenty-four razor-ſtrops, value 4s. the property of Charles Walker and William Baker.

CHARLES WALKER ſworn.

Did you loſe any razor-ſtrops?——The priſoner came into my warehouſe between ſix and ſeven in the evening, with ſome goods that had been ordered; after being paid for them, my ſervant miſſed a parcel, containing twenty-four razor-ſtrops, which was made up, and marked ready for a cuſtomer; my ſervant went after him, and brought him back with the two dozen of ſtrops.

JAMES CROSSLEY ſworn.

On Tueſday, the 28th, the priſoner brought ſome buckle chapes; as ſoon as I had paid him, I miſſed the ſtrops off the counter; I purſued him, and as ſoon as I overtook him, he dropped them; I immediately took him, and brought him back to the warehouſe; he ſaid he was very ſorry for what he had done.

(The razor-ſtrops produced, and depoſed to.)

GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

321. THOMAS HOBBS and HENRY GILES were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of William Shutt, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 26th day of February laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one deal box, value 12d. one livery cloth coat, value 5s. one fuſtian coat, value 3s. one fuſtian waiſtcoat, value 12d. one ſtriped flannel waiſtcoat, value 12d. a white dimity waiſtcoat, value 5s. one pair of velveret breeches, value 2s. two pair of leather breeches, value 2s. one pair of leather ſhoes, value 5s. ſix ſhirts, value 30s. ſix muſlin neckcloths, value 6s. one linen neck-handkerchief, value 3s. five yards of nankeen cloth, value 5s. one pair of ſilver boot-garter buckles, value 3s. ſix gowns, value 30s. and one crown piece, value 5s. the property of Robert Durant; and one cloth coat, value 3s. the property of George Hemmings.

ROBERT DURANT ſworn.

I am groom to Sir John Dyer in St. James's-ſtreet; I lodge at Mr. William Shutt's; I left my room about three in the afternoon, and the things were all ſafe; this was on Sunday the 26th of February: I left Benjamin Roſs in the room when I went out; I came home about a quarter before eleven; I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment. (Repeats them.) I know nothing of the perſons that committed the robbery.

GEORGE HEMMINGS ſworn.

I lodge in the ſame room with the proſecutor; I ſaw theſe things upon the bed between ſix and ſeven, when I went to clean myſelf, nobody was in the room, I found the door locked, and the key left in the door.

What things did you ſee on the bed?—I ſaw his frock and things lay upon the bed, and the box was there by the ſide of the bed, in the place where it uſed to ſtand; I left the room about half paſt ſix, and locked the door; I went to bed about half paſt ten, and I found Thomas Row in the room when I came in; he ſlept in the room; he was undreſſing himſelf; there were four perſons lodged in this room; when I went in, I ſaw the things were gone from the bed, and I aſked Row what he had done with the things? He ſaid he had done nothing with them.

What is Thomas Row?—He is a poſtilion.

Who did he live with?——Mr. Blackwhite.

Have you known him long?—No.

Do you know what character he bears?——No.

THOMAS JOHNSON ſworn.

I went with the proſecutor to the houſe of the priſoner Hobbs in Theobald-road, he is a Sawyer by trade, and keeps a houſe there; I found ſome things, which the proſecutor claimed; Jealous produces the things; the priſoner Hobbs was there when we found the things.

What did he ſay?——He ſaid they were brought to him by Henry Giles; then I went and found the priſoner Giles at his lodgings in Vine-ſtreet, Saffron-hill; I found a pair of ſhoes on him, which the proſecutor owned, and the next day I found ſome books at the priſoner Giles's mother's, which the proſecutor ſaid were his.

Was Giles preſent when the things were found at his mother's?——No, he was in cuſtody.

Did Giles ſay any thing in your hearing?—No, he ſaid he would tell the truth.

Mr. Knowlys, Counſel for the Priſoner Hobbs. Hobbs always perſevered in the ſame ſtory that the things were brought there by Giles?—I never heard him ſay ſo but once.

Is not Hobbs's houſe let out in lodgings?——I have heard ſo.

Was Giles acquainted with any of his lodgers?—I cannot ſay, he might.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

I went to Hobbs's with the laſt witneſs; I went in on the 28th, and Hobbs ſat in a little room behind the ſhop, cloſe to the fire; it is a ſort of a green-grocer's and a little chandler's ſhop; I told him we were come to ſearch the place for ſome livery clothes that were ſtolen; the proſecutor was with me.

What anſwer did Hobbs make?—I cannot ſay particularly; the drawers were behind where he ſat, and in thoſe drawers I found the things which I now produce; the bed was in the ſame room.

Did he make any objection to be ſearched?—No, I did not aſk him for any objection; he ſaid he had the things from the priſoner Giles.

When you told him you was come to ſearch for ſome livery clothes, what did he ſay?—I do not remember that he made any reply.

Before you found the things, did Hobbs ſay any thing about them?—No, nothing, becauſe it was after the things were found, that he ſaid he had them from Giles.

Are you clear in that?——I am quite clear. I went into the ſhop after the things were found, and I found this pocket-book which the proſecutor ſaid was his; it is not mentioned in the indictment: I found one livery coat, one fuſtian coat, one fuſtian waiſtcoat, one ſtriped flannel waiſtcoat, one pair of velveret breeches; theſe are all the things that I found; here is a coat that belongs to the witneſs Hemmings, that I found alſo at Hobbs's; I did not take up the other priſoner, I know nothing of either of them before.

Mr. Knowlys. There were ſeveral lodgers in Hobbs's houſe?—Yes.

Hobbs always perſevered in the ſtory that he received the things from Giles?—Yes.

Court. Do you happen to know whether that room where the things was found, was occupied by Hobbs himſelf, or was let in lodgings to any body elſe?——My lord, there was a bed in it, and this man and his wife ſat there together, and a child was there, but I do not know whoſe child it was.

Court to Johnſon. When you went firſt into the houſe of Hobbs, and told him what you came to ſearch for, do you recollect whether he made any anſwer?—I do not recollect his making any reply; he looked rather aſtoniſhed and ſurpriſed; he did not ſay whoſe the things were, till they were found.

THOMAS SHACKELWELL ſworn.

I am a breeches-maker in Gray's-Inn-lane; a perſon brought a pair of breeches to me to alter; that was the priſoner Hobbs; he brought them on the 28th of February, between five and ſix in the afternoon; theſe are the breeches; he agreed to the price of the alteration.

Did you know him before?—Yes, ever ſince he went to ſchool.

Court to Jealous. What time was it you ſearched Hobbs's houſe?—I look upon it, it was about ſeven that evening.

Did he ſay how he came by them?—I underſtood he bought them, he did not ſay of whom.

THOMAS ROW ſworn.

I am now a foot-boy, I was a poſtillion when theſe things were ſtolen, I live now in Lincoln's-inn-fields, with Mr. Broderick, I lodged with theſe people at Hobbs's houſe in February laſt, I remember the afternoon of the 26th of February, I went out in the morning about ten, I returned about a quarter after ten, my room door was wide open.

Did you find any body in the room?——Nobody, I went to bed firſt.

Had you a light in the room?—Yes.

Who did you ſleep with?—With Benjamin Roſs; Durant and Hemmings ſlept in the other bed, I ſaw the things were gone off of the other bed, and I thought he was gone out of town, but I did not know, I had not been there ſince the morning; I ſaw the bed was naked, I did not know what was gone with the things, they uſually lay on the bed, I did not know but he might have taken them; Hemmings came up firſt after me, and he accuſed me of hiding the things, and playing the rogue with them; I had been at home about a quarter of an hour, I ſaw nobody but the man that let me in at the gates, his name is John Richardſon, he is here.

Where is this apartment that you four lodge in?——Over the ſtables.

Is it a ſeparate apartment?—Yes.

In a ſtable yard?——Yes.

Whoſe ſtable yard?——Mr. Shutt's.

Is it an inn yard?—It is a livery-ſtable.

How do you go up to this apartment?—Up the ſtairs.

Does that ſtair-caſe lead to any other apartment?——Yes, and the one oppoſite where the head hoſtler lodged, his name is Edward Froward, he is not here.

Who is Richardſon?——He is one of Mr. Shutt's men.

JOHN RICHARDSON ſworn.

I live in Mr. Shutt's yard, it is called George-yard, I know the apartment where the proſecutor and the other witneſſes lodged.

Do you remember Thomas Row coming home on the Sunday afternoon, the 26th of February?——No.

He ſays you opened the gate to him?—I do not know his name, I opened the gate between ten and eleven, and let the lad in, this is the lad I let in.

Who lived in the oppoſite chamber?—Our hoſtler.

Have you any buſineſs up that ſtair-caſe of a Sunday afternoon?—No, I have not, I was not that way that evening, I know nothing about the door, whether it was ſhut, or whether it was open.

Was your hoſtler at home that afternoon? ——Yes, till ſeven, then he went out, and came home about half after ten.

Did he come in before Row or after him?—After him.

Mr. Knowles. Do you know where the key of this room is kept uſually?——I really know nothing about the key.

Court. Were the gates of the yard ſhut on Sunday?——They are ſooner ſhut on Sunday afternoon than any other day, I believe they were ſhut between five and ſix.

Were the gates locked?—To the beſt of my knowledge they were, I ſaw the hoſtler haſp the gates, and I believe he locked them, but I do not know; I found the key in the ſame place I have found them this two years, in the ſtable; the gates were opened afterwards for a gentleman's ſervant, which was between eight and nine.

(The things depoſed to by Durant.)

Durant. I know the leather breeches, I bought them of my fellow ſervant, they were my maſter's, they are ſtained in hunting, I have had them theſe eighteen months, I can poſitively ſay theſe are the ſame; I know this waiſtcoat, I believe this to be mine, it being with the reſt of the things, it was new laſt July; the livery coat I know by the buttons being remarkable, it is like this I have on, I can ſwear poſitively it is my coat; I never found my ſhirts, a ten pounds note (which I loſt) and the money, but here is the pocket book, and here is a man's name that I can ſwear to in it.

Court. How came that book not to be put into the indictment?—It was a miſtake.

Mr. Knowles. It is not in the indictment.

Court. Look at the book?—The paper were all taken away, I know the book, I am quite ſure of it.

How long have your had it?——I think theſe ſeven or eight years.

Court. Where was the pocket book found?—In Hobbs's ſhop. (The book handed up to the Court.) There was a pencil in the book I loſt, and there is a pencil in that book, there were no knives or ſciſſars.

Do you know the pencil?——No otherwiſe than being with the book.

What ſort of pencil was that that was in your pocket book?—A ſlate-pencil in a tin caſe.

Court to Hemming. Is that your coat? —Yes, I have had it ten or eleven months, there is a hole in the ſleeve of it, it was laying on the bed.

Jealous. This coat was one of the things found in Hobbs's drawers; I heard Giles confeſs the robbery before Hobbs, but I never do tell without I am aſked.

Were you preſent when Giles was examined?—Yes.

Was there any threats or promiſes made uſe of to induce him to confeſs the truth? ——None at all, Hobbs ſtood cloſe to him at the ſame time.

Was the examination taken in writing? —Yes, I believe my name is to it.

Look at that, is that the examination that was taken in your preſence?—Yes.

Did you ſee it ſigned by the Magiſtrate, and the priſoner?—Yes.

Was the priſoner examined upon oath? ——No.

(Read.)

"Signed, Henry Giles, (taken before me, the day and year before written, W. Addington; witneſs, Charles Jealous) who ſays, he has been a gentleman's ſervant, and is at preſent out of place, and lodges at Mr. Wolley's, a ſhovel-maker, in Vine-ſtreet, Hatton-wall; and that Thomas Hobbs has frequently called upon him, and inticed him to get the things to make money of; and that among other robberies on Sunday the 26th of February, he went went up a ſtair-caſe into a room in George-yard, and ſtole a pair of leather breeches, and the quantity of wearing apparel now produced."

Hobbs was preſent at this examination of Giles?——Yes.

What did he ſay to this charge?——He ſaid he did not ſteal them, but that Giles ſtole them.

Priſoner Hobbs. I wiſh to leave my caſe to my counſel.

PRISONER GILES's DEFENCE.

Pleaſe your Lordſhip, he uſed to come to my maſter's houſe where I worked, and uſed to want me to go out every night.

The Priſoner Hobbs called two witneſſes to his character.

THOMAS HOBBS }
HENRY GILES, } GUILTY,
Of ſtealing only.

Court. As I mean to make a diſtinction between the puniſhment of theſe priſoners, I will paſs ſentence againſt them, that the diſtinction may appear to the audience: the ſituation in which you both ſtand is that of having committed a felony, under circumſtances, which if clearly proved would have affected your lives, and in ſuch a ſituation it would be improper for either of you to go at large; therefore it appears to the Court to be right that both of you ſhould be ſent out of this country: but as you appear to ſtand in a different ſituation with reſpect to the degree of your guilt; as you, Thomas Hobbs appear to have been the principal actor in this buſineſs, and to have ſeduced the other young man, and made him your inſtrument: the ſentence of the Court, therefore, is, that you, Henry Giles, be tranſported beyond the ſeas, for the term of ſeven years, to ſuch place as his Majeſty by the advice of his Privy Council ſhall think fit to direct and appoint; and that you, Thomas Hobbs, be tranſported for the like term of ſeven years to Africa.

322. MARY PARKER was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of John Hickman, about the hour of eleven in the night, on the 19th day of April laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, two muſlin gowns and coats, value 40s. a cotton gown, value 10s. three cotton frocks, value 4s. a callico bed-gown, value 2s. four pair of cotton pockets, value 4s. eleven ſhirts, value 3l. one ſhift, value 2s. and one diaper clout, value 6d. his property.

MARY HICKMAN ſworn.

I am wife of John Hickman, I live in Duke-ſtreet, Bloomſbury. I take in waſhing; I was waſhing on Wedneſday laſt, till ten at night, I carried up the things and hung them on the line in the garret; I was not gone to bed, when the priſoner was taken, there was an alarm of thieves, I ran up in my hurry, and another witneſs who is here, and his lodger, he run up alſo; then when I was going up two pair of ſtairs I met Mr. Headland and the priſoner on the ſtairs, I knew her again, ſhe had no property about her, I went up ſtairs to ſee how my things were, all my ſhirts and frocks were laying about, and ſome in a heap in a corner, I came down again and I fetched a conſtable.

——— HEADLAND ſworn.

I lodge in his houſe, I had been out, and this little boy had been in to my wife to light a candle, I came in about half paſt ten, the little boy run down to me, and ſaid, there was ſomebody in the garret, I went up ſtairs, and I ſtood and called twice at the bottom of the garret ſtairs before I went up, there was no anſwer; I went up ſtairs, and ſaw the linen lay on the ſtairs, I went into the garret, and ſaw ſome things lay about the room, and ſome things in a heap at one corner, I turned about and ſaw the priſoner in the room, in one corner to the right hand, ſhe did not lodge in the houſe; I knew her, ſhe had lived with Mr. Hickman before, I aſked her what ſhe was at, and ſhe gave me no anſwer; I ſaid to her, Molly, what do you mean to come here to rob your miſtreſs again, and I ſaid, come, bundle out of the room; ſhe ſet off to come out of the room, and ſhe ſtooped to put her ſhoes on which were off, I ſtood by the door and caught hold of her gown tail, and ſhe aſked me in the paſſage to let her go out, I told her no.

Court to Hickman. Had you hung up your things?—I hung up every one of them.

Where did you put the two muſlin gowns, and the cotton gowns, and the three frocks, and the bed-gown, the three pair of cotton ſtockings, the ſhirts, the ſhift, and the clout?—They were all hanging on the lines in the ſame garret; they were the clothes of different people that I waſh for.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was not in the garret; I went to ſpeak to the gentlewoman that lodged in the two pair of ſtairs, to aſk a perſon to give me a character; ſhe was not at home.

Court to Proſecutrix. Had you faſtened your garret-door?——Yes; I had the key in my parlour.

What, did you lock the door?—Oh yes! I locked it myſelf, and hung the key in my parlour; when I came up, the door was ſtanding wide open; it was wrenched open.

What marks were there upon the door of its having been wrenched open?——I do not know.

Perhaps it was ſlipped back, and an old lock?——No, no, no, no! I am too well uſed to it for that, it is not a bad lock.

There were no marks of violence on the door?—I cannot tell.

What does the bolt of the lock ſhut into?——Into a great iron ſtaple.

In what condition was that ſtaple?—It was in the ſame place.

How had the lock been got out of that ſtaple?——By two great nails.

Jury. Have you the key of the lock with you?—No.

Court. Did you obſerve whether the bolt of the lock, when you came up ſtairs, was ſhut or puſhed back?—It was puſhed quite level to the door.

SAMUEL ABBOTT ſworn.

The proſecutrix came and called me up to take charge of the priſoner; I went, and took her in cuſtody; the proſecutrix took me up to the garret; when I came up the garret ſtairs, there lay ſome ſhirts and ſome linen, then ſhe took me into the garret door; the proſecutrix gave me theſe two nails.

Proſecutrix. I ſaw the priſoner come down ſtairs with theſe nails in her hand, and when ſhe put on her ſhoes, ſhe dropped them beſide her ſhoes in the paſſage.

Did you ſee her drop them?—No, I ſaw them in her hand.

Who ſaw her drop them?—My ſervant, her name is Nanny; ſhe is not here.

Court. How do you know that ſhe did this with theſe two nails?—She could not get it open with any thing elſe.

Yes ſhe might, with a falſe key?—Oh, no, no.

Priſoner. I never ſaw the nails till they were fetched out of the parlour from Mr. Hickman to give to the conſtable.

Have you any friends or witneſſes?—I have none in London.

GUILTY,

Of ſtealing, but not of the burglary.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

323. EDWARD GRIFFITHS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting James Ogden, Eſq. on the King's highway, on the 26th day of January laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, one watch with an inſide caſe made of baſe metal, and an outſide caſe made of tortoiſeſhell, value 40s. and a cornelian ſeal, ſet in ſilver, value 1s. his property.

JAMES OGDEN ſworn.

About a quarter paſt one, on the 22d of January laſt, I think, to the beſt of my recollection, I was attacked by the priſoner in Charlotte Buildings, by Gray's-Inn-lane, and two men; the priſoner and another met me, one was behind; they ruſhed upon me immediately, I did not perceive from what quarter they came; the priſoner ſeized me by the collar, and held me up under the arms, and the other took hold of my collar on the left hand, and one on the right, and the priſoner was the man who demanded my watch and my money; Griffiths made three pulls at my watch before he got it out; when he had got it out, I ſaid, it is an old companion of mine, and I ſhould be very ſorry to loſe it, and I attempted to get it from him again; he d—nd my eyes, and ſaid, none of your jokes, and hit me three clouts on the head; he demanded what money I had; I told him I had none, in conſequence of that he rubbed his hands up my thighs; I had a pair of leather breeches on, and the pockets were behind, or elſe I had eighteen guineas and a half in my pocket; and he ſaid to his other two companions, d—n his eyes, he has no money, come along; and they on each ſide cleared my pockets of the papers I had, which were of no ſervice to them; they then went up a narrow paſſage, I thought I would watch them; and one of them turned back, and ſaid, d——n my eyes, if I attempted to come back, he would ſtab me; he had a cut-and-thruſt ſword, which he held to me all the time; I ſaid, I do not mind you much now I have got nine or ten yards from you, and I think I can run as faſt as you; I ran to the door oppoſite, and they all ran off: I then ran immediately into Gray's-Inn-lane, and called, watch! The watchman came immediately; I told him I had been robbed, and gave him a deſcription of the men; he went with me to look for them, and two days after Griffiths was taken; I went to a public houſe in Middle-row, there were nine or ten people there; the watchman deſired me to look round, and ſee if there was ever a perſon that I knew there, and I immediately picked out the priſoner.

What ſort of a night was it?——It was a fine evening, it was directly under a lamp, and I ſaw his face diſtinctly, ſo much ſo, that I knew him the moment I ſaw him by day-light.

How long might he be with you?——About three minutes; he was in front of me; I obſerved his face diſtinctly at the time.

Have you any doubt whether he is the man that robbed you, or not?—I have not a doubt; and when I firſt ſaw him, I did not wiſh to ſwear to him, if I could have got him to have given up my things, as it would be attended with ſo much inconvenience to me; I am come all the way from Carliſle now.

Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner's Counſel. Where was this place where it happened?——In Charlotte Buildings.

Was that in your way home?—No.

Were you perfectly ſober at that time in the morning?—As perfectly as I am now.

Have you always perſevered in giving the ſame account of the knowledge of that man's perſon, that you have now given, on your oath?—I think I have.

I ſhould think, if you had been previouſly ſworn as to that man, and did take your oath in the ſame manner in which you have now done, that you muſt be ſure of it?—I have always perſevered in the ſame ſtory that I have now related, to the beſt of my knowledge.

How often was this man examined before the Juſtice?——Only once.

Are you as ſure that he was only examined once before the Juſtice, as you are ſure of what you have now ſworn?—I am certain.

Are you equally ſure of one as the other?—I am perfectly ſure that he was up there twice.

Will you tell me, Sir, what was the reaſon, if you ſwore as poſitively at the firſt examination as now, that he was not committed the firſt time?—He was committed the firſt time I ſwore to him, fully committed.

What day of the month was it that you was firſt before the Juſtice?—That I cannot tell, I never paid any attention to it.

Did you never point out another man to the watchman, and ſay that he was one of thoſe that robbed you, which the watchman denied?—Never in my life.

Was there no trying on of two hats before the Juſtice;—Yes; but I fixed on the man before, and ſaid the hat he had on was not the hat he had on when he robbed me, and they went to his lodgings, and fetched the other.

What was the reaſon, if you was ſo poſitive of him the firſt time you ſaw him, that you you ſhould deſire to ſee him with another hat?—I did not deſire it.

Was there no ſuch thing as trying on different coats, that you might know him?——There was no ſuch thing paſſed.

What kind of watch did you loſe?——A tortoiſeſhell caſe watch, a metal watch.

Did not you ſwear at firſt, when you was robbed, that you was robbed of a gold watch, and not of a metal watch?—No, I never did.

Were you but one time before the Juſtice, or more?——I cannot charge my memory with it.

Were you called twice to make oath of this circumſtance before the Juſtice, or only once?—I was called twice, but did not ſwear poſitively to him the firſt time.

How came it that you did not ſwear poſitively to him the firſt time?—The reaſon is, I wanted to get my watch and my papers; if he would have given me the papers, I would have given him the watch.

Did you, the firſt time you was examined with reſpect to this man, know whether he was the man, or not?—Yes, I did; I never was aſked poſitively whether I knew him or not, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Will you take upon yourſelf to ſwear, that upon the firſt examination you was not aſked poſitively whether that was the man, or no?—Yes, I was aſked whether he was the man, and I told the magiſtrate he was the man; and I told the Magiſtrate why I did not wiſh to ſwear poſitively to him.

Was not your reaſon for not ſwearing to him the firſt time before the Juſtice, that you did not chuſe to do it till you had ſeen the watchman?——No, I did not wiſh to ſwear to him; I ſaid before the Magiſtrate, I wiſh to ſee the watchman, to ſee if I could get my watch and papers again.

Did you, or did you not, before you ſaw the watchman, ſwear poſitively to him?—I did not.

Did you or not, at the ſecond examination, go any further than to ſay that you believed he was the man?—I ſwore poſitively that he was the man.

Did you ſwear that?—Yes.

Was this man ſearched in your preſence?—I do not know.

Did you go to his lodgings?—No, Sir, I did not; I never ſaw him before that night.

Court. The reaſon why you was not deſirous of ſwearing to this man, was the great inconvenience?—Yes; if I could have got my papers, I would not have proſecuted him at all.

DANIEL SELLON SNUGGS ſworn.

I am a watchman; on the 22d of January, at a quarter paſt one in the morning, to the beſt of my knowledge, I was going my rounds, and going up a court, called Charlotte Buildings, I ſaw three men ſtanding together againſt a wall; I ſaid nothing to them, nor they to me, and I went through the court into Bell-court, Gray's-Inn-lane, and I heard ſomebody cry watch! watch!

How long was it after you ſaw theſe men?—In as little time as I have been in court now, it was not two minutes; then I ſaid, who calls watch, and I ſaw the proſecutor; he ſaid he had juſt been robbed by three men of his watch and pocket-book; he deſcribed the men; I told him I had juſt paſſed them, I told him I knew one of them by name; I had ſeen the others before; the next day I went to the proſecutor, and we went up to Sir Sampſon Wright's to give information, and in two days after the priſoner was taken; he was one of the three men that I ſaw; the proſecutor appeared at the Juſtice's, and made affidavit that that was the man.

Was you at the firſt examination before the Juſtice?——Yes, I was.

Did the proſecutor ſwear to the man then?——Yes.

Priſoner. The witneſs was not there the firſt time.

Court. You ſaw the three men that were ſtanding there?——Yes.

Was the priſoner one of them, or not?——Yes, I am very clear he was; I knew him by ſight before.

Was he the man whoſe name you knew?—Yes; I knew his name, I have ſeen him in my beat a hundred and five hundred times; I have frequently called the priſoner up, when he lodged in Bell-court.

How came you not to queſtion theſe three men when you ſaw them there at that unſeaſonable hour in the morning?——I did not ſay any thing to them.

Why not?—Becauſe on a Saturday night people ſit up very late.

Do not you know it is a part of your duty, when you ſee two or three men in company, lurking together, to diſperſe them, and ſend them home?—Yes, we often do it; but it was Saturday night; there is a public houſe, called the Footman in Waiting, that is open very late, I thought they might come from there.

How long have you been a watchman?—Between two and three years.

I hope, if you continue, that you will learn to know that it is your duty to queſtion all ſuſpicious people, and if they give ſuſpicious anſwers, to apprehend them.—I have been knocked down twenty times in my time.

You muſt take care to have proper aſſiſtance; but it is your buſineſs to diſcharge your duty; if you are afraid, others muſt be got, who are not.

Mr. Knowlys. When this happened, you told this gentleman that you knew the name of one of theſe three?—Yes.

Did it happen that this gentleman thought while he was with you that evening, that he ſaw one of the men that robbed him?——He ſaid he ſhould know them if he ſaw them again.

Did not he ſay to you, pointing to ſome men that were going by, there goes one of the men?——I do not remember that, indeed.

Were you at the apprehending of this man?—Not at the taking of him.

Did the gentleman tell you what his watch was?——He ſaid it was a valuable watch, and his pocket-book was a great loſs to him.

Did he ſay it was a gold watch?—I cannot ſay.

Did he or did he not ſay it was a gold watch?——I do not remember that he did; I believe he ſaid it was a valuable watch, or ſomething to that purpoſe; I was not by when the priſoner was ſearched.

Have you ever been turned away from any pariſh where you have been a watchman?—I never was a watchman any where but where I am now.

Do you know the name of the landlord of the public houſe in this court?——I do not know.

Is he here?——I ſaw him in the yard.

Who apprehended the priſoner?——One of the name of Meecham.

Did not you ſay before the Juſtice, that that perſon, who was one of the three, ſpoke to you?——The priſoner did ſpeak to me that night; I ſaw him about an hour before; he ſaid, how do you do, watchman? or ſomething of that ſort.

Were you there when the hats were fitted upon him?———No.

GEORGE MEECHAM ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner at No. 6, Tennis-court, Holborn, at his lodgings; I ſearched his lodgings in the three-pair-of-ſtairs room, and I found nothing. The priſoner made his eſcape once out of the back window; I took him in the entry, without a coat.

What hour?—Between twelve and one in the day, on Wedneſday; he appeared to have been in bed, or ſhifting himſelf; his clothes were off; he had his breeches and ſtockings and ſhoes on.

Mr. Knowlys. You do not know that he eſcaped, only what was told you?——No.

Then why did you ſtate it; did not he tell you he was the man you was looking for?——No, Sir, to my knowledge he did not.

Do you ſwear he did not?—I do ſwear ſo.

When he was taken to the alehouſe, how many hats were tried upon him?—I believe there might be two hats; the gentleman ſaid he ſhould know him with or without the hats; the two coats were found.

Court. Here is only one examination returned, and that ſays that the proſecutor firmly and poſitively believes the man named Griffiths was the man that robbed him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

On the 31ſt of January laſt, I was at the public houſe at the bottom of this court, with ſome other company; I met the watchman, and wiſhed him a good night; the next morning I went to the public houſe, and I was told the officers were in purſuit of me, and I told the landlord where I lived.

GUILTY, Death.

324. GEORGE WOODWARD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th day of April laſt, two black geldings, value 10l. and one brown gelding, value 5l. and one mare of a cheſnut colour, value 5l. the property of George Henry Cavendiſh, Eſq. commonly called the Right Honourable Lord George Henry Cavendiſh.

(The Indictment opened by Mr. Garrow, and the Caſe by Mr. Silveſter.)

(The Witneſſes examined apart, by deſire of Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner's Counſel.)

THOMAS CHRISTMAS ſworn.

I am groom to Lord George Henry Cavendiſh; his ſeat is at Lattermas, near Cheſham, Bucks. On the night between the 10th and 11th of April, he loſt a brown gelding, a cheſnut mare, and two black galloways; the pales were broke down, and the horſes appeared to have been taken out through that place.

When did you miſs them?——On the Tueſday morning, between ſix and ſeven.

Did you ſearch in the park?—Yes; there was a ſpur found in the morning, and a ſhoe in the afternoon, a bar ſhoe; the ſhoe was found in a little field on the other ſide of the park, it might be thirty or forty yards from the park pales; the ſpur was found in the park; the hedge of the field was broke next the highway: in conſequence of this I came to town; I have ſeen the horſes ſince, three of the horſes were brought to me by Macmanus; one was brought on the Wedneſday, and two on the Thurſday; they were my Lord's horſes, I knew them again.

Are you perfectly ſure that they were Lord George's property?——Yes.

Have you got the ſpur and the ſhoe?—I ſhall produce them.

(The Shoe and Spur produced.)

Which hoof did the ſhoe belong to?—The off foot.

What diſtance is Lord George's park from London?—About twenty-five miles from Tyburn.

Mr. Knowlys, Priſoner's Counſel. How large is my Lord's park?——Between two and three miles round, I believe.

You are his groom, not his game-keeper?——I am his groom.

You are to mind the ſtables?——Yes; I do not take care of the horſes that are in the park.

Court. What field was the ſhoe found in?——It belonged to Mr. Curtis; it joins to the park and to the road that goes to Cheſham; the paling was broke, and the hedge of the field.

WILLIAM BROWN ſworn.

My father keeps the ſign of the goat at Cheyney, about a mile from lord George's park.

Look at the priſoner, did you ever ſee him before?——Yes.

When?—The 10th of April.

Where?—At the goat at Cheney.

Was he on horſeback, or on foot?—He hung his horſe to the pales before the door.

What kind of a horſe had he?—It was a cheſnut horſe, with three white legs, to the beſt of my remembrance, it was duſk when he came.

Are you ſure that is the man that was at the houſe?—Yes.

How long did he ſtay there ?——About an hour, or an hour and half, or it might be two hours, I cannot ſay, becauſe I did not take notice, he ſaid but little, there was a perſon aſked him if he intended to ſleep there that night, and he ſaid no, he ſhould be fifty miles off, if he had good luck.

Mr. Knowlys. Did you know Eſquire Woodward, at Goldhill ?——Yes.

How far is Mr. Woodward's houſe from Cheyney ?——About five miles.

Do not you know that gentleman is the father of that young man at the bar ?——I do not know.

Is not it the common underſtanding of the country ?——I heard it was ſo.

Have you any reaſon to doubt it ?—No.

Court. What time of the evening was it that the priſoner was at the goat ?—It was nine o'clock that he came, he ſtaid till between ten and eleven.

Where was his horſe, during that time ?—In the ſtable.

Did you attend the ſtable ?—Yes, I had the horſe in myſelf; the priſoner had two pints of beer, two-penny-worth of bread and cheeſe, and two glaſſes of gin.

THOMAS BECKLEY ſworn.

I am a farrier; I live at Two Waters, that is about four or five miles from Lord George Cavendiſh's.

Court. Look at the priſoner at the bar and tell us if you have ſeen him ?—(Goes to him) I cannot ſay poſitively, that I ever ſaw him before.

Do you remember ſeeing a cheſnut horſe on the eighth of April ?—Yes, at the Bell Inn at Two Waters, I was ſent for to ſhoe the horſe.

Do you remember any of his marks ?—He was a bay horſe with white legs.

How many white legs ?—Three or four they were bar ſhoes, I marked the ſhoes with a B, this is one of the ſhoes, this is the off foot, I ſaw the horſe ſince at near Bow Street.

Who was with you ?——Chriſtmas.

Is the horſe that Chriſtmas ſhewed you, the ſame horſe that you ſhod at Two Waters ? ——The very ſame.

What time did you ſhoe him ?—I fetched him to the ſhop at five in the morning, and returned him before ſeven.

What ſhoes had that horſe on that you ſaw at Covent Garden ?—He had the fellow ſhoe of this, on the near foot, but he had been ſhod afterwards on the off fore foot by ſomebody elſe.

JOHN MANLEY ſworn.

I am a turnpike man at Hayes, on the Tueſday morning the 11th of April, I ſaw a man go through the turnpike with four horſes, and the one he rode on making five.

Did you obſerve the horſe he was on ?—Not in particular.

Did you obſerve the man to know him again ?—I do not know I ſhould know him.

Look at him ?——I am not poſitive that is the man.

What do you think ?——I am not poſitive that is the man.

Did you give him a ticket ?——Yes.

Court. How far is your turnpike from Lord George Cavendiſh's ?—Four miles on this ſide, the letter R was the ticket for that day.

Mr. Knowlys. Do you know one Williams a horſe dealer ?—No, I cannot ſay I do.

ROBERT WOOLFORD.

How old are you ?—Going on fourteen.

Do you know the nature of an oath ?—No Sir, I cannot ſay I do.

Do you know that it is a very wrong thing to tell a lie ?——Yes.

Would you think it a right thing, or a wrong one to tell a lie upon oath ?——A wrong one.

What do you think would happen to you when you die, if you were to ſwear that which was falſe ?—I do not know.

Have you never heard what would become of you ?——No.

Have you never heard where wicked people go to when they die ?——To hell.

Then if it is wicked to tell a lie, and ſwear falſe, where would a man go to that did ſwear falſe ?—He would go to hell.

Court. I think the boy has given a ſounds proof of diſcretion, as thoſe that come here with a ſtory in three words to tell you what will become of them ; but he is very near the age, when the law preſumes diſcretion.

ROBERT WOOLFORD ſworn.

I live at Mr. Lewis's, the King's Arms, Little Chelſea; on Tueſday morning the 11th of this month, I remember a perſon came to our houſe between ſix and ſeven, I was in bed, I came down and opened the gate.

Who did you find there?—There was a young man with five horſes, he rode one of them, and led the other four.

What ſort of a horſe did he ride?——It was a cheſnut horſe, a very tall horſe; he took the horſes into the ſtables, he came into the kitchen where my miſtreſs was lighting the fire, from thence he went to the tap room and pulled off his boots; and told me to clean them; he had one ſpur on, and he pulled that off, and hung it up in the kitchen; he ordered me to buy him a pair of ſtockings, and he put them on, and put his ſlippers on, and went to the barber's, and ſtaid there till breakfaſt time; the horſes were in the ſtable.

How long did they all continue there?—They were there for three days; over night a perſon brought two more, and took away one of his, that was a little black horſe; the priſoner laid there one night.

Do you remember any thing particular of the cheſnut horſe?—I took him to the farrier's to have one bar ſhoe put on his fore foot, I cannot ſay which foot, I believe I took him on the Tueſday afternoon, he wanted a ſhoe when he came in, I had no converſation with the man.

Should you know the man again?—Yes, I believe I ſhould, the juſtice's men took him into cuſtody, and one of them took the ſpur away, it was hanging in the ſame place in the window.

Was the ſpur they took the ſame he took off and hung up?—Yes.

Is that the perſon that came with the horſes?——Yes.

Are you quite ſure about it?——Yes.

Did you take the other horſes to be ſhod?—Yes, the black one, and the cheſnut one, they wanted four each.

Mr. Knowlys. Did any body come with the perſon that brought the horſes?-No, Sir.

HENRY BUTLER ſworn.

I am a blackſmith; on Tueſday, the 11th of April, I ſhod a cheſnut mare.

What ſhoes did you put on?—Four on the black one; there was a tall cheſnut horſe with three white legs, on that I put one bar ſhoe, I know the horſe, I have ſeen him ſince, I ſaw him in Bow-ſtreet, he was ſhewn to me by one of the gentlemen of Bow-ſtreet.

Court. Were the horſes you ſaw that Macmanus ſhewed you, the ſame that you ſhod?—Yes.

PATRICK MACMANUS ſworn.

I went to Chelſea, to Mr. Lewis's, the Kings Arms, and aſked for Mr. Lewis; I aſked him if any horſes were brought into his ſtables on Tueſday morning? ſays I, where is the man that brought them, he ſaid he is in the ſtable now, I went there and I found the priſoner; I ſaid Sir, are theſe your horſes? he ſaid yes; I ſaid, where did you get them? he ſaid, I bought them at a fair in the country; ſo I had a hand bill, and I looked at it, and picked out three of my lord's horſes; the priſoner was taken into the houſe, I locked the ſtable door and went in; I continned there that night, and the next morning ſome more of the people of Bow-ſtreet came, and me and another man went home; I delivered the three horſes that I picked out to Chriſtmas.

Did you find any thing elſe in the houſe?—No Sir: after this I came home and ſaw my lord's ſervants, they ſhewed me an odd ſpur, and I recollected that I had ſeen ſuch a ſpur in Lewis's kitchen, and I deſired Shallard, who went down, to take care of it; and I ſhewed the tall cheſnut horſe to ſeveral people that came from the country, he is at Froome's livery ſtables in Covent Garden.

Mr. Knowlys. He named the horſes as his own, and ſaid he had bought them.

JOHN SHALLARD ſworn.

I went to Chelſea, and I found this ſpur in Mr. Lewis's kitchen, hanging up at the further end of the kithen.

ARCHIBALD RUTHWIN ſworn.

I ſearched the priſoner, I found upon him a ticket of the turnpike gate from Uxbridge to Kennington, and likewiſe a leading bridle in his pocket. (Shewn to Manley.) That is the ticket, and the letter for the day that I gave that morning.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

You had information of a black galloway being to be found ſomewhere?——Yes, I received a letter by the penny poſt. I found it at the Leaping-bar, on the Surry ſide of Black-friars bridge; my letter was dated on Tueſday the 18th of April; I ſhewed that horſe to Chriſtmas; at the White-hart, in Hart-ſtreet, Covent-garden; I delivered the horſe to Chriſtmas.

Court to Chriſtmas. Was that horſe one of Lord George Cavendiſh's?——Yes.

Was it loſt on that night?——Yes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord I have employed counſel.

Mr. Knowlys. It is not in my power to make a ſpeech to the jury for you; if you think you can relate any facts, you may.

Priſoner. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury. I was at Gainſborough fair on Saturday preceding the Monday evening, when theſe horſes were ſtolen from thence; I went to London on a horſe I then had, and from London I went to a place called Bywaters; at AyleſburyI bought two long tailed horſes, which have ſince been owned, for which I paid eighteen guineas, and I bought a cheſnut horſe for ſix guineas, he is foundered; Mr. Williams obſerved to me that he knew I had ſome connections in the New Foreſt, in Hampſhire, and that he could help me to ſome foreſt colts, he ſhould be at Hammerſham on the Monday evening, and he deſired me to meet him; accordingly I went to Two Waters, to Cheyney, and from thence to Hammerſham; he is, I find out now, a notorious horſe ſtealer; I had bought many of him before, but they never turned out in this way; I met him with only one horſe, I was ſurpriſed he had no more, he ſaid, I have ſome in the neighbourhood, and my horſe is almoſt tired; ſays he, if you will lend me your horſe, and one of your ſpurs, I ſhall overtake you; accordingly I proceeded on, and got as far as Hounſlow Heath, at the further end there his horſe was tired, and knocked up; I tied him to the gate and walked on to Shepherds-buſh, and there I met two gentlemen, one of whom I knew extremely well; and while we were in converſation, up came Williams with the horſes in hand; I told him he was tired, the horſes came up, I agreed for them, and I paid twenty-eight pounds (two ten pound notes, and the reſt in caſh;) he gave one of the gentlemen the notes to look at, for he could not read; after that he went about his buſineſs, I ſaw him no more; I found I was cheated in my horſes, one was broken winded, and the other horſe had an injury in one of his fore legs, ſo that he was not worth three guineas, the broken winded one was not worth two guineas and a half. This is all I have to ſay in my defence, Gentlemen, which I ſubmit to the Court.

JOHN CARPENTER ſworn.

I have known the priſoner fourteen or fifteen years.

Do you know his father?——I know his father and mother, he is of a reſpectable family, his father is a man of fortune, the priſoner was clerk to an attorney, he has acted in the capacity of an attorney for ſome years, I always underſtood that he was ſituated in Bedford, or near it, and acted as attorney, and had very good ſucceſs.

During the time you have known him, what has been the character he has borne?—Perſonally as to myſelf he has made aſſignments for me; and not only ſo, but I have entruſted him with part of my property, and he always has returned it with great fidelity.

Mr. Silveſter. What are you?——I am a man that lives independent of buſineſs, I live at Iſlington.

Have you been at Bedford lately?——No.

How long has he reſided at Bedford?—About three years; I have ſeen him ſeveral times, I thought he acted in the capacity of an attorney then.

BENJAMIN PIPER ſworn.

I have known him twelve or thirteen years, except within theſe eight or ten months paſt, ſince which time I have not ſeen him; he was articled to Mr. Champant, and he had chambers in Lincoln's-inn-ſquare; he has been at Ampthill, in Bedfordſhire, and was ſettled there.

You knew he was a man of a very reputable family?——I knew his mother before ſhe was married; his father was a man of independent fortune; there are ſeven more children, very reſpectable people.

Court. Did you ever know him in buſineſs, as a buyer and ſeller of horſes?——I cannot ſay I did.

JOSHUA BROOKS ſworn.

I have known him from his infancy; his father is a man of very reſpectable character and fortune, and a little kind of an acquaintance of mine; his father lives at Goldhill.

What has been the character of the young man?—I heard he was ſettled at Ampthill, as an Attorney, and very clever in his profeſſion.

SAMUEL FREDERICK ſworn.

I have known him about ſeven years; during the time I knew him, I looked upon him as an honeſt young man; he was a cuſtomer to me ſeven years ago; I am a peruke-maker and hair-dreſſer; I have not known any thing of him theſe four or five years.

JOHN GILL ſworn.

I have known the priſoner ever ſince he was a boy; I am in the wine buſineſs in the Strand; I know the priſoner was put to an Attorney; I knew him before that; this laſt year I cannot ſay what he was, but I always underſtood that he lived at Ampthill, and acted in the capacity of an Attorney; I never had the leaſt ſuſpicion of him, but as a ſtrictly honeſt man; I have often ſent him goods in our line, which were always very honourably paid, and I ſhould not be afraid to have truſted him with any quantity; I have known his family many years, they are people of great reputation.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

325. JAMES MAY was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Charles Argil, about the hour of one in the night, on the 13th day of January laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, 3300lb. weight of hempen cords, value 16l. 10s. his property.

EDWARD THOMPSON (a Black) ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Argil in Narrow-ſtreet, Limehouſe; he keeps a large warehouſe, a ſhip chandler, deals in cordage; the warehouſe and the dwelling-houſe is like one, you cannot go into the warehouſe without going into the dwelling-houſe; the warehouſe is near the water; there is an opening towards the water, the doors open fronting the water. The evening before the robbery, I ſecured the warehouſe at night; I am ſure I made the folding-doors towards the water faſt, and bolted them; the next morning, about five, I went to work, and ſtruck a light; I obſerved the door open, I looked round, and I went backwards, and there was a plank taken out of the back of the neceſſary.

Did that afford an opening ſufficient for any body to get in?——Yes.

Has the neceſſary a communication with the warehouſe?——Yes.

Was the warehouſe open or ſhut?——It was open, the folding-doors; I miſſed a quantity of rope, as near as I can tell, there was about two ton wanting, and ſix bundles of paper ſtuff.

Where did this plank lay?——I found it on the platform; that platform has a communication with the river; there were holes in the plank, which appeared to be made with a gimblet, and afterwards they took a knife and cut it, ſo as to get a ſtick in.

Was that hole ſufficient for a man to get in?——Yes.

Did you acquaint your maſter with this circumſtance?—As ſoon as ever I ſaw this, I acquainted my maſter.

Court. Do you happen to know how that plank was ſecured, whether it was nailed, or whether it was only laid down looſe in the neceſſary?—It was faſtened.

How?——Nailed.

When you ſaw it, did you look to ſee whether the nails were drawn?—They were forced out.

Were the nails whole in the plank when you ſaw it forced out?——Yes.

CHARLES ARGIL ſworn.

I deal in cordage; I live in Narrow-ſtreet, Limehouſe; I was alarmed by my ſervant that my houſe was robbed, on the 13th of January; I faſtened my doors; there was no man in the houſe but myſelf; I ſaw the doors faſt, and went to bed with my family; I did not get up till my man alarmed me; he ſaid, maſter, maſter, your houſe is robbed! My wife and me came down ſtairs; and when I came, I miſſed this rope and ſix bundles of paper ſtuff, and ſome junk; I obſerved the board laid there, and the board that belonged to the outſide of the warehouſe was put up by the carpenter, and never removed till it was broke off: this ſtick was found in the place, and they took and knocked another board through the neceſſary, and here is where it has been cut with a knife; they came through the neceſſary, and unbolted the door; the outſide plank and the inſide plank of the neceſſary were forced out.

Where does that outſide of the neceſſary look to?——The neceſſary is below in the warehouſe; the dwelling-houſe, warehouſe, and neceſſary communicate together.

Where does the back of the neceſſary look to?——It looks to the water.

How could they get at it from the place where you found the planks forced out?—There are ſtairs directly under it; upon thoſe ſtairs is built a little bit of platform, about three feet wide, and they ſtood on that. I ſent for William Elby; we went to Deptford, to the Ship upon the Redhouſe walk, and there we found one Paſſmore, a conſtable, and four men, the priſoner and three more.

Court. Was there any thing found on him?—Yes, this gimblet.

Did you compare that with the hole which you found in the platform?——Yes.

(A part of the Plank produced.)

Jury. There is nothing can be judged from that.

Did you go in ſearch of your property?—Yes.

Where did you go?—We went to Woolwich, to one Mrs. Bayley's.

Did you find all your property at Bayley's?—Yes; we found it all in a cellar, where there was candles and ſome tallow.

Have you ſubpœned Mr. and Mrs. Bayley?——No; ſhe came before the Juſtice, but ſhe went away without ſaying any thing about it.

JOSEPH PASSMORE ſworn.

On the 12th of January laſt I was out on my rounds, and I ſaw the priſoner Harvey, and three more together near the Water-gates in Deptford; that was about a quarter after eleven at night; I ſaw no more of him that night: about twelve the next morning, Mr. Argil came to me, and told me he had been robbed; it then ſtruck me theſe were the people; we went to Redhouſe wharf, we ſtopped to drink ſome beer in the fore room, and ſaw the priſoner at the bar and three more drinking in the taproom, Hagg, Marſhall and Harvey; I went out, and called Mr. Argil and Mr. Elby, and we went in and ſearched them, and found a gimblet on May; I then ſecured him, and we went to Woolwich, and in Mr. Bayley's cellar we found ſome rope.

Did Harvey, before the Juſtice, acknowlege this, and charge May?——Yes, he acknowledged himſelf to be guilty of this fact.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

I was with the laſt witneſs, when the property was found; the proſecutor ſaid he could ſwear to it.

JOHN HARVEY ſworn.

I was concerned in this robbery. Charles Lee bored holes with this gimblet, till we got this ſtick in, at Mr. Argil's; Haggs Marſhall, Lee, and myſelf got in, all but May; he ſtaid in the boat; we got the cordage through the door; we got the boats from Deptford to Limehouſe; we carried the cordage to Mrs. Bayley's; only May and me carried it to Mrs. Bayley's; we got three guineas and a half for this cordage; I confeſſed before the Juſtice; May was below ſtairs.

Court. How long had you been acquainted with May?——A very little time. We met at the Welch Harp houſe by Deptford-yard gate; we were all together there.

Where did you go to from thence?——Down to the Water-gates, and got a boat.

Do you remember ſeeing any thing of Paſſmore that night?—No.

Where did you go with the boat?—We took one from Limehouſe. This is the gimblet; May had the gimblet afterwards.

Did not you charge May with having been out another night?——Yes, another night, but I had forgot that.

When you had ſold the cordage, where did you go?——We walked up to Deptford; we all went to Woolwich; but two of us only ſold the ſtuff; we went to the Redhouſe about one or two o'clock.

What was you doing in the mean time?——We were drinking at Woolwich.

(The Cordage produced and depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

It was the evidence went to get it; I had nothing to do with it at all.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended to his Majeſty's mercy.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

326. DANIEL KEEFE was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Henry Clyatt on the king's highway, on the 1ſt day of April laſt, and putting him in corporal fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, a ſilver watch, value 40s. a metal watch chain, value 18d. and one key, value 1d. his property.

HENRY CLYATT ſworn.

On Saturday the firſt of April, I was robbed in the back lane by St. George's turnpike, at a quarter before nine at night; I was coming out of Moorfields to my father's in Stepney cauſeway; the priſoner was ſtanding up againſt the rails, towards the fields, and he let me go paſt him; he came after me, and took hold of my collar, and demanded my watch, I told him I had none, and he felt it in my fob, and he ſwore very bitterly, if I did not give it him, he would cut my throat; with that I took it out of my pocket, and there was ſomebody coming, and he ſaw them, and he took it out of my hand, and went gently along; I purſued him, I had a ſtick in my hand, and I knocked him down with my ſtick.

Had he any weapon?——Yes, he had a knife.

Did you ſee the knife?——Yes.

When did he ſhew the knife?——When he firſt demanded my money.

Was the knife open?——Yes.

What ſort of a knife was it?——A claſp knife; when I knocked him down, he got up again, and made towards the rope-ground, and I kept him off with my hand from going down the rope-ground; I kept calling out murder all the time.

Did any body come to your aſſiſtance?—Yes, John Cheeſeman; we took him into cuſtody, I ſaid he had got my watch, and we took him to the houſe oppoſite Juſtice Green's, and ſtaid there ſome time till the officers came to us to ſearch, and when they came, they found the watch in his right hand breeches pocket.

Did you ſee it found ?——Yes.

Was it your watch ?——Yes.

Are you ſure of that ?—Yes, the name is on the dial plate.

He did not make any uſe of the knife, or offer you any violence with it?—No, Sir, he promiſed he would not.

What became of the knife, when you knocked him down ?——I do not know.

Are you ſure he had the knife at firſt ?—Yes.

You did not find any knife upon him afterwards ?——No.

Have you the watch?——The conſtable has it.

Priſoner. He talks of my having a knife, and his ſeeing it, it was impoſſible to ſee, this was Saturday, the firſt of April, it was impoſſible to ſee, I could not ſee my hand, and I had no knife at all.

Proſecutor. I am ſure it was a knife, I ſaw it, I was cloſe under the lamp.

Priſoner. There is never a lamp in that place, I am ſure of that, becauſe it is very near my place of reſidence.

Was it moon-light, or dark ?—A very dark night.

JOHN CHEESEMAN ſworn.

I was in my own houſe, and hearing murder, I went out, and a gentleman ſaid, he was robbed; it was in Sun-tavern fields, Brick-lane.

Do you know a place, called Back-lane? —Yes, it is oppoſite to the Rope-grounds; I went out immediately, and this gentleman ſaid, I have been robbed of my watch, and this man has got my watch, he was cloſe to the man, but had not hold of him; I immediately caught hold of the perſon that had the watch; he immediately ſaid d—n your eyes let me alone, the watch is mine; Sir, ſays the proſecutor, it is my watch, and in the dial plate is Henry Clyatt, my name; we ſecured the priſoner, the priſoner made anſwer, and ſaid, d——n your eyes my name is Henry Clyatt, and let who dare touch the watch; I ſaid, then I will take you to the magiſtrate; and I took him to the office; before I got him down to the publick-houſe he denied his name, and ſaid his name was Daniel Keefe, and ſaid ſomebody had put the watch in his pocket.

Priſoner. I am afraid he is a man of very infamous character, as to any advantage he might take of me; I was a little in liquor; I never denied my name.

THOMAS COLE ſworn.

(The Watch produced, which the Witneſs took out of the Priſoner's pocket.)

This is the watch I took from the priſoner; I have had it ever ſince.

(Depoſed to by the Proſecutor.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My trial came very haſtily upon me, I did not expect it this afternoon; nobody is here now. I had been drinking with the proſecutor, and there were ſome women of the town, and as we were coming out, the proſecutor gave me his watch to take care of, and I had lent him three ſhillings and ſixpence, and he aſked me for his watch, and I ſaid I would not till he paid it; he tried to take it from me, but did not, and he tried to knock me down, but did not; and when he ſaw his efforts did not ſucceed, he ſung out that I had robbed him.

Proſecutor. This is a ſtory, and all falſe; I never was with him at a public houſe.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

327. JOSEPH YELLAND, otherwiſe HOLMAN, PHEBE HARRIS, and ELIZABETH YELLAND, were indicted, for that they, on the 11th of February laſt, one piece of falſe, feigned, and counterfeit money and coin, to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of the good, legal, and ſilver coin of this realm, called a ſhilling, falſely, deceitfully, feloniouſly, and traiterouſly did counterfeit and coin, againſt the duty of their allegiance, and againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, for coining a ſixpence.

(The Indictment opened by Mr. Silveſter, and the Caſe by Mr. Wilſon.)

(The Witneſſes examined ſeparate, at the deſire of Mr. Garrow, Priſoners' Counſel.)

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

Mr. Silveſter. In conſequence of an information, you went to a houſe, No. 19, in Swan-yard, Drury-lane?——I did.

What day was it?——I think it was on Saturday the 11th of February.

About what hour?—I ſhould ſuppoſe it near upon five in the afternoon.

When you came there, deſcribe what perſons you found there, and what things?—I went to the room up one pair of ſtairs; there is only one room on a floor; I ſaw the two women priſoners in the room; Mrs. Harris was in the middle of the room, facing the fire, and I think, if I recollect right, the other girl was upon her knees: after they were ſecured, we began to ſearch, and upon a kind of bureau, or cheſt of drawers, I ſaw a piece of get.

Court. That is the metal that fills up the ſort of gutter that communicates to the different moulds.

Clarke. In a drawer Macmanus ſearched, he took out a quantity of good ſhillings, which he gave me; they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; and a bed was turned up; Macmanus ſaw the woman approached to that; and there we found a quantity of counterfeit ſhillings; they are here; and in a little room like a cloſet, in the ſame room, I found all the implements compleat for coining.

Did that little room communicate with that room?——Yes.

Has that cloſet a door into any other place?—No communication only with that room: there I found a pair of flaſks, ſand, ſcowering paper, file, cork, and upon the mantlepiece there was this aqua fortis; there was a fire in the room, and charcoal on.

Was the whole apparatus for coining and finiſhing compleat there?——Clearly ſo: I have compared the good ſhillings and the bad ones together, and they agreed; from which I conclude, that from the good ſhillings counterfeits had been caſt.

How many good ſhillings are there?——Twenty-eight.

How many have you fitted?—I believe there is a dozen ſhillings and ſixpences.

Do they tally in ſuch a manner, as to enable you to pronounce that the bad ones were made from the good ones?——I have not a doubt of it, particularly as there is one ſixpence that I believe any body may ſee; one ſixpence has a hole in it, and the other has been caſt from it; I ſaw the two women there; and in about five minutes the man came in; we ſtopped him, according to our information. The things are all here in a box as they were found; (the things all produced) flaſks, ſand, a crucible which is broke, and facings.

Court. We have heard nothing of the crucible before?—I found the crucible by the fire-ſide.

Whereabout?—On the hearth, on the ſide of the grate where the fire was.

What fire was it?——Part charcoal, and part coal.

Mr. Wilſon. You ſaw no more than one crucible?——Yes, ſeveral.

How many?——I fancy there is pretty near half a dozen; there were ſeveral of them broke lay by the fire-ſide.

How many whole crucibles are there?—Here is one that has not been uſed, and one that has; every one of the crucibles were found by the fire-ſide; here is the get.

Mr. Garrow. Were the moulds ſet?—No, Sir.

They were in the ſtate you firſt produced them in, before you ſcrewed them together?——Yes; they were all in the box together.

Continuation of the Trial of Joſeph Yelland, Phebe Harris, and Elizabeth Yelland.

You ſaid the woman Yelland was upon her knees?——Yes.

Do you know what ſhe was doing?—I ſhould rather think ſhe was ſcouring the floor.

The other woman was ill, was not ſhe?—Yes.

Holman in fact enquired for his ſiſter?—I do not know that he did, till he was taken into cuſtody.

Did you know that they are brother and ſiſter?——I have heard they are.

Did you know Hardy before you took him?——No.

I take it for granted you ſearched the man?—I did not.

Did you ſee him ſearched?—I did not.

Court. How came you not to ſearch the man?——I ſhould ſuppoſe he was ſearched, but not by me.

Mr. Garrow. You did not find any pickle?——No, only aquafortis.

Is not pickle one of thoſe things which is neceſſary to put this into a ſtate of currency?——No, Sir; they are put into aquafortis, and by the different workings, it reduces its ſtrength.

Is this aquafortis in the ſtrong ſtate, or is it ſo reduced, ſo as to become a pickle?—It is in its ſtrong ſtate; they uſe the aquafortis alone; if a quantity of aquafortis is put into a pan, and by applying any thing to it, as it is put in, ſo it foments, and it reduces it, and from that it becomes a pickle.

Therefore, if I underſtand you right, when aquafortis is firſt uſed, it is not a pickle?—They uſe it without water; then they throw them into water afterwards, and that water is what they call pickle.

GEORGE MEECHAM ſworn.

Did you go to the houſe in Swan-yard, Drury-lane?——On Saturday the 11th of February I went with Mr. Clarke, Mr. Macmanus, and Mr. Andrews, to the houſe No. 19, in Swan-yard, near the New Church in the Strand, between five and ſix; I went up one pair of ſtairs; the door was locked inſide, I ſhoved againſt it, and it came open, I broke it open at once, and the two priſoners at the bar were ſtanding at the fire-ſide, and ſcreamed out very much, and upon that I perceived ſomething drop; the man came in about five minutes afterwards; I went in firſt, and Mr. Andrews came in next, and Mr. Macmanus and Mr. Clarke; I heard ſomething drop, and there was a light got, a candle was lighted, it was between light and dark, it was about half after five; and upon the ground where the two women priſoners ſtood, I picked up theſe two ſixpences, one half finiſhed, and one not quite finiſhed, and a piece of blacking, and ſome cork, and a quantity of ſcouring paper, and ſome broken crucibles, and a pair of nippers; they were all cloſe together ſpread upon the ground, and a quantity of dirt and ſand and rubbiſh on the floor.

Do you know what that blacking and cork and things could be uſed for?—Mr. Clarke can inform you beſt; I do not underſtand it.

You do not know what that was that dropped?——I do not; I found the two ſixpences juſt between the two women; they were taken into cuſtody, and carried to Bow-ſtreet; I ſaw ſome files on the table, and a little box, and ſome things Mr. Clarke ſaw in the cloſet like.

When the man came in, was he immediately taken into cuſtody?——He was, by order of Mr. Clarke; he gave no account of himſelf, how he came there, or who he belonged to.

Was he ſearched?——I do not know; I know nothing about him.

(The two Sixpences handed to the Court and Jury.)

Mr. Garrow. Did you try the door firſt, before you puſhed it open?——No, I did not; I opened it with a good bang.

How long might it be till Mr. Clarke came up?—A minute after.

Then they were ſtanding by the fire-ſide?——Yes.

And they continued in the ſame poſition till he came in?——Yes; then he ordered them be ſearched.

Holman was taken directly before he had any time to give any account of himſelf?—Yes.

Did ou ſee any body on their knees in the room?——Not to my knowledge, I did not obſerve.

Were neither of the women on their knees?—No, Sir; the women were at the fire-ſide.

Did you take Mr. Hardy with you?——No, Sir; I did not.

Where did you leave him when you went? I left him by the New Church.

He knew you was going there?—I imagine he did.

How long have you known Mr. Hardy?——No great while.

How long before you went to this houſe?—About a fortnight.

How long?——About a fortnight.

Do you know what buſineſs he follows?——He kept a houſe in Drury-lane, a green-grocer's, ſold oranges; the way I came to know him, I went to ſerve a warrant upon him.

WILLIAM ANDREWS ſworn.

I went with Clarke and Meecham to this houſe; when I went into the room, there were two women near the fire; Meecham ſaid he ſaw ſomething drop; I went and picked it up, it was a bad ſixpence; preſently he found another; they moved towards the window, and Harris took a key out of her pocket, and went to the bureau, and took this crucible out with the contents, and gave it to the other woman; ſhe put it out of the window upon a place to put garden pots on; I immediately took it in with the contents; I found it all as it is; in about five minutes the man came in; and there was ſcouring-paper and other things.

Mr. Garrow. Who ſearched the man?—I cannot ſay, I did not obſerve it.

How long have you known Mr. Hardy?——Not long; I ſerved a warrant upon him firſt.

You and Meecham went together?——I believe it was Meecham.

How long is that ago?——I cannot ſay.

What buſineſs did he follow?——He kept a green-grocer's ſhop.

Does he keep it now?——I do not believe he does.

That is the only trade you have known him to follow?—Yes.

PATRICK

PATRICK MACMANUS ſworn.

I went with the other officers to this room, and I found a quantity of ſilver in a drawer, that Mr. Clarke ſaid was good ſilver; he ſaid they were the patterns for caſting, I gave them to Mr. Clark, and in ſome little time after, I took notice the woman went to the bed head, and I let down the bed, and reached Mr. Clark a paper I found there.

What did the paper contain?——He ſaid bad ſilver; I did not look into it.

To Clarke. Is that the paper you produce now?——Yes.

To Macmanus. Did you ſearch the man?——Yes, I found nothing upon him; I went up ſtairs and kicked the door open, and when I returned, I found the young man at the door of the one pair of ſtairs.

JOEL SPARKES ſworn.

I underſtand this houſe, No. 19, Swan-yard belongs to you?—I am landlord of it.

Who did you let it to?——Different lodgers.

Who lived in it at the time the officers came in?—Mrs. Brown lived in the one pair of ſtairs room.

Which is Mrs. Brown?——I underſtand ſhe goes by the name of Harris, ſhe came to me by the name of Brown, ſhe had lived there two or three weeks, I live in the kitchen, and ſays I, one day, Madam, though you have been here ſo long, I cannot ſay I know your name; ſays ſhe, Brown, oh! ſays I Mrs. Brown; there was a gentleman with her when ſhe took the lodgings, his name his Hardy, there was another young man with her.

Who did ſhe deſcribe herſelf to be?—The gentleman ſays to me, coming with the gentlewoman, Mr. Sparkes, I have recommended you to a good lodger, ſhe is a captain's widow, and ſhe has an income, ſo that you are ſure of your money, her huſband lays dead in the room where ſhe is, and ſhe wants another room; there was a young man with them, but I do not know who he was.

Mr. Garrow. So Hardy was the perſon, who treated with you for a lodging?——Yes.

He deſcribed this woman?——Yes.

The woman ſaid nothing about it?——No, ſhe never ſpoke a word.

Did you ever ſee Mr. Hardy afterwards?—Not till the officers came, he might paſs in and out; ſhe was there near four months before the officer came.

Silveſter. The woman was preſent when Hardy ſaid this?—Yes, both together.

How long had the other woman occaſionally come backwards and forwards there?—I cannot ſay.

She did not come with her ſiſter?—No.

Had the other been there a conſiderable time before ſhe came?—Yes, I believe it was ſome weeks.

How many times might you have ſeen the other woman, before the officers came?——I cannot ſay, in particular, I have ſeen her up and down ſtairs.

JOHN SPARKES ſworn.

How old are you?—Turned of fifteen, I am ſon of the laſt witneſs, I was preſent when the lodgings were taken.

Who took the lodgings?—Mrs. Brown.

Who was in company with her?—One Mr. Hardy.

And who elſe?—I cannot tell.

Was you moſtly at home, my boy?—Yes.

How ſoon after the lodgings were taken, did the other woman come?—On Chriſtmas-day.

When did they come to live in that houſe?——They had lived there about four months.

Who elſe uſed to come there?—I cannot tell, there uſed to be a man that uſed to come there.

Who is that man like?——That young man there uſed to come almoſt every day.

What time did he come?—He uſed to come at all times almoſt, I cannot tell what time.

How long did he uſe to ſtay?—Two or three hours ſometimes, and ſometimes not ſo long, he uſed to go away ſoon.

Are you ſure that is the man?—Yes.

Do you know whether he was preſent

at the time the lodgings were taken?—No, Sir, he was not.

Mr. Garrow. Was Hardy there, after the lodgings were taken?—About once, or twice; I ſaw him, he came to ſee Mrs. Brown.

How long might he ſtay?—Not above half an hour.

Then that, I ſuppoſe, was before the other woman came to be there?—Yes.

Was any body elſe preſent, at any time, when Hardy was there, except Mrs. Brown?——No.

Did you ever ſee Mr. Holman there, when Mr. Hardy was there?—No.

Did you ever ſee Hardy bring any thing with him?—No.

FRANCIS HARDY ſworn.

Do you know the priſoner?—Yes: I went with Mrs. Harris and Joſeph Yelland to take the room, there was one Mr. Richard Smith there; ſhe deſired I would repreſent her as a captain's widow, becauſe ſhe was ſeparate from her huſband, and ſhe was afraid if he knew where ſhe was, he would come and fetch away her goods; her huſband had been ſeparate from her two or three years, or near upon that; he lived with another woman; that was the reaſon ſhe gave me, for going in another name; I told Mr. Spackes, that ſhe was a captain's widow, I knew ſhe was not a captain's widow, I knew ſhe had a huſband alive at the time; I know the other woman, I have ſeen them in that apartment, I have ſeen them at work, ſuch as filing the ſhillings, and preparing them, and cleaning them.

Who have you ſeen?——I have ſeen Elizabeth Yelland preparing the money, and I have ſeen her likewiſe, after her ſiſter has coloured them, rubbing them out in ſand; I have never ſeen any body elſe colouring the money; I have ſeen a young man which is there, Joſeph, making the mould with ſand, and the flaſk; I believe after they had the room, they did not do any thing to the caſting part till about a fortnight before Chriſtmas, then they commenced caſting; before that they uſed to buy the bad money and finiſh it.

Then it was after the time of courſe, that you ſaw Joſeph making the mould?—I never ſaw him making any mould, but three times, for I was deterred from going up; the reaſon I went was, they owed me a little money, and I went after it, I being ſomewhat of a confidant, I believed they were not fearful to truſt me; I only ſaw them making the mould; I believe I have ſeen the woman at work ſix or eight times.

Mr. Garrow. The buſineſs you ſaw the woman employed in, was rubbing them on paper, and cleaning them?——Yes.

This was whilſt they purchaſed the unfiniſhed ſtuff, and were working it into finiſhed for uttering?——Yes.

It was before they began caſting?—Yes.

So you ſaw that ſix or eight times?——Yes.

At diſtant periods from each other?—It may be two or three days, ſometimes it might be every other day.

You was a frequent viſitor?——Yes.

When was the firſt time, after the lodgings were taken?—I believe it was within four or five days.

What Elizabeth underſtood the buſineſs as well as Phebe?——She was not there then, ſhe came ſince they began caſting; there was only Mrs. Harris and her daughter and this man.

Did you ever ſee any caſting going forward?——I never ſaw any metal run; I have ſeen the ſilver in the flaſk to make the mould.

You have?——Undoubtedly; when I went up, they have been a little ſurpriſed, but then they ſaid, you need not mind him.

You have known this family eighteen months, how came you to be the perſon ſingled out to tell this falſehood to the landlord.——I never told any falſehood only by her own deſire.

However you was the perſon thought the fitteſt with that demure face to tell a lie?—I lived in that neighbourhood, and I believe ſhe had no other connections but me, as I had not been in the neighbourhood long, and ſhe deſired me to look her out a room.

Are you a married man?——Yes, I lived at No. 62, I never ſaw her do any thing of the kind before; I did not know ſhe was a perſon of that kind.

Did you know thoſe people were in the act of high treaſon, at the time you went there?—I knew it would affect their lives, I thought it right to divulge it at laſt.

Did you always think it was a bad thing that they were doing, and that it was a bad thing to keep it ſecret?——Undoubtedly I did.

Had they paid you the money they owed you?—Some time; I ſuppoſe for two months.

Then you continued to viſit them after the money was paid?—All the difference that aroſe between them and me, that made us ſeparate in our connections was, my adviſing them to quit and leave that buſineſs, and they thought my advice too bad.

So there was a downright falling out between you?——No, there was not.

Still they continued in their old lodgings, going on with their old trade, knowing you knew of it?——Yes.

It was two months after your recommendation, and breaking of the connection, that you gave this notice?——Yes.

How long had all connection ceaſed between you?—I believe it might be a week.

Did you deſire them not to come to your place, that you might diſcloſe this matter?—I had ſome ſtruggle in my mind, and at the ſame time was in hopes my perſuaſions would have an effect upon them, as I ſaw it was dangerous; I ſaw they would not leave off, and there was no other method; beſides, I ſaw clearly that they were leading young people into that error, and they might have led others; I ſo far perſuaded her own daughter to quit the houſe, and come to live at my houſe.

What is the age of that daughter?——About fourteen; ſhe lived with me and my wife in the capacity of a ſervant, or in fact, till her grandmother would take her; ſhe was not with me not many days before, not many hours; ſhe came on the Saturday, and her mother was apprehended on that very evening.

Had not you really made a diſcovery to the officer, before you took the daughter home?—No, Sir; the daughter was at my houſe ſettled before the officers went.

I aſk you, upon your oath, whether you had not informed the officer before you took the daughter home?—I had not mentioned it to any one perſon, till the daughter was in my houſe, for there I left her, when I went to apprehend them; I took her in order to ſave her life.

Had you made any declarations reſpecting the priſoner Phebe Harris and yourſelf, reſpecting your attachment to her?——I never had any attachment to her, ſhe is a married woman, and I am a married man; upon my oath I never had any attachment towards her.

Have you never ſaid this to any body, that if they made a caſe againſt Phebe Harris, the reſt ſhould go too, for you loved her better than your own wife?—Upon my oath I never ſaid ſo, I never was prejudiced any more in her favour than the other.

You never ſaid ſo?—I never did.

JOHN NICHOLLS ſworn.

One of theſe ſixpences is bad, and the other I believe good.

How are theſe ſhillings?——They are both bad; two of thoſe ſhillings are bad, and one good.

Court. Hand over the paper with the two ſhillings in it; I want to aſk Clarke a queſtion about them.

To Clarke. You delivered in theſe, to be one good, and one a bad ſhilling; which did you take to be good?——His judgement is better than mine.

Jury. Suppoſe the good ſhilling was gone, one might be a pattern as well as the other?—Not a doubt of it, in all branches of buſineſs, beſides this, they moſtly uſe lead for a pattern.

JOSEPH YELLAND, otherwiſe HOLMAN's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I had been at my mother's all that morning, and hearing my ſiſter was ill, I came to ſee her; and this witneſs wants to ſwear my life away, for the ſake of the blood money.

Court. Can you ſhew by witneſſes what your life has been for the courſe of the laſt four moths, that you have been honeſtly getting your living; that would be of great ſervice to you?—I had been at work, and I have been out of work ſome time, I was looking for a place.

What buſineſs was you bred to?——A whiteſmith, I have four witneſſes to my character.

SARAH SMITH ſworn.

I have known him from a child; I am a married woman, my huſband is a waterman and lighterman at Hungerford-ſtairs.

What buſineſs is he?—I ſaw him about half a year ago, he ſaid he was going upon liking to a ſmith; I never knew any thing of him but an honeſt young fellow.

Has that been his general character?—Yes, I never heard any thing amiſs of him.

What was he brought up to?——He was brought up in the ſchool.

What buſineſs was he brought up to?—He was going upon liking to a waterman; my huſband would have taken him; I have not ſeen him within this laſt twelve months, and then he had not been out at any buſineſs; I know his mother very well a very honeſt hard working woman; She goes out to work.

Did he live with her?——He uſed to be backwards and forwards.

JANE BURGESS ſworn.

I live next door to his mother, in Artichoke-lane, I am a married woman, my huſband is a cooper, I have known him theſe three years to my certain knowledge, he went on board a ſhip, and attended as a waterman along with his father in-law; I never heard any thing amiſs of him, till now; I never heard any thing of his being a ſmith; I heard once he was to be a ſmith, but he did not go.

Court to Priſoner Phebe Harris. What explanation can you give of this to the Jury.

(Her Defence read.)

My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am an unhappy woman; I was deſired by a young man of the name of John Brown, to take the room, which I did, and he brought the things found in the room; and deſired me to ſecret them, and I not knowing the nature of them, or for what purpoſe they were intended, did do ſo, and ſo I told the gentlemen when they came and took me: as to my ſiſter-in-law, I being very ill, ſhe came to clean the room for me, and the gentleman found her cleaning it on her knees: and my brother-in-law came ſome time after the gentlemen had been in the room.

The priſoner Harris called two witneſſes who gave her a very good character.

PRISONER ELIZABETH YELLAND's DEFENCE.

I leave it to my counſel.

The Priſoner called Alexander Sutherland, an Apothecary, with whom ſhe lived ſervant two months before her commitment, who gave her an exceeding good character.

Court to Macmanus. Which woman went to the bed's head?——Phebe Harris.

The Jury retired for ſome time, and returned with a Verdict.

JOSPEH YELLAND otherwiſe HOLMAN, } NOT GUILTY.

PHEBE HARRIS, GUILTY, Death.

ELIZABETH YELLAND, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

328. HANNAH otherwiſe HANNA MULLENS, was indicted, for that ſhe, well knowing that one Peter Roach had ſerved our Lord the King, as a ſeaman, on board the Burford, and that certain wages and pay were due to him for ſuch ſervice, on the 11th of November laſt, ſhe did appear in her proper perſon before the Worſhipful George Harris, and did produce and exhibit a certain paper, partly printed, and partly written, ten, with a certain mark thereunto ſet, which purported to be the laſt will and teſtament of the ſaid Peter Roach, and did then and there unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly, take a falſe oath that that paper did contain the laſt will and teſtament of him the ſaid Peter Roach; and that ſhe was the executrix therein named, with intent to obtain probate, in order to receive the wages and pay ſo due to him the ſaid Peter Roach, for and on account of his ſaid ſervice, againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, for that ſhe, ſuppoſing certain wages and pay was due, &c.

THOMAS FLETCHER ſworn.

I am a clerk in the Prerogative-office. This is a will of Peter Roach; I bring this from the place where the original wills are depoſited.

JOHN SEALY ſworn.

I am clerk to Mr. John Crickett, Proctor, in Doctors Commons. I know the priſoner; I ſaw her, and received this will from her; I wrote this jurata upon it. I went with her to be ſworn; I ſaw her ſworn; I ſaw Doctor Harris ſign it.

What was the oath?——She ſwore that paper contained the laſt will and teſtament of Peter Roach; that ſhe was the executrix therein named.

Court. To what purpoſe was this oath adminiſtered to her?—For her to receive the effects.

What was to be done in conſequence of that oath?—To obtain probate.

What was the purpoſe for which ſhe applied to you?—To prove the will, to obtain probate.

Did ſhe come alone?—No perſon with her, to the beſt of my knowledge; I do not know where ſhe lived; I did not ſee her huſband; ſhe ſent ſome perſon after it the next time; it was ſome man.

(The Will read, witneſſed by Philip Riley and John Penny.)

HENRY WILLIAMS ſworn.

There is no other man of the ſame name; this man, Peter Roach, appeared to have ſerved on board the Coventry, from the 16th of July, 1781, till the 2d of September, in the ſame year; when he was diſcharged into the Burford, on the 14th of Auguſt, the Coventry was at ſea at ſome part of the Eaſt Indies, latitude 18.

Turn to the Burford book, how and when does he appear to have been on board?——He arrived in the Burford the 3d of September from the Coventry, and ſerved to the 19th of April, 1783, when he died in Madraſs road.

Were there any wages due to him?—There were.

Are there now?——Yes.

Look for John Penny and Philip Riley?——John Penny appears to have died on the 8th of Auguſt, 1779, at the hoſpital at Symons Town, I believe, in the Eaſt Indies; and Philip Riley did not die till the 6th of June, 1782.

Then he was borne on the ſhip's books at this time?—Till the 6th of June, 1782, they both belonged to the Burford.

Court. Suppoſing a perſon had come to have enquired at the office for the name of Peter Roach, what information would you have given?——I ſhould have given the original entry in the Coventry, carrying it back to July.

HENRY PENTON ſworn.

I was quarter-maſter on board the Burford in 1781; I knew Peter Roach for a good while; I have ſeen him write, he wrote pretty middling, that a man might read, and he could write both in pen and chalk, for he was in my watch; he was blown up in the Eaſt-India man, called the Duke of Arthur, the 19th of April, 1783; I never ſaw him write any will or power, or any ſuch thing as that; I have ſeen him write, he has written with my pen a twelvemonth before his death; he came to the Burford in 1781 from the Coventry.

THOMAS PLUCK ſworn.

I was a foremaſt-man on board the Magnanime.

Did you know Philip Riley of the Burford?——Yes.

Have you ſeen him write often ?—Yes.

Look at this ?—That was never his hand writing in the world ; I knew him extremely well, he wrote a very heavy and a very ordinary hand, indeed ; he was very little uſed to writing.

Court. Do you remember Riley in the Burford in the year 1781 ?——I knew him in the year 1782, after the 12th of April ; I knew nothing of him before that time.

Court to Williams. When did Riley firſt come into the Burford ?—On the 13th of December, 1778, and died the 6th of January, 1782.

To Pluck. Did you know of his death ?——No.

How long had you known him ?—Between two and three months.

ELIZABETH RYDER ſworn.

What relation were you to John Penny ?——I was his mother's own ſiſter, and his own ſiſter is in the next room ; he was a mariner on board the Burford ; he could not write, nor read writing.

What became of him ?—He died abroad, I forget the name of the place.

SARAH HALL ſworn.

Had you a brother of the name of John Penny ?—Yes ; he was a mariner on board the Bedford, or ſome ſuch name.

Was it the Burford ?——Yes.

Where did he die ?——At the Cape of Good Hope.

What age was he when you laſt ſaw him ?—I do not know ; he might be upwards of forty.

Did you ſee him a little time before he left this kingdom to go abroad ?—He could not write when he went from this kingdom, unleſs he was learned abroad ; he could neither read nor write.

Does it appear from the ſhip's books where this young man repreſented himſelf as coming from ?—From Folkſtone.

How old was your brother when he died ?—He might be about forty-five or forty-ſix.

What year was he born in ?——I do not know ; he was younger than myſelf ; I am forty-eight ; he has been gone eight years this April, to the beſt of my memory.

How much younger was he than you ?——Two or three years.

To Williams. You ſay he had entered his forty-ninth year ?——Yes.

JOHN ABEL, alias PATERSON ſworn.

I know the priſoner, ſhe aſked me ſome queſtions once.

What ?——She aſked me if I knew ſuch a ſhip as the Burford, from India; it was about ten days or a fortnight before I was taken ; ſhe aſked me if I knew any of the people belonging to the Burford, for ſhe had got a perſon that did belong to that ſhip, that brought her from Ireland, and ſhe had his will and power ; and ſhe aſked me to go to the Pay-office to receive the wages, and if I ſhould be aſked whether I brought the will over, to ſay, yes ; that was all.

Did you go with her ?—Yes.

Did you ſay ſo ?—They did not aſk me.

Court. How long have you known this woman ?—I never ſaw her, to know her, but once or twice.

Where did ſhe live ?——I ſaw her at a public houſe ; I do not know where ſhe lived.

How much was you to take for your trouble ?——She did not promiſe me any thing particular ; ſhe ſaid I ſhould be ſatisfied.

Did you know Roach, Penny, or Riley ?——No.

You went along wth this woman ?—Yes.

What did you tell the gentlemen at the Pay-office ?——I do not know that they aſked me any queſtions ; I did not ſpeak, that I know of.

So the woman was a ſtranger to you ?—Yes ; I had ſeen her once or twice before.

Did you know where ſhe lodged, or was to be met with ?——No.

Do you think it was a proper thing for you to lie for this woman, though you did not ſwear for her ?——I did not think of the conſequence; ſhe told me ſhe could not find the man.

Court. Take care of yourſelf in future; if you had come here as a party, it would have gone very hard with you.

——— SLADE ſworn.

On the 27th of February, the priſoner, in company with this man, who went by the name of Patterſon, brought this adminiſtration belonging to Peter Roach; upon looking who were witneſſes to the will, I found that one of the witneſſes was dead two years before the will was made; I aſked her who brought it over; ſhe ſaid the man that was with her; ſhe ſaid his name was Abel; ſhe brought this paper with her. (The paper read.) "Burford, Peter Roach, No. 1648, Madraſs, R. D. £5. 8. J. P." It belongs to the office of a Mr. Wilcotes.

(The paper ſhewn to the Jury.)

Do you know any thing of that ticket?—Yes, it is wrote by a perſon in our office, whoſe name is Stephen.

Is it his buſineſs to make out theſe ſort of tickets?—By the authority being produced.

Has Mr. Stephen been applied to, to know whether he can give any account of it?—I believe not.

The Navy-office is down at Crutched Friars?—Yes; I dare ſay he can give no account of it.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, a young man that belonged to the Burford, Patrick Croghill, delivered me this will at Mrs. Mould's, the Cock, in High-ſtreet, St. Giles's, about eleven months ago.

Have you got the letter in which it was brought to you?—No, Sir, I have not, I have loſt it; I could neither read nor write myſelf, I got a young man to write a letter for me.

Had you any reaſon to expect that you ſhould be made executrix to this man, and that he would leave you this money?——I had not ſeen him theſe ten years.

Was he a relation to you?——No; he lived with me half a year; he never ſent to me; I never heard from him from the time he went away; this is the man that wrote the letter, whom I called from the next box.

How came you to keep it ſo long by you? I was big with child, and I did not like to go till I was well.

Is there any body here that knows that this man lived with you?—I do not know.

How old are you now?——I am going of twenty-ſix.

And you ſay this was ten years ago; you muſt have been very young indeed?——Yes.

Where did you come from?——From Ireland.

How long have you been in London?—I have been in London about ten years.

Where have you lived, what part of London?—I lived at St. Giles's, and in a good many parts.

In what way?—As a ſervant; I have been a ſervant theſe four or five years; I have lived with this child's father theſe two years; his name is Edward Mullins.

What is he?—He porters.

Who is he that you call to give an account of your receiving this letter?—That man there.

EDWARD EDWIN ſworn.

What countryman are you?—An Iriſhman.

How long have you known this woman?——About two years.

Do you know Edward Mullins?—No.

Do you know where the priſoner has lived theſe laſt two years?——I know ſhe lived in St. Giles's; I live in Drury-lane, I am a labourer.

Have you got any of your writing here?——Yes; I went before my Lord Mayor, when I was ſtopped.

Who ſtopped you?—The Lord Mayor.

How came you to be ſtopped?—When I appeared as evidence for the woman.

Tell me what you know about this matter?—I ſaw a will incloſed in a letter, delivered to Hannah Mullins about a twelvemonth ago.

Who was it delivered to her by ?——A ſailor.

Did you know the ſailor ?—No.

Do you know how the ſailor found her out ?—Yes, he enquired of Mrs. Moulds for her.

How came he to find out Mrs. Moulds? —The direction was on the letter.

So then it was in conſequence of the direction being on the letter, at Mrs. Moulds, that this woman was found out ?—Yes.

You read the direction ?—Yes.

Was ſhe in the room at Mrs. Mould's at the time that the man came there ?—Not that I know of; he enquired for her when he came in, and Mrs. Moulds ſent for her.

When ſhe came, what happened then ? —I do not know, I took no further notice, till ſhe handed me the letter; I ſaw him give her the letter.

Was the letter ſealed, or unſealed ?——Sealed.

Did he tell her who it came from ?——I cannot ſay.

Did ſhe read the letter ?—I read it, ſhe could not read.

What was in the letter ?—I cannot tell.

What was there beſides the letter ?——There was a will in it.

Whoſe will was it ?——I cannot tell you.

How do you know it was a will ?——When I read it, every body in the houſe ſaid it was a will; I did not know it was a will till I was told it.

You do not remember whoſe it was ?—No.

Look at that writing and tell me whether it is your hand, did you write that before my Lord Mayor ?—Yes.

How happens it that you, who have known this woman ſo long, ſhould not know Mr. Mullens ?——She has had two or three huſbands while I knew her.

You are not one of them, are you ?—No.

Court to Abel. Did you never receive a letter from her deſiring you to come ?——No.

Court to Edwin. Do you know who it was that brought the letter ?——I cannot ſay.

Look at Mr. Patterſon, and ſay whether that was him or not ?——I cannot ſay it was.

Can you ſay it was not ?——It is ſo long ago I cannot ſay.

Where was this woman's huſband when the letter was delivered ?——I cannot ſay.

Have you never ſaid it was Patterſon that wrote the letter ?——I never did.

Did you happen to know how long Mrs. Moulds has kept that houſe ?——While I was in London.

How long is that ?——About ſix or ſeven years.

Court to Patterſon. Was not you the perſon that brought this letter ?——I was perſuaded to ſay ſo at firſt.

The queſtion is, whether you did not deliver this letter to this woman at Moulds' ? now take care before you anſwer it.—No, Sir, I did not.

You did not ?——No.

Is Mrs. Moulds here ? I will read to you what the minutes are of your examination, and then I wiſh you to conſider what anſwer you will give to me; you ſaid you was born at Hipperſley in Worceſterſhire; that you was on board the Eleanor brigg five years ago, is that true ?—Yes.

That you never knew Peter Roach; that you had the letter on board the Burford, in 1783; that that letter was given you; that you ſat down in the box, that there were two or three men in the ſame room, that you ſat down in the middle box ?——I did not ſay that before my Lord Mayor.

What part of it did you ſay, did not you ſay before my Lord Mayor, that you delivered this letter to this woman ?—Yes, the day I was taken up; then, when my Lord aſked the truth, I told him, and he told me it was better to tell the truth, and I did tell him all the truth about it.

So firſt of all you did ſay ſo, and it was not true ?—Yes, then I told him as I have told you.

THOMAS WELCH ſworn.

I am a labourer and porter.

Are you acquainted with that man, Daniel Patterſon?——No, I never ſaw him till I ſaw him at the priſon.

Did not you ſee him at the Cock?——No, I could not ſwear that I ſaw him.

Where do you live?—I lodge in Dyot-ſtreet.

Was you drinking with him at the Cock?——No, I was drinking with Edwin at the Cock.

Do you remember the circumſtance of a man coming in and enquiring for Mrs. Mullens?——Yes, I heard that circumſtance particularly, I happened to be ſitting in the middle box, and ſome time after they came in, ſhe turned about and called Edwin out of the box from me, as I ſat alone, I turned about and I ſaw both their heads together, and he was reading in a ſlow voice.

Who was the man that brought that letter?——I do not know.

Look at Mr. Patterſon?—I have ſeen him often ſince,; I never ſaid he was the man.

Did not you ſay that Patterſon came to enquire for Mullens, and that Patterſon gave her a letter?——I could not ſwear that he was the man, or that he was not the man, I never ſaid he was the man before my Lord Mayor.

Then obſerve, before my Lord Mayor you did not ſay that Patterſon was the man?——No, I did not.

Court to Priſoner. Can you ſatisfy the Jury what name you go by now?—Yes, by the name of Mullens.

Why the man's name that you live with is Mullens?—But my father's name was Jack Mullens.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

She was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury, becauſe they ſuppoſed ſhe had been drawn in.

Court. It is juſt now ſuggeſted to me, that this is not the firſt or ſecond of theſe wills, that ſhe has been concerned in; and if ſo, you would wiſh to withdraw your recommendation; but if ſhe is really an innocent perſon, we will liſten to it; I ſhall deſire my Lord Mayor, who has had this affair before him to make enquiry into it.

---

329. JONATHAN HARWOOD was indicted, for feloniouſly making an aſſault, in a certain field and open place, near the the king's highway, called St. James's Park, on David Drummond, Eſq; on the 15th day of April laſt, and putting him in corporal fear, and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, and againſt his will, 4s. in monies numbered, his monies.

(The indictment was opened by Mr. Park, and the Caſe by Mr. Garrow, as follows.)

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; this is a caſe, the moſt painful that has come before you this ſeſſions: you have heard this is a robbery; a robbery not committed in the uſual way, not by force or violence to the gentleman who was robbed, but by thoſe means, which I am ſorry to ſay, the experience of this place, and other courts of juſtice, has proved, are but too frequent in theſe days; I mean Gentlemen, by threatening to charge an unnatural crime. Gentlemen, on the law of this ſubject, whatever doubts may have been entertained formerly, thank God, there will be none to day; we have it ſettled by all the Judges, that if money is taken from the perſon of any man by threats, either to affect his character or perſon, by which he is induced to part with his money, that conſtitutes the crime of a robbery, the ſame as if he had been knocked down; and indeed God forbid it ſhould not; for ſuch an attack to a man of character is worſe than a publick robbery. Gentlemen, the proſecutor Mr. Drummond, is a very reſpectable wine merchant, in Sackville-ſtreet, Piccadilly; in the courſe of his buſineſs, he acts occaſionally for gentlemen as a banker; it happened that my Lord Sempill, who keeps money with him in that way, drew a draft for eight guineas, and a ſhort time after another for one pound ſixteen ſhillings, theſe drafts were preſented, when Mr. Drummond's hair was dreſſing, and he did not file them, but neglected to take care of them; he heard no more of them till about a month ago, when two perſons, ſoldiers, one of them the priſoner, came to Mr. Drummond's houſe with two drafts, upon looking at them, it did not occur that they had been paid, but he concluded they were drawn for ſome of my Lord's ſervants, and that they had loſt them; the ſoldier ſaid, he did not preſent them for payment, but finding them, he brought them home; Mr. Drummond gave each of the ſoldiers a ſhilling a piece, and away they went. On the 5th of April, Mr. Drummond was in the Park, and there was a great diſturbance in the Park, which drew the attention of every body, and of courſe, of Mr. Drummond; upon enquiry, he found that a man was detected in woman's cloaths, and that that was the cauſe of the riot; on returning home, Mr. Drummond was accoſted by a man who ſince turns out to be the priſoner, who ſaid, how do you do, Sir; Mr. Drummond had no recollection of his perſon, and ſaid, who are you? ſays the priſoner, do not you recollect me, I am one of the two ſoldiers that brought the drafts, and ſays he, you behaved very ill and very ſhabbilly to us, and gave us only a ſhilling a piece; Mr. Drummond ſaid, he thought he had given them enough; but however, Mr. Drummond gave him a ſhilling more; then the priſoner uſed this expreſſion, if you do not give me more, I will ſwear an unnatural crime againſt you, and that you loſt the drafts when you was with me in the Green Park; I can ſwear to your perſon, from having ſeen you at your own houſe before, when I brought the drafts. Mr. Drummond, you may conceive, was unuſually alarmed; and upon theſe occaſions, one ſets one-ſelf to conſider what one ſhould do; I am ſure it has often puzzled me, how I ſhould behave on ſuch an occaſion; knock him down one of my friends ſuggeſt; why that would be equally dangerous, that would be called retaliation; ſhould a man do as Mr. Drummond did, give him ſomething; why that is an encouragement to all theſe ſcoundrels of the guards; otherwiſe, the beſt way might be, to give them ſomething and get rid of them; that was Mr. Drummond's caſe, he did not chuſe to be annoyed by this man, he gave him four ſhillings; the fellow ſaid that would not do, he ſhould go home with him, he would have more money; Mr. Drummond was obliged to ſubmit, he begged he would follow at a diſtance; in ſhort Mr. Drummond went home, and there he got ſome more money, two guineas which he gave the priſoner; this however did not ſatisfy the priſoner, for the conſtant experience of theſe caſes is, that when once they have made a footing, ſo as to induce people to give them a farthing, they are never ſatisfied, becauſe, they know that every additional ſhilling that is given, is an additional abatement of that ſtory, which is to be told to the Jury; the priſoner deſired Mr. Drummond to make an appointment to give him ſome more money, Mr. Drummond did ſo; the priſoner deſired Mr. Drummond would be very cautious to attend to his appointment, or elſe he ſhould viſit him again; Mr. Drummond diſcloſed what he had done, to Lord Sempill, and ſome other gentlemen, and that very day the priſoner was taken up; when the priſoner was taken and examined at the Publick Office, in Bow-Street, he told this ſtory; that Mr. Drummond had loſt the drafts, while he was commiting indecent familiarities with another ſoldier, of the name of Wetherhill, who was the man that went with the priſoner, when they carried the drafts; upon this Wetherhill was examined, and he entirely diſclaimed the whole ſtory, and ſaid he never ſaw Mr. Drummond, till he went to his houſe with the priſoner with the drafts; another circumſtance is, when this man made the charge in the Park, Mr. Drummond told him that there was a reaſon why he ſhould be the laſt perſon in the world to be charged with ſuch a crime; but Wetherhill will come here, and tell you there is no truth in the ſtory told by the priſoner. If the priſoner ſhould be unwiſe enough to-day to affect Mr. Drummond's character, by ſo foul a charge, Mr. Drummond lives in this country in a way that he can produce the moſt reputable witneſſes to his character, and that I ſhould think will go a great way in directing your judgments; but the Court will tell you, that I cannot call ſuch witneſſes, unleſs the priſoner makes it neceſſary; but if I do call them, they will ſhew you that Mr. Drummond is not, nor cannot be the man that the priſoner repreſents him. Gentlemen, I ſhall call my witneſſes, and if you find this man has made this charge with a view of extorting money, you will pronounce a verdict of Guilty upon the priſoner, and leave him to the vindiction of the law, to be made, perhaps, a public example to a neſt of men, who, inſtead of being the guardians of the public, are by much the worſt ſubjects the King has in his dominions, and by much the worſt ſet of men in this metropolis; ſo that in future honeſt men walking in the Park may not meet with theſe ſort of attacks; but however, Gentlemen, your province, to be ſure, is only to pronounce him guilty, or not guilty, from the evidence that ſhall be laid before you; and I know, from the experience I have had of you, that you will give the greateſt attention to that evidence, and decide according to your conſciences; I aſk no more at your hands.

DAVID DRUMMOND, Eſq. ſworn.

I am a wine-merchant.

Did you ever ſee the priſoner at the bar?—Not to my recollection; I did not even know him that night, though I had ſeen him the day before.

Be kind enough to relate all that you know of this matter of your own knowledge, without any hearſay evidence.——Lord Sempill generally has money in my hands, and pays his tradeſmen by drafts upon me; he drew a draft for eight guineas in favour of his ſervant Joſeph Lewis, dated the 30th of December, 1785; another for one pound eighteen ſhillings, in favour of Mr. Thwaites, dated the 11th of January; theſe drafts had been preſented, as it frequently happened, when I was in the room dreſſing, and I ſent the money down by the ſervant; when I went to the counting-houſe, I entered the drafts as uſual; not being in the counting-houſe then, I did not take them, and what came of them I do not know; but I omitted to draw the pen through the name, and put them in the drawer to preſent them at the Bank. About a month ago two drafts were brought to me in my wine vaults.

Court. About what time were the drafts preſented and paid?—They were at two different times, and ſhortly after the times they bore date, within a day or two; they ſeldom are longer than a day from being preſented; thoſe two drafts were brought to me when I was down in the wine vaults; I aſked if Joe was at the door, (Lord Sempill's ſervant) the ſervant told me no, that two ſoldiers had brought them; it ſtruck me immediately that Joſeph had loſt the drafts; I came up, and ſpoke to the ſoldiers.

Was the priſoner at the bar one of thoſe ſoldiers?—Yes.

Was Wetherhill the other?——I cannot ſay; I could not even have ſaid the priſoner was one of them, if he had not made that attack upon me afterwards; I went and ſpoke to the two ſoldiers, and told them I would not pay the drafts; upon which one of them anſwered, that he did not preſent them for payment, he ſaid he found them.

Was that ſaid by the priſoner at the bar?——I cannot tell; ſtill thinking that ſome of Lord Sempill's family had loſt the drafts, I went to the compting-houſe, and wrote upon them, not to be paid; I ſent the ſoldiers to Lord Sempill's, and about an hour after they came back to me, with my Lord's own ſervant, John Woollett; and the ſervant told me that I muſt have loſt the drafts myſelf, for they had been paid by me long ago.

Did the ſervant ſay you muſt have loſt them yourſelf, in the preſence of the two ſoldiers?—No, it was in the cellar; I came up to the compting-houſe, and ſhewed them the drafts from the books, that they were entered and paid; I told them that the drafts were of no conſequence, but as they had brought them home, I gave the ſoldiers a ſhilling a-piece for their trouble.

Court. When you firſt went up to ſpeak to theſe two men about the drafts, was any body preſent?—My ſervant, Thomas Vennell.

Was he preſent when you ſent them to Lord Sempill's?—Yes.

Did they, or either of them, make any objection to going to Lord Sempill's?—No, none.

When did you ſee the ſoldier again?—I ſaw no more of them till the 14th, which was Good Friday.

When you gave them the ſhilling a-piece, did they ſay any thing before they left you? ——No, my Lord.

Did they make any complaints?—No, not a word; on the 14th, I went down to St. James's Park, about eight in the evening, and walked towards the Queen's Houſe in the Mall; there were a great many people walking at the time, and on returning, there was a noiſe in the Green Park, and the people that were in the Park crowded to ſee what was the matter; the noiſe was a little above where the centry ſtands in the Green Park; I went up, and found, on enquiry, that it was a man taken in woman's clothes; and upon retiring from the crowd in St. James's Park, in order to go home, the priſoner followed me; he came up to me, and ſaid, how do you do, Sir? I did not know him at all; I aſked him who he was, and he ſaid, did not I remember the two ſoldiers that came with the drafts ſome time ago.

Court. Had you left the crowd?——Yes; I returned through St. James's Park to go home.

You choſe to go through St. James's Park, ſooner than the Green Park?——Yes.

Mr. Park: Was the priſoner in his uniform?——Yes.

Court. Did the priſoner follow you?—Yes; I aſked him who he was? he replied, did not I remember the two ſoldiers that came with the drafts ſome time ago; I anſwered, yes; but I do not know that you are one of them; upon which he ſaid, I am the one that found the drafts, and you behaved very ſhabbily, and not like a gentleman, in giving us only a ſhilling each; I told him I thought it was enough, as I had ſhewn him Lord Sempill's book, that the drafts were entered, and were of no conſequence; that he might have the drafts inſtead of the ſhilling. He ſaid that was too little, and he muſt have more; I told him I would give him no more; but on his ſtill inſiſting, I put my hand in my pocket, and gave him a ſhilling, and told him to go about his buſineſs; by this time, I had got into St. James's Park; the ſoldier was ſtill following me, demanding more money; I repeated I will give you no more: he then ſaid, if you do not give me ſome more money, I will ſwear an unnatural crime againſt you, and that you was with me in the Green Park when you loſt the drafts; I can ſwear to your perſon, from having ſeen you at your houſe when I brought home the drafts. I walked on the footpath; I was much alarmed, and leſt he ſhould have made his threats heard in the ſtreets, I turned towards the Queen's Houſe, by the rail of the Green Park, and ſtopped almoſt oppoſite where the two centinels ſtand, on the north ſide of the Queen's Houſe; I told him I had only a half-crown and three ſixpences, which I gave him; he ſaid that would not do, he muſt have more; and then he ſaid, I will go home with you: I told him that I did not know I had any if I was at home, but on his inſiſting, I then told him, "Meet me any where that you pleaſe on Monday in particular, and I will give you a guinea," thinking by this means to make him deſiſt, and get rid of him for the preſent, and bring aſſiſtance to apprehend him; finding all theſe means ineffectual, I told him I was a very improper perſon to accuſe of ſuch a crime, for a reaſon which I told the priſoner; he ſtill inſiſted on having more money, and going home with me; I told him then to follow me home at a diſtance; when we had gone a little way, I ſaw him beckon to another ſoldier, and he ſaid, there is a man that I know, he will go with us; I replied, you may bring whom you pleaſe. When I came to the end of Sackville-ſtreet, in Piccadilly, I told him to ſtand by the wall of St. James's Church-yard, while I went home for the money; in place of doing that, he followed me home to the door, and I came out, and gave him two guineas a little way from the door in Sackville-ſtreet: he then ſaid, when ſhall I call on you for more? I told him I had given him too much; he ſtill ſaid he would call again; I then ſaid, meet me at the Green Park-gate at St. James's Park on Monday night at eight o'clock, and I will give you another guinea; with the ſame intention I have ſaid before, of apprehending him; and I made a point to conſult my friends what I ſhould do; the priſoner ſaid, Sir, be ſure to keep your appointment, or I ſhall call in a few days. Early the next morning, I went to Lord Sempill's houſe——

Court. Properly ſpeaking, we cannot hear from Mr. Drummond any thing that he ſaid or did.——On the Monday evening I went to the place of appointment, and took with me Mr. Morant, an officer from Bow-ſtreet.

What paſſed between you and the priſoner at the bar when you met him on Monday night?—It was ſome time after eight before the priſoner came; he came up to me, and aſked me, in the ſame manner, how do you do, Sir? I ſaid I was very well; he ſaid do not you recollect me; I ſaid I had good reaſon to know him; that I knew him perfectly well, that he had uſed me very ill, and he ſaid in what, I ſaid in threatening to charge ſuch a crime againſt me, and extorting money from me by thoſe threats; the priſoner upon that ſaid, he had been at my houſe on Sunday; Mr. Morant came up, and took him into cuſtody; when we went to the bottom of St. James's-ſtreet, he aſked me to let him have a coach, and not ſend him to the ſpunging houſe; I ſaid you are going to Sir Sampſon Wright's, and he may ſend you where he pleaſes; he replied, then he may ſend me to the devil.

When was you examined at Bow-ſtreet?——On the Tueſday.

What did the priſoner ſay for himſelf at Bow-ſtreet?——As nearly as I can recollect, he ſaid about two months ago, he was ſtanding in St. James's Park, by the rails of the two Parks, that I came up to him and aſked him what o'clock it was.

Court. Is the examination taken and returned of the priſoner in writing?—Yes.

Was it ſigned by him?——Yes.

(The examination ſent for from Bow-ſtreet.)

Court. Have you told us all you know excepting the examination of the priſoner?——Yes.

Is there any counſel for the priſoner?—No.

Then I will aſk Mr. Drummond one or two queſtions. When the man firſt told you that if you did not give him more money, he would ſwear an unatural crime againſt you, what was the impreſſion that it made on you?——I was very much alarmed indeed, I hardly knew where I was going, or what I was about for ſome time, having heard of ſeveral things of that kind before, it ſtruck the more terror into my mind.

What was the immediate miſchief that you apprehended?——I thought he would take me into cuſtody, and ſwear againſt me that crime.

There were a number of people in the Green Park?——Yes.

Did it occur to you to return back to that crowd of people, or to apply to the centinels, or any perſon for aſſiſtance?——If I could not have got rid of him by fair means, ſo as to get quit of him that night.

What was the reaſon of your turning to the Queen's houſe, inſtead of turning homewards?——I was afraid he would have made an uproar in the ſtreet, or have ſeized me there.

Did it not occur to you, that in the ſtreet, you might eaſily have procured aſſiſtance?—I thought he might have ſeized me in the ſtreet, he being a much ſtronger man.

Then you had an apprehenſion in your mind of immediate violence from him, if you did not give him what he required?—Moſt undoubtedly I had.

Under what apprehenſion was it that you gave him the four ſhillings?——To get quit of him.

But what apprehenſion if you did not?——I cannot exactly ſay, I was really in terror, I thought he would do ſomething to me if I did not.

Have you any kind of recollection by what means theſe drafts could have been loſt out of your poſſeſſion?——No other way than by putting them in my pocket in my own room, and as I frequently went to the Green Park, to the Park-keeper's houſe, and drank ſome milk of a morning before breakfaſt; I know of no other way that they could be loſt.

Mr. Garrow. That is on account of your health I believe?——No, Sir, I am very fond of walking in a morning, I uſed to go very often, I am generally pretty much confined in the day, and I like to walk in a morning.

I think you ſaid your ſervant was preſent, when you firſt ſpoke to the ſoldier about the drafts, and you ſent them to Lord Sempill's with the drafts, and that my Lord's ſervant came back?——Yes.

Should you have any recollection of the other man that came with the priſoner?——No, I knew him when I ſaw him at Bow-ſtreet.

Court to Priſoner. Put your queſtions to me, and I will aſk the proſecutor, if there is any thing I ſhould aſk him.

Priſoner. No, not particularly, only to ſpeak for myſelf; I wiſh that Wetherhill, the other ſoldier, ſhould be called.

Court. He is here I underſtand, and if he is not called for the proſecutor, you certainly have a right to call him yourſelf.

THOMAS VENNELL ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Drummond, I recollect about a month ago, two drafts being brought to him by two ſoldiers, they knocked at the door, I opened the door, they aſked if Mr. Drummond did not live there, I told them he did, they gave me two notes, and I took them to Mr. David Drummond, who was in the wine-vaults; Mr. Drummond aſked me, if Lord Sempill's ſervant was waiting for them, I told him no, two ſoldiers brought them; Mr. Drummond came up, and aſked them how they came by them, they ſaid they found them in the Green Park; Mr. Drummond wrote upon them, but I do not know what he wrote, and ſent them to Lord Sempill's; I recollect the priſoner was one of them very well.

How ſoon did you ſee the priſoner after?—Laſt Sunday was a week, which was Eaſter Sunday, he came with a note, and aſked if Mr. Drummond was at home; I aſked him which, Mr. William, or Mr. David; he ſaid, you remember my bringing two notes with a ſoldier ſome time ago; ſays he, it is him that I want; ſays I, he is not at home, and may not come home all day; ſays he, then you may take the note to his brother; ſays I, it is not his brother but his uncle; ſays he, take it to him; I ſaid his uncle has no buſineſs with his notes; but I took it up ſtairs to him, to ſatisfy him; but I did not give it to Mr. William Drummond; I came down and told him my maſter did not know any thing about it, unleſs Mr. David was at home, he ſaid he would wait till Mr. David Drummond came in; he ſtaid about ten minutes in the paſſage, and he ſaid it would not look well for him to wait there, he would go to the publick houſe, and have a pint of beer, and he aſked me to lend him a ſhilling, he ſaid he had no money; I told him I had no ſilver; about five o'clock I was ſent out of a meſſage for my maſter, and when I returned, he had been there; but about eight, or between eight and nine, he came there again, I opened the door to him, I told him he would be at home about eleven; he promiſed to come again at that time, but he never came.

When he deſired you to give the letter to Mr. Drummond's uncle, what did he ſay?——He ſaid he wanted ſome money, and he thought the uncle would give it him.

Court to Priſoner. Do you wiſh to aſk this witneſs any queſtions?

Priſoner. No my Lord, all is right that he ſays.

Court to Witneſs. Did they ſay how they found them in the Green Park?——They ſaid ſome time ago, they did not ſay what time, nor in what manner.

Did either of them ſay any thing, or make any objection to go to Lord Sempill's?——No, they deſired Mr. Drummond to write upon them to let Lord Sempill know that they had been there with them.

Then they did not make any objection to go, or ſay it was unneceſſary, or any thing of that ſort?——No, one ſays to the other, do you think you have time to go, that was all that I heard.

Lord Sempill's ſervant came back with them?——Yes, I ſaw Lord Sempill's ſervant and the two ſoldiers in the yard, but I never ſpoke to them.

JOHN WOOLLETT ſworn.

I am ſervant to Lord Sempill, I recollect ſeeing the priſoner at the bar, he and another ſoldier came to my Lord Sempill's, and aſked if that was not Lord Sempill's, I ſaid yes, I came down to the area, they aſked if one Joſeph Lewis did not live there, I ſaid yes, they then told me they had found two drafts, one for Joſeph Lewis, I aſked them where they got them, they told me they found them in the Green Park; I aſked them who ſent them there; they ſaid, they had been down to Mr. Drummond's in Sackville-ſtreet, and that he ſent them; while I was talking with them, Joſeph Lewis came in; I told them the drafts were of no uſe to any body, I knew the drafts had been paid, and I aſked Lewis if he knew any thing of it, he ſaid yes, it was paid, I told him the other I paid myſelf to Mr. Thwaites; I went up to my Lord, and aſked him if he knew any thing of it; my Lord was going to write a note, and he ſaid to me, you may as well go down to Mr. Drummond, and the ſoldiers went with me.

Did any converſation paſs between Mr. Drummond and you in the preſence of the ſoldier?——No, but as I was going with the ſoldiers to Mr. Drummond with the drafts, I aſked them when they found them, they ſaid, about ſix weeks ago, I ſaid how came you to keep them ſo long, they ſaid they thought they were of no uſe.

Did you aſk them at all, or did they tell you at all in what manner they found them?——No, no particulars, only generally, that they found them in the Green Park, and I aſked them how they found out Mr. Drummond's, they told me they had been down to Mr. Drummond's at Charing-croſs, and that they directed them to Mr. Drummond's in Sackville-ſtreet; going on, one of them ſaid he thought it was very odd there was no mark acroſs them that they were paid, I ſaid that did not ſignify, I was ſure they were paid; when we went to Mr. Drummond's, he came up to the compting houſe, and examined the books, and there he found them entered, he had not made any croſs to them, he ſhewed it to them, and ſaid it is entered here; they ſtood cloſe, then Mr. Drummond took out two ſhillings, and gave them one ſhilling each.

Did they make any complaint?—Nothing, I never heard them ſay a ſyllable, I ſaw no more of them, till I ſaw the priſoner at Bow-ſtreet.

Court. In all the converſation that you had with theſe two men about theſe drafts, did either of them mention any knowledge of Mr. Drummond, or having ever ſeen him any where before they carried the drafts? No, my Lord.

Did either of them expreſs any deſire of ſpeaking to Mr. Drummond in private?—No.

THOMAS WETHERHILL ſworn.

Court. Before you examine him, aſk Woollett whether this is the perſon that was with the priſoner?—Yes.

Court. Let the examination be read firſt which was returned from Sir Sampſon, and let Wetherhill ſtep out of Court; this is the original examination, but it ſhould have been ſigned by the Juſtice; is there any body here that was preſent when the priſoner ſigned this examination?—Yes.

Who brought this from the office?—Mr. Allen, who is the clerk at Bow-ſtreet.

JAMES ALLEN ſworn.

I am an aſſiſtant clerk.

Court. Pray, what is the reaſon that you did not prepare a regular examination?—There was the information returned.

But was there any examination of the priſoner returned?——I do not recollect that it was; I can anſwer for that being ſigned there in that book by the priſoner.

Court. The depoſition of Wetherhill, taken before the Magiſtrate, is ſigned by the Magiſtrate, we read it as a paper under the ſignature of the priſoner, which, as againſt him, may be read; but that does not make the proceedings of the Magiſtrate regular; it is proper to mention that before the clerk, whoſe duty it is to take care that theſe parts of the Magiſtrate's duty are regularly performed.

Court to Allen. Is this what the priſoner ſaid at Bow ſtreet, and did you take it down yourſelf?—It is juſt as he ſaid, word by word; I wrote it myſelf as he delivered it, I ſaw him ſign it.

Did you read it over to him?—It was read by me to him before he ſigned it.

Priſoner. No, it was not read firſt.

Was it read to him?—It was.

Did he make any objections to it?—He was aſked if there was any thing wrong in it, and he ſaid it was all truth; it was brought there and ſigned.

Court. You may read that, if it is deſired on either ſide.

(Mr. Garrow and Mr. Park look at it.)

Mr. Garrow. I do not ſee that it is material to read it.

Court. Unleſs it is called for, I do not ſee it is neceſſary, becauſe the priſoner will have an opportunity of making his own defence.

(Thomas Wetherhill called in again.)

Mr. Garrow. How long have you been a ſoldier in the Guards?—Four years and a half; I was a drummer ſome time.

How long have you been a ſoldier, diſtinguiſhed from a drummer?—Three months ago.

Do you remember going to Mr. Drummond's in Sackville-ſtreet at any time with two drafts?——Yes.

When was it?——At the time I was at the recruit-houſe learning my exerciſe, after I had inliſted as a ſoldier.

Who went with you?——The priſoner Harwood.

What did you go for?——To enquire about the notes that I had found.

When had you found them?—I found them ſix months before I was a ſoldier; I had them by me all that time, I did not think any thing about them; I ſhewed them to the priſoner, and aſked him what he thought of them? he ſaid he thought if he had coloured clothes, he could draw the money; I told him I would not think of any ſuch thing, but that if he pleaſed he might go with me to Mr. Drummond's at Charing Croſs, and enquire about them, and he appointed the next day, but he did not come till about a week after.

Where did you both go to make the enquiry firſt?——To Mr. Drummond the Banker at Charing Croſs, and he directed us to Sackville-ſtreet; we went both together; we ſaw the ſervant firſt, and he went and carried the notes to Mr. Drummond, and he came out and told us to go up to Lord Sempill's, and aſk him about the notes, as the notes came from one Lewis, his ſervant. We went there, and ſaw the ſervant; we were to go and enquire of them how they had been loſt; we ſaw Mr. Drummond before we went, and he wrote down directions where to find my Lord, and wrote upon them, not to be paid.

Did the priſoner go with you to Lord Sempill's?—Yes.

You were informed there that the drafts had been paid?—Yes.

Who went back with you to Mr. Drummond's?—The ſervant of my Lord, and the priſoner.

Do you recollect any converſation that paſſed, as you was going along?—I told the ſervant I found theſe notes in the Park.

Did you tell him how long before you had found them?——I cannot recollect that.

Tell us, as well as you can recollect, all that paſſed, in your way to Mr. Drummond's?——We did not ſay any thing to the ſervant hardly, excepting telling him we found them in the Park; when we came back to Mr. Drummond, we went up ſtairs to the compting-houſe, and he looked over the books, and found the notes had been paid, and gave us a ſhilling a-piece for our trouble.

Did you and the priſoner go away?--Yes.

Did you make any complaint, or ſay any thing elſe?—No.

You expreſſed no diſcontentment?——No; then we went to the ſign of the Madman in St. James's-ſtreet, and there we had a couple of pots of porter, and then I parted with him.

At that time had you ever ſeen Mr. Drummond before in your life?—No, not to my knowledge.

Did the priſoner claim any acquaintance with Mr. Drummond?—No; he ſaid to me that he had never ſeen him before.

Did he ſay ſo expreſsly?—Yes.

Are you ſure of that?——Yes.

Was any perſon with you at the time you found theſe notes?——No, I was by myſelf, in the Green Park.

Did you know the priſoner at the time you found the notes?—Yes, I have known him for a year or two.

Did you ever ſee Mr. Drummond again till after the priſoner was in cuſtody, upon any occaſion whatever?—No.

Had you ever any converſation with the priſoner about Mr. Drummond, or about his character?—No, never at all.

Had you ſeen the priſoner after that day you was at Mr. Drummond's, till he was taken into cuſtody?—I never ſaw him till yeſterday.

Did not you ſee him at Bow-ſtreet?—No.

Court. You was with Harwood twice at Mr. Drummond's houſe about theſe drafts?——Yes.

Which of you converſed with Mr. Drummond?—Harwood; I told him to converſe with him, becauſe I have an impediment in my ſpeech; the ſecond time, I believe neither of us ſpoke a word to Mr. Drummond; he told us the notes had been paid.

You had full opportunity then, both you and particularly Harwood, who talked to Mr. Drummond, to know him?——Yes.

Did the priſoner, after you left Mr. Drummond, either of the times, or at any other time, expreſs any intimation that he had ſeen Mr. Drummond before?—No, Sir; he ſpoke of him as a perſon that he had never ſeen before.

And that after the laſt time you had ſeen Mr. Drummond?—Yes.

Continuation of the Trial of Jonathan Harwood.

Priſoner. Wetherhill was learning his duty, he came to me and aſked me if I would go with him, he ſaid he had been in the Park with Mr. David Drummond?

Wetherhill. That is falſe.

Priſoner. Did not you tell me that you had got Mr. Drummond's pocket handkerchief, as well as the two notes, it was marked D. D. you know it very well; it is no uſe in denying it?——No.

Priſoner. It is very hard that one ſoldier ſhould ſpeak ſo much againſt another.

Wetherhill. I told you yeſterday I would ſpeak nothing but the truth.

Priſoner. Speak the truth?——I do.

Court. Then you never told him what he has now ſaid?——I never did.

Did any thing further paſs between you and the priſoner; what paſſed between you and the priſoner yeſterday?——I ſaw him yeſterday morning, he ſhewed me a paper that he had wrote down, and aſked me whether I thought it beſt for him to ſay it, and if I would ſay as he ſaid; I ſhook my head, and told him I would ſay nothing but the truth; there was a woman went in along with me to ſee him, I do not know who ſhe is, ſhe was preſent and all the priſoners in the place.

MOSES MORANT ſworn.

I am an officer of Bow-ſtreet.

Do you recollect going with Mr. Drummond in the Park any time lately?—Yes, I ſaw Mr. Drummond at the office, I had no warrant, I was ordered to go to the ſign of the Goat, to wait there till I was ſent for, that was in conſequence of an application from Mr. Drummond; I was ordered to come there again at ſeven on Monday evening, I went at ſeven, I ſaw Mr. Drummond, he deſired I would walk into the Park near the new iron rails, next the Green Park, and there to remain till he came into the Park, and to keep my eye upon him when he came in, I told him I did not know that I ſhould know him, but when he firſt came into the Park, to go ſtrait acroſs which he did, he walked near twenty minutes, he croſſed me again, and ſaid he would go into the ſtable yard, he returned again, and as ſoon as he came back by the rails, I ſaw Mr. Drummond and the priſoner at the bar together, I then made up to them as ſoon as I could, and Mr. Drummond ſaid, ſays he, you have extorted money from me by threatening me; I then told the ſoldier he was my priſoner, I muſt take him before a magiſtrate; giſtrate; the ſoldier anſwered me, he was not a gentleman, he was ſure he would never uſe him ſo, to take him into cuſtody; he then walked on through the ſtable-yard by the guard-houſe, and the priſoner ſaid, do not go near the guard-houſe door, accordingly we came into St. James's ſtreet, and then I had a coach; the priſoner aſked me where I was going to, and I ſaid to Sir Sampſon Wright's; the priſoner then ſaid he does not mean to ſwear a robbery againſt me does he? he ſhould conſider me, my pay is but very low.

Court to Priſoner. Do you wiſh to aſk the officer any queſtion?——No.

The Rt. Hon. Lord SEMPILL ſworn.

I am acquainted with Mr. Drummond; on Saturday morning, I think about eight o'clock he came to me, and was in great diſtreſs, and aſked my advice, I told him.

Court. We cannot permit you, my Lord, to relate the particulars of that converſation, as the priſoner was not preſent.

Mr. Garrow. I have done.

Court. Now priſoner, this is the proper time for you to ſtate what you have to ſay in your own defence; you know what the charge is againſt you, and you have heard the evidence.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Pleaſe you my Lord, in the month of February, I was coming through St. James's Park, and I met Mr. Drummond, and he ſaid to me, ſoldier what is it o'clock? that was the word he ſaid to me, I told him I did not know; he then aſked me to ſtop, and aſked me if there were any common women in the Park, I told him I did not know; he told me to look for one, but I would not; then he unbuttoned his breeches and at the ſame time attempted to take hold of my breeches, and I began to make a noiſe, I ſaid oh fie! Mr. Drummond; he put ſome ſilver into my hand, and left me; I ſaw no more of him till I went with the notes, and then I ſaw no more of him, till there was a diſturbance in the Park, and then I ſaid, Mr. Drummond, Sir, how do you do? ſays he, do you know me? I ſaid, Sir, I went to your houſe, and do not you recollect ill-treating me ſo in the Park, about two months back? he ſaid yes; and he deſired me to make no diſturbance, and he gave me one half crown and three ſixpences to make no diſturbance, and I went to him to his houſe, and he gave me two guineas; he deſired me to meet him on the Monday night, and he would give me another guinea; I was on duty, and I wrote him two notes to let him know I could not meet him; when I came into the Park to get the guinea, this gentleman was with him, and took me up for ſaying I ſhould ſwear an unnatural crime to him, which I never mentioned any ſuch words.

Court. Have you any witneſſes to call?——I have no witneſſes, there was nobody but our two ſelves.

Have you any body to give you a character?——No, I have no friends in town.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I wiſh to call witneſſes to contradict this.

Court. I do not ſee that there is any charge againſt Mr. Drummond but the priſoner's defence; and that is unſupported by any evidence but the priſoner's own allegation.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the nature of this robbery being an uncommon one, has been ſtated to you by the learned counſel, who opened the proſecution; and it differs from the common generally received idea of robberies in this; that in theſe caſes, no perſonal violence is actually uſed, nor is there any immediate threat of bodily harm, which are circumſtances that in common caſes conſtitute highway robberies; when, therefore, the firſt caſe of this ſort occurred in a court of juſtice, conſiderable doubt was entertained, whether an indictment for a highway robbery (which implies the idea either of actual force, or fear, as it was generally underſtood, of life, or bodily injury) whether an indictment for that offence could be ſupported by circumſtances, ſimilar to thoſe which are now in evidence before you, and charged ed on the priſoner; on the firſt caſe of that kind it was reſerved for the ſolemn opinion of all the Judges, upon a queſtion of law being a ſubject of great importance; for on the one hand it was of conſequence that the law ſhould not be improperly ſtretched to a caſe to which it did not apply; on the other hand the publick was concerned in the puniſhment of a crime, which, if not a highway robbery, was certainly not of a leſs magnitude. The Judges were unanimouſly of opinion, that upon the principles of law, and former deciſions, it did ſufficiently come within the law to conſtitute the offence of a highway robbery, and that that terror, and apprehenſion of miſchief, following the refuſal of money, though not a threat, or actual violence in the perſon, was yet a ſufficient threat in point of law, to conſtitute the offence by putting in fear; therefore under that deſcription, and conſidering this fear, as coming within the meaning of the law, it was unanimouſly determined on that occaſion, to be a highway robbery in point of law: upon that the priſoner received judgment; but being the firſt caſe, it was not carried into execution. Another caſe has occured within my knowledge, in which a priſoner was convicted and executed for that offence. In conſidering this queſtion it becomes of conſiderable conſequence, becauſe the life of a priſoner on the one hand, and the character of the proſecutor on the other, in a point not leſs valuable than life, are materially affected; therefore I have no doubt, that you have paid that attention which the nature of this caſe requires; and it is the more neceſſary, becauſe the caſes are generally to be decided, and the truth come at, more by minute circumſtances connected with the conduct of the parties, than by the direct allegations of the parties either of the one ſide or the other; for the proſecutor who comes to charge this particular kind of highway robbery againſt the priſoner, certainly comes with ſo ſtrong a bias on his own mind, and with ſo great an intereſt in the verdict, that it is fortunate for juſtice, and the proſecutor himſelf, where circumſtances occur, ſo far to remove that ſort of doubt from the caſe, which otherwiſe would reſt upon it, if it ſtood on the proſecutor's own oath, ſtanding on that ſituation, whatever the character of the proſecutor may be. You are therefore to conſider, whether you can make out circumſtances from the teſtimony of other witneſſes, and from clear and indiſputable facts, to remove all darkneſs from a caſe that is frequently involved in great obſcurity. Mr. Drummond is the firſt, and from the nature of the caſe, the moſt material witneſs. [Here the learned Judge repeated his evidence, and added.] With reſpect to the impreſſion of the proſecutor's mind, it will go the full length, and rather further than the caſe I mentioned to you, and there cannot be the leaſt doubt in point of law, that this charge made by Mr. Drummond, is ſufficient to ſupport the indictment; and Mr. Drummond's conduct is a proof how difficult it is to judge properly at the moment; moſt undoubtedly he was led to give the money through fear, which was the moſt indiſcreet thing he could have done; for giving way to the firſt attack of this kind obliges the party either to lay under perpetual contributions to people of this ſort, or make the complaint under greater diſadvantages; and it is always a diſagreeable ſituation to fall into; but it is a ſituation to which men with the beſt intentions, and the moſt reputable characters may fall under ſuch an accuſation; therefore, the mere circumſtance of yielding to the impreſſion of fear in the moment, ought not to carry the preſumption of any thing like guilt in the party: the indecent conduct is diſproved, independant of the proſecutor's evidence; not only by the evidence of Wetherhill, but this going to Lord Sempill, was an additional proof that they did not know Mr. Drummond before; if therefore you believe the priſoner obtained this money from Mr. Drummond by thoſe threats, and that he delivered it under the impreſſion of fear, which he has ſtated, from fear of injury to his character, of being apprehended for a capital crime, or from an apprehenſion of perſonal violence; in that caſe, you will find the priſoner guilty: but if you can conceive the ſmalleſt ground for ſuppoſing there is any truth in the ſtory of the priſoner, which would give any colour for his applying for money; or if you have any doubt of the truth of Mr. Drummond's ſtory, in that caſe you will acquit the priſoner.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

Court. Mr. Drummond having been under the painful neceſſity of bringing forward ſuch a proſecution, it certainly is but juſtice to him to ſay, that his character is free from the ſmalleſt degree of imputation whatever; and there cannot be a ſhadow of doubt on any man's mind on the ſubject.

AMEY ELLIS ſworn.

I live by the Hatchway at Hackney. On Wedneſday the 15th of March, at ſeven in the evening, I left my houſe; I left nobody at home, I did not faſten it; I returned at a quarter paſt ten, and found the door bolted on the inſide; the door was left double locked; my ſervant went round to the back part of the houſe, and let me in; her name is Anna-Maria Cambrook; when I went in, I found the things ſeparate about, and in great confuſion, and a bureau broke open, which ſtood in the kitchen; I miſſed a great many things which ſtood in the kitchen; and from the one-pair of ſtairs, and the room even with the kitchen; we did not ſearch after any body; on the Saturday morning I was acquainted it was in the papers, and I went to the office in Whitechapel, and ſaw the things.

How happened it you did not go ſooner?——I found ſo much difficulty and trouble attending; it is what I have never been uſed to.

What was the reaſon you did not give information ſooner?——I do not know; I cannot give any reaſon.

Did you alarm the neighbours at all that night?—Nobody but this gentleman, who lived next door to me.

After the Saturday when you gave information, were any of the things found?——The priſoner was in cuſtody when I went to the office in Whitechapel.

ANNA-MARIA CAMBROOK ſworn.

I live in the houſe with Mrs. Ellis; I went out with her, and all was ſecured; and I faſtened the two bolts of the back door, and I double locked the ſtreet door; all the windows were faſt when I came home; the front door was bolted; when I went to the door of the next houſe, and went through the next houſe, I found the back door was wrenched, and wide open; the two ſtaples that faſtened the bolts were wrenched off. When I went into the houſe, I found a great many papers about the ground, and a table-cloth was dropped, and I alſo picked up a gown and petticoat that were dropped againſt the bed-room door; and there was a box of mine broke open, and a bureau of my miſtreſs's; almoſt all my clothes were loſt; they were all found together.

ESTHER WILKINSON ſworn.

I live the very next door; they came through my houſe, the lady and all of them, to go into their houſe; I heard nothing before; I was the third perſon that went in, and I found all the things in confuſion, and I was frightened, and returning home, I found this box dropped in Mrs. Ellis's yard, by my water tub; there is no fence between the two yards; I am ſure this is the ſame box I found; there is Mr. Ellis's picture in it.

JOHN ROBERTS ſworn.

On the 15th of March, between ten and eleven, I was going down Brick-lane, and I ſaw the priſoner coming along with a bundle; Brick-lane is one part in Spitalfields, and one part in Whitechapel.

Is that one way of coming in from Hackney?—Yes; I aſked the priſoner what he had there; he ſaid, it was a bed wrapped up in a blanket; I aſked him where he brought it from; he did not give me any anſwer at firſt, but afterwards he ſaid he brought it out of Barker's-yard, and was going to carry it into George-yard; he deſired me not to ſtop him, becauſe his wife was down-laying, and he owed a little rent, and was going away; and I inſiſted on ſeeing what was in the bundle; I took him to the Rotation-office, and there I looked over the things; I found it was not a bed; I took him over to the watch-houſe; the bundle contained the things now produced. I ſearched him; he ſaid I might ſearch him and welcome, for he had nothing but his own property about him: when I ſearched him, I found theſe three pins and theſe three pieces of ſilver; before I opened them, I aſked him what he had there? he ſaid, there were ſome pins, a ſhilling, and ſome halfpence; I found theſe things in his waiſtcoat-pocket after I ſtopped him; he brought the things a little way, and he would not carry them any further; I got this young man to aſſiſt me.

What did he ſay?—He ſaid he was hired to carry them as a porter.

Was what he ſaid, before or after you ſearched him?——After I found what the things were, he ſaid he was hired to carry them.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. Did not he tell you that thoſe things had been given to him by the perſon that had hired him, as a ſatisfaction for his labour?——I do not remember it.

Did not he give the account I mentioned?—I do not know.

What converſation had you with him about half a guinea?——I do not remember any thing of the kind.

Did not you ſay, that if he would give you half a guinea, you would let him go?—I never did.

Priſoner. Mr. Roberts, did not you aſk me for the half-guinea, and I told you I was a poor man?—My dear friend, you told me you was a poor man, and was going to move the bed and things, becauſe your wife was down-laying.

HENRY BUTTERIE ſworn.

I was in company with Roberts when he apprehended the man.

What did the man firſt ſay?——He was carrying a bed.

What did you find the bundle to contain?—The things that are here.

Did Roberts offer to let the priſoner go, if he would give him half a guinea?—No, there never was ſuch a word mentioned; I was preſent all the time; I carried the bundle to the Rotation-office.

(The Pins and piece of Silver depoſed to by Anna-Maria Cambrook, and the large ſilver Piece, which ſhe had had about nine months, and which her miſtreſs gave her.)

Mrs. Ellis. I know it, I gave it to her, it is the ſame I gave her. This chintz counterpane was in a box in the dining-room cloſet.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

About a quarter after ten, I was called out of a public houſe; I was there from half after four, I never quitted the houſe; a man aſked for a porter, and the boy at the public houſe told him of me; he called me out; the man aſked me if I was a porter? I told him yes; I immediately went in and fetched out my knot; I went with him, and by the French church, Spitalfields, another man ſtood, and they put a bundle on my head, and bid me go into Whitechapel, and they would take it themſelves; and when I got about five or ſix yards, one of them came in between the wall and me, and ſaid, young man, we neither of us have any money, but you will find ſomething in this paper that will ſatisfy you, and immediately put it in my right-hand waiſtcoat-pocket, and being confuſed, I did not know what to ſay when I was ſtopped; they ſaid it was a bed, and ſo I ſaid the ſame.

Court to Roberts. Tell me diſtinctly what the priſoner ſaid with reſpect to thoſe things that you found in his waiſtcoat-pocket, in the paper?——When I took them out, wrapped up, I aſked him what they were, before the watchman in the watch-houſe; he told me they were ſome pins, one ſhilling, and ſome halfpence.

Mr. Garrow. You did not find any crow, or implement of houſe-breaking upon him?——No, I did not.

What did he ſay before you ſearched him?—He ſaid he had nothing but his own property in his pocket; he ſaid I might ſearch him and welcome; he did not make any objection to being ſearched.

(The Priſoner's Witneſſes called ſeparately, by order of the Court.)

ELIZABETH JONES ſworn.

I keep the Black Horſe, George-yard, Whitechapel.

Court. Now, Mrs. Jones, before you are examined, I give you a caution; be very careful in what you ſay, ſpeak nothing but the truth; you may depend upon it, that if you tranſgreſs the truth, you will be diſcovered; we have certain means of diſcovery, and if you are, you may depend upon it you ſhall not eſcape puniſhment; I give you fair warning; I do not wiſh that any witneſs ſhould be trepanned; therefore ſpeak carefully; if you ſpeak the truth, you have nothing to fear.

How long have you known the young man at the bar?—I have known that young man for ſeven months; he has uſed my houſe from Chriſtmas; he is a porter from Billingſgate, and he has been out of buſineſs and employment, and no ſettled place; latterly, he has been a jobbing porter.

Do you remember ſeeing any thing of him on the 15th of March?——The 15th of March, he came in about four in the afternoon, with his knot on his ſhoulder; that was a wet day; his wife happened to be out; he ſaid, well, now I am come, for my comfort I have the key of the ſtreet-door; I ſaid, never mind, ſit down and dry your clothes; he ſtaid till nine at night, and then he and two more men ſupped off of twopenny and toaſt and cheeſe.

Do you know theſe two men?—Yes.

What are their names?——James Pike and James Jones.

Court. Was it toaſted cheeſe?——No, Sir, Cheſhire cheeſe, to the beſt of my knowledge it was; I brought them a great bowl to put the toaſt in; they had ſugar, but no nutmeg. Some time after ſupper, his wife came in with a plate of cold meat that ſhe went to the cook's ſhop for, and ſhe called for a pint of beer, and aſked him if he would have any? and he ſaid no, he did not want any, he had had a very good ſupper; that was between nine and ten; and while ſhe was eating her cold meat, he then ſaid to his wife, Polly, ſays he, make haſte, for we keep Mrs. Jones up; I looked at the dial, and ſaid, no, Mr. Watts, you do not, for if nobody was in the houſe, I ſhould not ſhut up till eleven; it was then near twenty minutes after ten, if not half an hour. After ſhe had drank her firſt pint of beer, ſhe called for a ſecond pint, and it was after that, that he bid her make haſte; that made me be ſo particular to the time, or elſe I ſhould not have noticed it: then they called for the other pint after that.

Who called for it?——It was his wife; ſhe ſaid, Bill, if you can drink a little beer, we will have another pint, I have had nothing all day.

Where were the other two men that ſupped with him?—They were there alſo, for they lodged in the houſe; they were not out of the houſe at all, nor the priſoner was not out of the houſe from the time he came in; they ſtaid all of them; they never went to-bed till I ſhut up my houſe; they were all of them with the priſoner in the ſame box, and the priſoner's wife eat her ſupper in the ſame box.

Were there many other people in the ſame box at this time?——Only them three together, and the wife with them.

Were theſe men at home all the afternoon?—They were in the room when the priſoner came in; Pike was mending his harneſs, he came in about half an hour after the priſoner came in, in the afternoon; he had his harneſs on his ſhoulder, he is a coachman; Jones was in the tap-room when the priſoner came in, for he was not well, and not able to work, and he was at home all day; he has no where to be, but about the houſe.

What liquor had the priſoner from four till nine?——He had one pint of beer; he had no more till they joined in company, then I believe they had three or four pots of twopenny and toaſt at ſupper; but he had only one pint before ſupper.

Had Pike and Jones any drink when they came in?—I cannot recollect that; theſe three men did not join company till they went to ſupper together.

Were they acquainted before, the priſoner and theſe two men?—No, not particularly acquainted; they had met together in the houſe before, they knew one another.

Was your huſband at home?—He was not very well that night, and was gone up to bed.

What time did he go to-bed?——I take it he went up to bed at the time they were at ſupper; he ſays the bowl was on the table when he went up.

Did he take a bit with them before he went?——No, Sir, he did not eat with them, nor drink.

Did you ſup with them?—No, Sir.

Nor drink?—I never touched it, upon my word.

Did not you ſit down, and eat a bit with the wife, to keep her company when ſhe came in?—No, Sir, I did not; I never ſat down with any of them, nor eat nor drank with any of them; I was minding my buſineſs.

How came they to have no nutmeg to this toaſt and ale, becauſe that is a neceſſary ingredient?—They had none, Sir; nutmegs are too dear now, they are ſixpence a-piece, they are too dear to give away.

Had you none in the houſe?——No.

Had they any ſpirits?——No, no ſpiritual liquors.

Had they no gin?——No.

Nor rum-punch?——No.

What time did they go away?——Mr. Watts went out of my houſe, a little boy fetched him out, about half after ten, ſoon after the converſation about his not keeping me up; I ſaw no more of Watts.

How long did his wife ſtay after that?—She ſtopped a little bit, and then ſhe went, ſhe took her beer in her hand, about a quarter of a pint.

Recollect now, whether ſhe did or not?—I think ſhe did, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Are you ſure, one way or the other?—I think ſhe took it in her hand; they live but over the way, and I ſuppoſe ſhe took it home; there was not more than a quarter of a pint left.

Might ſhe not as well have ſwallowed that, as taken it away with her?——I cannot ſay.

What became of the two men that were in company?——They were left behind, they never went out of the houſe.

Did the priſoner's wife and theſe two men continue in company together after the priſoner went away, till the wife went away?——Yes, ſhe went out ſoon after.

But till ſhe went out they continued in company, only the priſoner leaving them?—Yes.

How ſoon after ſhe went away did you ſhut up?——About a quarter after eleven, I ſaw no more of none of them after that.

Was there any body left in the houſe, after the wife went away, except your lodgers?—I am not able to ſay that, Sir, but I know we were in bed very ſoon that night.

Was there any body in company with Pike and Jones after?——No, Sir, they never had any thing to drink after, nor fell in company with any body after, but went up ſtairs to bed when I ſhut in.

How long had Pike lodged with you?—About ſeven months, or there about.

How long had Jones lodged with you?—About a year and a half.

What houſe did you keep before that?—I lived in Newcaſtle-ſtreet, Whitechapel, I kept this publick houſe between ſeven and eight months.

Is it licenſed in your huſband's name, or in any other?——In my huſband's name.

What is James Jones?—He is a hackney coachman, both he and Pike are coachmen.

Did Pike come to lodge with you as ſoon as you came to this publick houſe?—Yes, his coach and horſes ſtand in our yard now, they came to ſtand there about the time we came there, within a week or two; Jones has no coach and horſes of his own, he is only a ſervant.

Does Pike keep more than one coach do you know?—No, only one, my huſband uſed to drive for him before we took that houſe.

What part of the houſe did Pike lodge in?——In the two pair of ſtairs front room.

Where did Jones lodge?——He at the time laid in the one pair of ſtairs back room, but now they both ſleep up two pair of ſtairs.

Had they lodged in the ſame rooms from the time you came into the houſe, or had they changed their apartments?—They never changed their apartments before this, till within this fortnight or three weeks, Jones has gone up to Pike's room, they have lodged together in different beds, there are three beds in the room that Pike lays in.

Were there any other lodgers in the room?——Yes.

Who lodged in the room with Pike at the time this happened in March laſt?——There was a lad lodged there in the ſame room with Pike at that time, his name is William Clarke, he laid along with Pike, and my own child laid along with James Jones.

What time did William Clark come in the afternoon?—He drives a coach, but not Pike's, and it is uncertain as to his coming in, the boy never was at home while I was up.

Who ſat up for him?——Nobody, he had a key to let himſelf in.

Did Pike go to bed much about the time you went, or before?—Much about the time.

When did you hear that Watts was taken up?——The next morning about eight o'clock my huſband came up and informed me.

When did you ſee him afterwards?——I did not ſee him at all, I was ready to go, and they would not ſuffer any body to go up; they were to run and fetch me proviſo I was wanted, I ſent word that I would come if I was wanted, and they would not let any body in; both Pike and Jones went up to the office in readineſs.

Who did you ſend up word by?——By Pike or Jones, one of the men that uſes the houſe.

Was it Pike or Jones, or was it any body elſe?——It was ſome of them that went up.

Who are them?——It muſt be Pike or Jones, I think it was.

Who came and told you they would not let thoſe people up that were there?——Why the men Pike and Jones, they came back together, and ſaid they would not ſuffer any body to come up ſtairs.

Is your huſband here?—No.

Has he recovered his illneſs?—Yes.

Why did not he come here?—I did not know he was wanted.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know who the little boy was that came to call the priſoner?——He leads two blind men about.

Do you know his name?——His name is Sam, but I am ſure I do not know his other name.

Is he here?—No.

Did the boy tell the priſoner what he wanted with him?——No, he ſaid there was a man wanted him at the door, he ſaid that and no more.

Did they go out together?—No, Mr. Watts ſtopped a bit after the boy went out.

Did Mr. Watts take out his knot with him, or did he come back for it?—His wife came back for the knot, it was under the bench.

How long was he out before his wife came back for the knot?—I imagine it may be five minutes, ſhe came back directly.

Did they go out together?——No, he went out firſt, then ſhe followed him with that drop of beer I have mentioned, and then ſhe came back and fetched the knot.

You are ſure it was the wife that fetched the knot?—Yes, Sir.

You particularly remember that, it was a remarkable circumſtance?—Yes, Sir, I am very ſure.

Did ſhe ſay where he was going?—No, any further than ſhe ſaid did my huſband leave his knot here, Mrs. Jones? and I ſaid, yes, Mrs. Watts, it is under the table, or under the ſettle or ſomewhere there; ſhe found it under there.

Who handed it to her?—She went and looked for it herſelf.

Did they get up for to let her get it?—No they did not, ſhe took it out herſelf, ſhe took the candle from the fore door.

JAMES PIKE ſworn.

What are you?—I am a coach maſter, I keep a coach of my own.

Court. How many coaches do you keep?——Only one.

Where does it ſtand?——At the Black Horſe in George yard.

How long has it ſtood there?——About eight months.

Who kept the houſe when it firſt ſtood there?——Mr. Jones kept the houſe.

Where do you lodge?——At Mr. Jones's, I have not lodged there above four months.

Then you did not come to lodge there when you firſt put your coach in the yard?——No, not till four months after.

Do you drive your own coach?——Sometimes.

Who drives for you when you do not drive yourſelf?——One Thomas Robjohn drives for me.

Has he always driven for you when you do not drive yourſelf?——Yes, my Lord, only one day I was obliged to ſend another man out.

When theſe people went to the Black Horſe you took your coach and horſes to ſtand there?—Yes.

And about four months ago you went to lodge there yourſelf?——I have known them a great many years.

How did you get acquainted with Jones?—His being a hackney coachman himſelf.

Whoſe coach did he uſe to drive?——One Mr. Lindſey, I think, was his laſt maſter, it ſtands in Old Gravel-lane; Jones did drive for me before he kept the publick houſe.

How happened you did not go to lodge at his houſe when you took your coach and horſes to the yard?——Becauſe I had lodgings of my own, and when my wife died I kept them ſome time, I went to lodge there.

So that you recollect certainly, it was about four months ago?——Yes, it was about that time.

What part of the houſe did you lodge in?——The front room two pair of ſtairs.

Who elſe lodged in that room?—There was James Jones, and Bill Clarke, and Dick Clarke, all in the ſame room.

Which was there firſt, you or James Jones?——James Jones lodged there before me.

How many beds are there in that room?——Three.

Who were in poſſeſſion of the three beds when you came to lodge there?——I cannot recollect.

Try?——There was both the Clarkes that I have mentioned, and one William Worm.

Where was Jones then?—He came and lodged in the ſame room while I was there.

Were you before Jones?——Yes, but Jones lay in the room below before he came up ſtairs; about a week after I came to lodge in the houſe, Jones came to lodge in the ſame room with me, he lodged up one pair of ſtairs before, in February and March laſt, we both lodged in the ſame room together.

Do you know the priſoner Watts?——Very well.

What is he?——A porter.

When did you firſt hear of his being taken up?——On the ſixteenth, in the morning, as ſoon as I got up.

Where did you hear he was?——In the watch-houſe at Whitechapel.

Did you go to ſee him?——No, I went to the Juſtice's when he was to have his examination, but they would not let us in.

Who went with you?——Dick Clarke and James Jones, three or four of us went.

Did Mrs. Jones the miſtreſs of the houſe go with you?——She was there, but ſhe did not go with me, ſhe went there before me, I found her there when I went.

You recollect that diſtinctly?—Yes.

Did they refuſe to let her up?——She told me ſo when ſhe came out, ſhe ſaid there was nobody admitted to go up, that was the words ſhe ſaid.

She told you?——Yes.

Did ſhe complain of their not letting her up?——Yes, ſhe ſaid it was very hard that they would not let her up to ſpeak for him.

Did ſhe tell you that at the Juſtice's?—Yes, at the door of the Juſtice's, I did not go home with her, but I am not ſure whether I went home after her or before her.

Was it Bill Clarke or Dick Clarke that was with you?——Only Dick Clarke.

Did James Jones go with you?——He was with us in company.

Which of you went home with her?—I think James Jones went home with her, he is brother to the man that keeps the houſe; we all went home within a little trifle of one another; I found her there, ſhe was there before me, I do not know who went with her; I thought ſhe had been up, till ſhe came down, and ſaid, there was no admittance for anybody, and ſhe thought it was very hard.

When had you ſeen this priſoner before that?——On the fifteenth in the evening, we were in company together at Mrs. Jones's houſe.

Who drove your coach that day?——I think it was Tom Robjohn, I was not out with the coach all that day, I think I was gone to bed before he came home that night.

Where were you then all the afternoon?—I was at home mending my harneſs, and in the afternoon about five I brought my harneſs in and Mr. Watts was helping me to mend it, and he did mend it, I held it for him to put it together, he was in the houſe when I went in.

Did you and he join company immediately?——Yes, as ſoon as I went in he came and lent me an hand to harneſs directly.

How long did he ſtay there?—He ſtaid there till after ten.

And you alſo?—Yes.

You both ſtaid there?—Yes.

Had you any ſupper?—Yes, after we had done the harneſs we had toaſt and ale, the three of us together.

the priſoner mended the harneſs himſelf, and I held it for him, he could handle the tools better than I could.

What beer did you drink while you was at work?—We had only one pint before ſupper.

What in all that time?——We had no more I am ſure.

Did any body elſe ſup with you and him?—Mr. Jones.

Which of the Jones's?—James Jones.

What time did he come in?—About ſix as near as I can gueſs, I am not ſure to a minute, he was in and out in the afternoon and ſettled at home about ſix.

When did James Jones join company with you and the priſoner?—We went all to ſupper together.

Who elſe ſupped with you?—Nobody elſe.

What did not the landlord of the houſe ſup with you?—No.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

Where was he?—He was in bed before we ſupped, he gets up in a morning.

Did you ſee him that afternoon at all?—Yes.

As near as you can recollect, what time did he go to bed?—I cannot recollect.

Was it before you went to ſupper?—I am not ſure, I cannot ſay.

Should not you have aſked him to have eat a bit with his brother?—We ſhould if he had been up, but I am pretty ſure he was not up.

Did not the landlady ſit down with you to take a little of this toaſt and ale?——No.

What, is not ſhe fond of toaſt and ale?—No, I do not recollect ſhe eat any.

Do not you recollect her taking a ſlice of the toaſt when ſhe brought you the nutmeg?—We had no nutmeg, ſhe had not got any, we had ſome cheeſe and ſugar with the toaſt and ale.

Was your cheeſe toaſted?—No.

Who elſe ſupped in company with you beſides James Jones and the priſoner?—Nobody elſe ſupped with us, we joined all three of us together.

How ſoon after ſupper, did the priſoner go out?—He did not go out only into the yard, there came a man's horſe home ſick of the ſtaggers, and we all went out to help, that was after we had done ſupper between nine and ten.

That took up ſome time, I ſuppoſe?——Yes.

Did you all come in again?—Yes, altogether.

What time might that be?—I do not ſuppoſe we were above a quarter of an hour, we had another pot of twopenny after we came in.

What time did the priſoner go away?—It was after ten, twenty minutes or thereabouts

Did he go away by himſelf?—He was ſent for, a boy came for him and told him he was wanted.

What boy was it?—A little boy that uſes the houſe, that comes for beer to the houſe, I think they call him Sam, he ſaid a gentleman wanted him, that was what he ſaid, he did not tell us what for.

Did he tell him to bring his knot with him?——No, he ſaid nothing about his knot.

Had the priſoner any knot there?——Yes, he brought a knot with him in the evening.

Did you ſee him bring it in?—No, I was not at home, but I ſaw the knot, becauſe it lay in a coal box juſt where we ſat.

Was it you, or James Jones that handed the knot to him when he went out?—He did not take it out with him himſelf.

Was it left there all night?—No, his wife came and fetched it.

How long after he went out was it before his wife came in?—A very little while after.

What did his wife ſay when ſhe firſt came in?——She ran in and aſked for her huſband's knot, and came in and took it out.

How did ſhe know her huſband's knot had been there that night?—Becauſe ſhe had not been at home all the evening herſelf, ſelf, and ſhe came to bring him a bit of ſupper, a bit of beef, and aſked him to eat a bit and have a pint of beer, ſhe ſupped there; that muſt be ten o'clock or thereaways, we had done ſupper, and he told her he had done ſupper, and ſhe ſat down and eat by herſelf.

What did ſhe ſup upon?——I believe it was a bone of beef, it looked like beef.

Did Mrs. Jones and ſhe ſup together?—No.

What had the wife to drink?—She had a pint of beer with her ſupper, and ſhe called for another pint, ſhe did not go away till her huſband was fetched out and ſhe went out after him, and came back for the knot immediately, ſhe followed him out directly, it was a very little while, I ſuppoſe ſhe wanted to ſee what he was wanted for; ſhe did not ſit any time with me and Jones after.

Did ſhe leave her ſecond pint of beer then?—I am not ſure whether it was drawn or not.

Jones and you remained in the box?—Yes.

Had you any ſpirits any of you that evening?—No, not a drop.

Did any body elſe join company with you?—Nobody, only we aſked the little boy to drink out of our pot, I ſaw no more of the priſoner that night; I went to bed a little before eleven.

Where was Bill Clarke that afternoon?—He was at home, he went up to bed with us.

Where was Dick Clarke?——I cannot ſay, he was out with the coach I believe that night, I do not remember ſeeing him at home.

There are two Clarke's lodge in the houſe then, Bill and Dick?—Yes.

Did not Bill Clarke ſup with you that night?—He might eat a bit, but not to join with us.

Did you aſk him?—I think he might eat a mouthful, but not to ſup with us; Mr. Watts hurried his wife, he ſaid make haſte and eat your ſupper, my dear, for we are keeping Mrs. Jones up; and Mrs. Jones ſaid, Mr. Watts, do not hurry yourſelf, for I ſhould not go to bed before eleven, if I had nobody here.

Who ſat up for Dick Clarke?—Nobody ſat up for him, if he is out he has a key to let himſelf in.

Do you remember James Jones getting up to let any-body in after you went up ſtairs?—I do not recollect that, he might, I know he has done ſuch things.

Court. Let theſe witneſſes go out of Court, and let James Jones come in.

JAMES JONES ſworn.

What are you by buſineſs?—A coachman, I live at the Black-horſe in Whitechapel, I am brother to a man that keeps the Black-horſe.

Do you lodge at his houſe?——Yes.

How long have you lodged there?—Two years pretty nigh.

Always in the ſame houſe?—No, I was in another houſe.

Where did he live before?—He lived in Caſtle-ſtreet Whitechapel: after I went to the Black-horſe, I lodged in the one pair of ſtairs.

Who elſe lodged in the room with you?—Her ſon before ſhe was married to my brother.

Do you know Pike?—Yes, very well.

Where did he lodge?—He lodged at his own houſe; then, and after his wife died, he came to lodge up two pair of ſtairs in the garret.

How long has Pike lodged there?—I imagine it may be ſix or ſeven weeks, I cannot tell the time.

Do you remember the time when this man at the bar was taken up?—Yes, perfectly well.

How long before that had he lodged at the houſe?—I cannot ſwear to the time.

As near as you can recollect?—It may be two or three weeks before, I cannot ſay, he lodged in the two pair of ſtairs, I laid in the one at firſt.

Who lodged in the ſame room with Pike?—One William Clarke lodged with him, there was three beds in the room; there was Richard Clarke, and that was all that lodged there; I went up two pair of ſtairs on account of a man and his wife that came and laid a couple of nights in the houſe, and I moved up to make room for them, the man was going on board a ſhip, I have continued up ſtairs ever ſince.

Was that before or after the priſoner was taken?—Oh, ſince the priſoner was taken.

When did you firſt hear that the priſoner was taken up?—About eleven I believe at night.

That was the very night he was taken up?—Yes.

Who came and told you?—I think it was the watchman that told me while I was ſhutting the gates.

Did you go to ſee him that night?—No, I did not.

Had you ſeen him that night before you heard he was taken up?—Yes, he had been at the houſe and ſupped with me.

What time did he come into the houſe at night?—He was in before I went in.

What time did you come in?—It was in the afternoon, I had been trying to get into Bartholemew's hoſpital, and it was a wet day and I ſtaid by the way; I went out in the morning between nine and ten, I think I came home between four and five, as nigh as I can gueſs, I did not take knowledge of the time.

When you came, I think you ſay, Watts was there?—He was.

What was he doing when you came in?—He was hemming a ſtirrup and mending a pad, I think it was, or ſome of the harneſs, in one of the boxes in the houſe at the window.

Did you join company with them then?—I joined company with them when I came in, I continued at the houſe the remainder of the night, I never went out any further than into the yard.

What beer had you?—We had three pots of twopenny.

Did any body elſe drink with you at that time?—Only us three, this man at the bar and the man with the wooden leg, and I, we had three pots of twopenny, we called for it about eight, when we began to toaſt the bread to put to the twopenny, I did not drink any beer before I went to ſupper, nor I did not ſee them drink; I ſat all the afternoon without drinking, I commonly ſit there all day without drinking, becauſe I have been ill ſo long.

What had you for ſupper?—Toaſt and twopenny and ſome Cheſhire cheeſe, and ſome moiſt ſugar.

Which of you was it called for the nutmeg?——We had no nutmeg at all.

How happenened that?——Really I do not know, I think a was aſked for, but they ſaid there was none in the houſe, I am ſure we had no nutmeg; after ſupper there was a horſe came in with the mad ſtaggers, and we all three went out together to ſee it, there was nobody elſe in the houſe hardly, this was a little after nine, we ſtopped but a very few minutes, I came in again directly, we had a pot of twopenny after we came in, that made the fourth pot.

Did the priſoner go away then, or did he come back with you?——He came back with us again, and ſat down and drank ſhare of the laſt pot, he went away about half after ten.

Did any of you go out with him?——Nobody that I know of that belonged to the houſe; the boy came and enquired for a porter, I do not know who that boy was, I have ſeen the boy leading a couple of blind men about, but I do not know who he was.

Who anſwered the boy?——I believe the priſoner anſwered the boy; and ſaid do you want a porter at this time at night, the boy ſaid you muſt come directly, for the gentleman is waiting for a porter; I cannot remember who the boy ſpoke to firſt.

Did not Mrs. Jones your ſiſter-in-law anſwer the boy?—I cannot ſay, I remember my ſiſter ſtopping the boy, and aſking him what ſort of a man it was, the boy ſaid it was a talliſh man, with a cocked up hat, and my ſiſter aſked him where he was, and he ſaid, he ſtood in the ſtreet; then it was that the priſoner aſked who could want a porter at that time of the night? and ſomebody in the houſe made anſwer to him, go and ſee, and he went out to ſee, and his wife followed him out, if I am not miſtaken, his wife was there, and brought a bit of meat for his ſupper, and he ſaid he had done ſupper, ſo ſhe called for a pint of beer and eat it.

Did ſhe go out a little after him?——Yes, to the beſt of my knowledge ſhe did, and came back again to look for his knot,

What o'clock might this be?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was as nigh half after ten as can be, I could almoſt ſwear to the time, by his ſaying to his wife, we keep Mrs. Jones up, and ſhe ſaid, I ſhall not ſhut up till eleven, if there is nobody in the houſe, I looked at the clock, that made me ſo particular.

What time was the houſe ſhut up?—At eleven, as nigh as I can gueſs, and while I was ſhutting the gates, I heard he was taken up, the doors were then ſhut.

When you heard that the man that had juſt been ſupping with you was taken up; why did not you go to the watch houſe?——I could do him no good, I was no houſekeeper, and another thing, I did imagine they would not have let me ſeen him, if I had gone; the next morning when he went to have his hearing, I went down, I do not know that I did tell them any thing of it that night.

Was it ſo common a thing for your friends to be taken up?——I might mention it to my ſiſter, Pike might be gone to bed, ſhe might be gone up ſtairs.

Had not your brother and you ſome talk about it that night?—No, he was gone to bed, I believe, he went to bed about nine, or between nine and ten.

Did he go to bed directly after ſupper?—I do not know, he did not ſup with us.

He ſupped in the other room?—I cannot ſay where he ſupped that night, or what time he went to bed that night.

Was there any particular reaſon for his going to bed that night?——No, not that I know of, he had not complained of being ill that I heard, I was ſo ill myſelf; the next morning I went down to ſee Watts.

Who went with you?——I went by myſelf.

Did your ſiſter go before you, or after you?——If ſhe went at all, ſhe went after me, I believe; but I do not know, I did not ſee her there.

Then you do not remember hearing her ſay it was very hard they would not let her in to ſpeak for him?—No; that muſt be the ſecond time, I do not think ſhe went there, the firſt morning I went by myſelf, and I think I came back by myſelf.

What became of the two Clarkes that night that the priſoner ſupped there?——They might be out, for what I know.

Were they both out?—To the beſt of my knowledge I believe they were; I cannot be ſure; I believe William Clarke might drink out of the bowl; they ſay he did, but I cannot be ſure; I do not remember ſeeing Dick at all.

Pike and you ſlept in the ſame room together?——But not at that time.

Who was it that called to you to get up, and let in Dick Clarke?—I do not remember; I do not know what time Dick Clarke came home; the room lays backwards, and I cannot hear; I was not examined at the Magiſtrate's, they would not let me in.

Court. Call in Pike again.

To Pike. Who was firſt up in the morning after the priſoner was taken up?—I cannot ſay; I moſt generally get up in the morning myſelf firſt.

Who told you that morning that he was taken up?—Mr Jones.

Which of the Jones's?——The maſter of the houſe; that was about half after eight, or rather before; James Jones was not up, I believe.

Was it before or after you was told of it, that Mr. Jones went to the office?——It was after that; ſome time after they had had their hearing, in the middle of the day, I went to the office, when I heard he was going to have his hearing; I think it was after Mrs. Jones came; I met her there, and ſhe complained to me that they would not let her up.

Mr. Garrow. How long have you known the priſoner ?—About eight months ; I always heard a very good character of him, as an honeſt hard-working man.

The priſoner called two more witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

Court to Roberts. Whereabouts did you firſt meet the priſoner that night ?——The end of Church-ſtreet, Brick-lane.

You know the George-yard ?—Yes.

How far is that from the George yard ? ——Not a great diſtance.

How far is it ?—I look upon it, a man may go in ten minutes.

Is it a quarter of a mile, half a mile, or a mile ?——About a quarter of a mile.

Was the priſoner going towards, or from George-yard ?—Towards George-yard.

I think he told you it was a bed, wrapped up in a blanket, that he was bringing it from Barker's-yard, and carrying it to George-yard ?——He ſaid he was a poor man, and had a little rent behind, and that his wife was down-laying.

Butterill. I was cloſe behind ; Roberts aſked him what he had on his back ; he told him a bed, tied up in a blanket ; he ſaid he had a bed, and was going to George-yard ; Roberts ſaid he muſt go with him ; the things were tied up as they were now.

In what manner was he carrying them ? —Carrying them on a knot.

GUILTY, Death.

Court to Jury. I confeſs, Gentlemen, I may now very openly declare, that I perfectly concur with you in opinion ; I am extremely ſatisfied with your verdict. I think theſe witneſſes ſhould not be permitted to eſcape with impunity ; I have no doubt but the ſtory they have told us is falſe ; let them all three be committed to Newgate.

Court to Priſoner Watts. I do not mean now to pronounce upon you the ſentence of the law, which will be done at the regular time, but I have called you back for the purpoſe of telling you what you are to expect, and the reaſon of it ; the crime for which you have been convicted is an enormous one, and it is a growing one ; your fate would have been extremely doubtful at all events ; but if there was any doubt at all, you have probably completely removed it, by the attempt you have made in ſetting up a defence which the verdict of the Jury, concurring with my opinion, has diſcredited : therefore you muſt prepare for your fate, and you are not to expect that the mercy of your Sovereign will be extended to you : and I hope it will be underſtood by every body, that thoſe attempts to eſcape puniſhment will always be conſidered as aggravations of the crime ; and where the crime is of a capital nature, ſuch attempts to elude the law will preclude the priſoner from any hope of mercy, and alſo bring the deſerved puniſhment on the heads of the witneſſes themſelves.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

331. WILLIAM SMITH, otherwiſe STORER, and JOSEPH ROBINSON, otherwiſe GOSLING, were indicted, for that they, on the 25th day of March laſt, one piece of falſe, feigned, and counterfeit copper money, to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of an halfpenny, unlawfully and feloniouſly did make, coin, and counterfeit, againſt the ſtatute.

(The Caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

JOSEPH GATES ſworn.

On the 25th of March laſt, I went to Frying-pan-alley about one o'clock, with Mr. Clarke, the City Marſhal, and John Clarke, and Wilſon ; I went to the back-door with Wilſon, and knocked ſeveral times ; at laſt Smith came to the door, and we went in ; Clarke took Smith, and Robinſon was found in the neceſſary with his hands all greaſy and dirty, and a greaſy jacket on ; Smith's hands were dirty and greaſy. I then went down into the cellar, and found the fly ready prepared, and a halfpenny between the dies ; there was no cutting-preſs ; there was a quantity of halfpence done up in five-ſhilling papers.

Where is the halfpenny that was in the die?——It is here.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel, to Gates. You have told us all you found?—Yes.

Have you never ſeen an engine for finiſhing a halfpenny?—No, there was none.

Did you find any pickle?—No.

Do not you know, that the fly leaves the halfpenny rough?——I do not know.

Court. Was there any blank found?—Yes, a great many.

It is a common thoroughfare?—It is.

You found Smith in Bull-head-alley?—He came out of the back yard; he came out of the yard into Bull's-head paſſage.

How was he dreſſed?——As he is now, but his coat was not buttoned.

Mr. Silveſter. You told me you knocked at the door?——Yes.

Court. You went with Clarke to the back door?——Yes.

In the neceſſary you found the other priſoner, in the cellar you found the fly and a halfpenny?——Yes.

HENRY WILSON ſworn.

You went to the back door with Gates?——Yes.

Who opened the door?——Smith; his hands were dirty.

Mr. CLARKE, City Marſhal, ſworn.

I found a great number of halfpence round the fly, ſome on one ſide, and ſome on the other. (Produces the halfpence and blanks.)

Court. Where are thoſe halfpence that are done up in papers?—They are here.

Then you took them before the Lord Mayor?——I took them before Alderman Harley. (The halfpence in papers produced.) There were a number of halfpence that were not in circulation.

JAMES SHAKESHAFT ſworn.

I went, by the direction of Alderman Harley; I found five large and ſeven ſmall papers of halfpence, and a brimſtone pan.

JOHN CLARKE, of Bow-ſtreet, ſworn.

Look at thoſe halfpence and the die.

(Looks at them.)

Are they counterfeits?——Yes.

What are thoſe nets for?——To boil them in; here is another counterfeit.

Court. Are they from the ſame die?—No; ſome of them are ſtruck with the die that was found in the preſs, and ſome with a different die; here are ſome of this die.

Mr. Silveſter. What is this paper?—Thirty ſhillings worth.

Court. This piece is what you call finiſhed?——Yes.

Prisoner Smith's Defence.

I was at dinner at the priſoner Robinſon's houſe; his wife aſked me to come in and have a diſh of tea; I ſtaid there three quarters of an hour; I ſtept into this back yard about ten minutes; there they took me; I have not been in town above three or four days together for theſe two years.

WILLIAM WATNEY ſworn.

I live at Wimbledon; I have known the priſoner Smith ſeven years; he has been at Wimbledon with me ſince October 1783, and has had no reſidence ſince; he came to town on the 22d of March with me to get ſome things for his wife, who is now in St. Luke's, quite deprived of her ſenſes entirely; I gave him a guinea, and a little ſilver, to buy him neceſſaries; he ſupported himſelf in button-mould turning before October 1783; he has lived with me ever ſince; I am a common brewer, and have a farm, and he has aſſiſted me in every thing I have to do.

Where was he in October 1782?——I believe he was here confined in this priſon.

What for, do you know?——I do not know what it was for; I believe he is a very honeſt man, and till his wife took this misfortune of being ill, he would not have come to London for five months together.

GEORGE BADGER ſworn.

I live in Goſwell-ſtreet, I am a cooper; the priſoner Smith was with me on the morning of the 25th of March, at the Dyer in Goſwell-ſtreet, between eight and nine in the morning; he continued there till ten, or from ten to eleven; I have ſeen him at the Sheers in Wood-ſtreet; he went away firſt, for a woman that I never ſaw before, came and aſked him to go and eat a bit of dinner with her, I ſaw no more of him, I have known him ten years.

Where has he lived lately?—As far as I can find he lived at Wimbledon; I have not ſeen him theſe ſix months; his wife is in the lunatick hoſpital, I cannot juſtly ſay what his character was lately.

Mr. Reeve. Was you in the court when the laſt witneſs was examining?—No, I was not.

Priſoner Robinſon. My wife went to order a bit of dinner and ſhe ſaw this priſoner, and aſked him to eat a bit of dinner.

WILLIAM SMITH otherwiſe STORER, } GUILTY.

JOSEPH ROBINSON, GUILTY.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, with reſpect to Smith, I on behalf of the crown, pray that he may be deprived of his clergy; we have a counterplea here (the record read) ſetting forth the conviction of the priſoner Smith otherwiſe Storer in October ſeſſion, 1782.

Court to priſoner Storer. On the part of the crown, they have filed a plea, in which they charge that you, together with one Mary Jones, in the month of October, 1782, was convicted of a felony, for which you were allowed the benefit of your clergy; and that therefore you are not by law entitled to the benefit of your clergy a ſecond time, but ought to ſuffer death, according to law; what do you ſay.

Priſoner. I deny that I am the ſame perſon, and the ſeveral allegations in the plea contained.

Mr. Reeve joined iſſue on theſe allegations.
The Jury ſworn on the iſſue.

—— VINES ſworn.

This is a true copy, from the original record as read to me by that gentleman.

—— NEWMAN ſworn.

I am clerk to Mr. Shelton, I remember examining a record of this court with Mr. Vines.

Court. Did you read it truly?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Did you read it from different parts of the record?——I read it from beginning to end.

(The record read and examined by Mr. Garrow.)

JOHN TOWNSEND ſworn.

I belong to the office at Bow-ſtreet, I know the priſoner perfectly well, I was a ſervant to Mr. Akerman at the time he was tried and convicted for coining a halfpenny in October ſeſſion, 1782.

Was you preſent when he was tried?——I put him and Mary Jones to the bar, they were tried in the evening on the London ſide; and your Lordſhip, as you uſually do, paſſed ſentence on him on the laſt day of ſeſſion.

Priſoner Smith. I have nothing to ſay.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, by the law of this country, no man who is allowed the benefit of clergy, can claim it a ſecond time, provided that allowance is put on record, and proved by legal evidence.

The Jury returned a verdict for the crown.

WILLIAM SMITH alias STORER, } GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the London Jury before
Mr. RECORDER.

332. WILLIAM WYNN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 9th day of April laſt, one deal box, value 6d. one ſilver waiter, value 8l. ſix ſilver forks, value 3l. one pair of ſtone knee buckles, value 20s. one gold ſhirt pin, ſet round with pearls, value 40s. a leather pocket book, value 5s. a ſhaving box, value 2s. a pair of callico drawers, value 1s. one razor-ſtrop, value 1s. one ivory tooth bruſh, value 6d. the property of Francis Weldon Eſq; one bond for payment of 160l. one other bond for payment of 217l. his property.

CAPTAIN WELDON ſworn.

Between ſix and ſeven, on the Sunday evening the 9th of this month, a coach took me up at Oſborn's hotel in the Adelphi, phi, and carried me to No. 9, in Orchard-ſtreet, Portman-ſquare; there were various parcels, and two trunks put into the coach; there was a deal box which contained the things mentioned in the indictment, all the parcels were taken out of the coach at my lodgings, except this deal box which was under one of the ſeats of the coach and carried away by the priſoner.

Who took the things out of the coach?—The coachman and a ſervant of Mr. Dalby's who was then with me.

Is that ſervant here?——No.

How ſoon after the coach was diſcharged was this box miſſed?——I do not believe it could be more than a minute or two at the furtheſt, I inſtantly ran down ſtairs and miſſed the box. I called out to the ſervant, the coach was drove off, I ran as faſt as I could into Oxford-ſtreet in order to ſee this coach; I obſerved a coach at ſome diſtance painted the ſame colour as the coach that carried me, but it was not the ſame coach; I then took a coach and went on to the Adelphi ſtand, I ſearched all the coaches, I did not know the number of it, the ſervant deſcribed it to me lined with green cloth, I ſearched different ſtands but in vain, till nine that night; when I came home; I immediately ſent for a porter and ordered a hundred hand bills to be printed, which were accordingly done, and diſperſed on Monday by ten o'clock; I had it advertiſed in the Daily Advertiſer, and two men came and deſired to ſee the family that had loſt a deal box, they left the number of the coach, and the nick name of the coachman, which they called Green Harneſs, they could not tell his other name; in conſequence of this information I went the next morning to the coach office, and I found the number of the coach, and the man's name as they deſcribed; on the Thurſday following, I took the priſoner with this coach at the door of Meſſrs. Stock and Cooper, linen-drapers in Holborn.

Did you yourſelf recollect the man and the coach?——No, I had his maſter with me, who pointed out the man and the coach to me; I did not recollect either, I ſhould not have known either; I immediately croſſed the way, and took hold of him by the collar, and before I ſaid any thing to him, he ſaid, Sir I was at your lodgings to day with my wife, with the box, I aſked him why he did not leave the box at my lodgings, knowing it to be my property, and he ſaid that his wife aſked for the reward which is three guineas, that was offered; and as I was not home, they had taken it away, and that he wanted money, and had carried the box to the houſe of one Michael Mitchell, a Jew, No. 5, Newcaſtle-ſtreet Whitchapel; he then ſaid, he wiſhed to ſpeak to a man that was there; the man came up, I ſaid he ſhould not; we ſtill ſtood at Meſſrs. Stock and Cooper's door, he ſaid he could not get my box without he had liberty to ſpeak to this man, to get ſome money, I told him he ſhould not, I would pay whatever money was demanded by the Jew, we then went to the Jew's houſe, Mr. Dalby got out firſt, and aſked for Mr. Mitchel; he came down ſtairs, and without ceremony I told him to go up ſtairs and bring me down the box and its contents, which the coachman had left there about two hours before; the Jew did not heſitate in bringing it down, and when he brought it into the kitchen I examined it, it was open, it had no lock from the beginning, but it had a haſp, and was tied very ſtrong when I loſt it; when he brought it down there was no cording nor haſp on it, it was quite open; I examined the box and found the waiter, the forks, the ſhirt pin, and the knee buckles, and the red pocket book, from which all the papers had been taken out: upon opening the pocket book, I found all the papers taken away, and the little implements, ſuch as knives, ſciſſars, &c. were taken away alſo; I immediately aſked the Jew where the bonds and the other papers were, and he declared that he never ſaw a paper, that he never opened the book, that he never opened the box, and knew nothing at all about them; I then aſked the coachman if he knew any thing about the papers, he ſaid, yes, and I believe Mr. Dalby or myſelf then deſired him to tell all he knew about the papers; he then ſaid that the Jew had taken all thoſe papers out of the book, and that he read them all over, but that he gave him a parcel of ſmall papers, which he did not know what they were, as he could not read or write, and deſired him to burn the ſmall papers, for that they were of no uſe to him or any body; he ſaid that the Jew took the papers out of the other ſide of the book, which were large papers, and that he pretended to burn them, but could not be ſure whether he did or not; I then deſired the Jew to produce me the bonds, and if he did, I ſhould take no further notice of it; he perſiſted in denying any knowledge of them; I took the Jew before Sir Sampſon Wright, and the priſoner and his maſter, and there was a Mr. Bond preſiding. Mr. Bond examined them, and he committed this coachman, and bound over the Jew to proſecute; he did not think he was juſtified, he ſaid, in committing the Jew; the reaſon he gave was, his readineſs to produce the box.

Court. What title had you to the bonds? ——They were left me by my uncle, who died ſome little time ago, with other property.

Was you the executor?—I was the heir at law, and executor; the things I found, and the box, were my property.

MICHAEL MITCHELL ſworn.

I live at No. 5, in Caſtle-ſtreet, Whitechapel.

How came you by that box, with theſe things in it, that Mr. Weldon found at your houſe?—On the 13th of this month, the priſoner, in company with another man and a woman, came to my houſe; I had ſeen him ſeveral times before; I knew him very well by ſight; it might be about three, as near as I can recollect; he came to my houſe, and ſaid he was in diſtreſs, and wiſhed I could lend him a trifle of money; I ſaid it was a wrong time, I could be of no uſe to him, it was holiday, it was paſſover; he ſaid if it was but five ſhillings, it would be a ſervice to him; I then took pity of him; I ſaid I had a few ſhillings in my pocket, if he would put his hands into my pocket, and take them out, he was welcome to them, only to pay me another time; he was not very ready to do that; but his wife ſaid, I will take it out of his pocket; ſhe took eight ſhillings, which was all the ſilver I had; ſhe wanted to return me three ſhillings, and ſhe ſaid five ſhillings was enough; I ſaid, no, ſhe muſt take all the eight. They had ſome papers in their hands, and they ſaid, why you may as well burn theſe papers, and I ſaw him go to the fire, and burn ſome papers; the woman then opened her cloak, and laid down a box; the priſoner ſays, Mitchell, be ſo kind to let me leave this here till I return back, I ſhall ſoon be back; I ſaid, yes, and welcome; then I took the box, and put it by for them: about two or three hours after, as near as I can tell, Mr. Weldon and another gentleman, and the priſoner, came to my houſe, and aſked me whether ſuch a thing had been left there as a box? I told him, yes, I ſhall give it; and I brought it to them, and I thought it was the people that were to come for it, as the priſoner had deſired me to ſave it for him.

What way of life are you in?——I am a dealer in all kinds of jewellery and watches, every day, except thoſe days that I dare not go out; I wiſh I had not been at home then.

Had you the curioſity to look into the box?—No, Sir; but when the gentleman mentioned bonds, I recollected their burning papers.

The man charged you with burning theſe papers?—I never burnt any; Mr. Weldon ſaid to the priſoner, you did not burn them; ſays he, I ſuppoſe Mitchell burned them.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of William Wynn.

According to your repreſentation of it, you did not aſk for any depoſit?—None in the world.

How long have you known him?——Some time; I have done buſineſs with the gentleman.

Did you ever lend him money before?—Never.

Upon your oath, was you ready to let this man have theſe eight ſhillings, without ſecurity?—Upon my oath, I did not deſire any ſecurity, nor never thought of any.

Should you have let it go, without the eight ſhillings?—Certainly I ſhould.

And you did not look in the box?——No.

How long have you been in this jewellery buſineſs?——Fifteen years.

You ſaw them burn ſome papers?——Yes, I heard one of them ſay, you may as well burn theſe papers.

Now, you are generally pretty ſharp men, and know the world very well, did not you think how this box was obtained?——I had no preſent thought at all.

No ſuſpicion in the world?——None in the world, becauſe I had never heard any thing amiſs of this man, nor of the other that was with him.

Did you take any care for your own ſecurity about the box, was the box locked, or unlocked?——It was with a haſp.

No cordage, or any thing?——It was looſe.

I wonder you was not a little apprehenſive of permitting theſe people to leave a box at your houſe, without your knowing, or their ſeeing that you knew, what the things were that were in it?——I had no ſcruple; I was eaſily perſuaded that it was locked.

You are a moſt open, unſuſpecting Jew as ever I met with?——I ſhould be ſorry it ſhould be otherwiſe; for there is not a perſon in the world that will ſpeak againſt me in any one reſpect whatever.

Why, I confeſs it does require ſome explanation, when you ſaw theſe people burning papers, that you ſhould take no notice of it, and that you ſhould let them leave this box?—They might have gone a meſſage, or many things, and deſire to leave a thing there for a little while: this man had never been at my houſe before; the other man ſaid, then, ſays he, I did not know rightly whether it was in Caſtle-ſtreet, or Caſtle-court.

And do you now really expect to be believed?—Why not; any perſon that is ſo well known as I am at the court end of the town by every body that knows me, why not truſt me.

From what I know of you, from this ſtory, I promiſe you I will never leave a box at your houſe?—If you knew me, very likely you would not refuſe leaving it, and there is no perſon that knows me, can ſay any thing to the contrary.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I was fetched from the Adelphi to take this gentleman up and the boxes, and when I came there, the waiter and the ſervants brought out the boxes, and put them in the coach, and I went to Piccadilly; I took up another trunk behind; then they ordered me to No. 9, Orchard-ſtreet; when I came there, the footman got down, and opened the door, and I took the trunks and put them in the paſſage, and one of the gentlemen ſat in the coach, and gave me the things out one by one; I carried them into the paſſage, and I carried the large trunks up ſtairs, and he gave me ſixpence above my fare; when I came down, he aſked the ſervant whether all the things were out, and the ſervant ſaid yes; I ſaid to the boy, you had better look, to be ſure; he ſaid, I know they are; I then altered one of the traces of my horſes, which was too long; I went to Marybone rank, and put in there for two hours and an half: when I got off from there, I went to carry a ſervant, with ſome boxes and ſome bundles; I put them into the coach myſelf, and when I came to take them out, turning up the flap of the ſeat, I ſaw this box; I ſaid, this is not your's, ſays I, I cannot ſay whoſe it is rightly, I have carried a gentleman with boxes and bundles, and another perſon with boxes to the Greenwich ſtage; I took out the box, and I waited for the advertiſement; the next day, when it was advertiſed, I went to the gentleman's houſe; my wife carried home the box, and the gentleman was not at home, and they would not give her the reward; and then this other man came to me for ſome money, and I told him if he would go with me, he ſhould have it; and coming down Oxford Road, I ſaw a coachman; he aſked me how I was; I told him I was rather in trouble, and I told him the whole affair, and he aſked me if I knew any thing of ſuch a box, that there were hand-bills about, and I found it was the ſame, and I told him I had been home with it, and could not get the reward; I ſaid I wanted a few ſhillings upon it for a day or two, or three, and the man took me to Mitchell's houſe; he was not at home, and we called again, and Mr. Mitchell came down, and this man told him I was in diſtreſs, and wanted a trifle of money, and he would be obliged to him to let me have it; he ſaid he could not touch money, it was paſſover time; with that, my wife laid down the box to eaſe her arms, and he took the box, and opened it, and weighed the waiter, and took out the forks and the pins; then the book my wife took to take care of, and he opened the book and took the papers out of the left ſide of the book, and read them; they were papers ſtamped and ſealed with red ſealing-wax, and they were printed and ſigned with a writing hand; he then ſaid, theſe are of no uſe to you, you had better burn them, and he took and put ſome papers in the fire, but whether he put them all in, I cannot ſay; then he ſaid they might as well burn the others; with that, I put ſome little papers, ſome bills, or ſomething of that kind, on the fire, and he put a coffee-pot on the fire, that they might burn; my wife took the eight ſhillings out of his pocket, and I came off and I came home, and then my miſtreſs ſaid the two gentlemen had been about the box.

Court. When did you firſt tell your miſtreſs that you had the box?——On the Thurſday.

How came you not to tell her till the Thurſday?—I waited for the advertiſement, and kept it in my own poſſeſſion.

What became of the gold ſhirt pin?—That was left in the box.

What became of the callico drawers?——I cannot ſay, they were in the box, as far as I know, I never looked at the box but the night I took it home, then I looked at the waiter, and the ſpoons, and the pin.

Is your maſter or miſtreſs here?——I ſent this morning but I was too late, I did not know my trial was to come on to day, he is out with the coach; I have ſent for two gentleman to day, but whether they are come, I cannot ſay. (Called but nobody anſwered.) I have lived in Leather-lane theſe nine years.

Court. As you had given notice to the gentleman in the morning by ſending your wife with the box, how came you to ſuffer the Jew to burn any part of the papers?——I did not know he was going to burn any of the papers till they were in the fire.

Did you tell the Jew how you came by the box?——Yes I did, and that it was advertiſed.

Did you tell him that you had ſent your wife that morning with it?——Yes, I did.

ELIZABETH COPELAND ſworn.

The priſoner lived with me almoſt ſix weeks, he was ſervant to my huſband, I never knew any thing diſhoneſt of him while he was with me.

When did he firſt ſay any thing to you about this box?——On the Thurſday morning, when he ſaid he was going to take it home; I never ſaw the box before.

Did not you know that there had been an enquiry about it before that?——No, the gentleman came to me about two or three hours after, my huſband knew nothing of it.

Court to Priſoner. When was this box firſt uncorded?——On the Sunday evening when I firſt took it home.

JANE BLUNT ſworn.

I have known the priſoner ſince he has lived with this gentleman, I live in the ſame yard, my huſband has known him a great while, he lived with an uncle in Leather-lane, I never heard any thing of him but ſoberneſs and honeſty.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, in this caſe the priſoner had not taken poſſeſſion of this box, the poſſeſſion was thrown upon him by leaving the things in the coach; I ſhall take care, as far as it is a new caſe, to reſerve it for the opinion of the twelve Judges, if you ſhould be of an opinion upon the evidence, that there was that ſort of fraudulent conduct in the priſoner, and that ſort of caſe appears upon the evidence which would have amounted to ſtealing it: now although the conduct of keeping it till it is advertiſed to get the reward, is ſuch as an honourable man would not purſue, yet as to queſtion of crime it is another thing, ſuch a box might be taken by a civil proceſs out of the hands of a man who had found it; but as to the queſtion of ſtealing, to be ſure, ſuch a man would not be guilty of ſtealing, becauſe the original intention of ſtealing is eſſential: now if this man finding the box in his coach, and even having a ſhrewd gueſs who it belonged to, detained it in hopes of a reward, and then meant to carry it back; if you think that is the caſe, the priſoner ought to be acquitted; there is a probability, that when a man had found a box, he would uncord it to ſee what was in it; on the other hand if the priſoner uncorded the box with a view to embezzle ſome part of the contents, upon that ground of the caſe, I think it is proper for conſideration, whether the man who is ſo guilty ſhould not be reached as a felon; and if you find the priſoner guilty, I ſhall reſerve it to be conſidered, whether it does amount to the crime of felony or not.

GUILTY.

Court. Let judgment be reſpited till next ſeſſions.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

333. PETER

33. PETER OGIER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 27th day of of March laſt, three carpets, value 3l. five pieces of carpeting, value 5s. ſeven books, value 7s. one bowl, value 5s. five pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 20s. a tray, value 2s. a waiter, value 1s. one china tureen and diſh, value 20s. the property of the Rev. William Jackſon, clerk.

The caſe opened by Mr. Garrow.

The Rev. WILLIAM JACKSON ſworn.

I have chambers at Lyons Inn, No. 2, the ground floor. About the latter end of July, I had occaſion for a perſon in the capacity of an amanuenſis, to tranſcribe various things that I uſed to ſend to the preſs; the priſoner was recomended to me as a perſon in great diſtreſs, but who belonged to a very reſpectable family, and whoſe misfortunes he had not contributed to by any bad action; he wrote a very good hand, and I employed him in that capacity; he had recourſe to my chambers, copied for me, and went away; I being concerned in a houſe that was in Gravel-ſtreet Hatton-garden, and unlet, I let him ſleep at my chambers; I placed ſuch an unlimitted confidence in him, that I very ſeldom went there; however having occaſion to be there on the 27th of March, I deſired him to be there and prepare the fire; I went there, and the firſt thing I obſerved was, that there was no carpet on the large parlour; I ſaid where are my carpets? he ſaid, I have taken them up, and put them in the next room; I thought it was ſo, I found no carpets there; I went into the kitchen, and, in ſhort, in every room in the chambers, then I followed him where I had ſent him, and deſired him to come to the chambers, I told him; he very candidly then confeſſed that he had made away with them, and ſome ſtockings, various matraſſes, a bolſter, pillows, and in ſhort a variety of articles, and he produced the pawnbroker's tickets, pawned at various places, and in the name of Maſon, ſome were pawned at Mr. Cooper's; I immediately applied to Mr. Cokayne, an attorney, who lives in Lyon's-inn, and the priſoner was taken into cuſtody.

How lately before the 27th of March had you ſeen theſe things in your chambers?——It happened about ſix weeks before that.

Court. How long had you left the chambers ſo entirely to him?——From about the middle of Auguſt.

I am ſervant to Mr. Cooper, pawnbroker, in Wych-ſtreet Temple-bar. I know the priſoner, I have ſeen him ſeveral times, I have received from him ſeveral articles. (The things produced and depoſed to.) The firſt is on the 1ſt of October, a book for three ſhillings.

What book is that?——Sydney; on the 8th of October, a carpet for fourteen ſhillings; the 10th of October another book, for four ſhillings; five books on the 11th; and five pair of ſilk ſtockings on the 11th; all pledged in the name of Charles Maſon: that is all I have.

WILLIAM MOLD ſworn.

I am another ſervant to Mr. Cooper, I have a tureen and diſh and cover, I received it from the priſoner in the name of Charles Maſon, I lent him ſix ſhillings upon it on the 11th of February; I took a carpet of him at another time, on the 6th of March, in the ſame name for ſix ſhillings.

ROBERT SIMPSON ſworn.

I was a ſervant to Mr. Cooper. I received this bowl from the priſoner on the 8th of February, I lent him eight ſhillings upon it.

JOSEPH DOLLING ſworn.

I am another ſervant of Mr. Cooper's. I received one carpet for ſixteen ſhillings, on the 14th of March; and on the 21ſt of March five pieces of carpeting for five ſhillings and ſixpence, in the name of Charles Maſon.

NATHANIEL ROBERT CONNOR ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Byfield, a pawnbroker. I produce three volumes of Lord

Shaftſbury's Characteriſtics; on the 1ſt of Auguſt I lent him four ſhillings upon them.

(Depoſed to.)

Proſecutor. Theſe things were in my chamber before the priſoner firſt went to ſleep there.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I did not mean to ſteal the things, I only took them for a temporary relief; I was in hopes by applying to my friends to have got ſufficient money to replace them all, I had even replaced ſome of the things that very morning, which was a large bowl, two china mugs, and a tea-tray.

Court to Priſoner. By the account that is given of you, Sir, you muſt have known that you were not at liberty to make that ſort of uſe of another perſon's property? ——Yes, my Lord, I have ſent to two or three people, but I did not expect my trial to come on ſo ſoon.

What part of the world did you come from?——Originally from Spital-fields.

I know there was a very reſpectable man of that name?——It was my father; I was drove to the very greateſt diſtreſs, I had not a ſhirt to put on my back.

STEPHEN PARKER ſworn.

I have known the priſoner ſix years, he has been a broker, and he has been a clerk with me and he has behaved well, and was very honeſt.

Can you ſay that in general he has been an honeſt character for the time you knew him?—I never heard any thing amiſs before this.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

334. JOSEPH HALFORD was indicted for feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Cavendiſh Manwaring, about the hour of five in the afternoon, on the 1ſt day of April, Ann Manwaring, widow, William Nix, Edward Nix, and Thomas Bell being therein, and feloniouſly ſtealing, a ſilver ſalt, value 5s. a ſilver pepper box, value 5s. a ſnuff-box, value 3s. his property.

ANN MANWARING ſworn.

I am mother to Cavendiſh Manwaring, he keeps the dwelling houſe which I take care of in Golden-lane, he is a goldſmith by trade, he keeps wine vaults, he reſides in the houſe.

And who elſe lives in the houſe?——There is me and my grandſon, Thomas Bell, and William Nix my lodger, and Elizabeth Nix his wife.

When was it that this houſe was robbed?——About a quarter after five, the 1ſt of April.

Who were in the houſe the time it was robbed?——It is mentioned in the indictment.

Do you ſell wine by retail there?——It is commonly called a gin ſhop, I ſaw the priſoner go up ſtairs, and I ſent my grandſon up to know what was the matter, I called for aſſiſtance, and William Nix came and tripped him up, and my plate except one ſalt fell about the paſſage; I did not ſee him throw them out, the priſoner had a ſalt cellar in his hand, he took it out of my drawer, which I had taken out and had not locked it, about half an hour before; the door was locked and latched, but the key was in; the linen was all thrown about the room, but nothing was taken out, but the plate; I never ſaw the man before; the two Nix's lodge up two pair of ſtairs; I found about the paſſage a cream pot, a pepper box, and a cream jug, and one ſalt.

You are ſure this is the man?——Yes.

I ſuppoſe your ſtreet door was open?——Yes, it always ſtands open.

Priſoner. Aſk the proſecutrix whether ſhe did not ſee any body elſe come down ſtairs, whether ſhe did not challenge another perſon?——No ſuch perſon, the priſoner was not got down to the door.

WILLIAM NIX ſworn.

I was at work when this happened, I am a taya taylor, I heard a ſcuffle in the entry with my miſtreſs and the priſoner, I came directly, and when I came out, he was diſcourſing with her in the entry, I collared him and threw him on his back, then he put his hand in his pocket, and I caught him by the hand for fear he ſhould do me a miſchief; and he took out his hand and a ſilver ſalt along with it; I kept him there till aſſiſtance came, I gave the ſalt to my wife.

Did you ſee any body elſe in the entry? ——When I took him off the ground, and aſſiſtance came, the ſnuff-box was under him; I ſaw nothing elſe but one ſalt which I took from him, and the ſnuff box was under him; the conſtable has them.

JOHN EDWARDS ſworn.

Theſe things were delivered to me by Mrs. Manwaring. (The ſalt and the ſnuff-box depoſed to, and the pepper box, and the other ſalt.)

Priſoner. Here is one Mrs. Bellamy whom I knew, I went up to aſk her whether ſhe could make me a ſhirt, and I knocked at the door, and two men came out at a door juſt by, and almoſt knocked me down ſtairs, and when they run down they dropped ſomething, and I picked up a ſalt; I bid them ſearch me.

What are you?——I have worked in the markets theſe thirteen years in the portering way.

Who for?——I have worked for Mr. Heath, he was here a little while ago, and for Mr. Cook, he is here, he knows me.

Court to Proſecutrix. Who is this Mrs. Bellamy?—She was a lodger, but ſhe was out a nurſe keeping, ſhe does not know the gentleman, and I never ſaw him before in my life.

Priſoner. I would have got Mrs. Bellamy, but I could not go myſelf to fetch her.

The priſoner called two witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing but not of breaking and entering the houſe.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before
Mr. Baron EYRE.

335. DAVID JOSIAH JONES alias DAVID JONES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th day of April, ten yards and a half of linen cloth, value 11s. twenty-nine yards of other cloth, value 29s. ten yards of other cloth, value 10s. eleven linen handkerchiefs, value 11s. four yards of coarſe linen cloth, value 1s. thirty-three yards and an half of other coarſe cloth, value 12s. one yard and an half of velveret, value 4s. one yard and an half of ditto, value 5s. one yard and a quarter of cotton, called Domin, value 5s. ſix ſilk and cotton handkerchiefs, value 15s. the property of William Macbean, and Gillies Macbean, in the dwelling houſe of William Macbean.

WILLIAM MACBEAN ſworn.

I am partner with Gillies Macbean; the houſe is mine, the rent for the warehouſe is paid out of the trade to me; the four warehouſes are on three diſtinct floors, the cellar, the ground floor, and the one pair of ſtairs. I am a linen-draper; the priſoner came to live with me on the 25th of January laſt, as porter; on the 1ſt of of February we miſſed ſome velveret, not mentioned in the indictment; on the 12th of March we miſſed two dozen and eight ſilk handkerchiefs; but on the 7th of April we miſſed a very large quantity of cotton handkerchiefs; all theſe things are not mentioned in the indictment: upon miſſing ſuch a quantity, I had a ſuſpicion that the priſoner David Jones had taken the goods, in conſequence of which I learned where he went to; he had the cuſtom of going out very early on a Sunday morning, I found he went to his brother Edward Roberts, in Fryingpan-alley, Petticoat-lane; in conſequence of which I applied for a ſearch warrant from Juſtice Staples, in Whitechapel, and we went with three conſtables, and in the houſe we found a woman, Ann Roberts; the firſt thing we ſaw was a cheſt of drawers, in a very ſmall room, we deſired her to give us the key of the drawers, and ſhe did, and unlocked them herſelf; in every one of theſe drawers, except the two upper drawers, we found ſome things which I believe are my property; then, after taking theſe out of the drawers, I believe the huſband came in, and the conſtable ſtaid below ſtairs with him and the wife, and I and another conſtable went up ſtairs; I found nothing except in this room till we came down again, and there in a cloſet under the ſtairs, within a room, we found there was a parcel of pots and pans, under them was a box, we broke the box open; after we took the box out, we found a direction for David Jones, which was not faſtened on the box, it was laying on the ground with a parcel, on opening the box we found three diſtinct quantities of goods, handkerchiefs, and a wrapper made up, marked I believe by one of the witneſſes Thomas Howſe, who lived with me as porter, the wrapper is thirty-three yards and a quarter; as ſoon as we had found theſe, and had examined further in the houſe and found nothing, we took Roberts and his wife, and a man we found there, to Juſtice Staples; we found no more in the box, but ſome handkerchiefs, a piece of wrapper, and ſome ſheeting, and the things that were in the drawers; before the Juſtice, the priſoner ſaid he knew of no part of the goods, but two yards and a quarter of Demin mentioned in the indictment; (which is cotton for breeches) at Guildhall he ſaid that he found the whole of the goods, and carried them to his ſiſter.

THOMAS WARREN ſworn.

I met Mr. Macbean and another gentleman going to Guildhall, and Mr. Macbean ſaid he had been robbed; I went with Juſtice Staples's people, and we found theſe things that have been related, in different drawers, we ſearched the houſe all over except this cloſet, I know nothing more, than that the goods were found in the cloſet.

JOHN TANN ſworn.

I had a ſearch warrant, and I went with Mr. Macbean to Roberts's, and there found the goods.

JOHN CARPENTER ſworn.

I went alſo.

EDWARD ROBERTS ſworn.

I live in Fryingpan-alley, Petticoat-lane; I know nothing at all about the goods, I do not know how they came at my houſe, I was out in the morning very early about my buſineſs.

Is your wife here?—Yes.

I underſtand you ſaid there was nothing in the box?—I did not know there was any thing there, the box belonged to one Williams, who had been in the houſe about half a year laſt quarter day; the priſoner is my wife's brother.

Did he ever viſit at your houſe?—Yes, our keys are left at a chandler's ſhop, while we are gone out with our milk, for the lodgers to come in, and he uſed to come while we was gone out, now we go out about ſeven, and return about nine.

Court to Proſecutor. Is this agreeable to what the man ſaid before?—His examination is in court.

Roberts. There was a piece of ſtuff in my drawer with my clothes, and my brother ſat by the fire, and I aſked who that belonged to, he ſaid it was to make a pair of breeches, my brother-in-law anſwered, (that was the priſoner) my brother-in-law had ſome ſhirts and things in my drawer, he uſed to make his home at my houſe, and my wife waſhed for him; I aſked him no more queſtions, I did not ſuſpect my brother-in-law.

ANN ROBERTS ſworn.

The priſoner is my brother, he always came of a Sunday to change his cloaths.

What became of the key of the drawers?—Sometimes I had them; and at times I uſed to leave them upon the window.

What did you uſe to keep in theſe drawers?——I uſed to keep my cloaths in them, I had the keys of all my drawers when the officers came to ſearch my houſe.

In theſe drawers which you had the key of, I underſtand there were found a parcel of new goods that were claimed by Mr. Macbean; how did theſe things come into thoſe drawers that you had the key of?—I cannot tell, I never ſaw any of them come in.

Did you ever find any of them there?—I found one piece on Sunday morning as I was going to put my gown on, and I aſked who that belonged to, it was a coarſe piece of ſome kind of linen, I did not take it in my hand, it was in the drawer, but there was never a lock to that drawer; my brother was there, and the lodgers all ſitting by the fire, and my brother made anſwer it was his.

Was that the only thing you ever obſerved there that was not your own or your lodgers?——It was.

Was there one piece or more than one?—I did not obſerve but one.

Have you never ſaid there were two?—No, I never ſaid any ſuch thing.

Court. I will read you your examination, which is, that on Sunday morning you obſerved two pieces of coarſe linen, and upon aſking the priſoner about them, he ſaid they were his own.

I do not know whether there was one piece or two.

Was it Scotch ſheeting?—I do not know Scotch ſheeting from other ſheeting.

Was it ſheeting?—I believe it was.

Are you aware, that by your affecting not to know how theſe ſtolen goods came into your houſe, that you are diſgracing yourſelf, and making yourſelf to be the thief?——I very often left the keys for my brother.

So you inſiſt upon it here, in the preſence of your country, that you do not know how theſe things came there?——I never ſaw them come, nor ever knew they were there, nor was never told by any body they were there in my life.

Proſecutor. My Lord, this witneſs ſaid the three handkerchiefs, ſhe bought them in Criſpin-ſtreet; ſhe alſo ſaid at Juſtice Staples's that ſhe knew of them, and that ſhe would have blown him, but he was her own fleſh and blood.

Court to Proſecutor. Pick out thoſe two pieces of ſheeting, and the piece for a pair of breeches out of the reſt?—Theſe are them.

(Produced and depoſed to.)

We have a piece in court, that did once meaſure forty-one yards, it now meaſures thirty-eight yards and an half.

Then there is a quarter of a yard miſſing?—It was meaſured at Mancheſter, and the cotton goods frequently run up.

Roberts. This is the piece to the beſt of my knowledge, except it has been changed, I never ſaw any of the goods except this piece, if this is the piece, or ſuch a piece as this.

Proſecutor. The piece of ſheeting that was found in the box, and the piece that was found in the drawers will appear upon comparing, to be one piece, the mark was cut away.

Court. Where was the demin found?——I found it in the drawer.

In which drawer was it found?——I cannot tell.

Are you a wholeſale draper?——Yes.

You do not deal by retail at all.—No.

Then that could not be ſold in the regular courſe of buſineſs?——No; I believe this is a part of that piece, I have no doubt in the world; this piece was near to the compting houſe door, which is on the ground floor in the right hand warehouſe, going into the door; it was returned; that was the reaſon of its being open in the ſtate you ſee it.

How much of the coarſe ſheeting did you find?—Thirty-nine yards and an half, in three pieces.

Where was that coarſe ſheeting found?—Part of it in the drawers, and part of it in the box.

Can you diſtinguiſh which was found in the drawer, and which in the box?—This was found in the drawers.

Court to Roberts. Was the coarſe linen you aſked about, that which the priſoner ſaid was his own, was it that piece or not?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was, it was ſomething like that.

Court to Macbean. There was no more coarſe linen found in the drawers?—No.

What induced you to believe that the piece of coarſe linen that came out of the drawer is yours ?——Becauſe it has a mark upon it, the figure of 40.

Whoſe mark is that ?——It is marked in Scotland, and we had loſt a piece, with the figure of 40, they are not all of the ſame length.

Is 40 a uſual length ?—From 36 to 40, or 41, is the uſual length.

Then there might be a multitude of pieces with the mark 40 upon them ?——Yes.

Is there any thing elſe that induces you to believe it to be yours ?—The quality.

But there is a vaſt quantity of linen of that quality ?—Yes.

Then you can only ſay this has a mark of 40 as your piece had, and that this is the quality of your piece; can you go any farther as to this ſheeting ?——No.

Have you any other evidence to prove that the things ſo found at Roberts's, were brought by the priſoner at the bar ?—Only by her confeſſion, ſhe now thinks fit to deny it; this wrapper was in the box which Roberts ſaid was the priſoner's, which was locked, and we broke the lock.

Who had the key of that box ?—I do not know, the priſoner when he was taken, was not ſearched.

Have you the direction you ſay was found ?—Yes.

Produce it.

Court to Roberts. What did you ſay before the Alderman about the box ?——I told him the box was in the houſe when we went there, that it belonged to one Williams, a lodger that had been.

Who did you ſay had uſed it ?—I do not know that I did, I could not tell that he had.

Your examination is, that he knows not how it came there, and Jones told you he had uſed it ?—To the beſt of my knowledge he did not tell me.

Then you venture to deny it ?——I tell the truth to the beſt of my knowledge, I am ſure I told the Alderman the truth.

Did Jones tell you he had uſed the box ?——Yes, I believe he did.

When and upon what occaſion was it, that Jones told you that he uſed that box? —I do not know; when they went in, I told them there was nothing but a box there, I could not tell whether it was locked or not, I told them I did not know whether Jones made uſe of it or not.

Conſider firſt of all you ſaid there was nothing there, becauſe there was a parcel of pans and things that covered the box? —I told them the box was there, and there was nothing but the box.

Had you ſeen that box before ?—Yes.

At the time you firſt ſaw it, can you tell whether it had any direction upon it? ——Not that I know of.

Look upon that direction ?—This direction to the beſt of my recollection came out of the country upon a hare and turkey.

Was the hare and turkey brought to your houſe ?—Yes.

When was it ?—I do not know; Mr. Macbean had the hare, I cannot ſay when it was.

(The direction handed up to the Court.)

Court. Take that into your hand, and conſider a little what you ſay; look at it again, and tell me whether, upon your oath, that direction came with a hare and turkey ?—It did, my Lord.

There are nail holes in it ?—It was ſewed to the baſket.

Mr. Macbean. There was a bit of baſket to it, when I found it.

How was it faſtened to it ?—I rather think it was ſewed.

As this was a box that you ſay you had ſeen before, and that your brother might ſay he had uſed it, how came it to be thruſt into that place ?—We had no place to put things in, and we uſed to put kettles and ſaucepans, and things upon it, we had no room to put it any where elſe, neither under the bed or the drawers.

Court to Macbean. What were the articles that were in this box ?—This wrapper has a mark upon it.

What is that mark ?—Thirty-three yards and a quarter; the witneſs, Thomas Howes, ſwore that he made up this wrapper in my houſe.

THOMAS HOWES ſworn.

I made this mark when I lived at Mr. Macbean's as porter; I made it up, and marked it.

They are your figures, are they?—Yes, for Mr. Macbean.

Court to Mr. Macbean. Where did that wrapper uſe to be?—In the lower room.

Howes. I left Mr. Macbean four months ago.

How long before that, did you make that mark?——I cannot ſay.

Mr. Macbean. Theſe ſeven handkerchiefs, we had loſt ſeveral dozen of the ſame pattern, but I cannot identify them; and here is the remaining part of the ſheeting.

Do theſe two parts belong to one piece?——I believe they are belonging, the exact quantity meaſuring thirty-nine yards and a half; there was a mark on the outſide which is cut out, which makes up the other half yard; the number is on the outſide of the ſheeting, folded up like a book.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing of them, I never knew they belonged to Mr. Macbean.

The particular marks you are called upon to give an anſwer to, are the ſheeting, and the two yards and a quarter of cotton demin, and the things that were found in the box?—I never put none of them, neither in the drawer or the box, nor did I take them there.

You told your ſiſter that the coarſe ſheeting was your's?——I was ſitting by the fire, and ſhe aſked me, what is this put here for; I thought ſhe meant a dirty ſhirt; and I ſaid it was mine.

What did you ſay as to the demin; did you ſay it was for a pair of breeches?——I know nothing of it.

As to the box?——I never uſed it, I never went out of the houſe of a Sunday morning before his hair-dreſſer knocked at the door, and the hair-dreſſer was angry becauſe I would not get up ſooner of a morning; and I never went out on buſineſs of my own, without his notice, while I lived with him.

Mr. Garrow. Mr. Roberts, how long has the priſoner been in London?—About four months, he came from Wales.

EDWARD JOHN LLOYD ſworn.

I live in Cardiganſhire, in Wales; I have been in town but a few days; I came up on purpoſe to attend here; the priſoner has not left that part of the world above four months; I have known him above thirteen years, he was a maſon; he was a ſober, upright young man as ever I heard of.

That was his general character?—Yes, all over the country; I have a paper which I ſaw ſigned by the perſons therein, and if it had not been ſuch ſhort notice, they would have been here themſelves.

JOHN FRANK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of March laſt, one pair of ſattin breeches, value 16s. one pair of ſhoe-buckles, value 10s. a pair of ſilver knee-buckles, value 5s. a ſilver watch, value 4l. a ſilver ſeal, value 2s. a half-guinea, value 10s. 6d. and four ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of John Chriſtian Hartman, in the dwelling-houſe of Martin Kuhn.

The priſoner ſlept with the proſecutor, whoſe trunk was broke open, and upon ſearching the priſoner, there was found in his pocket a guinea, a half guinea, and ſix ſhillings, and among the ſilver was a particular ſhilling, which the proſecutor's landlord had given him in change, and a nail, which appeared to have forced the lock of the trunk, and which fitted the hole of the place where it had been forced.

(The ſhilling depoſed to.)

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

342. SIMON PRICE, JOHN PERRY, and JAMES WATKINS, were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of April, one hundred and forty-two yards of gauze, value 6l. 10s. twelve pieces of ſilk ribbon, value 5l. the property of William Adams.

A ſecond count, for ſtealing the ſame, laying them to be the property of Francis Haydon.

Francis Bolton ſaw the priſoners break the box open, and take out the goods; they were taken upon the ſpot; the property was found on them, and William Laythorn ſaw the priſoner Watkins get into the waggon, and carry the box into the ſhed.

ALL THREE GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

343. JAMES THOMPSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 31ſt day of March laſt, twenty-eight pounds weight of leaden pipe, value 5s. belonging to William Rabford, and fixed to his dwelling-houſe.

The priſoner was a chimney-ſweeper, and was caught in the duſt-hole with the lead.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

344. JOHN SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th day of April, one wooden firkin, value 18d. and ſeventy-ſix pounds weight of butter, value 40s. the property of Henry Capel and John Girdler.

Philip Trimley took the priſoner with the butter in his arms upon his knees an hundred yards from his cart, and John Lambert ſaw the priſoner with the butter in his arms when Trimley ſeized him; the priſoner ſaid, d—n his eyes, he had found a prize.

Priſoner. I picked up the butter.

GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Baron EYRE.

345. ELIZABETH COLE and MARY JOHNSON were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt day of April, nine pair of men's worſted ſtockings, value 20s. the property of Griffith Humphrys and John Humphrys.

JOHN HUMPHRYS ſworn.

I am a linen-draper and hoſier, in partnerſhip with my father Griffith Humphrys, No. 27, Shoreditch. On Saturday evening, the 1ſt of April, having been out about ten minutes, I was informed, on my return, that two ſhop-lifters had been at the ſhop; I ordered the ſhop to be ſhut up, and ſtanding at my door, I was informed the two girls were gone into another haberdaſher's juſt by, and I heard the priſoner Johnſon ſay to the other, it will not do; ſo they went on a few doors farther, and they ſtopped ſuddenly, and Johnſon ſaid to the other, let us go back: after a pauſe of about a minute or two, they turned round; I let them paſs me, and as they paſſed me, ſhe ſaid, I will buy, but God bleſs you, mind you are not ſeen; I concluded from that they were going into the haberdaſher's ſhop, and I intended to watch them; but they paſſed it, and went into my ſhop, and the priſoner Johnſon aſked to look at a piece of cloth ſhe ſaw when ſhe was there before; ſhe was ſhewn it, and made no difficulty about the price or quality, but upon the quantity; at laſt, ſhe determined on buying a yard and a quarter of it; there were ſome printed cotton ſtockings lay upon the counter; I did not ſee either of them take any thing; Johnſon paid, and they went out together, but I ſuſpected Cole to have ſomething, and I obſerved her to make a move with her arm, as if ſhe wanted to throw ſomething away, and ſhe let fall a parcel of ſtockings, nine pair, with my mark upon the paper; I am ſure of the property.

Evan Price, the ſhopman, depoſed to the ſame effect, as to the priſoners coming into the ſhop the firſt and ſecond time, and that Mary Johnſon aſked to look at ſome cloth, and the priſoner Cole in the mean time turned herſelf about, and leaned her back againſt the other counter oppoſite, where were a parcel of ſtockings; ſhe ſtood there about half a minute, and after that ſhe moved herſelf from there, and came nearer to him, and then he could ſee a parcel which afterwards proved to be the one produced; he ſaw the ſide of it under her cloak, as ſhe was ſhifting it to get it more out of ſight, but he did not ſee enough of it to know what it was; but her manner of concealing it gave him a ſuſpicion; they went out of the ſhop together, ſide by ſide, and he afterwards ſaw the parcel drop from the priſoner Cole.

The priſoners both denied the charge.

BOTH GUILTY.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

JOHN WILEY ſworn.

I am a ſhoemaker; I had left this houſe about a fortnight, it was mine till quarter day; two of my apprentices ſlept there; I know the priſoner Booty exceedingly well; he worked about the premiſes moſt part of laſt ſummer in the callendering way.

ANN WILEY ſworn.

I was there on the Saturday morning before the houſe was broke open; it was ſafe then, and I took the keys with me.

JOHN LANDE ſworn.

I am a watchman, I found the window of this houſe open at three, it was faſt at two; I went for the aſſiſtance of my brother watchman and went in, and found ſome goods in the houſe, the back door was open.

MATHIAS MILLAR ſworn.

I live next door; to the beſt of my knowledge the houſe was faſt over night; the watchman alarmed me at three o'clock.

MARY ROBERTS ſworn.

I live in Acorn-alley, Biſhopſgate-ſtreet; I take in waſhing; one of the priſoners, I think his name is Booty, aſked me to pawn a few things, which I did; on the Saturday I went into the room where the three priſoners were, becauſe Booty promiſed to lend my huſband a couple of ſhillings; I underſtood it was Booty's room, and they aſked me to pawn a few things that came out of the country, the things were in the room; I pawned a piece of new cloth for three ſhillings and ſixpence, I got nine ſhillings in the whole; I pawned the things at two different places, it was at different times in the ſame afternoon; I gave them the money and the duplicates; I never was in the room before; I never pawned any thing for them before.

I am a pawnbroker in Holywell-ſtreet, Shoreditch; I produce three ſmall parcels that were pledged by this woman Mary Jones, a piece of black ſhalloon, a piece of new cloth, two pieces of cotton, and a dreſſer-cloth, that was one parcel; here is a child's gown, four child's ſhoes, and four caps, two little pieces of diaper, and about a yard and an half of ſilk; I lent one ſhilling on theſe ſmall articles; one ſhilling on the ſilk; and three ſhillings on the ſhalloon and cloth. (The things depoſed to.) Mary Smith, another pawnbroker, produced ſome other things which were depoſed to; John Armſtrong and James Shakeſhaft produced the things which they found in the room, where all the three priſoners were in King John court, Holywell-lane, up one pair of ſtairs, which were alſo depoſed to.

Court to Mrs. Wiley. When you came to the houſe, what obſervations did you make as to the doors and windows?——I examined the windows, and both ſides of the glaſs had been broken of the back kitchen door, the caſement ſide was broken, the bar was faſt on that ſide and I imagine the other ſide had been broken, the caſement had been opened; I ſuppoſe they had got in at the caſement, by lifting up the bar; there muſt have been ſome inſtrument, or elſe they could not have done it.

PRISONER MARSHALL'S DEFENCE.

I found the things going to work at ſix in the morning; I am a chimney ſweeper.

The Priſoner Marſhall called one witneſs to his character.

PRISONER BOOTY'S DEFENCE.

I overtook Marſhall, and ſaw him find the things.

PETER, (the black man's) DEFENCE.

I am innocent of the matter. I only came into the room.

THOMAS MARSHALL, } GUILTY
JOHN BOOTY,

349. THOMAS ROBINS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 29th day of March laſt, one wooden till with a braſs lock, value 6d. and ſeven ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of Thomas Dixon.

The proſecutor ſaw the priſoner in the ſhop, and purſued him immediately, and ſaw him throw down the till, with the money in it, being ſeven ſhillings in halfpence, and five or ſix ſhillings in ſilver; and Robert Smith ſaw the priſoner come out of the proſecutor's ſhop with the till.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

350. DAVID JONES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 21ſt day of March laſt, one piece of woollen ſtuff called tammy, of the length of 39 yards, valued 30s. the property of Meſſrs. Robinſon and Hotham, privily in their warehouſe;

And JOHN DAVIS was indicted for feloniouſly receiving the ſame knowing it to be ſtolen.

——— HOTHAM ſworn.

Jones lived as porter with us; on the 21ſt of March, between four and five, I ſaw a piece of goods which Nicholls brought me, which I marked; I ſuſpected the priſoner for ſome time; the piece of goods was put in the place where he told me it was ſecreted; it was a place under the preſs, confined to rubbiſh entirely; I deſired every one in the houſe to take notice where this piece of goods was; I deſired the priſoner might be particularly watched, not only ſo, but I deſired a gentleman to watch on the outſide of the door in the morning.

JOHN NICHOLLS ſworn.

I live with Meſſrs. Hotham and Robinſon; I remember carrying a piece of goods to Mr. Hotham on the 21ſt of March, which he marked; I found on the 21ſt of March about five in the afternoon, that it was not in the proper place for it, it was a piece of my maſter's goods.

Have you any knowledge who put it there?——Yes; I ſaw the priſoner Jones putting ſomething there, and I went and looked and found the piece there.

Where was the piece?—On a ſhelf in the ſhop, about as far as I am from you; I took it to the proſecutor, and he marked it in my preſence; I took notice of the mark he put upon it which was the letter (H,) I then took it and put it in the place where I found it.

Do you know of your own knowledge what became of it afterwards?——I looked the laſt thing that night; I locked the door and ſaw it was there; I ſaw a man I did not know, and David Jones following him; David Jones opened the warehouſe firſt, it was a few minutes after I came down; I went and looked, and the piece was gone.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. What part of the counter did you ſee these goods on?——Almoſt at the further end of the warehouſe, furtheſt from the ſtreet, under a preſs in a large hole, where there is nothing but lumber.

Is that part of the warehouſe a good deal frequented by the perſons in your trade?——Yes; by our own people.

Did not you recommend to Mr. Hotham or his partner to lay ſome plan, which I call ſome trap, and this particular plan to put this piece of goods under the counter?—No, by no means.

Recollect?——I do not know whether Mr. Hotham bid me put it, or that I recommended it.

Where were theſe goods taken from before they were put under the counter?——Out of a hole, a partition of about five or ſix yards from the place, and it was found by me under the preſs.

At the time you found it there you ſuſpected it to be put there for the purpoſe of being taken away by Jones?——Yes.

Was it put there again for the purpoſe of being taken away by him?—It was put there to ſee what he would do with it; we expected it would be carried away by him; it was certainly put there to ſee whether he would carry it away.

How long have you lived with Mr. Hotham?—Five years.

How long did Jones live there?——About four years.

Upon what terms have you lived together?——We have always lived on very friendly terms, only ſometimes we quarrelled.

Have thoſe quarrels ever proceeded to blows?——No; only once he told me he would tear my heart out; there was no grudge between us at the time becauſe we were upon friendly terms, but I ſhall always do the beſt I can for my employers.

How long is it ago ſince he gave you blows?——He never did give me blows.

Where was that quarrel?——In the kitchen.

Was any perſons preſent?——Several; the cook and ſome of our men.

THOMAS CLARKE ſworn.

I was requeſted to keep a look out, and on Wedneſday morning I was in Gracechurch-ſtreet before Mr. Hotham's warehouſe was open; I ſaw the porter open the warehouſe; a little time afterwards, I ſaw a man come from the door with a parcel; there is a court very near the warehouſe; the man turned up the court, and I followed him; in that court there are ſeveral turnings different ways, and he eſcaped me; from the deſcription I gave of his perſon it was ſuppoſed to be Davis; I went with the officer and Mr. Robinſon, as ſoon as I ſaw Davis, I ſaid it was him.

Was it him?——I never was nearer him than fifteen yards, he was in the ſame dreſs, to the beſt of my knowledge it was him; I was preſent when the goods were found; they were found in Davis's apartments in a box near the fire.

Was the box locked or open?——I do not know.

How did you know the apartment you ſearched was Davis's?——I did not know they were his, the conſtable directed me to them; Davis was preſent in the apartment; he ſaid he had bought the goods of ſome perſon, but I do not know who; he looked out a great many bills of parcels, but did not find the particular one that contained theſe goods; there were two pieces of goods found there.

Did he ſay he bought thoſe pieces of goods before or after they were found?——After they were found.

Mr. Keys, Priſoner Davis's counſel. You do not pretend to any knowledge of the priſoner Davis?——I ſaw him when we ſearched that apartment.

You do not mean to be underſtood that he was the man that came out of the houſe?—I believe he is the man.

Did you examine the bills of parcels?——No.

EDWARD RIGBY ſworn.

I found theſe things in Davis's apartments in a box, the box was not locked; we found theſe two pieces, they ſaid they had nothing more than their own; he ſaid he would produce the bill before the Lord Mayor; he and his wife were in the room, he kept the bills of parcels in his poſſeſſion, the pieces have been in my poſſeſſion locked up at Guildhall.

Proſecutor. This piece of goods is the very piece I marked, it was put in a freſh paper, I opened the paper and put my mark on the body of the piece.

Court. Let me look at the mark?——(handed up.)

Proſecutor. This is a tammy; when I found this tammy was gone, I took from the priſoner Jones a pocket book, and the firſt thing I found in it, was a direction to John Davis, in conſequence of which I ſent for a ſearch warrant.

Mr. Garrow. How many perſons were up before Jones that morning?——I dare ſay he was the perſon firſt up.

Nicholls. The footman was up before Jones.

Proſecutor. Jones had the keys from me.

PRISONER JONES'S DEFENCE.

The footman was up before me and opened the warehouſe door; when I came down, the warehouſe door was opened, I went and aſked for the key of the partition, he ſaid he forgot to bring it down; I went and brought it down; I over ſlept myſelf that morning later than any other ſince I have been in the houſe.

PRISONER DAVIS'S DEFENCE.

I dealt in theſe things, and paid a great many hundreds in theſe things; I had been ſelling a ſtock; there are people in court that can prove it, and ſome that will give me a good character.

The priſoner Jones called twelve witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

The priſoner Davis called three witneſſes who gave him a good character.

DAVID JONES, GUILTY

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

355. JOHN KENTISH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 3d day of April, one ſilk handkerchief, value 1s. the property of William Wilks.

The proſecutor miſſed his handkerchief, accuſed the priſoner, who immediately ran off; he purſued him, and ſaw him take the handkerchief from out his trowſers.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

356. ESTHER NOBLE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of March laſt, one watch with the inſide and outſide caſe made of metal, covered with ſhagreen, value 30s. two metal ſeals, value 2s. a linen ſhirt, value 6s. one pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 1s. a coat, value

6d. an apron, value 6d. the property of Joſeph De Marco, and one callico gown, value 7s. the property of Peter Campbell.

ELIZABETH DE MARCO ſworn.

I am wife of Joſeph De Marco; I went out between the hours of three and four in the afternoon, on the 10th of March, and I left a relation of mine in the room, I am only a lodger in the houſe. I returned between nine and ten; I miſſed a metal watch, and a man's blue coat, and a check apron, and a ſhirt unmade, and a pair of ſilk ſtockings; I left the watch hanging on the chimney, the check apron upon a horſe, and the coat on a chair, the ſtockings in a box, and the ſhirt in a clothes bag.

MARY ANN CAMPBELL ſworn.

I went out about half after four; I locked the room, and lifted the latch, and puſhed my knee againſt it; I returned again as the clock ſtruck eight; I found the door open, and the watch gone, and my gown; I do not know who took it.

DANIEL SLACK ſworn.

I am ſeventeen; the priſoner came about nine at night to Mr. Ruſhman's in Monmouth-ſtreet, a pawnbroker's; it was on the 10th of March laſt, and brought a watch and gave it to me, I aſked her what ſhe wanted upon it? ſhe ſaid half a guinea; I looked at it, I ſaw it was too good for the money, I aſked her whoſe it was? ſhe ſaid ſhe came from Moſes Allen, Drury-lane, near the coal-yard; I aſked her if ſhe knew the perſon's name of the houſe, or the number? ſhe ſaid, no; I aſked her her name? and ſhe ſaid her name was Ann Hill; our journeyman kept her in talk, while I got a warrant; I have the watch, I know it to be the ſame by a mark that was upon it; I am ſure the priſoner is the perſon; I never ſaw her before; ſhe never went out of the ſhop.

THOMAS MUMFORD ſworn.

I took the priſoner, and marked the watch, this is the ſame (the watch depoſed to,) the ſhagreen is worn away in two or three peices, and there is no ſilk withinſide; there was a ſteel chain and two ſeals; I cannot deſcribe them; this is the ſame watch.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The ſame night I got the watch, I was going over the water, and a woman got me to pawn it, and ſhe ſaid ſhe would give me half a crown.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and confined ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

357. ELIZABETH STANLEY, ELEANOR MACDONALD, and ELIZABETH EDWARDS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of April, one linen gown, value 25s. a cloak, value 20s. two aprons, value 1s. a linen ſhift, value 3s. a linen ſhirt, value 2s. one linen apron, value 1s. a check apron, value 6d. a muſlin handkerchief, value 2s. a neck handkerchief, value 2s. a linen ditto, value 1s. a cap, value 1s. 6d. a pair of ruffles, value 12d. a pair of laced ditto, value 1s. a pair of mittens, value 6d. and a night cap, value 6d. the property of Samuel Chapman, in his dwelling houſe.

ARABELLA CHAPMAN ſworn.

My huſband's name is Samuel Chapman; on the 6th of this Month I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; I met the priſoner Stanley coming out of my kitchen with a large bundle, I thought ſhe had been one of my lodgers; I was ſo frightened I had not power to ſpeak to her nor to ſtop her; I let her go out; the tall priſoner, Edwards, came in when ſhe heard me cry, ſhe ſaid, if I would make myſelf happy, ſhe would find the priſoner in two days, for the things were not pawned, they had not got to St. Giles's.

SAMUEL CHAPMAN ſworn.

I was not at home at the time of the robbery; I came home about eight o'clock, and the priſoner Edwards came to tell me to pacify my wife, for ſhe would bring the perſon in two days that had taken the things; upon that I took her up, I gave her in charge to the watchman; ſhe ran away from the watchman; I ran after her, and took her to the watch-houſe; ſhe aſked the reaſon why we did not take the other perſon up, that was Macdonald; then we went and took her up.

WALTER TANNER ſworn.

I ſaw theſe two girls, the ſhort girl Stanley, and the tall one Edwards; and coming by Mr. Chapman's kitchen window, I ſaw the ſhort one ſtoop down, and peep into the window, that was at four in the afternoon; I knew the tall one before.

GEORGE PICKERING ſworn.

Theſe two girls, Edwards and Macdonald, came into my houſe, and called for a glaſs of liquor, and another woman, which is very much like that woman which ſtands in the middle; I do not ſay poſitively whether ſhe is her, or not.

When did they come in?—About ſeven o'clock.

On what day?—I am not poſitive to the day; they were taken up the ſame evening; they only called for a glaſs of liquor a-piece, and paid for it, and went away.

SARAH WESTON ſworn.

I know the priſoner Elizabeth Stanley; I ſaw her come out of the houſe with a bundle of Mr. Chapman's; I ſaw her walk backwards and forwards with Edwards ſeveral times; I ſaw Stanley go on after ſome other woman; I thought ſhe might lodge in the houſe; ſhe had no bundle when ſhe went in; when ſhe came out, nobody was with her.

REBECCA HAINES ſworn.

I heard the priſoner Edwards ſay ſhe would find the things in two days; Mrs. Chapman told her ſhe would give her a guinea, if ſhe would tell her where directly; ſhe ſaid ſhe did not know, but ſhe knew they were not pawned, ſhe knew they were not further than St. Giles's.

ELIZABETH ASH ſworn.

I heard Elizabeth Edwards ſay at Mrs. Chapman's, that ſhe would bring the perſon in two days; ſhe offered her a guinea, but ſhe ſaid ſhe could not tell her directly.

MARY PITT ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner Stanley paſs there at ſeven in the evening of that day; I was in Mr. Chapman's ſhop; then nobody was with Stanley; ſhe paſſed the door again with a bundle in her apron; I did not know her before, but I am ſure it is the ſame perſon. I heard Elizabeth Edwards ſay, if Mrs. Chapman would be eaſy, ſhe would find the things in leſs than two days.

Court to Mrs. Chapman. Were any of your things ever found again?—No.

What things did you looſe?—(Repeats the things in the indictment.) The things were in a large earthen pan in the kitchen; they were lapped up in a ſmall check apron; I ſaw them about a quarter of an hour before.

What might the value of theſe things be at a low valuation?——They were all new good things; I could not put them in the place under nine or ten pounds.

But what would they be worth to ſell for?——I heard they were ſold for five pounds.

PRISONER STANLEY'S DEFENCE.

I know nothing of it; they have taken up the wrong woman. At the time when the witneſs ſays ſhe ſaw me, I was in Clerkenwell priſon, at that bleſſed time.

Proſecutor. When ſhe came out of the kitchen, ſhe held down her head; but this is the perſon that was with the tall woman all the day.

Court to Sarah Weſton. Do you know Elizabeth Stanley, are you ſure ſhe is the perſon you ſaw go in, and come out with the bundle?——I am quite ſure of it; I have no doubt at all.

Mary Pitt. I am ſure it was Elizabeth Stanley.

358. MARY DYKES and ELIZABETH HEBERT were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th of April, ſix guineas, value 6l. 6s. the property of John Sampey.

JOHN SAMPEY ſworn.

I am a publican; I live at Deptford. I loſt my money on Tueſday the 11th of April; I was going to Deptford about ten in the evening on foot alone; and the priſoner Hebert accoſted me, and aſked me if I would treat her with a glaſs of gin, and I proceeded on; ſhe ſtill aſked me; I ſaid, can you drink gin; ſhe ſaid, yes; this was at the end of Roſemary-lane; I was then going home, and ſhe aſked me if I would go home with her; ſhe ſaid it was but juſt by; I ſaid, I cannot ſtay; ſhe ſaid, do, go home with me; and I being a little prevailed upon, went with her.

Was ſhe alone?——Yes; I went with her, I do not know the houſe, and after coming into the room, ſhe aſked me what I meant to give her to drink; I ſaid I did not know; I wanted to go away again, ſeeing the ſituation of the place; I gave her ſixpence; there was a door that came from another room into that; Mary Dykes came into that room, and perſuaded me to go into the room to her, and ſaid I might come in that way; when I came in, the other followed me, and ſhe aſked me to ſend for a pot of porter; I ſaid I had no change, only a guinea; I did not chuſe to truſt them with a guinea, but if they would bring change for a guinea, I would pay for a pot of porter; they could not get change for a guinea; in the mean time, while another girl was gone for a pot of porter, Mary Dykes partly undreſſed herſelf; ſhe perſuaded me to ſit on the bed; I would not, I ſat on the chair, and ſhe began to unbutton my breeches in a moſt ſcandalous manner. I then ſaid, I will go and get the porter myſelf; after that I got out of the houſe, and found myſelf clear of the place I ran as faſt as I could, and took water; I ſaid to the waterman, I fancy I ſhall want change for a guinea; I felt in my pocket and found my money was gone; I deſired the waterman to put on ſhore, and make his boat faſt, and I took him with me and went to the place; I told two watchmen of it; I went with the officer of the watch, and the beadle; I went into two or three different ſtreets, till I found out the houſe, and I found the two priſoners and another woman and a man, the man and woman were in bed; the officer aſked me if they were the people; I ſaid yes; I told him they were the people; the priſoner Dykes ſaid ſhe never ſaw me in her life before; he told her I had been robbed, and they had the money; ſhe ſtill ſaid ſhe never ſaw me before; I deſired the officer to ſearch them; accordingly the officer ſearched Mary Dykes, he found ſixpence in her apron-ſtring; they heard the jingle of money, by which reaſon they immediately ſearched her all over; they could not find any money for a conſiderable time; afterwards, he ſaid we ſhould all go to the watch-houſe, he inſiſted upon it; and accordingly following Mary Dykes, ſhe began to ſwear and ſtorm about it; they got her into a paſſage, and ſhe pretended to be in a kind of fit, and they put her into the room again, and they found a guinea; then they began to diſpute about it, and a man and a woman that were in bed were deſired to get up, and I pulled up the head of the bedſtead, and ſaw two guineas and a half lay; I gave that to the officer; after that they inſiſted on ſearching further, and Mary Dykes began to ſtorm and ſwear; and the watchman found another guinea juſt where he ſtood; then they were all taken to priſon; we found no more money; and the next morning there was a hearing before the Magiſtrate, and he aſked Mary Dykes if ſhe concealed any part of that money, and ſhe ſaid, no; there was ſome ſilver that was taken away from Elizabeth Hebert, I only juſt aſked her if ſhe claimed that, ſhe ſaid, yes; ſeven ſhillings ſhe had from a gentleman in a coach, and five ſhillings of it was her's; I believe the ſilver was found in Hebert's pocket; I was deſired to appear the Saturday following; this was the Tueſday, when I came to the watch-houſe; the next Saturday I ſaw the beadle.

Was you in liquor?—I cannot ſay I was ſober; I was not very much in liquor.

Was there any light in the room where you was the firſt time?——When we firſt went in, the girl called for a candle in the entry, and a candle was brought; I am quite ſure theſe were the women; I can only ſay I loſt ſix guineas; it was looſe in my right-hand breeches-pocket.

JEREMIAH KING ſworn.

On the 11th of April, I was officer of the night, and the proſecutor came to me between twelve and one in the morning, and informed me he had been robbed of ſix guineas; I aſked him, by whom? he ſaid by two women of the town; he ſaid he knew the women, but did not immediately know the ſtreet: he went up different ſtreets, and at laſt found the houſe; he ſaid he was ſure that was the houſe; there was a light in it, and the ſhutters were cracked, and we ſaw through, and within the room I ſaw two or three perſons; I heard them diſputing about money; the words were very high, and I believe I could ſafely ſay I heard Mary Dykes's voice in particular; he ſaid they were the girls, and that was the houſe. I knocked twice; ſomebody came, and aſked what I wanted; I ſaid, I muſt ſee Nancy; the proſecutor ſaid her name was Polly; I then ſaid, I want Polly; they ſaid, what Polly? I ſaid, the girl that I ſleep with ſometimes, in order to obtain admiſſion into the houſe; then the priſoner Dykes opened the door, and the proſecutor ſaid he was ſure ſhe was the woman that robbed him of his money; I took charge of her; ſhe denied it; ſhe wanted to go to the window; I ſaid ſhe ſhould not; I ſearched her, and in ſhaking her clothes, I heard the ſound of money, and from the ſound, I am pretty clear it was gold; I found nothing in her pockets; I inſiſted on her pulling off her clothes; ſhe heſitated; I put down my hand, and found ſixpence in the tail of her petticoat.

JOHN GRIFFIN ſworn.

I picked up the laſt guinea; ſhe acknowledged to me that the five ſhillings and the half-guinea were the change of the other guinea.

PRISONER DYKES'S DEFENCE.

I lent my hat to the woman of the houſe; I came at ten for it, and ſhe deſired me to go in, and the gentleman aſked me to get a pot of porter; he went for the pot of beer himſelf at ten, and never returned till almoſt two.

PRISONER

PRISONER HEBERT's DEFENCE.

I was going down Queen-ſtreet; the proſecutor ſtopped me, and aſked me to have ſomething to drink; I declined it at firſt, and I went to the Queen's Head; he aſked me to ſee me home; he came home with me; he ſent out for ſixpenny-worth of liquor; after that the gentleman wanted me to oblige him for ſo ſmall a trifle as ſixpence, which I did not chuſe, and he was going away; as the gentleman was going away, Mary Dykes came in; the gentleman aſked her to drink ſome porter; the gentleman deſired the woman of the houſe to get change for a guinea, he would not truſt her with the change; he got up, and put his hand in his right-hand breeches-pocket, and ſaid he would go himſelf and get change; he went out, and never returned till he returned with an officer.

MARY DYKES, GUILTY.

ELIZABETH HEBERT, NOT GUILTY.

359. JAMES GODFREY was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of Elizabeth Fuller, at the hour of four in the night, on the 1ſt of April, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein eight ſilk handkerchiefs, value 8s. one black laced half handkerchief, value 6d. two ſilver ſeals, value 2s. a pair of ſilver ſhoe-buckles, value 6s. four ſilver ſpoons, value 5s. a ſilver pap-ſpoon, value 4s. a ſmall ſilver toothpick-caſe, value 12d. a ſilver medal, value 5s. a japan'd ſnuff-box, value 1s. a purſe, value 1d. three ſeals, value 12d. one ſmall roſe diamond ring, value 15s. two plain gold rings, value 15s. twenty pieces of old ſilver, value 6s. a pair of garnet ear-rings, ſet in gold, value 4s. and one ſilver watch, value 20s. her property.

ELIZABETH FULLER ſworn.

I live at Brentford End, in Iſleworth pariſh. On the 1ſt of April, between the hour of twelve and five, my houſe was broke open; I was at home, and went to bed at eleven; my ſon is generally the laſt; I did not ſee the houſe faſtened before I went up; about five, we were alarmed by our neighbours that our houſe was broke open.

JOHN FULLER ſworn.

The ſervant-maid was the laſt up; ſhe is not here; I always faſtened the ſhop-window myſelf, and locked the two doors; there are two doors into the ſhop: the next morning, about five, we were alarmed by the neighbours that the ſhop was broke open; I got up, and went into the ſhop, and found the tiles and ceiling of the ſhop broken, and the leads both, and ſome body had got in between the rafters; the ſhop adjoins to the houſe, but there is no room over it; there was room enough for a man to come through; I looked round the ſhop, and found two drawers open, one the till, and another; and I miſſed a number of different articles, and ſome ſilk articles which lay in the window. There was nothing done till about a quarter after ſeven in the morning, when Mr. Black came up to deſire me to come down to the Feathers, that there was a ſuſpicious man there; when I came there, we went up into the room where the priſoner and his wife were, and the firſt thing we diſcovered, in ſearching the room, was a Cheſhire cheeſe under the bed; the next thing that I could ſwear to, was a ſnuff-box that lay on a ch[illegible] the priſoner's room; after that, the priſoner was ſearched; there was a piece of money found in his pocket; the priſoner ſaid it was a crown piece when he took it out, but it was my medal.

In which pocket?—I believe the right-hand breeches-pocket; I do not recollect any thing elſe being found: his wife was then ſearched, and all the reſt of the articles, except a watch, were found upon her.

What did the priſoner ſay for himſelf?—He ſaid he had not been out; he ſaid nothing more; we found the watch, on coming ing back, which was in the cage where the priſoner was confined, before we took him to Bow-ſtreet; I ſaw it found.

Was there any body elſe in the cage when he was there?——Nobody elſe, nor before, that I know of. I know nothing further.

JOHN KING ſworn.

About ſix o'clock, on the 1ſt of April, I heard this ſhop had been broke open, and my ſuſpicion fell on the priſoner, becauſe I was ſent for the Thurſday before about him; I got aſſiſtance to help me; I ſent for Mr. Fuller, to enquire what he had loſt, before I took him; I went up in the room, and took him; he lodged at the Feathers.

How long had he lodged there?—Not a fortnight; he had lodged at the Red Lion about ſix or eight weeks before he came there; I had ſeen him before; I do not know his buſineſs. The firſt thing that was found, was a ſnuff-box on the chair; I went to ſearch him; he ſaid he had a crown piece; I took it out, and Mr. Fuller ſaid he would ſwear to it; I felt in his other pocket, and I believe there were ſome ſeals there, but I do not particularly recollect them; it was a japan'd ſnuff-box; after I had ſearched him, I told his wife I ſhould ſearch her; ſhe ſaid, it is of no uſe to keep it any longer; ſo ſhe pulled out theſe things out of her pocket, and the buckles and pap-ſpoon, and tea-ſpoon, and this caſe and ſome of the ſeals, and ſome looſe ſilver, which was tied up in this glove, I found in a box in the room; he ſaid he had not been out that morning; I ſaid I knew he had, his breeches were all over mortar; the watch I could not find about him then, though I believe I was flurried, and did not feel on the right ſide; when I came back, I found they were afterwards in the cage.

Had any body elſe been in the cage between that time?——I believe not.

How long afterwards was it that you looked in the cage?—As ſoon as we came back from Bow-ſtreet; it might be about three, it was in the afternoon of the ſame day; here is a leather purſe I found in a box with Mr. Fuller's name upon it in his own hand writing, that was in the box in the room with the looſe ſilver.

MOSES EDMUNDS ſworn.

I was going to my labour about ten minutes before five, and I ſaw a man coming through the ſhop, through the ceiling, and he ran away, and I followed him, and I went to the publick houſe, I cannot ſwear to him; he had a light looſe great coat on; he was very like the priſoner by the back, but I cannot ſwear to him.

JASPER PELLIGOTT ſworn.

On Saturday the 1ſt of April, I was going up Brentford, and he called after me, and ſaid, Mr. Fuller's ſhop was broke open; I went with him; I had the ſame reaſon to ſuſpect the man that he had, and we went into the room, and found the things as deſcribed by the conſtable; when we came back to Bow-ſtreet, I aſked the woman at the Brown Bear, if ſhe knew any thing of the watch, and the only anſwer ſhe made, was, have you looked in the cage; we found it there.

JOHN STILES ſworn.

I live at Brentford, at the Feathers; the priſoner lodged at my houſe about eight days; I remember the night this robbery was committed, the priſoner went out about a quarter after four in the morning, as nigh as I can gueſs; I never ſaw him till about ſeven, then he came in.

Did you obſerve him bring any thing with him about that time?——He had ſomething in a white cloth he carried in his hand, but what I cannot ſay.

Did he uſe to go out ſo early?—I never ſaw him go out ſo early before.

What employment had he at your houſe?—I do not know.

Did he work at any thing?—I cannot really ſay he did, he was there ſo ſhort a time.

It was pretty near day-light when you let him out in the morning?——Yes, it was break of day.

(The ſnuff-box depoſed to.)

Proſecutrix. It lay in the till; I ſaw it forty or fifty times a day.

Court. Let me look at it, it is an old box, a good deal worn.

Then from the marks and appearance of it do you know it again?——Yes.

Have you any doubt of its being your's?——Not the leaſt in the world; theſe rings were taken out of the ſame drawer; the two gold rings lay in a box, where there was ſome ſilver and halfpence, the diamond ring was in a box wrapped up in a paper; I have no doubt of the box and the rings.

(Mr. Fuller depoſes to them.)

This purſe is mine; I do not know the watch, this was a watch pledged on the Friday; there was a watch the night before in the drawer, and it was gone in the morning; I can ſwear to the ſilver medal.

What is it a medal of?—Something of a battle; that lay in the ſame drawer where the two gold rings lay.

What was the device on the medal you loſt?——There was ſome man on horſeback.

And what woman, do you know?——I do not know, Diana, I believe it was.

Court. No, it is Anna, not Diana; how long have you had it?——Ever ſince I can remember.

Have you never taken notice what the medal was?——No.

How can you ſwear to it?——By ſeeing it conſtantly.

Mrs. Fuller. I cannot ſay I know the medal; I have ſeen it a number of years in that ſame drawer; I know this little tooth-pick caſe; I do not know the handkerchiefs, otherwiſe than ſeeing them lay in the window; I know the ear-rings and buckles; I can ſwear to them.

What may the value of theſe things be that are found at a low valuation?——About five guineas.

Priſoner. Sir, I am as innocent of the robbery, as a young child.

How did theſe things come into your poſſeſſion?—A man brought them, and delivered them to me in the ſtreet; I aſked him, whether I ſhould come to any harm by them? he ſaid, no; he delivered them to me; I cannot have my witneſſes here till to-morrow, or Monday; or elſe I have witneſſes where I was at the time the robbery was done; I went out to work at a gentleman's houſe, after a job of work; I am a day labouring man.

Court to Proſecutor. Name all the articles that are there?—A pair of ſilver buckles, four tea-ſpoons, one pap-ſpoon, a diamond ring, two plain gold rings, a pair of garnet ear-rings, and a ſilver watch, three ſilver ſeals, and a ſilver tooth-pick caſe, a quantity of old ſilver, and a ſilver medal.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s. but not guilty of breaking and entering.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

360. JOHN SIMPSON was indicted for that he, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced, by the inſtigation of the devil, on the 17th day of March laſt, with force and arms, at the pariſh of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, on Elizabeth his wife, in the peace of God and our Lord the King, then and there being, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an aſſault, and with a certain pen-knife made of iron and ſteel, value 6d. which he, in his right hand, then and there held, on the left ſide of the ſaid Elizabeth, did ſtab, ſtrike, and penetrate, giving to her on the ſaid left ſide, one mortal wound of the length of a quarter of an inch, and of the depth of two inches, of which, ſhe, the ſaid Elizabeth, from the ſaid 17th of March, till the 18th, did languiſh, and languiſhing did live; and on the ſaid 18th of March, the ſaid Elizabeth, of the ſaid mortal wound did die; and ſo the Jurors upon their oaths ſay, that he the ſaid John, her the ſaid Elizabeth, in manner and form aforeſaid, did kill, and murder againſt the peace.

He was alſo charged with the like murder, on the Coroner's inquiſition.

(The Caſe opened by Mr. Silveſter.)

ELEANOR EVANS ſworn.

I am wife of Robert Evans; my huſband is a blackſmith, and lives in Roſe and Crown court, Shoreditch.

How long did the priſoner and his wife lodge in that houſe?——Nine months, or thereabouts.

Where did you ſup on Thurſday night the 17th of March?——On the Thurſday night, I had ſupped before I went to ſup with the priſoner; he came in on the evening of the Thurſday night, as near as I can gueſs, about ten, and he went up ſtairs, one pair of ſtairs higher, and he came down rather diſpleaſed, becauſe ſupper was not done, and ſaid, he would go out and get a pint of beer; but he did not go out; when he came in he made up to the draft-board, where there was a hat hanging; my huſband ſaid he would not have him go out that night but come in and ſit down with him while the ſupper was ready; there was a bonnet hung up by the draft-board, and he pointed to it with his ſtick; he ſaid, he thought it was a woman; bleſs me, ſays he, how I am deceived; then he ſat down with my huſband and me in our kitchen; then he ſaid, he would ſend for a pot of beer, before the houſe was ſhut up, and he gave our apprentice the money, and he ſaid he would go up ſtairs, and my huſband ſhould go with him; my huſband had ſupped; and he ſaid, never mind that Evans, you ſhall go up ſtairs with me.

Was the pot of beer drank below?——No; the priſoner took it up ſtairs himſelf; then my huſband followed him, by the deſire of the priſoner, and I went with them; by that time ſupper was ready, and we four ſat down to ſupper; and we ſupped, to all outward appearance, very agreeably; he helped his wife to a bit of the pork; when we had ſupped, it was a little after eleven; then my huſband ſhook hands with the priſoner, and we both went into the next room; and was called again about one by the priſoner.

What ſort of a call was it?——Mrs. Evans; when I went in, and when I came in, he ſaid to me, now do you believe there is a man in bed with her; and I ſaid Simpſon, what are you talking of, there is nobody in bed with her; he ſaid, they were gipſies, and had been ſinging under the window the whole night.

Did you at that time look into the bed to ſee if there was any body there?—Oh, yes, there was nobody but the deceaſed in the bed; he then ſaid if you will not believe, go to bed; for you will ſee more of them come up ſtairs; then I went to bed; then I was called up again about four in the morning.

Did you go to ſleep?——I dare ſay I did.

What was the call then?—Mrs. Evans, Mrs. Evans, for God's ſake come in.

Whoſe voice was that?—Both parties, Mrs. Simpſon that is dead, and the priſoner; I got up and went into the room, and when I came into the room, the priſoner ſtood on the off ſide of the bed, in his ſhirt, with his breeches, ſhoes, and ſtockings on; he was undreſſed in the ſame manner at one o'clock when I went in; ſhe was in bed; I ſaid, what is the matter with you Mrs. Simpſon; and ſhe ſaid, he would neither ſleep himſelf, nor let her go to reſt; then he put his hand very coolly into his pocket, and pulled out a knife; I immediately cried murder.

Into his breeches pocket?——Yes.

What ſort of a knife was it?—A claſp pen-knife.

Was it claſped when he took it firſt out?—Yes, it was, and I cried murder; he opened the knife, and I repeated murder for God's ſake; and he ſaid to the deceaſed, d—n you, you bitch, I will run you through; then the priſoner made the knife to the left ſide, open, as ſhe lay on her right ſide.

What do you mean by the priſoner making the knife to the left ſide?——He made it to the left ſide, as though he was going to give the wound; but I did not know that he had.

Take the knife into your hand, and make a motion, in the manner he did?—

He held it in his right hand, and made a motion with the blade of the knife to the ſide.

Where did he ſtand?——At the upper end of the bed, and looked exactly at her who lay in the bed.

Then you being on the oppoſite ſide, could ſee diſtinctly the motion he made?——Yes, his face was towards her; he looked at her, he did not look at me; as near as I can recollect, it was the right ſide.

Do you recollect which hand it was he took the knife out of his pocket with?—He certainly muſt take it with his left hand.

Is he left handed or right handed?——I cannot ſay.

Which hand did he open the knife with?——As near as I can tell, he muſt hold it in his left hand, and open it with his right; that is, as near as I can think; but my flurry was ſo great, I can hardly anſwer.

What, did the woman lay covered?——She lay with the clothes mouſled like from her ſhoulder; ſhe was a very luſty woman.

Were the clothes off from her left, or her right ſhoulder?——Her left ſhoulder.

How low down might the clothes be off?——As near as I could ſee, with my fright and flurry, they were laid down off her ſhoulder.

When he made a puſh towards her ſide, was it to the lower part of her ſide, or the upper part?——I cannot ſay; ſeeing no blood follow, I thought nothing of it; then Mrs. Simpſon turned round immediately upon her back, and looked up at the priſoner, and ſaid, Simpſon are you going to murder me, and he immediately took the knife, and thruſt it as ſhe lay on her back, in the ſmall part of her noſe; ſhe lay with her head rather turned; then the blood followed there in a moſt violent manner.

Did he uſe any expreſſion when he made that thruſt?—None that I can recollect.

Did ſhe ſay any thing upon receiving that wound?——Nothing; I never heard her mention any thing.

What did not ſhe cry out?——They neither of them ſaid a word.

Did you ſay any thing to him?——Upon my word I cannot recollect that I ſpoke, except to my lodgers, who came down ſtairs, they lodge in the garret; my huſband came and ſtood at the door, and he ſaid, Simpſon, what have you done, have you cut your wife's throat; and he made no anſwer.

What became of the knife?—He came round while I was waſhing the blood off her noſe; Simpſon came round to the place where I ſtood; I had the deceaſed's head on my arm, and was waſhing the blood off her noſe, and was trying to ſtop it; then the priſoner came round to my ſide with the knife in his hand, and I ſaid, Mr. Simpſon, I wiſh you would give me this knife, upon which he gave it me; it was open when he gave it me.

Was there any blood upon it?——Upon my word in that confuſion I cannot ſay; I gave it to my huſband, as he ſtood at the door; then with the aſſiſtance of my lodgers, we took her and helped her into the next room, into my child's bed, for fear any thing ſhould enſue; I took her thinking if there was any thing of paſſion, ſhe had better be out of the way.

Was there any appearance of either of them being in a paſſion?—— None, that I ſaw at that time, in either of them.

Did the man appear to be in a paſſion when you firſt came into the room?——No, but what I made mention of; he looked in a very fierce terrible manner.

Different from what he uſed to look?—Yes, Sir; I never ſaw him commit ſuch a raſh action before; he looked in a very troubled bad ſituation; I never ſaw him look ſo before.

Did you put any clothes upon her before you moved her?——I put her on a clean ſhift; that was dirty on account of the blood and the water.

Where did you ſhift her?—In her own room.

In doing that, you did not take notice of her having received a hurt in her ſide?——

——No; after I got her into my room, I aſked him if he had not better go to bed, he came to the door, and made anſwer, he ſhould not go into that bed to night.

Was any thing ſaid during the time you was ſhifting her, by either the priſoner or the deceaſed?——No; ſhe never made any complaint at all.

Court. What became of him after he ſaid he ſhould not go to bed that night?——He had his clothes on, and I ſaid, he had better go to bed to his wife, and I ſaid, I would make the child get up and come into our bed, which was in the ſame room; he laid down by his wife, and I believe he lay about ten minutes, I cannot recollect there was any thing ſaid by either of them; then after I was ſettled in bed, he got up and blew my candle out that ſtood on the drawers, I ſaid Simpſon, this will never do, I ſhall not lay here in the dark, and I got up and ſtruck a light, at that time he got off the bed, after I ſtruck a light, and got out in the paſſage; he was diſturbed and troubled in his mind as I thought; I cannot recollect any thing more of the circumſtance, till after he had been out in the morning, and had been in again, which was about eight o'clock, then he came into the room, and he ſaid, remember, Mrs. Evans, I gave you the knife.

Where was his wife?——In bed; he ſaid you have my knife; I ſaid yes, but I do not chooſe to give it you; with that he ſaid, never mind it; and he went out of the room, and went into his own room, and ſoon after he came out of his own room and came to my door again, with a pair of new buckſkin breeches in his hand, and his plain ſhirt; and he ſaid he was going to the Halfmoon, in Halfmoon-alley, at George Wood's; I ſaw no more of him the fore part of the day, till eleven or twelve; then he came into the room where his wife lay; and ſaid, I believe one of her eyes is out; and I ſaid, no Simpſon, her eyes are as well as your's, it is only the wound in her noſe; ſays he, I muſt ſend for a ſurgeon; then he went down ſtairs again, and nothing paſſed at that time; then I went out, and went to her friend to let him know the ſituation ſhe was in, a gentleman where ſhe uſed to have her trifle from; the gentleman ſaid, I muſt get her advice for what was wanting, and he would give it me; I came home, and went and fetched a ſurgeon; by this time it was about two.

Mr. Silveſter. This friend uſed to pay her her annuity?——Yes; then I went to Mr. M'Larching in the Fields; he was not at home, he did not come to his time; then I ſent for him again; he ſaid he could not come; and ſhe complained of being ſore all over, then I ſent for Mr. Taylor, that was about ſeven, or after ſeven, I cannot ſay juſtly; ſhe ſaid one of her ribs was very ſore, and Mr. Taylor put his hand into her boſom, and felt it, and ſaid, ſwelled indeed! and he bid me bring a candle, and he examined where ſhe complained, and there he found the wound; that was the firſt time the wound was diſcovered; he took an inſtrument into his hand, and examined the wound, and I ſaid, I hope it is not ſo deep as that; and he ſaid it was, and he ordered me to make a poultice directly, which I did with bread and milk, and hog's lard; he ordered her a draught to compoſe her, and ſhe ſlept, as near as I can recollect, near half an hour; then ſhe grew worſe and worſe the whole night till the morning, when ſhe expired.

What time in the morning did ſhe die?——At half after ſix on the Saturday morning; the whole night ſhe lay in great agonies; ſhe ſaid, God forgive him, for I do; they aſked her if ſhe had any body to ſend to, and ſhe ſaid no; ſhe ſaid her miſery was ſo great, ſhe could not live many hours.

When was this man taken up?——He was rather obſtropulous; ſhe was then alive, and he ſaid he would go up ſtairs to ſee his wife; I ſaid, well, Simpſon, you ſhall go up, and he ſat down quite compoſed, to all appearance, and as ſoon as I went down, he pulled the pillow from her head, and mouſled the clothes; I found them ſo when I went up ſtairs.

You told me, that after he had ſaid he would not ſleep in that bed that night, he went out, and you do not recollect ſeeing him till the morning, when he ſaid, Mrs. Evans, remember I gave you my knife?—It was after he went out, he had the buckſkin breeches, and after he had ſaid one of her eyes was out, I had been to her friend; when he came in that night, I was in the kitchen, I went up with him, and when he came up, he ſeemed very compoſed; he ſat down by the bed-ſide; there was nothing of anger or paſſion, and I ſeeing every thing was quiet, went down.

How long was you down ſtairs?—Upon my word I cannot ſay; I left him there while I went out for a ſurgeon the firſt time; and when I returned, I went up to the deceaſed, and he was down in the kitchen; how he got down, or by what means, I cannot ſay.

When you went up, what ſtate was ſhe in?—I found the clothes half way down as ſhe lay in bed, and I ſaw the pillow laying at the foot of the bed.

Did the deceaſed ſay any thing at that time about his coming up?——She ſaid he had been pulling the pillow about, and ſhe had rather not ſee him.

Do you recollect the particular expreſſion ſhe made uſe of?——She made uſe of none; ſays ſhe, do not pother me, Simpſon, let me alone; that was when he was talking about her eye being out. I hope, my Lord, if I am miſtaken, you will be ſo good as to excuſe it, it is a heavy affair, ſhe was as good as a mother to me.

Mr. Silveſter. What age was the woman?—Fifty-two.

Mr. Garrow. Mrs. Evans, theſe two people have lodged in your houſe for nine months?—Yes.

Do you know from what place they came to lodge with you?—Yes, out of Ludgate priſon.

Do you know how long they had been there?——I cannot ſay.

You have ſaid you never ſaw him behave ſo before?——Never.

Upon what terms did they live together during the nine months you obſerved their conduct?—Very happy.

Did you ever ſee him beat her?—No; but I have ſaid to her I would go to my friends; ſays ſhe, Mrs. Evans, if I came to you for my ſupport, then you ſhould ſpeak; if I like it, who has any buſineſs; my five ſhillings a week will always keep me.

You ſay they lived well together?—Yes; his wife lodged with him in the priſon backwards and forwards.

This poor man, I believe, has had a great deal of misfortune, and five ſhillings a week was all they had to live on?—That I cannot ſay; five ſhillings was all ſhe had; ſhe was always contented.

What was the ſtate of his health at the time this happened?——He was ill, to be ſure; it was the firſt time of his going out.

How had he been confined, had he any aſſiſtance from any body of medical profeſſion, at the time he came in, in the evening, to your room firſt; I wiſh you would deſcribe a little more particularly to my Lord what he ſaid about the hat?——He ſaid he thought it had been a woman.

Did not he ſay he had caught one at leaſt, or any thing of that?—No.

Had you ever heard him talk in that way before, about catching gipſies, or men in bed?——No, never before.

They ſupped together very agreeably?—Yes, to all outward appearance.

It was the priſoner that called you up the firſt time?——Yes.

And the firſt thing he ſaid to you, was, now, do you believe I have caught a man in bed with her; to which you anſwered, no, there is nobody in bed with her?--Yes.

Then what reply did he make?—He ſaid there were gipſies under the bed ſinging.

Was that the time he talked about the trap-door?—I come here as much on one ſide as the other; I do not come to tell you what other people have ſaid.

What did he ſay?—Something that it was a bad houſe.

There was no complaint made by the wife, till he took the knife out of his pocket?——No, nothing at all.

What was the expreſſion?——He will neither ſleep himſelf, nor let me ſleep.

Did ſhe ſay, he cannot ſleep, or he will not ſleep?—She ſaid, he will not ſleep.

You cried out, murder! how did you perceive him to look?——When I ſee a man in bed, ſitting in that manner, and taking a knife out of his pocket, I had but little thought how the man looked; when he opened it, I cried murder, for God's ſake!

After he put the knife towards her ſide, it was that ſhe aſked him quietly whether he was going to murder here?—Yes.

When he went out of the room, did he take a light?—I cannot ſay.

Do you remember his coming in at five, and ſaying he would go to the Spread Eagle?——I cannot tell the time.

Did you ſee him before he went out on that day?—I did not.

This annuity entirely ceaſed on the death of the wife?—It did.

What was the man's buſineſs?—A barber and hair-dreſſer.

How long before this did you ſee him?—I ſaw him in bed the day before.

What time of day was that?——I cannot ſay.

Morning or afternoon?—After dinner.

Did he keep his bed?—He was in bed, but I never was in his room, except juſt aſking how he did; I had no occaſion to ſpeak to him in the courſe of that week; his wife ſaid he had a cold.

Before that time, he behaved himſelf decently and ſoberly?——Soberly I cannot ſay; but ſober or not, he always behaved well.

Was he apt to be in liquor?—Like other people.

Was he given to drink?——As every other man in buſineſs.

There are ſome men that are ſober men, there are other men that are often in liquor; which was he?——I muſt leave it to your Lordſhip.

How do I know; I never ſaw the man in my life before, good woman?—I muſt needs ſay, I believe he was in liquor a pretty deal, or elſe he never would have made away with what he has made away with.

Are you able to judge that night, when he came in, and when he miſtook the hat for a woman, was he ſober or not?—I may ſafely ſay then he was ſober.

When he was in liquor, how did he behave?——I never ſaw him any ways outrageous till that night.

Had he, when in liquor, any tendency to be miſchievous?—I never obſerved any thing of that kind.

I am huſband to the laſt witneſs. The priſoner came home on the Thurſday night about ten, or rather before; he went up into his own room, and found fault with his wife, becauſe ſhe had not dreſſed his ſupper; they had a few words, but what they were I do not know; he came down into my apartment, and I deſired him to ſit down, and have a drop of beer.

Was he drunk or ſober?——Sober; I aſked him to ſit down, and next to the draft board that I have hanging in the room, there was a hat hung, and he makes to the hat, and ſaid, God bleſs my ſoul! I thought it had been a woman, and he drew back again; after that, he ſat down, and called for a pot of beer; we drank part of it; in the courſe of half an hour afterwards, he ſaid, Evans, you may as well go up to ſupper; ſays I, Mr. Simpſon, I have had my ſupper before, nevertheleſs, I will go up with you; he took the pot of beer into his own hand, and we went up ſtairs together into his own room; he ſat down, and there was a bit of loin of pork roaſting, and he turned it round, and baſted it, and he took it up, and deſired his wife to lay a cloth; and ſhe ſaid ſhe had none; my wife fetched a cloth of her own, and laid it for her; they took the meat up, and had their ſupper; after ſupper, about half after eleven, we left them in good friendſhip, and went to our bed; I heard no more till about one; about one, Mrs. Simpſon the deceaſed, came into our room in her ſhift; ſays I, for God's ſake what is the matter; ſhe ſaid, for God's ſake, I do not know what is the matter with Simpſon; he came in directly after her; ſays I, Simpſon, I wiſh you would go to your own room, and go to bed; accordingly they did.

When he followed her, did he ſay any thing?——Not to my knowledge; after that, in about a few minutes they called, I awaked my wife, and ſhe went to the room to them; and what they ſaid, I do not know; I went to ſleep; but after that, between three and four, the priſoner got out of bed again, and called, watch, watch, watch, ſeveral times over; I thought he was going down ſtairs, in the room of that he went up ſtairs, in my boy's garret, and what he did there, I do not know; I kept my own apartment; after that he came down, I called to him as he paſſed my room door, Simpſon, why do you not go to bed; and he went into his own room, and in a few minutes after that, they both called.

Did not you aſk him what he called watch for?——No, I deſired him to go to bed.

Were not you alarmed with his calling the watch?——I was; after that Mr. and Mrs. Simpſon both called, my wife got out of bed, and ſhe put on her petticoat, and went into the room; my wife called me in a minute or two after, for God's ſake, ſays ſhe, Evans, come, murder, murder, for God's ſake, murder, I got up and went into the room, and there the priſoner ſtood, with the knife in his hand.

Whereabouts did he ſtand when you came in?——In the middle of the room partly.

How was he dreſſed?—In his breeches and ſtockings.

Any ſhoes on?——I will not be ſure; the deceaſed ſat on the ſide of the bed, all of a gore of blood; I ſaid to him, Simpſon, what have you cut your wifes's throat? and I drew back again; he ſaid, ſhe has got three men in bed with her now; do not you ſee them there now, theſe are gipſies, ſays he, I am ſure they are; and they have got a trap door behind the bed, I am ſure of it; whereas my Lord, there is no ſuch thing as a trap door; my wife and lodger waſhed the deceaſed's face, and waſhed the blood off, and put a clean ſhift on, took her into my room and put her to bed to my girl; in a little time he came into the room, and I ſaid to him for God's ſake what is the matter with you, go to bed; he ſaid, I will not get in there any more; I ſaid, go then and lay down by your wife, and he did; during this time, the wife ſaid nothing; then he got up and blew out the candle I had in my room; I ſaid then to him, Simpſon, if you cannot be quiet, go out of doors; accordingly my wife ſtruck a light, and he went out; he went up ſtairs into the garret again, there I heard him make a noiſe, I jumped out of bed, and went up to him, he came down ſtairs, and went out of doors; my boy let him out; at about eight, he came back again; I was in bed, and he ſaid, that he had been to the Spread-Eagle, in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and had been tried there for killing a man; he had killed a man, he ſaid he knew he had killed a man, and ſtruck him through the ribs; and, ſays he, running through the ſtreet, after I got away, a man went to ſhoot me with a gun, but ſays he, I got away from him; then after that, he goes to Mr. Wood's that keeps a publick houſe in Halfmoon-alley, and carried a pair of breeches, and a ſhirt there; a little time after Mr. Wood and he came paſt my window, and Mr. Wood aſked me if I would go and have a glaſs of any thing to drink; and we went to the Horſe and Groom, the corner of Moor-fields; we had a glaſs each of us, and came away at about one, as nigh as I can recollect; he came back again; I was at dinner, I aſked him to have a bit, he ſaid no, then ſays he, have you been to the bankers? no, ſays I, you ſhall not go, I will go, or my wife ſhall; he directly ſtarted up in a rage, and ſaid he would go to Johnny Flude's the pawnbroker's, and get a pair of piſtols; he immediately went out of the houſe, and I did not ſee him any more for an hour or two afterwards.

When he was in the kitchen with you, had you any converſation with him, or had your wife?——No; when he came back again, I was reſolved to ſee what he had, whether he had piſtols or no; we ſearched him, me and another man, and I found he had nothing in his pockets at all; with that, ſays he, ſhall not I go and ſee my wife again? ſays I, go up ſtairs, and he went up ſtairs, and came down again, and I heard my wife ſay, he had uſed her very rough; and I thought it proper to charge an officer with him; and we took him to Mr. Wilmot's; and he was committed.

Did any thing particular paſs at the Juſtice's?——No; he ſaid he had killed a man.

When was the ſecond examination?—On Saturday morning.

Before, or after the woman was dead?——After, ſhe died about five o'clock; ſhe ſaid that Simpſon had done for her; and ſhe hoped God would forgive him.

Mr. Garrow. You had not then any idea that the woman had received the mortal wound?——No.

What did he ſay before the Juſtice?——I cannot ſay; the next day he was examined again, and he ſaid, he had caught a man in bed with his wife, whoſe name was Williamſon; and that he had killed him; that was a ſecond time.

Had he and his wife had any words?—I did not hear that they had, I did not hear what had paſſed between them.

When they ſupped they were then ſociable and agreeable?——Yes.

How lately before he came home had you ſeen him, before he made a puſh at the draft board, and in what ſtate did he appear to be?——Very bad; he ſaid, he had a violent cold about him, and was in a very bad ſituation.

You awaked by an out-cry before Mrs. Simpſon came in?——No, Sir; Mrs. Simpſon came in firſt; that was the firſt thing that awaked me.

What anſwer did Simpſon give you, when you deſired him to go into his own room?——He ſaid to my wife, that the gipſies were ſinging under the window.

Have you ever ſaid any where, that upon your deſiring him to go to bed, that he gave you this for anſwer; that there were gipſies in the bed, and that they had a trap door behind the bed?——He did the ſecond time.

Whether on the firſt time of their coming in, he did not give that anſwer?—Not then he did not; after he got into his own room I heard him ſay ſo, before four o'clock; I heard him ſay ſo twice, both at the firſt time, and at four o'clock, I heard the priſoner calling the watch, I obſerved nothing to call the watch for; I deſired him to go to bed.

What ſort of a noiſe did you hear in the garret?——A kind of rumbling of chairs, and things.

At the time he ſaid ſhe has three men in bed with her, do not you ſee them, you had no idea ſhe had received a mortal wound?——No; only the wound in the noſe; at the time he came from the Spread-Eagle, he ſaid he had laid there all night, that he had been tried for killing a man, and had been acquitted; he ſaid he had a bunch of white ribbons, and he would bring them home for my wife to wear.

Had he any?——No; the priſoner and his wife lived together very happy and very agreeable, as a man and woman need to do; this annuity was a principal part of their ſupport; ſhe was a very affectionate good worthy woman, and very tender of him.

Did ſhe ever complain of any ill treatment or brutality?——No, none in the leaſt; only about four in the morning, juſt as they were going to bed, ſhe ſaid, Simpſon has done for me, and God forgive him.

ELIZABETH TATE ſworn.

I am wife to John Tate; he is an enameller; I live in the front garret of this houſe; on the 17th of March, between three and four in the morning we heard Mr. Simpſon making a great noiſe, and call to Mr. Evans, he came into his own paſſage and called watch, then he run into the garret, into the apprentice's room, the apprentice aſked who was there? that is in the back garret; he ſaid he had been very ill uſed, he had ſent for an officer; the apprentice aſked him if he knew where he was, he ſaid, yes, very well, he was at the Spread Eagle; Mrs. Evans called him down, he went down, and in about five minutes after, Mrs. Evans called out murder, murder, for God's ſake, Evans get up, he has got a knife; then ſhe called up ſtairs to my huſband and me, my huſband went down firſt, and I followed him; when I came down, the deceaſed, Mrs. Simpſon, was ſitting at the ſide of the bed in her ſhift, with her hand to her forehead, her face was bloody, and her hand; Mrs. Evans had a baſon of water, I took the baſon from her, and waſhed her, and helped Mrs. Evans to ſhift her, then we helped her into Mrs. Evans's child's bed; the priſoner ſtood near to the foot of the bed; he looked very wild; after that I went up ſtairs into my own room, he returned up ſtairs again, and went into the apprentice's room again, and made a noiſe, and the apprentice called to my huſband, but before he could get to him, Mr. Evans came up and pulled him down; when I came home in the evening, I aſked how ſhe did, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was very bad; Mrs. Evans ſaid, they had found out another wound, and ſhe had ſent for a ſurgeon.

Mr. Garrow. Had you ſeen him in the courſe of a week?——No.

Have you ſeen the priſoner and his wife, did they live upon good terms?——I never heard her make any complaints.

JOHN TATE ſworn.

I am the huſband of the laſt witneſs; on the 17th of March laſt, about three or four in the morning, or before that, I was awaked by the priſoner calling repeatedly to Mrs. Evans; Mrs. Evans got up to know what was the matter; he came out and went down ſtairs, and called watch, then he went up ſtairs, and threw down ſeveral things; the boy aſked him what he wanted; he ſaid he would let him know what he wanted; he aſked the boy where he was, the boy ſaid at Mr. Evans's; he ſaid no, he was at the Spread-Eagle; he went down, and went to his room; in a few minutes Mrs. Evans cried out, murder, murder, murder, Evans; I jumped out of bed immediately and ran down, when I came down, the deceaſed was ſitting on the bed-ſide, in her ſhift, with her hand on her forehead, and all bloody; the priſoner was there, with his breeches, and ſhoes and ſtockings on, he looked at me in a very wild manner; they were going to waſh her, but I returned; ſoon after that he came out of his room again, and came up a ſecond time, and then Mr. Evans being a good deal exaſperated, pulled or puſhed him down, for making an uproar in his houſe; he then returned to his room; ſoon after he went up again to go to bed; Mrs. Evans hearing that, called her apprentice and I up; I heard him ſay to the boy, which way are they gone now? but, however, the boy ſhut the door, and I heard no more of him, I went to work for the day.

Mr. Garrow. You ſay when you went into the room to him, he was in a very diſtracted ſtate?——Yes, Sir, I ſpoke to him, he only ſtared at me.

—— TAYLOR ſworn.

I am an apothecary in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet; I am not a ſurgeon.

You was was ſent to ſee this poor woman?——Yes; about eight in the evening, it was on Friday; I ſaw her laying on her right ſide, I aſked her where her pain was, ſhe ſaid it was all over her body; I deſired Mrs. Evans to go round, and ſhe complained rather more of her back; and on looking towards the ſide that was next to me, there I ſaw the wound which Mrs. Evans had not ſeen before; the wound was on the left ſide near the blade bone, as far as I can recollect, it was pretty far back on the ſide; but the ſurgeon will give you a better deſcription; finding it was pretty much inflamed, I ordered the woman to poultice it.

Did you probe it, Sir?—Yes, Sir, and I ſuppoſe the probe might paſs about an inch and an half, but finding an obſtruction I did not paſs it any further; I ſent her a draught, I never ſaw her after.

Did you ſee any thing of the man?—No, I did not.

Mr. Garrow. She did not point out this you?——No, Sir; that was all ſhe ſaid o me.

WILLIAM SHARP ſworn.

I am a ſurgeon, at No. 39, in Shoreditch; I examined the body at the deſire of the pariſh officers; I diſcovered a wound on the noſe, juſt at the junction of the bonds that form the noſe to the bones of the forehead; the knife had entered juſt in the ſuture, where they join; it had penetrated a very little way; ſhe had alſo a wound on the left ſide, between the ſeventh and eight ribs; the appearance of a large extravaſation of blood under the ſkin; the external ſkin was formed into ſeveral bliſters, containing a dark red fluid; I then opened the abdomen, or belly; I did not diſcover any thing particular in an unhealthful ſtate, except a ſlight inflammation in the ſmall inteſtines; afterwards we opened the breaſt or thorax, we diſcovered the wound between the ſeventh and eight ribs, about ſixteen ounces, or thereabouts, of coagulated blood, in the left cavity of the breaſt; and alſo that ſome ſharp inſtrument had entered the lungs; they ſhewed me a knife, and it appeared to have been ſome ſuch kind of inſtrument; it had entered about a quarter of an inch, or near half an inch into the lungs; from the air eſcaping from the lungs, it had got underneath the ſkin, and had ſwelled the body up to a conſiderable degree above its natural ſize.

Did you make any obſervation on the ribs?——Yes; I alſo found, that it had divided an intercoſtal artery running along the inferior edge of the ſeventh rib.

Was that in the direction of the wound?—Yes; it had paſſed with violence againſt the ribs, and there was a ſmall notch made in the ribs.

What do you ſuppoſe to be the cauſe of this poor woman's death?—The wound, and the conſequence of that wound was the cauſe of her death.

Court. Could you form any judgment whether any blood had paſſed outwardly?—I think there muſt have been ſome, but perhaps not much.

Could you form any judgment how long that wound might have been given?—No, my Lord; externally, it appeared to have the appearance of an incipient gangreen, or mortification.

Is this intercoſtal artery that you deſcribe a large veſſel, or a ſmall one?—Not a large one; perhaps about the diameter of a crow's quill.

Were the mouths of the veſſels choaked by the coagulated blood?——The veſſels were quite divided; there was no blood in the veſſels at that time; there was a large quantity of blood underneath the ſkin, ſo as to ſpread all down that ſide, and to the right ſide, and down part of the thigh, it was black all the way.

Court to Priſoner. You hear the charge and the evidence.

Priſoner. I cannot make any defence for myſelf; I do not recollect any thing of it, upon any account.

Court. You do not recollect any of the circumſtances?—No, I do not recollect ſupping at home at all.

CHARLES SHARP ſworn.

I am a perfumer in Fleet-ſtreet; I have known the priſoner fourteen years.

How long is it ſince you had occaſion to travel with him?—I cannot exactly recollect the time; it is either between four or five, or five and ſix years; we went firſt to Lynn, and then to Cambridge.

In the courſe of that journey, did you obſerve any thing particular in the conduct of the priſoner?——At Yarmouth he was taken ill of a nervous complaint, a trembling and ſhaking; I ſent for a gentleman, who gave him ſomething; one of the mixtures was Huxton's Tincture of Bark; when we got to Lynn, we ſlept in a double-bedded room, at the Duke's Head, in the Market-place; about four in the morning, or at leaſt early in the morning, he waked, and ſaid he had heard groaning and mournings all night, and could not poſſibly ſleep, and wondered how I could ſleep; I was aſtoniſhed; he was out of bed, and walking about the room; I deſired to go to ſleep again, but he would not let me; he ſeemed uneaſy in his mind from the road to Cambridge; when I had him in the chaiſe, he uſed to ſay, do you not hear the ſinging; what the devil do they ſing for; ſure you muſt hear them ſinging; do ſtop the chaiſe.

Did he tell you what ſort of muſic it was?——Singing; he deſcribed one ſong to be Yankie doodle dandie; he hummed the tune to me.

Did you apply for any other medical aſſiſtance, in the courſe of your journey?—No; in the evening at the Red Lion at Cambridge, I had a friend that ſupped with me, and as ſoon as he was gone, the priſoner was ſitting in the room, and he ſtarted back in the chair, with his eye fixed full on the window, which was ſhut with outſide ſhutters; ſays I, what is the matter with you? ſays he, do not you ſee a woman looking at me through the window? I ſaid, I ſee no ſuch thing indeed; how can you be ſo ridiculous; I thought him very ſtrange and wild again; ſome time after, he repeated the ſame thing, do not you ſee the woman again; ſhe has now got a pair of ſpectacles on: I was very glad when I brought him to town.

Did you communicate this to his wife?——I do not recollect, in particular; but I told every body that knew him, that I had any occaſion to ſpeak to about it, becauſe it was ſo extremely ſtrange and ridiculous.

Did he appear to you to be a perſon diſturbed in his ſenſes?—I thought ſo.

Now, as to his character for humanity, as far as you have had an opportunity of that coming under your obſervation?—As to humanity, I always believed him to be a very humane man, good natured, rather tender-hearted than otherwiſe; ſoft in that reſpect.

You have had occaſions of ſeeing him and his wife together?—Very frequently.

Do you know upon what terms they lived?——I always underſtood they lived upon very good terms; I believe they lived upon very good terms.

I believe you made ſome reſolutions about his travelling with you again?——Yes.

Mr. Silveſter. Did not you apply to any medical man at Cambridge?——No; I thought I ſhould get him to town next day, and therefore I did not.

JAMES BEALE ſworn.

I am apprentice to Mr. Evans; I recollect, the night this accident happened, Mr. Simpſon came into the room where I lay; I was between ſleeping and waking; I cannot ſay the time juſtly; I ſaid who is there? he ſaid, it is me; I ſaid, do you know where you are? he ſaid, he was at the Spread Eagle.

What were his own words?——He ſaid he was at the Spread Eagle, and I ſaid he was; he came a little further, and there was a table fell down, and he ſaid they have put them in my way, that he ſhould not get to me, and he came to the bedſide, and laid hold of the bed's foot, and then he went away.

Do you think he knew you, when he talked to you?——I do not know.

Did he talk to you as if he knew you?—Yes; he went down ſtairs, he came up the ſecond time after the murder was done.

What paſſed then?——He came into the room; I ſaid, who is there; he ſaid, me; and I called out for a light; then my maſter came and puſhed him down ſtairs; he ſaid nothing more that ſecond time, that I recollect.

Did you hear him call for the watch?—Yes, when he was coming up the ſtairs.

Court. Was that the firſt time, or ſecond time?——The ſecond time.

JOHN CHERRY ſworn.

I live in Swithin's-lane; I am a ſmith; I have been acquainted with him near upon five years; I ſaw him on Monday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday before; he was in bed; I called to ſee how he did.

In what ſtate did you find him?—Very bad in bed; a violent pain in his bowels; he ſaid he was very droughty, and had cold ſhivering fits; I ſaw his wife each time; ſhe was taking care of him; they were upon good terms; I called on the Tueſday evening, about eight; I aſked Mrs. Simpſon where he was; ſhe was ironing a ſhirt; ſhe ſaid, poor creature, he is juſt gone out, but he is very ill; I aſked her where he was gone; ſhe ſaid, ſhe believed to Wood's; I went to Wood's, but did not find him; and going home, he came behind me, and tapped me over the ſhoulder; I aſked how he did; he ſaid he was very well; ſo he aſked me to drink, and we went into a houſe with a long paſſage; as ſoon as we got into the tap-room, he turned ſhort round; ſays he, what did we come here for; he walked on directly towards the door; I followed him; then he came back, and ſaid, we will have a dram at the bar; I told him he had better not drink any liquors, as he had been bad; he ſaid he had had nothing to drink all the day. I called at his houſe the next day, not knowing any thing of the accident; I went up ſtairs, as I uſually did, to his door, and Evans told me.

Jury. What was his general behaviour before that time?—I never ſaw any thing amiſs of the man in my life.

Did he behave like a man in his ſenſes?——Always; he had been at my houſe two months together, their circumſtances were ſo narrow; they had nothing to live on; I never knew what the annuity was; I underſtood it was more than has been mentioned; I fancy it was made leſs, on account of ſome money that was owing.

ROBERT GAUL ſworn.

I am a debtor in Ludgate priſon; I have been three years and nine months there; the priſoner came to me at No. 9. in the priſon, and I ſhaved him, and combed his hair.

Did you obſerve any thing particular in his conduct?—He ſays to me, Bobby Gaul, I want to be ſhaved; ſays I, Mr. Simpſon, I will ſhave you, and I ſhaved his face half, and ſays he, Bobby, there is a gold laced hat there; ſays I, there is no gold laced hat there; yes, ſays he, there is; I turned between him and the window, and ſhaved the other ſide of his face, and as ſoon as I had done, he run and clapped his hand upon it; he ſhook and ſhivered, and trembled amazingly; and he ſtared, and took up his hat, and looked at it, and ſaid, whoſe is this; it was his own hat; a gentleman aſked him to drink ſome beer; he ſaid he had rather not; there was a report in the priſon that Simpſon had killed a man, that he had found abed with his wife; I did not believe it.

Now, that you are upon your oath, what is his character?—An inoffenſive, harmleſs man; I have frequently ſeen his wife with him; I never ſaw any thing but happineſs between them; he uſed to come down to me, and we were very ſociable, and when we could afford it, we had a pint of beer.

GEORGE WOOD ſworn.

I keep the Half Moon; I ſaw the priſoner on the Thurſday afternoon, as near as I can recollect, it muſt be about four o'clock, and I rather wondered that I had not ſeen him during the courſe of the week, for he generally uſed to come once or twice a day into my houſe; he ſeemed in a violent palpitation, and he ſaid he had been very ill, and had been in his bed; I obſerved nothing more than a violent agitation and ſhaking, and he hovered over the fire, and ſignified that he had been very ill; he obſerved to me at that time that he ſhould go over and get ſhaved, and he did come through my houſe about ten that night. On the Friday morning, juſt turned of eight, I ſaw him; I made very particular and ſtrong obſervations upon him; he came into my houſe, and he ſeemed violently diſturbed, and appeared very wild; I aſked him what was the matter, and he turned ſhort round to me, and with a very gloomy appearance, he obſerved that he had committed a deed, which, he ſaid, when he had related it to me, would make every drop of blood in my veins run back; I made uſe of a vulgar expreſſion, and ſaid, it muſt be a d——nd ſtrange ſtory, indeed, Simpſon, to operate ſo powerfully upon me; he ſeemed rather confuſed, and ſaid it would, and turned to the fire, and ſaid he would tell me; he ſat down; he did not tell me immediately; he ſtaid in my houſe the courſe of two or three hours; he was out once; I urged him to relate the tale; he ſaid that he had found a man in bed with his wife, and he had ſtabbed him in the body, and he made no doubt but the ſtab would do for him; and he clapped his hand upon his wriſt, in this manner, and ſaid he had run a knife into his body thus far; I immediately proclaimed him mad; ſays I, the man is diſordered, knowing the diſpoſition of the man, I was ſure, in my own opinion, that he could not commit the act; I proceeded to aſk him, in conſequence, where he had been to commit this fact; he ſaid he had been at the Spread Eagle all the night; that he had laid there; that is, after he had caught this man in bed with his wife, and ſtabbed him; that he went to the Spread Eagle; that they brought the man there; that he had been tried at the Spread Eagle, and acquitted; that they had made him a preſent of ſome white things, to wear as a proof of his innocence; this confirmed me in my idea that the man was out of his mind; I told him, was I in poſſeſſion of a ſtrait waiſtcoat, I ſhould certainly put it on; and in the next place, I ſaid, you will be either in bedlam or in a mad-houſe; then, ſaid he, you do not believe the tale I tell; I ſaid, no; then, ſaid he, I will go and fetch Mr. Evans, and he will prove it, for he knows it to be a fact; he went away, and came back again in about ten minutes with a pair of buckſkin breeches and a clean ſhirt in his hand; they were wrapped up together; and he aſked me leave to go into the parlour and ſhift himſelf, which he did, and he brought me his dirty ſhirt and his buckſkin breeches to take care of for him; he ſaid Evans was coming; he ſaid he could not think, for his wife was ſome years older than him, what could poſſeſs the old fool to take a young fellow to bed with her; what, ſays I, is he a young fellow? yes, he is a young fellow; he ſaid he would take me to ſee him, if I choſe to go; I rather detained him; I told him I was going out, I aſked him to take a walk with me, which he agreed to. Prior to that, he fancied he ſaw chimney-ſweepers dancing in the ſtreet; he ſaid to my waiter, in my hearing, he tapped him on the ſhoulder, ſee there, John, ſays he, ſee the chimney-ſweepers dancing in the ſtreet; at laſt we went out together; and it was my intention to call on Evans; we went there; he was ſitting at the work-board; I aſked how he did: Simpſon and I went in, and we all three went together to the Horſe and Groom in Dagger's-court; we were there about ſix or ſeven minutes; nothing particular paſſed; I was not informed by Evans of any thing about it; I aſked him to go with me, but in Moorfields he altered his mind, and ſaid he would go to the Change; I ſaw him about three in the afternoon; he came with a ſtranger, a hair-dreſſer; he aſked him to drink, and they had a glaſs together; he invited this man to call at my houſe, to ſpend an evening with him; he had a pen ſticking acroſs his mouth, as if he was writing; his eyes were open, his hat cocked up, and not in the uſual way, but wild and extraordinary; he continued with me ten minutes, I ſaw no more of him till after he was taken up; ſhe always ſpoke of him, and he of her, on good terms, and happily.

Mr. Silveſter. Having known this man twelve months, did you ever obſerve any thing particular in his behaviour before this day, that this unfortunate behaviour happened?——The moſt that ever I obſerved in his behaviour, was a kind of ſtupidity about him.

Court. I rather ſuſpect that he was apt to be prevailed on to drink a little?——He was a man that was free, when he was in liquor; there was a kind of ſtupidity, a kind of inactivity, but not diſpoſed to be quarrelſome or miſchievous; on the Sunday afternoon, when I went to New Priſon, the man was frantic in my opinion, and Mr. Yardley obſerved to me, that he thought it feigned; I ſaid, I did not think it was; I was not afraid to go to him alone, for I was very ſure that the man was ſo harmleſs, that he would not hurt man, woman, or child if he knew it; now this I only give you as a proof of the opinion I had of the man.

I am a perfumer and hair-dreſſer, in Swithins-lane; I have known him ever ſince the year 1770; he worked for me in 1770, and 1772, and 1773, till he got married.

What has been his general character?——I never ſaw any thing in his private character, but a humane man; I gave them a breakfaſt when they were married; they always lived very agreeable, ſhe gave him the beſt of characters; we all knew that things run very near, but ſhe was always ſatisfied; I am ſure they lived affectionately together.

Was his general character that of a good-natured man?——Yes; the annuity ſhe had, was given her on the day of her marriage.

MATHEW JUTT ſworn.

I live in Leadenhall-market; I have known him twelve years; I knew his wife very well; I lodged in his houſe for above a year and a half; I had frequent opportunities of ſeeing them together, they behaved affectionately to each other; he is a good natured man, I never heard any other of him.

SAMUEL YARDLEY ſworn.

I am deputy keeper of New Priſon, Clerkenwell, the priſoner was committed to my cuſtody the 18th of March; I did not ſee him till the Sunday morning, I thought he was inſane, according to all appearance in his behaviour, I aſked him to go to chapel; I always make it a point every ſabbath day in the morning, to take the priſoners to chapel, and he ſaid no, he ſhould not go, I aſked him how he got that black, he told me that a man in the ward where he lay had ſtruck him with a welt, he ſaid they wanted to tie him down for the purpoſe of improper practices; I enquired about that, and it turned out that they wanted to tie him down; I would not let him have any drink, and then he became better, and I found him a ſenſible man, I deſired our ſervants at home not to let him have any thing but tea; I thought he might have been drinking, which was the cauſe of this action.

ROBERT STORKS ſworn.

I am a merchant in Ironmongers-lane; I have known him above thirteen years; I knew his wife very well, he uſed to dreſs me, he bought the leaſe of my houſe, which was too ſmall for me, they appeared to me to live upon good terms, I always took him to be a very good natured, kind, benevolent man, and a good neighbour, that was his general character.

WILLIAM KINDER ſworn.

I am a ſhoemaker; I have known him ſixteen or ſeventeen years, a very good man, what I always thought, I knew his wife perfectly well, I have ſeen them frequently together, in the manner which they lived, they appeared to me to live on friendly and good terms as far as ever I ſaw.

EDWARD CHIPPER ſworn.

I live in Leadenhall-market; I have known him five years, I never knew any thing amiſs of him, a good-natured inoffenſive man.

GEORGE PACKWOOD ſworn.

I live in Gracechurch-ſtreet; I am a hair-dreſſer, and perfumer; I knew him ten or eleven years; I knew his wife well, I look upon it in my opinion, he was a man of tender feelings, and a good natured man.

WILLIAM BARNARD ſworn.

I ſerved my apprenticeſhip with this priſoner four years after he was married; I lived in the houſe, they always ſeemed to be very agreeable together, lived happy and well, he was a good natured man.

MICHAEL CLINT ſworn.

I am a hair-dreſſer in Lombard-ſtreet; I have known him twenty-ſix years.

Were you apprentices together?—Not in one houſe, but at the ſame time, his general character was extremely good, he and his wife were at my houſe four months, I took them in, they were diſtreſſed, they lived exceedingly well, very friendly and happy always; he was a very humane man, and a very charitable man.

JOSEPH SAUNDERS ſworn.

I am a fiſhmonger in Leadenhall-market; I have been acquainted with him a good many years, I have ſeveral times obſerved ſomething remarkable in his conduct; I believe about five, or between five and ſix years ago, he had been into the country along with one Mr. Sharp, and ſome time after he was returned, I was in his company at the Spread-Eagle in Gracechurch-ſtreet, ſpending the evening with a few friends, and the priſoner came in.

Court. How ſoon after his return?—I fancy it may be about a week after, or not quite ſo long; he came in and he ſat himſelf down cloſe to me, there were ſeveral people there, I cannot tell who they were; he took notice to me, that as he was coming along through the gateway of the Inn, he had met a large black hog, and it would not let him paſs, and fought him, and he at laſt perſevered, and it bit him by the legs, he then ſat down a little, and was much diſcompoſed, he then imagined that there were three people behind the curtains, and he deſired us to look at them, and that they made faces at him.

Was that a mere imagination of his own?——Yes, there was no ſuch thing, and that about the hog, I took it at the time to be his illneſs, a kind of light headedneſs, or inſanity; I was frightened at the time, he was that evening juſt got up, and come from home, he had been in bed for a day or two; I have obſerved at different times in his company a rambling, and a kind of light headedneſs.

Had you an opportunity of ſeeing, whether that was increaſed at all by drinking?——It generally was when he complained he was ill, or that he laid by from his work for three or four days, or a week.

What did you take his character to be as to good nature and humanity?—I never ſaw any thing hurtful, or of bad diſpoſition in him, and I have been a great deal in his company.

Was you acquainted with his wife?——Yes.

On what terms did they ſeem to live?——Very agreeably.

Mr. Silveſter. You have not been in his company ſince he failed, as when he was in his proſperity?——I have not been in his company much theſe two years, only a little while before this happened.

Did you obſerve any thing in his behaviour then?——No.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, the priſoner at the bar ſtands indicted for a crime of a moſt enormous nature, that of the murder of his own wife, by ſtabbing her with a pen-knife: the enquiry has neceſſarily gone into a very conſiderable length, not only on account of the diſcuſſion that was neceſſary to eſtabliſh a fact againſt the priſoner, but alſo on account of the particular nature of his defence.

Continuation of the Trial of John Simpſon.

Upon the reſult of the whole evidence, it ſeems to be a fact of which there can be no reaſonable doubt that this poor woman received her death by the hands of the priſoner at the bar, and that it was done under no circumſtances which could in any degree, in point of law, operate either to juſtify or mitigate the fact; ſo that if any crime can be imputed to the priſoner, in reſpect to that fact, it muſt neceſſarily be the crime of wilful murder; becauſe there is nothing in the caſe which could in any degree provoke, or juſtify a man being provoked, to commit ſuch an outrage as this was, in the deliberate manner in which it appears to be committed; and therefore it was truly ſtated to you by the Counſel that opened the proſecution, that it would ultimately come to the queſtion, whether the priſoner was guilty of murder, or of no crime at all; and in order to lay a foundation for you to believe that he was guilty of no crime at all, you muſt be ſatisfied, at the time this fact was committed, his mind was in ſuch a ſtate of diſtraction, that he could no longer be ſenſible of the internal diſtinction between right and wrong, and more eſpecially the diſtinction between the affection that was due to an affectionate wife, and this ſavage outrage he committed upon her; and that though his hand was guilty, his heart was free from that act which the guilt of his hand would otherwiſe impute to him. Upon the whole reſult of the evidence, in which there is no contradiction, it ſeems to be moſt clearly aſcertained, that this man is in no confirmed habit or ſtate of lunacy; that he is by no means like an idiot, but has ſufficient ſenſe to govern himſelf, and to be anſwerable for his conduct; that generally ſpeaking, he has been in poſſeſſion of his right mind, and that if there be any foundation to excuſe him from the guilt of this homicide, in conſequence of his being inſane at the time, it is the ground of an inſanity, temporary in its nature, which aroſe in conſequence of a particular circumſtance taking effect only during a particular period, and that at this moment, for any thing you learn to the contrary, and at a very ſhort time before the fact was committed, this man was perfectly in the poſſeſſion of his ſenſes; and this thing is that which makes this enquiry ſo extremely ſerious, becauſe it would be a dreadful circumſtance, if the bare enormity of the offence was to be ſuggeſted as a foundation to excuſe the man who could be wicked enough to commit it; and the poſſibility of the man who meditated a crime of this kind, forming a plan which might lay a ground of excuſe, makes this ſort of enquiry, in which you can have very little aſſiſtance from any thing that was done at any ſeries of time previous to the fact, and ſtill leſs ſatisfaction with reſpect to the conduct of the priſoner ſince the fact; it is on this account an enquiry, far more ſerious than thoſe enquiries are which end in inſanity; for in thoſe caſes it has generally come out, that the party is in a ſtate of habitual inſanity, which would juſtify his being delivered into an actual ſtate of confinement; now, from the preſent caſe, I ſee nothing that we can draw any concluſion of that nature from. This is a man who has ſeen better days; married a woman, who was ſomething older than himſelf, with ſome ſmall proviſion made for her, and they had lived in ſome degree of reſpect for ſome time, having apprentices and ſervants; but by degrees, probably, I ſhould think from the general ſcope of the evidence in conſequence of intemperance, having neglected his buſineſs, and ruined his health, he comes from the priſon of Ludgate to theſe lodgings, living with his wife in a conſiderable degree of diſtreſs and poverty, but at the ſame time with a reaſonable proportion of affection and regard; the circumſtances of the fact which appears to have been committed, are certainly ſuch circumſtances as cannot eaſily be accounted for on any other grounds, than grounds of inſanity. It is not true, that the Jury ought to find the inſanity of ſuch a perſon ſufficiently eſtabliſhed; it ought to awaken the attention of every body to look out for ſuch a caſe, and to expect to ſee it proved, and to view carefully, and with great caution, all theſe circumſtances attending the ſtate of the fact; notwithſtanding there wants in the evidence any thing that looks like a probable foundation that looks like ill will; for there is not a ſcintilla of evidence, except the man's going up ſtairs, and expreſſing ſome diſpleaſure at his ſupper not being ready, in which they cannot, on being croſs-examined, expreſs the words of the diſpleaſure, or whether he was out of humour or no; and beyond that, the fact itſelf is committed in a manner that was immediately open to obſervation and detection; the man ſeemed induſtriouſly to call in witneſſes to ſee the fact committed; having in that extraordinary manner committed the fact, with frequent opportunities, (for they did not know the extent of the miſchief) with frequent opportunities to get off; he makes uſe of none of them, but goes about in that ſtate in which he is deſcribed, running backwards and forwards where the fact was committed, and where the woman lay languiſhing, and to the laſt moment he ſeems to have no thought or idea of getting away, or eſcaping the hands of juſtice. Theſe are circumſtances that belong to the fact, in their own nature ſo extraordinary, as to lay every conſiderable ground of probability that that would turn out to be a caſe of lunacy; and when you come to examine the reſt of the circumſtances, it appears that there is the ſtrongeſt ground to believe that is the caſe. This man appears to have been five or ſix years ago on a journey to Lynn and Cambridge, with Mr. Sharp; to have firſt, as I can collect, betrayed ſome degree of a mind diſturbed in conſequence of a nervous complaint that was then upon him; Mr. Sharp has ſatisfactorily proved that, and the proof of it is confirmed by the laſt witneſs Mr. Sanders, who tells you, that the priſoner came to a public houſe which he deſcribed, and there diſcovered marks of what the witneſs calls light headineſs, talking wildly of a black hog, and of ſeeing three people that were moving the window curtain, and were making mouths at him, and inſulting him, when in truth no ſuch thing paſſed; theſe were certain marks of a mind agitated by a certain degree of lunacy; and you find, that the week before this accident happened this man was again ill of a nervous vous aguiſh complaint; he had been confined to his bed ſeveral days, and it was not till Thurſday night, having been in bed three whole days, and part of a fourth, that he broke out into the unhappy outrage that produced this enquiry. You find he had pork for ſupper too; and though in the houſes of perſons that are better judges of what is to be done with ſick people, one ſhould hardly expect to find a ſupper of roaſt pork for ſuch a man, yet theſe lower people think that eating and drinking is the only thing for a fever, and the moment they can be prevailed upon to eat, they are well; and therefore I do not at all wonder that the firſt idea was a hot ſupper; this ſupper was had, except a ſingle circumſtance mentioned by one of the witneſſes of his expreſſing ſome diſſatisfaction that it was not done to his time; this ſupper was had in great good humour, he inviting two of his neighbours to ſup with him; he had drank one glaſs of gin, or anniſeed, before; he drank ſome beer at his ſupper; he eat a meat ſupper; he had been ill of a nervous complaint for ſome days, and it is not at all improbable that this had flown to his brain, and had produced a conſiderable degree of delirium; for in a ſhort time after they had been in bed, he firſt of all calls out, makes a noiſe and alarm, expreſſes a great uneaſineſs, thinks there are gipſies in the bed, and people in his room; that there are men in his bed, and then proceeds to the idea of ſome man being in bed with his wife; the people he calls in find there is no man there, no ground at all for this alarm of his; they compoſe him, they ſucceed; he returns to his bed again; the alarm is ſoon raiſed again, and the wife is alarmed by the ſtate of her huſband; they both call out to the family to come in; they come in, they find this man ſitting in his breeches and ſtockings, and probably ſhoes, and in his ſhirt by his bed-ſide; Mrs. Evans enquires what's the matter; he talks of there being gipſies in the room; and then draws his knife, unclaſps it without any circumſtance of ſecreſy, and with great deliberation thruſts the mortal wound, and with an evident deſign, I think, to ſtab ſome perſon who appeared to him at that time to be the proper object of his reſentment, after he had done this, and made another ſtroke at this poor woman, which made the blood flow, and Mrs. Evans deſiring to have the knife, he gave her the knife, made no attempt to ruſh out, but ſtood there with a ſtupid kind of look, probably full of the idea that ſeemed to have impreſſed his mind, that it was ſomebody elſe he attacked; you find, after this he is ſtill uneaſy, diſcontented, lays down in another bed with his wife for a moment; then he goes up ſtairs, talks to the apprentice about his being at the Spread Eagle; an idea which you ſee afterwards is drawn out into ſome form in his mind; for afterwards he ſays he has been at the Spread Eagle, and there he was tried for the death of a man he had killed, and was to have ribbons on his acquittal. Now, unleſs you can ſee reaſon on this evidence to collect that all this was fraud, and all made up for the purpoſe of having an opportunity, in a way that would not expoſe him to perſonal riſk, to deſtroy his wife, this is plain and evident inſanity. I have looked to ſee if there was any thing in the evidence, from whence ſo deep and ſo abominable a practice could be ſuſpected of him; and here the general courſe of life you have heard of the man, of his inoffenſive manners, and of his gentle conduct towards his wife, come to be material; for it is almoſt impoſſible that a man would deliberately form a ſcheme of deſtroying his wife, and conduct it both before, at, and after the act, with that aſtoniſhing regularity with which this madneſs of his ſeems to be managed. Therefore, if you ſhould not ſee reaſon on this repreſentation, to entertain any conſiderable degree of doubt of the ſtate in which this man was, I think I need not go further and ſtate the whole evidence; I confeſs, my own mind is ſatisfied with reſpect to it; therefore, if you ſhould be of the ſame opinion, I think that public juſtice will be ſatisfied, if after this long enquiry, on the ground of a temporary inſanity, which this man had laboured under for four or five days before this fact, you think that this man is not guilty of the crime imputed to him in this indictment.

Jury. My Lord, we wiſh to go out.

Court. Oh, if you wiſh to go out, I muſt ſtate the evidence to you; becauſe if you do not feel it at once in the way in which I have ſtated it, it is fit I ſhould ſtate the whole evidence to you.

The Jury conferred a ſhort time, and gave a verdict

NOT GUILTY.

NOT GUILTY on the Coroner's Inquiſition.

Jury. I think this man ſhould be taken care of.

Court. I will order he ſhall not be diſcharged at preſent, but that he ſhall be examined before the Lord Mayor; and his friends will, I hope, appear, and ſettle ſome method to take care of him.

361. THOMAS TROUT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th of March laſt, three fore coach wheels, value 10s. two fore chaiſe wheels, value 8s. two hind chaiſe wheels, value 8s. two hind phæton wheels, value 14s. the property of William Wright, Lionel Lukin, and John Allen.

And DAVID DAVY was indicted for feloniouſly receiving the ſame, knowing them to be ſtolen.

(The indictment opened by Mr. Garrow, and the caſe by Mr. Silveſter.)

(The witneſſes examined ſeparate.)

DANIEL CHANTRY ſworn.

I am a wheeler of Mr. Wright's, Lukin, and Allen. On the 18th of March, I had been to Mr. Wright's ſhop; it was paſt ſeven in the evening; coming out to go home, I met one James Holloway coming out with a fore wheel of a chariot; he ſaid he was running it for pleaſure; I ſaid it was an odd night; it was a wet night, it was ſeven o'clock; I returned, and ſaw him come back without it; I waited, he never came out again; the gate was open three quarters of an hour; I ſhut the gate, and in conſequence of ſome converſation I had with Holloway, I communicated the ſtory to one of the partners, Mr. Wright.

Was you preſent when Trout was called?——Yes, on the Sunday morning.

Was Holloway there at the ſame time that Trout was there?——Yes.

Tell us any thing Holloway ſaid in the preſence of Trout, but not when Trout was abſent?—He ſaid, before Trout, that he had run that wheel to Mr. Davy's by Trout's order, and was to have a glaſs of gin for his trouble.

What did Trout ſay to that?—He ſaid he had lent Mr. Davy a wheel.

Did he directly acknowlege that he had employed Holloway to run it, or only not deny it?—He acknowledged that he had run the wheel; he ſaid he was going that way home, and Trout ſaid to Holloway, as you are going home, leave this wheel at Mr. Davy's; Mr. Davy was ſent for; when Trout and Davy came together, Davy ſaid he did not know any thing of borrowing a wheel of them, but if any of his people had, he did not know any thing about it.

What did Trout ſay to that?——Trout ſaid he believed it was ſome of Mr. Davy's people; Trout was then aſked if he ſhould know the man that borrowed the wheel; Trout ſaid he believed he ſhould, he was a tall man.

Was any queſtion aſked of Davy before either of the partners, as to his having purchaſed any wheels?——Yes; Davy ſaid to one of the partners that he had purchaſed ſeveral wheels, and had been in the yard to look them out; and he ſaid that Mr. Allen, one of the partners, had ſeen him in the yard; Mr. Allen ſaid he did not remember ſeeing him in the yard for ſome time; Davy ſaid he had been there ſome time ago, and had bought wheels there; he was aſked how long ago; he ſaid it might be a twelvemonth ago; he did not believe he had bought any within a twelvemonth, it might be that ago; all the converſation was confined to one wheel.

There had been converſation about a pair of wheels?——Yes, there was converſation about new wheels, and things that did not concern my buſineſs.

Did Mr. Allen or Mr. Wright aſk Davy any queſtions about the other wheels?——Not at that time, till he came back from the yard; Mr. Davy and we went to Mr. Davy's yard, when we came there we found one wheel, which was either the wheel the boy had run, or the fellow to it; he ſaid, he did not know how it came there, he ſuppoſed his people had borrowed it; then we came back again; he ſaid, he did not know that he had any more, nor he did not know that he had that till he ſaw it; in about two hours after, Mr. Wright took me with him to Davy's, I went with him to Davy's ſhop, and we found the fellow wheel to this, and two others, the two others were a pair of fore wheels, we found them in Davy's ſhop; he and his ſon were both preſent; Davy ſaid he did not know how they came there.

Did you find any thing more?——Not at that time; there was no more converſation then; on the Monday following, I went with Mr. Wright and the conſtable, having a ſearch warrant; in a large cellar under ground, we found five wheels, one pair of phæton hind wheels, one pair of chariot wheels, and one fore wheel belonging to a coach.

Was Davy at home at that time?——Yes.

What account did he give of thoſe wheels?——He ſaid he had none, he was very agreeable to go down and ſhew, he did not know he had any, he helped them out of the cellar; I am a wheeler to thoſe gentlemen; I know theſe wheels, they were made by me or my man.

Tell us when thoſe wheels were taken off?——The Biſhop of Exeter had new wheels put on the 8th of March, (looks in a book.) This is a memorandum book of my own making, in my hand writing.

Did you find any of the Biſhop of Exeter's wheels at Davy's?——Two hind wheels of the chariot, and Mr. Woodley's pair of fore wheels which we found at Davy's were taken off the carriage the 6th of March; there was a pair of Mr. Stanley's chariot hind wheels, we found them alſo, they were taken off the 16th of January, and the 22d of January Lady Onſlow's pair were taken off; Mr. Newcombe's wheels I did not take off, we found theſe there, a pair of Mr. Newcombe's hind wheels of his phæton.

The wheels are broken up in general when they are taken off?——But that depends upon the ſtate of them.

Have you any doubt at all of theſe wheels being the property of thoſe gentlemen?——No, I am ſure of the wheels, I can prove it by every matter that can be.

Mr. Fielding. Is it always the caſe when wheels are taken off that they are broken up?——If they are good for nothing elſe.

Mr. Garrow. What does the coachmaker allow the coachman for theſe old wheels?——I think it is one guinea for the ſet; but that is not my buſineſs.

Do you remember hearing any thing from either of the priſoners as to the price that was to be paid, by one to the other, when they were examined?——At Bow-ſtreet Davy ſaid before the magiſtrates, that he gave ſix, ſeven, or eight ſhillings a pair for them.

Did he ſay what he had given for theſe wheels?——No; he ſaid nothing about them.

Mr. Fielding. Do you know that the allowance given to the coachman for the wheels, is a particular compliment made to the coachmen, and that more is given than would be given for the wheels themſelves?——It depends upon the condition of the wheels.

Is not it a common thing to give the coachman a guinea?——If the wheels are not worth five ſhillings, the coachman expects a guinea, if they are worth a guinea, he receives no more than a guinea.

How far do you live from Mr. Wright's?——About two hundred yards.

Davy is a conſiderable wheeler?——Yes.

Is not the cuſtom of the trade to buy wheels and fit them up, and ſell them again to the hackney men, or any perſon that wants them?—I do not know.

Do you not do it yourſelf?—I am not in buſineſs for myſelf.

You do not know the conduct of the yard?———No.

What the particular department of Trout is, you do not know?—No.

When this converſation had taken place at Mr. Wright's, you went with Davy to his houſe?——Yes; he ſhewed me that wheel in his paſſage.

Trout ſaid he believed it was one of the men?——Yes, and he ſaid he believed he ſhould know him if he ſaw him.

The firſt time you went to Davy's houſe was the Sunday morning?—Yes.

Then you made a diſcovery of this ſingle wheel of the Biſhop of Exeter's?——Yes.

Davy was with you, and he ſaid here are all the wheels I have?——Yes.

You went again with a ſearch warrant on Monday?—Yes.

Then there was all that interval?——Yes.

Davy had opportunity of removing theſe wheels from the premiſes?—At a certainty he had.

Is not a cellar a common place to put wheels in?——I do not like to have them in a cellar, they do no good under ground.

A pair of fore wheels are not ſo much worth, as a pair of bind wheels?——That depends on the ſtate of them, but if they are in the ſame ſtate, the hind wheels is of moſt value.

Do you know a man of the name of Rag?—Yes, a publican.

You have not lived on any good terms with Davy?—I never had any words with him; I know nothing of him, only how do you do, and good night to you.

Have you to Mrs. Rag, or any body elſe ſaid theſe words, or to this effect, d——n him, I have found ſome wheels in the ſhop, I have him now, and d—n my eyes if I do not do him?—I never mentioned any ſuch thing to my knowledge.

Have you or have you not?——At a certainty I ſhould never ſay ſo; why ſhould I do him, I do not know that I ever ſaid ſuch a word.

Does your memory ſerve you to ſay ſo?——I do not remember any ſuch a word.

Mr. Garrow. What was the Biſhop of Exeter's wheels worth that you found at Davy's?——They were worth eight ſhillings.

Now Mr. Woodley's?——About eight more.

Mr. Newcombe's?——The phaeton wheels are worth fourteen ſhillings.

Did he at the firſt time ſhew you the cellar?——No, only the gateway; he ſaid, theſe are all the old wheels I have.

Court. When Davy was ſent for, and queſtioned upon them, he acknowledged he had frequently bought wheels, and ſaid he had often been in the yard to look them out, and that Allen had ſeen him there; Allen ſaid he had not ſeen him there for ſome time; Mr. Davy acknowledged that.

Did Mr. Allen deny having ever ſeen him there for the purpoſe of looking out wheels?——I do not remember that Allen ſaid he ever ſaw him look out wheels.

Did Mr. Allen deny that he had ever been there looking out wheels?——He ſaid if it had been, it was a long time ago.

Did Mr. Allen deny his ever having any knowledge of the purpoſe of his being there?—Mr. Allen ſaid he did not know that he came to look out any wheels.

Upon your oath?——I did not attend, I did not take any notice, I cannot poſitively pretend to ſay.

If you cannot ſay poſitively, why do you ſay at all in anſwer to my queſtion?——Mr. Allen told him he did not know that he had been there to look out wheels.

Can you ſwear that poſitively?——Mr. Allen ſaid, he did not know he had any right to look out wheels, and did not know that he bought any wheels there.

Who was preſent then?—All three partners;

news; I remember Mr. Allen ſaid to him, he did not know that he came there upon any ſuch buſineſs.

Will you ſwear that Mr. Allen ſaid, in anſwer to Davy, that he did not know he had ever come there on that buſineſs?——Yes, Mr. Allen ſaid, that he did not know that he came there upon that buſineſs.

WILLIAM WRIGHT ſworn.

I am in partnerſhip with Meſſrs. Lukin and Allen, coachmakers in Long-acre.

What ſituation was the priſoner Trout in, at your houſe?——He was foreman to the labourers.

Have you loſt any wheels?——Yes.

Had he any authority to ſend any wheels from your ſhop?——Never.

Do you ſell any wheels to any body ſecond hand?——We have ſold wheels but very ſeldom, the reaſon is, thoſe that are good I keep to put on other carriages; and thoſe that are good for nothing, he had the breaking up of, and I uſed to give him ſixpence a ſet for breaking them to pieces.

You worked up the old iron?——Yes, and the wood work we burn.

Had he any authority from you, or your partners, to diſpoſe of any wheels to any body?——He never had; he had like to have loſt his place ſome time ago about ſelling a pair of wheels.

How long ago was that?——The 19th of November, 1784, he ſold a pair of hind wheels that came out of a gentleman's phæton, that were very good ones; he ſold them for fourteen ſhillings, they were worth two guineas, he had no authority for that; Mr. Lukin then ſent for him and told him, if ever he ſold any more without authority, he ſhould have no more buſineſs; people have come into the ſhop and aſked if we had wheels to ſell, and I have ſent them to Trout, but he was to ſhew them to me, that I might fix the price, and he was not to ſell them himſelf; he ſold one pair, and gave the money to the clerk.

In March 1786, were any wheels ſold?——I do not know of any; we fixed the price on that pair which he ſold; he aſked me; I took twenty-eight ſhillings for them, that is brought to account in this book; Trout was brought before me and my partners, and Holloway ſaid when Trout was preſent, that he told him to take that wheel to Davy's, and he would give him a glaſs of gin for it; I then aſked Trout if he did, he heſitated a little, and ſaid, he did; that he met Mr. Davy the day before, and he deſired him to give his compliments to me and deſired I would lend him a pair of wheels.

When Davy was brought, what was ſaid then?——I aſked Davy if he had borrowed any wheels of Trout, he ſaid, he had not ſeen Trout for ſome time, I believe it was a fortnight; then Trout ſaid it was not Davy, it was Davy's man, that he aſked to lend him a pair of wheels; Davy ſaid he had bought wheels in the yard; I have ſeen him I believe to the beſt of my recollection; I ſaid, I have not ſeen you in the yard theſe two years; he ſaid Mr. Allen and I was by; Mr. Allen ſaid, he had not ſeen him for a great while, for a twelvemonth; Mr. Davy ſaid, it was a long time, he could not ſay, it might be a twelvemonth; Chantry went to Davy's, and after he had been there, Davy came back himſelf, and told us that Chantry had been there, and found another pair of fore wheels in the ſhop, but he did not know how they came there; I went and ſaw the wheels, and then he ſaid they were our wheels and he had them of Trout.

Did he deſcribe how he had them of Trout?——No, I did not aſk him.

He did not ſay when or how?——No; I then ſaid, Mr. Davy, if Trout comes for theſe wheels, do not you let them have them away, nor do not you let any body have them, till I come for them myſelf; I aſked him if he had any more wheels of ours on his premiſes; he ſaid, no, he had not; about ſix I went to the fore gate and there was Trout, with a pair of fore wheels, ſays I, you ſcoundrel how dare you bring theſe wheels here, and I made him take them back; about two hours after, the ſame wheels were put into our yard again, how they came there I do not know; on the Monday morning we went and found five more wheels there, which he acknowledged he had of Trout; Davy was preſent at Bow-ſtreet, and Trout ſaid he had ſix ſhillings a pair for them, and Davy ſaid, that was eight ſhillings for the hind ones; I aſked him when he paid Trout; he ſaid, he could not ſay when it was, he ſometimes paid him four or five guineas at a time.

How much was the hind wheels worth?——Sixteen ſhillings.

Mr. Shepherd. This houſe belongs to you, and Mr. Wright, and Mr. Allen?——Yes.

Has your uncle no intereſt in it?—No.

Nor any dormant intereſt in it?——No.

When was the preſent firm eſtabliſhed?—At Michaelmas.

And the priſoner Trout is foreman under the labourers?—Yes.

And you ſay, he is the man to whom you referred the enquirers for wheels?——Yes.

Did not you generally refer the people to Trout?——To look them out, but not to ſell them.

You juſt now told us that you referred them to him, and he was to come out and let youk now the offers; now is not it the general cuſtom of the trade to ſell the old wheels?——I do not know what other people do, I do not ſell old wheels; in 1784, Trout ſold ſome wheels.

And had not he before that time ſold wheels for you?——In that way, no other way.

Court. Is it poſſible for you to know with certainty off what particular carriage wheels come?——No; there was one particular circumſtance in a pair of theſe wheels, there were boxes in them.

Court to Chantry. How do you know theſe wheels?——The hind wheels were there and the fore wheels were gone; I found the fore wheels at Mr. Davy's.

How long had that man worked with you?——About ſeven years.

All that you can tell was, that they were his make?——Yes, and my turning; I can tell when they were made, I always book them.

When the old wheels are taken off and mixed with other wheels, how could you diſtinguiſh them from other wheels made by the ſame man under your direction?—By the colour, and by the paint, they were painted yellow, and the hoops black, we had no other painted that colour.

Mr. Garrow. You took them off the 8th of March?——Yes; off the Biſhop of Exeter's.

How do you know Mr. Woodley's?—It is a very heavy coach, it runs very hard, they were ſtronger, I know the wheels, I obſerved them when they came off Mr. Woodley's carriage.

Now as to Mr. Stanley's chariot wheels?—I know them perfectly well.

As to Mr. Newcombe's phæton wheels? I knom them to be the wheels, but I do not know when they were taken off, becauſe there were a ſet of patent wheels put upon them.

Mr. Fielding. I ſuppoſe the new wheels of this heavy carriage are of the ſame ſort as the former were?——Yes, they had not been on one year; I ſaw theſe wheels of Mr. Woodley's on the Friday before, the man owned to running them away on the Saturday evening.

JAMES HOLLOWAY ſworn.

I am a painter; apprentice to Meſſrs. Wright and Lukin.

Do you remember ſeeing Chantry on Saturday night, the 18th of March?—Yes, I was taking a fore wheel and running up Hanover-ſtreet out of Mr. Wright's yard to Mr. Davy's, by Trout's order.

What did Trout ſay to you?—He told me his maſter had ſold the wheels to Mr. Davy, and that he was allowed one ſhilling to carry them, and if I would carry them, he would allow me half, three-pence for two, and four for ſix-pence.

Do you remember Chantry ſpeaking to you about it?——Yes.

Did you carry that wheel?—Yes.

Where did you deliver it?—I left it at the door, I took two more the ſame day, and I left them in the ſame manner, by the order of Trout.

What wheels were theſe?——Three fore wheels, I do not know to what carriage they belonged; they were yellow wheels.

Have you, at any other time, taken any other wheels from Mr. Wright's?—Yes, for this five years paſt at different times.

Was it known to Mr. Wright?—Trout told me they were ſold to Mr. Davy, by the order of Mr. Wright; I took there by the order of Trout.

At what time of the day?——Sometime one, and ſometimes five; theſe are the hours we have to ourſelves.

Had you any particular inſtructions from Trout as to the manner?——He bade me not ſay where I was going with them if I met any body; I have ſeen Davy himſelf when I have delivered them, ſometimes his ſon, ſometimes his man.

Who paid you?—Trout.

How many have you carried in the laſt ſix month?——I cannot pretend to ſay.

How many do you think?——About twenty ſets.

How far is Davy's houſe from the proſecutor's back gate?—About a minutes walk.

Have you at any time received any money from any body but Trout?——Yes, lately before Chriſtmas, I received ſixpence from Davy, once or twice, I cannot ſay when.

Have you ſeen the wheels that were found at Mr. Davy's houſe?—Yes.

Are any of theſe thoſe that you carried to Mr. Wright's?—Yes, I carried them all; there are nine, ſome fore wheels, and ſome hind wheels; I uſed to carry more fore wheels than hind wheels.

Court. How long before this was it that you had ſeen Davy, when you carried any wheels?—I ſaw him the day before I took them; I ſaw him the Tueſday before, he was ſtanding at the ſhop; I took ſome home that day, and delivered them in his preſence.

How many did you take then?——A pair of fore wheels.

Do you know of Davy's diſpoſing of any wheels?—I ſaw a cart load of wheels as I came by one day.

Do you know whoſe property thoſe had been?—No.

Court. Then in the courſe of the five years you have by your account carried a very large number to Davy's by Trout's direction, and as much as twenty ſets, within the laſt ſix months?—Yes.

JAMES BLACKBURN ſworn.

I was ſervant with Mr. Davy.

Do you know of any dealings between him and Trout?——No; only that I was to fetch ſome wheels away from Mr. Wright's.

By whoſe orders?—My maſter's, which was Mr. Davy.

What were the orders your maſter gave you?——He uſed to tell me to go and fetch ſuch wheels from Mr. Wright's, between nine and ten, one and two, or five and ſix.

Why was you to go within thoſe hours?——I really cannot tell.

Were theſe the working hours of the buſineſs?—No, they were meal times.

How often did you go?——A good many times.

Mr. Fielding. Trout was on the premiſes when you went?—Yes.

Have you never carried any wheels back?—No.

Where did you put the wheels when you brought them to your maſter's houſe?——Sometimes in the ſhop, ſometimes out of doors.

JOSEPH BARRETT ſworn.

I keep the White-Bear publick houſe, about forty yards from Mr. Wright's back gates; I know the two priſoners; I have frequently ſeen them together.

Have you ever gone to Mr. Wright's for Trout?——Yes, by the order of Mr. Davy.

Had you any particular directions from him about that ?——Yes; he told me to go for Mr. Trout to Mr. Wright's yard, and he told me once, if I ſaw Mr. Wright not to mention that Davy was at my houſe.

Did Trout uſe to come in conſequence of theſe meſſages ?——Yes, when he had an opportunity, when Mr. Wright was not in the way; theſe meſſages were not at any particular times, they were in the working hours.

In caſe Mr. Wright was there, what was you to ſay to Trout ?——I was to give him a beckon.

Mr. Fielding. How came you here to day ?—I was ſubpœned.

Who brought you the ſubpœna ?——I do not know the gentleman; Mr. Wright came to me.

Did not you know very well that Mr. Wright and Mr. Davy were not upon good terms, and that Mr. Wright would be angry if his foreman was ſent out of the houſe ?——I have not kept the houſe above a year and a half; I did not know that Wright and Davy were not upon good terms.

Has that intercourſe between Davy and Trout ſubſiſted any time ?—It has continued down to the preſent time.

Mr. Fielding. I am now to ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that there is no evidence to affect Trout; that there is no evidence to affect him as acceſſary; I am ready to admit, the boy expreſſly proves that degree of criminality upon him, and no other, that he took theſe by his order, which is one of the ingredients, conſtituting the criminality of an acceſſary expreſſly.

Court. Aſk the queſtion firſt.

To Holloway. When you took the wheels from Mr. Wright's to Mr. Davy's, where did you take them from ?—From the place where they ſtood, againſt the wall.

Was Trout preſent when you took them? ——He generally was.

Priſoner Trout. My Lord, I cannot make a ſpeech; I make bold to hand up this paper. (Read.) May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you the gentlemen of the Jury; having an impediment in my ſpeech, I beg the indulgence to obſerve, that I am totally innocent of the charge, for which I have the misfortune to ſtand here arrainged; I have been twenty one years in the ſervice of my proſecutors; I appeal to them what has been the general tenor of my conduct during that time; I have been for years paſt, authoriſed by them, to diſpoſe of all the old wheels; the wheels in queſtion I did ſell, in conſequenc of that authority; I paid them the money I received; therefore I beg leave to add, that I am a poor man, that my afflictions are much exaggerated, by having a numerous infant offspring, without a mother, and they muſt be without a friend ſhould conviction follow; I therefore humbly hope, that this court will temper juſtice with mercy, by paſſing upon me as lenient a ſentence as juſtice will admit in my diſtreſſed ſituation.

Court to Priſoner Trout. You ſee one of the gentlemen has denied your having any authority to ſell ?——Here is a gentleman in the court that has been in the counting houſe, and enquired whether there were any old wheels to ſell, and Mr. Fletcher, and Lukin, and Allen have ſaid go down to Trout; my maſter has been angry during the time of buſineſs; he has made uſe of ſome bad words; the next day they have come, and I have agreed for them; I have ſeen one of my other maſters, and told him, ſays I, the man has offered a guinea, ſays he, how are they, are they pretty tidy Trout ? Sir, ſays I, the hoops are on, the wood is but ſo and ſo; I have told the man he might have them for one pound one ſhilling.

JOHN SUTTON ſworn.

I am a wheelwright.

How long have you known Trout ?——These twelve or fourteen years.

What character has he borne ?——I never heard any thing of him but an honeſt man; I have bought wheels of Trout; I have bought a ſet of Mr. Wright, a ſet of Mr. Allen, and ſeveral ſets I have bought of Trout, in the courſe of theſe ten years.

Did it appear to you that Trout was the man with whom that buſineſs was to be tranſacted?——Mr. Wright has ſent me down to Trout; I have gone down to Trout into the yard, and I have looked for ſuch a ſet of wheels as I have wanted; I found them there, and I have agreed with Trout for them, and paid him for them; one time I told Mr. Wright I wanted a ſet of wheels for an old carriage; and he ſaid, go down to Trout, and Trout will deal with you for old wheels; Trout will ſell them to you.

Then, you underſtood from Mr. Wright that Trout was the man with whom this buſineſs was to be done?——I have bought ſeveral ſets in the yard in the courſe of ten years.

What prices may you have given?——Twenty-four, or twenty-five ſhillings; ſometimes I have gone as far as thirty ſhillings; that is the whole ſum.

What is the loweſt of thoſe of a more moderate quality?——I never bought any but what was very good; I wanted them that were fit to put on a gentleman's carriage, that would run for a month or ſix weeks, till a new carriage was made; I gave a better price than a hackneyman would have given.

It may happen that a pair of fore wheels are worth very little, unleſs they are fit to put on?——They give gentlemen's coachmen more than the wheels are worth; a guinea is the price, that is not worth above ten or a dozen ſhillings; then the fore wheel cannot be worth above four or five ſhillings.

Mr. Silveſter. Where do you live?—I am wheeler to Mr. Hatchett, in Long-acre.

When was this tranſaction with Mr. Wright?——I believe it may be three or four years ſince; I have not dealt with Mr. Wright ſince, but with Mr. Trout I have ſometimes; I have ſeen Mr. Wright in the yard, or Mr. Allen, or Mr. Lukin, and had what I wanted.

Who did you pay the money to at that time?—To Mr. Wright, in the yard.

How did you fetch them away?—I generally had them ſent away; I took them home in the open day, in working hours, I and my fellow ſervant, that was foreman to the labourers, the ſame as Trout was; we ſold them there; we never went to Mr. Hatchett.

Court. You had a general authority from Mr. Hatchett to ſell, and account with him for the money?—Yes.

Do you recollect at all particularly what Mr. Wright ſaid when he bid you go down to Trout?——Go to Trout, and Trout will deal with you for the wheels; I looked out the ſet myſelf, and then he was to deal with me for them.

RICHARD MOUNTAIN ſworn.

Did you purchaſe any wheels of Mr. Wright?—Yes; but I do not remember any in this Mr. Wright's time.

How long ago?——I ſhould ſuppoſe it to be five or ſix years ago.

Who did you uſe to deal with?——Mr. Thomas Wright; and if he was not there, and I bid Trout too little, he uſed to ſay, I muſt aſk my maſter; I have known Trout fourteen or fifteen years; I always ſaw him as a labourer; I know nothing particular of him.

(The priſoner Trout called another witneſs, who gave him a very good character.)

PRISONER DAVY'S DEFENCE.

I leave it to my counſel.

——— BENWELL ſworn.

I underſtand you are a coach-maker?—I am.

Can you inform the gentlemen of the jury the courſe of the trade?——I can of our own; I have ſerved an apprenticeſhip in the trade, and I am now in the trade; I employ, I ſuppoſe, thirty journeymen; we have a foreman to the labourers.

Is it, or is it not, cuſtomary to intruſt that man with the ſale of the caſt wheels?—Certainly; the ſhop I am in, I have been in about twenty-five years; I ſucceeded Mr. Foſter, in Long Acre; I never knew him ſell a ſet of whels; we wiſh to have them out of our way; when any perſon comes, we let them part with them; they bring the money to account.

Has it happened that any of theſe men had ſold wheels to perſons applying?—I have one man that I ſold twenty ſets at a time to; he has gone through with that bargain, and brought the money to account.

What is the value of a ſet of wheels?—Why they muſt be a pretty good ſet, with a good deal of iron upon them, to fetch twelve or fourteen ſhillings; I never gave a receipt for any ſuch thing in my life; whatever they ſold them for, I always abided by what they did.

Court. When you ſpeak of the price of twelve ſhillings, you ſpeak of thoſe that are to be broken up?—Yes; I have ſold the fore wheels for about eight ſhillings, and the hind wheels for about fourteen ſhillings.

But many for a much higher price than that, I ſuppoſe?—Oh, yes. I have known Davy twenty years; he is in a capital way of buſineſs as a wheel-wright; always bore the beſt of characters; an honeſt, hard-working man as ever I knew; he has certainly brought up a large family, with a great deal of induſtry; he has many ſervants.

Mr. Silveſter. Did he deal with you for old wheels?——He has frequently bought fore wheels at our ſhop; fore wheels are more applied for, becauſe they are wanted to ſend into the North, to uſe in the coal trade.

Court. Has the priſoner Davy dealt frequently at Mr. Foſter's for old wheels?—I cannot ſay, Sir; it did not come within my knowledge; lately he bought five pair of fore wheels, for which he gave eight ſhillings a pair.

——— BERRY ſworn.

I am a coach-maker in Long-acre, near to Mr. Davy; I have known him ſeventeen years; I have dealt with him to this very time; I always found him a fair, honeſt man, rather likely to be impoſed on, than impoſe; he has a dozen men under him; I have ſold him wheels.

——— SLODDARD ſworn.

I have known Davy I ſuppoſe for twenty-four years; I live in Mount-ſtreet, Groſvenor-ſquare; his general character has been a very good one; an honeſt, induſtrious, hard-working man as ever was; I always underſtood him ſo.

——— WELLS ſworn.

I live in Charles-ſtreet, Long-acre; I have known him upwards of twenty years; I know him to be a very honeſt, hard-working man, and took great care of his family.

——— HEATHER ſworn.

I live in Long-acre; I have known him ſeventeen or eighteen years; a very honeſt, induſtrious, hard-working man; I never knew any body ſpeak againſt him in my life; he has a large family.

——— MABERLY ſworn.

I live in Little Queen-ſtreet; I have known Mr. Davy twelve, or fourteen, or ſixteen years; he has bore a general good character, and ſtood unimpeached, I believe, till this matter.

——— FROOME ſworn.

I live in Oxford-ſtreet; I have known him twenty years; I always underſtood him to be a very worthy, honeſt man, and I have ſold him ten pair of wheels, hind and fore ones together, for eight ſhillings a pair, not more.

THOMAS WALLIS ſworn.

I live in Long-acre; I have known him about eleven or twelve years; his character is very good; I never heard any thing amiſs of him in my life, nor ever had the leaſt reaſon to ſuſpect him.

OWEN O'KEEFE ſworn.

I have known him about eight years; always looked upon him to be a very honeſt induſtrious man, in the courſe of my dealings with him.

Court. You cannot add to the circumſtance of character; for theſe witneſſes are all of a very reſpectable deſcription, as far as their knowledge goes; and there is no doubt of their character.

Court to Chantry. Which of the wheels was it?——One of the Biſhop of Exeter's, and two of Mr. Woodley's coach.

THOMAS TROUT, GUILTY.

To be tranſported for ſeven years.

DAVID DAVY, GUILTY.

To be tranſported for fourteen years.

The priſoner Davy was recommended by the Jury.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

362. GEORGE EMBLETON, RICHARD EADES, and WILLIAM SMITH, were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling-houſe of James King, about the hour of one in the night, on the 22d day of February laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein two linen ſheets, value 7s. three pair of cotton ſtockings, value 1s. one pair of ditto, value 3s. two frocks, value 2s. one towel, value 6d. two napkins, value 1s. two aprons, value 6d. four night-caps, value 6d. one ſkirt, value 1s. three handkerchiefs, value 1s. one ſhirt, value 1s. one ſhift, value 6d. ſix ſhifts, value 3s. one neckcloth, value 2d. one cap and fender, value 2s. one fender, value 1s. a poker, value 6d. a pair of tongs, value 1s. a ſhovel, value 1s. one pair of ſciſſars, value 2d. ſix cups and ſaucers, value 1s. two pounds weight of brown ſugar, and four pewter tea-ſpoons, value 1s. the property of the ſaid James King.

JAMES KING ſworn.

On the 22d of February, I was the laſt up in the houſe; I went to bed about twelve; I am ſure all the doors and windows were faſt; my wife was firſt up in the morning, between five and ſix; my wife called me down, and I found the brick-work of the chimney broke down, and a hole big enough for two men to get through; the chimney is between the coal-hole and the parlour; they got through the coal-hole; the door of that coal-hole is ſhut, but never locked.

There is no communication between the coal-hole and the houſe?——No; there are windows, but they join together.

Was it day-light when you came down?—Yes; it was day-break.

Were there any things loſt out of the houſe?—Out of the parlour; the things mentioned in the indictment; the things were advertiſed; a ſervant came down to me, and I came up to London, and found ſome of my things at Mr. Wilmot's office on the 28th, and the three priſoners were in cuſtody, but how they came in cuſtody I do not know.

REBECCA KING ſworn.

I came down in the morning of the robbery, between five and ſix.

Was it day-light?——Pretty light; it was light enough to ſee about the houſe without a candle; I went to fetch ſome coals, and ſaw the back parlour chimney was all pulled down; I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment.

SARAH MARCELLO ſworn.

On the 23d of February, ſome things were brought to me, between ſeven and eight in the morning, in a bag, as nigh as I can gueſs; I keep a ſale ſhop in Shoreditch, No. 40; they were offered for ſale; when they brought them, I was in bed, and the ſtockings were quite wet; the three priſoners were all in the ſhop when I came down ſtairs; I am ſure theſe are the three men; I aſked them what they wanted, and the priſoners Smith and Embleton ſaid they each of them wanted a pair of ſhoes.

Did the priſoner Eades ſay any thing?—No, not at that time; I was uneaſy at their being there, and I requeſted them to go away; they ſhewed ſome reluctance; then Smith told Eades they would go to the Star and Garter, and wait for his coming; Eades ſaid he would come preſently: then I aſked Eades what he would have for the things; he ſaid they were his property; he aſked half a guinea for them; I offered him nine ſhillings; he ſaid, you may have them; I ſuſpected the man, and went to Mr. Allen, and took him into cuſtody; when the officer came, I gave charge of him; and the priſoner Eades ſaid, he met two men coming acroſs Newington Fields, and that theſe two men followed him, and gave them to him to ſell; that is all that I know. Allen and me went to look for the other men at the Star and Garter, and we found them there; the priſoners are the men; then Mr. Allen took charge of Eades and the things; Eades ſaid he was coming along in Newington Fields, and he met two men, and he picked them up; that two men were huſtling for them, and he huſtled with them, and got a cut over his forehead; the other men ſaid they knew nothing of him; Eades ſaid after, that Smith gave him the things to ſell; Smith confeſſed, and he was not examined by the Juſtice.

CHARLES ALLEN ſworn.

Mrs. Marcello called me to take charge of one of theſe priſoners; ſhe told me ſhe dare ſay there had been a robbery committed; that ſhe had ſome things offered for ſale, and they were wet.

Who did you find there?—The priſoner Eades.

What did he ſay?—He ſaid the things were given him to ſell by Smith; he did not ſay any thing about Embleton.

Did he mention any body but Smith having any thing to do with the things?—No, I then went to the public houſe, and took the other men.

When you firſt went there, and took the two men, what did either of them ſay?—Embleton ſaid he knew nothing at all about them; he went in to buy a pair of ſhoes; Smith did not deny but what he gave them to him to ſell, and ſaid he found them in a ditch.

Did Smith ſay that Embleton was with him?——No.

Did Embleton deny any knowledge of the things?—Yes.

Did Smith contradict that?—No; Eades ſaid that Smith was the man that gave him the things; I am ſure thoſe are the things.

ABRAHAM MARCELLO ſworn.

On the 23d of February, my youngeſt child brought up a bag, containing ſome clothes in it; I went down, and my wife had given charge of one man; I ſaw nobody when I came down; they were at the next door, at Mr. Allen's; I ſaw the priſoner Eades in cuſtody at Mr. Allen's; I aſked him how he came by theſe goods; he ſaid that a brewer's ſervant, (that was Smith) who was at the Star and Garter, gave them to him to ſell; I aſked him where the brewer's ſervant was; he ſaid he was gone to get a pint of beer at the Star and Garter; then I ſaid to Mr. Allen, you had better apprehend the other two men, and the brewer's ſervant; he ſaid there were two men with him, but it was the brewer's ſervant that gave it to him.

After your wife and Allen went away to look after the two men, did any thing paſs between Eades and you?——No; he ſaid he was innocent; I was preſent at the examination of all three of them; the officer told Mr. Wilmot the charge; Mr. Wilmot called to Smith firſt; when he was alone, he ſaid, young man, it will ſave me a good deal of trouble, if you tell the truth; Smith ſaid he was coming along the fields, and he found the bundle in a ditch, and he had a ſcuffle with two men, and one of them cut him over the eye; I ſaw no mark or wound; there would have been one, if it was freſh. Embleton ſaid he was preſent; the other man ſaid the things were found; none of them ſaid that Embleton knew any thing of this. I know nothing further.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court to Mrs. Marcello. Is your girl here?—No.

When you came down, you found theſe three men in the ſhop?——Yes.

Who aſked for the ſhoes, can you recollect?—Yes, each of them; Smith and Embleton ſaid they wanted a pair of ſhoes, but I looked at their feet, and I did not think they wanted any; they had very good ſhoes on their feet; they both ſaid they would go and have a pint of beer; Smith ſaid to Eades they would go to the Star and Garter, and get a pint of beer, and Embleton ſaid, ſo they would.

Did Smith and Embleton ſay any thing?—No, nothing; but they were very loth to go away from the premiſes.

When you offered the nine ſhillings, and agreed for that, it was with a view to get the officer?—Yes; I did not mean to buy them; I would not wiſh to buy them under twelve or fourteen ſhillings at a fair price; I would not wiſh to buy them cheaper.

It was between ſeven and eight?——It was a little before eight.

Court to Proſecutor. How far is your houſe from town?—About ſix miles from Shoreditch church.

Mrs. King. My Lord, that priſoner, Embleton, was at our houſe the evening before; our's is a public houſe; there was him and another; I cannot tell who the other was; I do not know that it was either of the priſoners; I knew him again when I ſaw him; he had a pint of beer; I ſaid, gentlemen, how far are you going this dark cold night; and he ſaid, Madam, we are going to town; he paid me for the pint of beer; it was about eight in the evening; they ſtaid half an hour at our houſe; I ſaw or heard no more of them.

What part of the houſe were they in?—They were in the kitchen; I was ironing in the parlour.

Priſoner Eadis. I was walking down Shoreditch, and I met George Embleton in Shoreditch, that very morning that I was taken up; and he ſaid, Dick, I have been very ſick a long while, will you give me part of a pint of purl; I ſaid, yes, and welcome, if I had but a penny I would give you a part of it; we drank out one pint of purl, and went to the door, and drank another at the door; and as we were going out, George ſaid to me, Dick, will you give me part of another pint; as we were drinking it, the priſoner Smith came paſt; he ſpoke to George; I never ſaw him before; and he told me as he had found theſe things; I ſaid, I was going to Shoreditch; Embleton, he was going to buy a pair of ſhoes.

PRISONER SMITH's DEFENCE.

I picked up theſe things going to town; I came back and met with theſe two men at the Roſe and Crown door; I ſaid I have found ſomething, but what they are, I do not know; and as I ſaid ſo, I turned the things out in the middle of the high road.

PRISONER EMBLETON's DEFENCE.

I had been very ill, and I then got up and I met with Eades, and he and I had a pint or two of purl; when this man came up, we went with him; I wanted a pair of ſhoes, the ſhoes I had on were tore on both ſides; and I had them mended in New-priſon; I could not get a pair of ſhoes; and this man employed him to ſell the things for him, and we went to the Star and Garter; as for being in the proſecutor's houſe, I was bad in my bed and had been for five days; and the conſtable knows I was very bad when he took me; I could ſcarcely walk to the office.

(The priſoners witneſſes examined ſeparate.)

SUSAN CABE ſworn.

I am a witneſs for Smith; he lodged at my houſe about a year and a half.

Have you any huſband?——Yes; he is a watch finiſher.

What character does he bear?—He always bore an exceeding good character, a hard working, ſober, honeſt man; he was taken up either the 22d or 23d; I remember his being taken up; that was on the Thurſday following.

What day of the month was the Thurſday?——I cannot rightly ſay.

How long was it after he was taken up?——He was taken up on the Monday as I was told; I did not hear it till the Thurſday following.

When had you ſeen him laſt before you heard he was taken up?—I ſaw him the 22d.

What day of the week was that?—It was on the Monday.

Do you mean the Monday before the Thurſday, or the Monday week?——The Monday week before I heard he was taken up.

Was it in February or in March that you heard he was taken up?—In February.

You heard it was in February, was it the laſt Thurſday in February?—I believe it was.

And you had ſeen him the Monday before that?——Yes.

Was it the Monday before that, or the Monday week before that?—The Monday week before that.

Then you had not ſeen him for ten days before you heard he was taken up?——Yes, I had.

How ſo?——Then it muſt be the Monday before I heard it, and not the Monday week.

How long had he been taken up before you heard it?——Two or three days.

Are you ſure it was the Thurſday you heard it?——Yes; I think it was, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Where was it you laſt ſaw him?—He was at my houſe the laſt time I ſaw him; he left my houſe about ſix in the morning; the laſt time I ſaw him, I think it was on a Monday.

Priſoner Eades. I do not know I have any witneſſes.

Priſoner Embleton. I have a perſon that can teſtify, that I was bad in my bed for five days; and I have perſons to appear for my character.

RICHARD BELLWARD ſworn.

I have known Embleton twelve or fourteen years; he is a carpenter; when I knew him at home, he bore a very good character; he was brought up with his parents; he lived then in Marſh-ſtreet, Walthamſtow; before he was taken up he lived at Newington.

The priſoner Embleton called three witneſſes to his character.

George Embleton,
Richard Eades, } Guilty
William Smith

Of ſtealing, but not of breaking and entering.

Each tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

363. JAMES PERRY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 11th day of March, one feather bolſter, value 5s. two pair of ſheets, value 5s. two blankets, value 5s. one ſhirt, value 7s. a waiſtcoat, value 3s. a black cloath coat, value 20s. a ſattin waiſtcoat, value 20s. four cotton bed curtains, value 20s. five remnants of ſattin, containing ſeven yards, value 20s. one copper preſerving-pan, value 5s. one copper ſaucepan, value 5s. one other copper ſaucepan, value 5s. a coal ſkuttle, value 10s. a pair of knee buckles, value 7s. a mattreſs, value 20s. a counterpane, value 20s. a great coat, value 2s. a man's hat, value 3s. the property of Humphry Jackſon, Eſq. in his dwelling houſe.

JOSEPH STEVENS ſworn.

I am a braſs founder.

Do you know of Mr. Jackſon looſing any thing?——No; I was taken up for this offence. George Moore pulled a hat from off the priſoner's head and gave it me to pawn; I know nothing of the robbery; they were at the publick houſe, and not having money enough to pay the reckoning, they gave me the hat to pawn for five ſhillings.

When was it?——About a month ago; Moore deſired me to pawn the hat.

Whoſe hat was it?——Mr. Jackſon's.

Where was it?—In Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, between eight and nine in the morning, and I was taken up; I could not pawn it, and they told me to ſell it.

(The hat produced.)

Is that the hat?——It is very like it.

Have you any doubt?—No, it had ſuch a lining.

MOSES JOSEPH ſworn.

The laſt day of the lottery, the 22d day of March, on a Wedneſday, there was a man, one Moore, in company with Perry, came and aſked me if I took things out of pawn; I was in Pettycoat-lane; Moore ſays, I have loſt all my money, 150l. in the lottery, and he ſaid, he had many things in pawn, and aſked me to take them out.

Had Perry and Moore any converſation together when you went into the publick houſe?—They were ſpeaking, but I know not what paſſed; Perry fetched a paper, containing a liſt of clothes that was in pawn; Perry and Moore went with me as far as the pawnbroker's, but Perry did not go in; I went on Wedneſday and Thurſday; there was ſo many pawnbroker's I could not go to them all in one day; I went on Wedneſday, I took a bed and bolſter, and gave Moore half a guinea; I did not ſee Perry after this, he went away; there was ſix different pawnbrokers.

Did Perry go with you to any other pawnbroker's that day?——No.

What is the name of the firſt pawnbroker?—I do not know; he lives in the Minories.

Are the effects taken out the firſt day here?——Yes, they are over the way, all but the bed, that is ſold.

Court. Send for the other things into Court.

Moſes Joſeph. On Thurſday I took ſome more out, and Friday ſome more things.

Did Moore go with you?——He did to every one that were pawned in the name of Lee; but Moore had the duplicates; and I gave him two guineas.

Have you all the things you bought?——All but the bed, which is ſold; they had fifteen guineas in all; I went to two pawnbrokers on Wedneſday, one was Mr. Bond in Houndſditch; on Thurſday I went to four more, but cannot recollect their names; on Friday I went to two more.

What property did you take the firſt day?——A gooſe feather-bed, and a coal ſkuttle, the bed I ſold to one Barnard.

(The copper coal ſkuttle produced.)

What things did you find the next day?—Some ſheets, &c.

HUMPHRY JACKSON, Eſq. ſworn.

Did you looſe any property on the 11th of March?——Yes; Perry and Moore were employed by me in my manufactory in Tower-ſtreet; I was indiſpoſed at my country houſe in Kent, and they uſed to come down to receive their wages; the laſt time they came, was the 14th of March; I thought they had been at work regularly, and paid them their wages; I told Moore, I ſhould return to town on Tueſday; on the Wedneſday I came and found the houſe locked up; I made enquiry after my men, but they had not been ſeen at work for ſome time; I got a carpenter to get into the houſe, and with ſome difficulty he opened it, it was ſo good a lock; he found a quantity of linen thrown about in ſuch a manner as if the houſe had been robbed.

What did you looſe?——All the things mentioned in the indictment.

Court. Hand up the hat. (The hat produced.) The priſoner meſſed in the houſe, and had the uſe of every thing in the houſe; before the magiſtrate the priſoner diſcharged himſelf, and laid the whole upon Moore.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any queſtion to aſk Stevens?

Priſoner. Pleaſe to aſk Stevens how he came by the hat?——I had it of Moore, who ſaid it was his own property, and I muſt ſell it.

Court to Stevens. Had Perry any hat with him?——Moore had torn the front of Perry's hat off, and ſaid he would lend him this for two or three days, till he could get another, which proved to be Mr. Jackſon's.

THOMAS BLAND ſworn.

I live in Shoe-lane; I am a braſs founder; I have known Perry upwards of ten years.

Where did he live?——In Tower-ſtreet; he worked with Mr. Jackſon.

EDWARD NORRIS ſworn.

I am a bedſtead maker; I have known him ten years; a very good character.

JOHN WEALE ſworn.

I have known the priſoner fifteen or ſixteen years; a very good character.

Jackſon. I am upon my oath, and you have more than once, twice, or thrice given me a very horrid character of him, and that he was diſcharged for things he ſhould not, and you have ſaid every thing that is bad of him before my face.

Court to witneſs. Upon the oath you have taken, did you never give a different character to Mr. Jackſon?——Never did in my life give him a bad character; he owes me money now, but that is nothing to his character; he ſaid his maſter did not pay him, that was the reaſon.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

364. JAMES JONES, otherwiſe ELISHA BENJAMIN, was indicted, for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of March laſt, five weather ſheep, value 5$^{l}$. the property of Samuel Matthew and James Waterford.

CHARLES COOPER ſworn.

The priſoner came into the ſhop the 3d of April, about three in the afternoon to buy ſome ſilk; ſhe fixed on three colours, and I went to the other end of the counter to weigh it; I obſerved a motion of her hand to that part of the counter where this ſilk was; ſhe bought fourpenny worth, and went away; I miſſed the wrapper, and went after, and brought her into the ſhop, and I juſt perceived her drop the wrapper from under her coats; I knew the wrapper, being pieced in ſeveral places.

Priſoner. I am thirteen years old; I did not meddle with it.

The priſoner's mother appeared for her character.

GUILTY, 4$^{s}$. 10d.

375. ELIZABETH ADAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt day of April, one ſilk gown, value 20s. one printed cotton gown, value 10s. a muſlin apron, value 12d. a linen ditto, value 12d. a neck handkerchief, value 12d. a lawn ditto, value 12d. two black ſilk handkerchiefs, value 2s. two pair of ruffles, value 12d. the property of Alexander Macky.

ALEXANDER MACKY ſworn.

The priſoner was a lodger of mine ſix months and a half; on the 1ſt of April, ſome clothes were hung to dry in the one pair of ſtairs; my wife ſet the door and window open; the priſoner lodged in the two pair of ſtairs; ſhe went down in the low parlour at two, and ſtaid till ſeven; and whenever ſhe went up ſtairs, we heard her in the room above; we imagined ſhe was going to ſhut the windows; ſhe ſtaid about a quarter of an hour there; we aſked her whether ſhe had been in the room above, and ſhe ſaid, no; then ſhe lighted her candle, and went up ſtairs; then ſhe came down again, and went out; my wife went up ſtairs, and I went up; and the clothes were gone; the box was quite open, and nothing in it but one pair of ruffles; in about three quarters of an hour the priſoner returned; I told her ſhe had taken the things; ſhe denied it; on the Thurſday following I took her up; her room was never ſearched; the things were afterwards found.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Counſel. This poor girl had been ſix months a lodger of your's?——Yes.

How had ſhe behaved?——Exceedingly well.

You had a good character with her?—Yes.

I believe you had reaſon enough to know that ſhe was much diſtreſſed?——I did not know it, but it might be ſo.

ISABELLA MACKY ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. You have had many converſations with this young woman about your things?—Yes.

At laſt, I believe, you told her, if ſhe would give you the things, or tell you where they were, that you would ſay no more about it?——Yes, Sir, I did.

Court. Was that before you got the warrant for her?——Yes.

After you got the warrant for her, and took her up, did you, after the conſtable came, make her any promiſe?——No; I told the conſtable if ſhe would let me have the things, I would not hurt her. I did not tell her ſo.

—— ASHTON ſworn.

I took the priſoner; I found the things in the priſoner's room; ſhe gave them me.

Court to Mrs. Macky. As you authoriſed the conſtable to tell this young woman ſo, how came you to proſecute her afterwards?—The conſtable told me he was bound over, or I ſhould have let her go.

When the priſoner left your room in the afternoon when theſe things were loſt, did you hear where ſhe went to?—I am ſure I can ſwear it, I heard her in my room three minutes, unlocking my box; and I went up ſtairs, and came down again.

Did you ſay you heard her unlocking your box?—Yes, I did.

Why did not you go up ſtairs then?—I did not think ſhe was a thief.

Then, what buſineſs had ſhe to unlock your box?—I ſwear I heard her.

Priſoner. I leave it to my counſel.

CHARLES WRIGHT ſworn.

I am one of the firſt clerks in the Admiralty. This young woman was a ſervant in my family fifteen months; ſhe was ſtrictly honeſt the whole time ſhe lived with me; I gave her an exceeding good character; ſhe left me in November 1784.

The priſoner called another witneſs, who gave her a very good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

376. EDWARD SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th day of March laſt, one damaſk table-cloth, value 1s. the property of Thomas Elliot, and one cotton gown, value 1s. and one linen apron, value 6d. the property of Eleanor Rowland, ſpinſter.

The proſecutors called on their recognizances, the priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

377. THOMAS DIPPEY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of April, three cotton gowns, value 20s. a petticoat, value 6d. two ditto, value 2s. 6d. eight aprons, value 5s. 6d. four ſhifts, value 2s. two pair of ſhoes, value 6d. and ſundry other things, the property of Ann Stewart.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

378. WILLIAM BROWN was indicted, for that he, on the 7th of November laſt, a certain piſtol, loaded with gunpowder and one leaden bullet, which he in his right hand then and there had and held, to, at, and againſt him, Edward Gibſon, in a public ſtreet, wilfully and feloniouſly did ſhoot off and diſcharge, againſt the ſtatute, and againſt the peace.

EDWARD GIBSON ſworn.

I am a linen-draper; I live in Barbican. On Monday, about five in the evening, Mr. Henry Thwait's ſervant was delivering goods at my houſe; he called out, there is a man has taken ſix pieces of print out of the cart this inſtant; my man called out; I caught the man by the coat; he inſtantly ſaid he would ſhoot me, and clapped a piſtol to my face, and ſwore he would ſhoot me, and ſnapped the piſtol; I cried out, for God's ſake, aſſiſt me; I held him faſt by the arm till the two patrolls came up, with two drawn hangers; they took him, and tied his hands; he only ſnapped the piſtol, but it did not go off.

Court. They have entirely miſtaken the matter; they have indicted him for firing, when he only ſnapped the piſtol.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

379. JAMES SIGNALL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th day of March laſt, one pocket-handkerchief, value 4d. the property of John Gale.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

BENJAMIN WELLS ſworn.

I live in Warwick Place. My ſervant had left ſome of my clothes in the paſſage, the door being left open to clean it, about nine they were gone; they were removed, I believe, by the ſervant; I generally take the key of the ſtreet-door up with me; but it was on the Saturday morning, and the girl was to clean the paſſage out, and I left it below; my clothes are frequently put there by the ſervant for the purpoſe of bruſhing them, but ſhe had imprudently left the ſtreet-door open; the things I ſaw at eight diſappeared before nine. I made ſome enquiry in the neighbourhood, and I found from a hackney coachman; I ſaw all the things at Bow-ſtreet on Monday, except the papers; a woman was in cuſtody.

WILLIAM RICHARDS ſworn.

I was at the corner of Warwick-court, upon the ſtand, and the priſoner came by with theſe things, and ſeemed much confuſed; he came under a cart, came to my horſes head, went on the off ſide, opened the coach door himſelf, and put the things in the coach; he bid me drive to Weſtminſter as faſt as poſſible; he was ſo confuſed, he could ſcarcely tell me; then I aſked him to what part of Weſtminſter, and he ſaid to Duck-lane; I drove paſt the turning; I did not know it exactly; I ſtopped and aſked him; he got out and took the bundle and called a woman to give him two ſhillings; he went into a houſe which an old lady kept; he aſked where Nanny was, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was up ſtairs; he called her down, and gave this bundle to her, and ordered her to give me two ſhillings; I looked through the fore glaſs all the way, and going along the Strand, I ſaw the priſoner take a pocket book from one of his breaſt pockets, and look over a many papers; then I immediately thought going along, this man may have things of a gentleman's of very great property; and I thought it was the beſt thing I could do to diſcover as ſoon as poſſible, and as ſoon as I him ſet down, I gave notice; in conſequence of which, the woman was firſt apprehended; Sir Robert Taylor went with me; I begged of him to go becauſe we are fearful; I ſhewed him the houſe; I thought it belonged to ſome gentlemen's chambers; and I gave notice at the coffee-houſe; the priſoner is the man; I knew his face before; I have no doubt of him.

JOHN SAYRE ſworn.

I went to this houſe with Sir Richard Taylor; I found four or five people in the houſe; and I found theſe things that I now produce in the two pair of ſtairs; there were two women and a man in bed, that was juſt come out of priſon; in conſequence of the information of theſe girls, I apprehended Mrs. Brown; the priſoner was not there, about an hour or two after the priſoner came, and owned the property; the priſoner was taken in Bond-ſtreet two or three days after.

Did he ever ſay any thing about this matter?——No.

Mr. Wells. Here are two coats, the waiſtcoat, and pocket book; this I know to be mine.

Is there any particular deſcription by which you know it?——This coat I have not yet looked at, but there is a piece of the button broken off, here it is, I believe the other coat to be mine, the pocket book I am ſure of.

What may the value of thoſe things be at a low valuation?——I do not wiſh to value them too high; twenty ſhillings.

FRANCES BROWN ſworn.

The priſoner brought theſe things into the houſe with the coachman, and aſked me to lend him a couple of ſhillings, he did not ſtop a minute in the place, he did not ſay how he came by them.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

As I was coming along on Monday morning, I met with that woman's huſband with the things under his arm; and he aſked me, knowing me, to take theſe things to his houſe, and he would pay me for it, accordingly I did ſo, and he bid me aſk his wife for three ſhillings to pay for the coach; I have nobody to prove this, I have not been a long time out of the country.

GUILTY, 20s.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Court to Priſoner. In this caſe you probably owe your life to the lenity of Mr. Wells the proſecutor; you ought to diſcover where the papers are.

Priſoner. I know nothing of them.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

A ſecond count. For feloniouſly ſtealing on the 2d day of March laſt, one bank note, value 20l. that ſum being unſatisfied, the property of the ſaid John Fokes.

(The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.)

JANE FOKES, jun. ſworn.

The priſoner came to engage my mother to nurſe her lady, ſhe ſaid ſhe lived at Mr. Robinſon's in North-ſtreet, and ſhe ſaid ſhe would go on the Monday; ſhe came on Saturday the 4th of March, and ſaid, that in the morning her lady had given her four tickets for the play on Monday evening; that ſhe and her huſband, and two of Lord Towſhend's ſervants were going to the play, and if I and my eldeſt brother, Daniel Fokes, would go, we ſhould; I told her I was much obliged to her, and being a ſervant out of place, I ſhould be glad to go; on Monday the priſoner was to call on me at two o'clock, which ſhe did, and then told my mother not to go to her lady till Tueſday; and ſhe then ſaid, ſhe could not go to the play, becauſe her lady had a great deal of company, and two of the maids were gone into the country, and ſhe ſhould be glad if I would come and aſſiſt the cook for two or three days; and as I was out of place, I ſaid, I would go; I ſaid, I had no clothes, but thoſe upon me; and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would lend me things plenty; and my eldeſt brother came home to go to the play; I told him we could not go, and I deſired him to ſend for ſome things for me to my lodgings; and he wrote a note and laid it on the window; and the priſoner ſtole that note, and went to my lodgings, and got the things mentioned in the indictment; I wrote for a dark cotton gown, a ſilk handkerchief, and a coloured apron; theſe things lay in my caravan; the gentlewoman could get to them, but nothing more; I went with the priſoner to go to this place; my mother lives in One Bell-court, Tooley-ſtreet; and upon London-bridge the priſoner ſaid, ſhe was come without without money, and was to take a dreſſed cap home for her lady; and it was to come to a guinea; her lady had given her a guinea in the morning, but ſhe laid it down on the ſideboard, and came out without it; and aſked me what money I had about me; and I told her, only a crown piece, and a dollar; then ſhe ſaid, there was an old fellow ſervant of her's, that kept a public houſe by Honey-lane market; ſhe went in, I ſtopped a minute at the door; ſhe called for a pint of twopenny; ſhe called to me to go along; ſhe drank half the liquor, and found fault, the man had drawn her beer inſtead of twopenny; I aſked her, was not ſhe going into the bar to the gentlewoman; ſays ſhe, Jenny, you can lend me that crown piece and dollar, that I may not go home without getting the cap; I ſaid, I can do ſo, but not by the way of parting with it; ſhe ſaid, by no means; and I lent her them, to go and fetch the cap; and ſhe bid me ſtop a few minutes, and ſhe would return, but ſhe did not; it then wanted ten minutes to ſix, I waited till twenty minutes after ſix; I found ſhe did not return; I went home, and told my mother; but I went firſt to Mr. Seagood's, where ſhe ſaid ſhe was going, nobody had been there; and my brother went to where ſhe ſaid ſhe lived, and no ſuch perſon lived in the family; there is ſuch a family; the next day about half after one, I went to my lodgings, and the boxes and the other things were gone.

Eleanor Gillingwater proved the priſoner coming for the proſecutrix's box to her houſe, with a note.

Daniel Fokes, the proſecutrix's brother, confirmed the above, and depoſed to the note which he wrote; he found the priſoner on Thurſday, and the box in her room, and a cap and handkerchief belonging to his ſiſter, and found a pair of ſhoes and buckles, and a pair of ſtockings, and a white petticoat ſhe had on, belonging to the proſecutrix, and found the duplicates of other things in her pockets.

WILLIAM GARNER ſworn.

I took theſe things off the priſoner I am poſitive.

(The things depoſed to.)

She was alſo charged on the Coroner's inquiſition, with killing and ſlaying the ſaid Ann Roſe.

SARAH ROBERTSON ſworn.

I live in White-horſe court, Cherry-tree-alley, White-croſs-ſtreet.

Where did Ann Roſe live?——In Cow-heel-alley, No. 2.

Was ſhe a ſingle or a married woman?——Single.

Did ſhe lodge there, or had ſhe a houſe?—A little houſe.

Was ſhe a houſe-keeper?—Yes.

Where did this priſoner live?——In Old-ſtreet.

What do you know of the misfortune that happened to Ann Roſe?—Ann Roſe and a man came home at one o'clock, on a Saturday night, about a fortnight ago.

Were they ſober when they came home?——Middling ſober.

Did any body come home with them?—Nobody but their two ſelves.

Where was you?—At home.

How near do you live to them?——At that time I lived in the houſe with them; and in about an hour after the priſoner and her huſband came in.

Do they lodge in the ſame houſe too?—No, the man that lived with the deceaſed is brother to the priſoner.

What did they come about?—About a ſon that ſhe has at ſea, to tell her brother of it.

Was you in the room with them?——Yes; and the words began about the boy that is at ſea; and this woman, the priſoner, put the deceaſed in a paſſion.

What did ſhe do or ſay, to put her in a paſſion?—She was talking about the boy that is at ſea, and ſhe ſaid he was dead.

Why ſhould that put the deceaſed in a paſſion?——Becauſe the deceaſed ſaid, he had better be dead, than come home, for he had no houſe nor habitation; and the priſoner ſaid, why was it ſo; and the deceaſed ſaid, it would be a happy turn, if pleaſe God to take him; and ſo the priſoner called the deceaſed a b—h, or ſomething or another; and ſhe put her in ſuch a big paſſion, that ſhe up with her hand and ſlapped her face; the deceaſed ſlapped the priſoner's face; then after, the priſoner took and held her hands, and ſhook her; I fancy ſhe took and ſhook her; and the deceaſed fell down; and ſhe got ſome hurt in her back; I do not know how ſhe came by it, without ſhe fell againſt the box.

Did you tee whether ſhe fell againſt the box or no?——Sir, ſhe fell down, but whether ſhe hit herſelf againſt the box or no, I cannot ſay; but ſhe ſaid, ſhe did hurt herſelf againſt the box; her huſband picked her up, and ſhe complained of her back, moſt monſtrous of a pain in her back; and afterwards there were words between them, and they went at it again; and they went out into the yard.

What do you call going at it?——Why, fighting, and ſhaking one another.

Did they ſtrike?——The deceaſed had the moſt blows; this woman did not fight her; ſhe held her hands, and ſhook her well.

What did the deceaſed do, did ſhe try to fight?——Oh yes; ſhe fought again, to take her own part.

Who was it that began the ſecond time?——I cannot ſay.

What did ſhe ſay or do, to begin the ſecond time?——It was about the boy; I ſat by the fire, and in about a quarter of an hour I heard the cry of murder; what they were doing in the yard I cannot tell; they went out after the two men; I got up and went out, and this priſoner had hold of her by her hand; and held her hands, and ſhook her well.

Was the deceaſed at that time ſtanding, or was ſhe on the ground?——Standing both of them; it was the deceaſed cried murder; I knew her voice.

What did the deceaſed do, while the priſoner had hold of her hand?——She ſtrove to ſtrike as well as ſhe could with her hand.

Did you interpoſe to put a ſtop to this?——They ſoon let one another go, and the deceaſed complained of her back and they did not go to it any more; they both came in.

What became of the huſbands of thoſe two people?——They were in the yard, and drinking; they were trying to part them when I went out.

Did ſhe complain of her back before ſhe went out the ſecond time?—Yes; and ſhe complained of her back when ſhe came in; and when her huſband came in, her paſſion was ſo great, that ſhe took ſome red hot fire out with her hand, and hove it at him.

What did ſhe take the fire out with?—In her hand.

Was it wood or coal?—Coal; and then afterwards ſhe took up the poker, and ſhe hit him over his head; then after he took a ſtick, and was going to lick her; and I took the ſtick from him and broke it; and then I believe it was all over; then they made it all up again; and then the priſoner called the deceaſed out, and told her ſhe wanted to ſpeak to her, and the deceaſed ſaid, what do you want to ſpeak to me, now you have almoſt killed me? and the priſoner ſaid, ſays ſhe, almoſt killed you, if it had not been for your brother, I would have laid you for dead; and then afterwards they went home together to the priſoner's houſe in Old-ſtreet.

The deceaſed did not live at the priſoner's houſe at that time?—No.

What did they go home for?——They went to get ſome victuals for the man; the deceaſed brought ſome meat home with her.

How long after did the deceaſed come back again with the meat?—I take it, ſhe went home about ſix, and returned about half after ſix or ſeven; this was in the morning.

So then you ſet up all night in this affray?——Yes; the deceaſed and the priſoner came home, and the deceaſed told me where ſhe got it; I dreſſed the pork; we had it for breakfaſt; and the deceaſed eat very heartily; but ſhe ſtill complained of her back and her belly till ſhe died; ſhe eat nothing more; ſhe kept about till ſhe went to bed; and ſhe got up no more till ſhe was brought to bed.

When was ſhe brought to bed?——On the Tueſday morning.

Did you ſee the child?——Yes.

Have you any judgment, can you tell me whether it was at its full time?—No Sir, it was about ſix months; it lived about three hours after ſhe was delivered.

Did you apprehend ſhe was not more than ſix months gone?—No; I believe ſhe was not.

How ſoon did you diſcover that ſhe had labour pains upon her, and was likely to be brought to bed?——I cannot ſay how ſoon, ſhe complained all day of the Monday and all night; and ſhe was brought to bed at eight o'clock.

Had ſhe any aſſiſtance?—Yes, a midwife.

Was the priſoner in liquor; as well as the deceaſed?—Yes, the priſoner was very much in liquor; the deceaſed was not ſo much in liquor.

How long have you known them?——I was with them a twelvemonth conſtant.

What buſineſs did the huſband follow?——He is a wheelwright.

How had they lived together, were they good friends, or did they live jangling?—They agreed very well.

They did not bear any ill will to one another that you obſerved?——I cannot ſay; the deceaſed ſaid, if ever ſhe got over it, as her child was dead, that ſhe would get a warrant for this woman, and keep it by her, they did not bear any will to one another that I obſerved.

Mr. Garrow. Do you remember any converſation between theſe two women about the deceaſed having no bread for her children?——The priſoner's huſband cut two ſlices of bread off for the deceaſed and ſome butter.

Did you hear any converſation with her after ſhe had got the pork and things, about coals?—Yes; ſhe borrowed ſeven farthings of the priſoner for coals after the quarrel.

Court. Was it known among you that the deceaſed was with child?——Yes.

ELIZABETH ROSE ſworn.

I was not there at the time; but on the Sunday, the deceaſed came to my place, and told me ſhe had been very ill uſed by the priſoner.

She complained in general that ſhe had been ill uſed ?—Yes.

Did you obſerve whether ſhe was ill or not ?—Yes, ſhe was ill, ſhe complained of a violent pain in her back.

Was you with her after that ?——I ſaw her on the Monday, about five or ſix in the afternoon.

Was ſhe then in bed, or up ?—She then was in bed; when I went in, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was very bad, I aſked her what was the matter, ſhe told me, ſhe had been in a violent pain, and ſhe believed it was through the ill uſage that this woman had given her.

I do not aſk the account of what the woman did to her, but I want to know her condition; when did you apprehend that ſhe might be likely to be brought to bed ?—On the Tueſday morning ſhe ſent for me in, and when I went in, ſhe ſays to me, Oh, Betty, I am very bad, and I aſked her a few private queſtions, and ſhe told me, as I could underſtand, that ſhe was going to be delivered, or at leaſt to miſcarry; I ſaid, if pleaſe God, I will go and aſk Mrs. Martin to come to you, ſhe is your landlady, and is a midwife, and ſhe came immediately half dreſſed and half undreſſed, and when ſhe in, I ſaid, Mrs. Martin, I believe every thing is ready for you.

When was ſhe delivered ?——On that Tueſday morning.

How ſoon after Mrs. Martin came ?—Why Sir, the deceaſed was delivered I may ſay before ſhe came in; the child was born before the midwife came.

The child died ſoon I underſtand ?——The child lived about three hours, and the woman died the Thurſday following.

Did ſhe apprehend herſelf to be in danger before ſhe died ?—She ſaid, from the beginning to the laſt, that ſhe thought ſhe never could recover it; ſhe ſaid, if pleaſe God ſhe went to bed, ſhe thought never to get out of it, ſhe ſaid, I ſhall be worſe to-morrow than I am now.

After ſhe was brought to bed, did ſhe tell you any particulars ?—After ſhe was brought to bed, and the child died, ſhe ſaid, Betty, if pleaſe God I die, I hope you will do your endeavour to ſee juſtice done me, and take up that wicked huſſey for murdering me and my child.

Now at this time, did ſhe tell you what it was in particular that the woman had done to her ?—She had told me all before.

Did ſhe repeat it at that time ?—I cannot ſay ſhe did, ſhe ſaid to me as thus, ſays ſhe, Betty, I wiſh I had ſome relief; that was after the child lay dead on the table, I ſaid, I will go to the pariſh officers and ſee if I cannot get you ſome; I went to the gentlemen, and got a note for the apothecary; the apothecary was not at home, I went again at two o'clock, and the apothecary ſaid, he could not come till ten o'clock the next day.

Had you a note from the pariſh officer to the apothecary ?—Yes, Sir, I delivered it into the apothecary's houſe; with that the gentlemen of the pariſh ſaid, if we would ſtay till about five at night, they would ſee what was the reaſon he could not come, and they would make him; between five and ſix they came and ſaw her, and went out again, and ſaid, provided he did not come, they would bring another within half an hour or an hour; and as they ſaid, ſo they did, about ſix on the Wedneſday afternoon.

JAMES BUCKLEY ſworn.

I am a carpenter by trade; I happened to be in the room at the ſame time.

You are the perſon that they call the priſoner's huſband ?——Yes.

It ſeems you are not her huſband ?——No.

Nor the deceaſed's man was not her huſband neither it ſeems ?—No.

A ſcandalous ſtate you all live in! relate what you know of this ?——The priſoner went to ſee her brother on account of her ſon, to know if he knew any thing of the Rattleſnake being blown up, in which he was; I was very unwilling to let her go, but ſhe prevailed upon me; when we went there firſt, ſhe ſpoke to her brother; he ſaid, no; the deceaſed ſaid, I am glad to hear he is blown up; the priſoner made anſwer, I think it is a very cruel thing to have a perſon blown up into the air, without having time to ſay, Lord have mercy upon me! They diſcourſed of this ſome time, and at laſt bad words aroſe; at laſt the deceaſed flew into a very great rage, and with a very bad word in her mouth, which was, d——n your eyes, you b——ch, I will murder you; upon which, ſhe took up ſomething to ſtrike her with, which I think was a diſh, or ſomething of that ſort; the priſoner wrenched it from her hand, and held her for ſome time; then ſhe let her go; ſhe took up a brick, and ſwore ſhe would put her eyes out with the brick; upon which the priſoner laid hold of that, and took it away from her, and after that ſhe held her hands, the deceaſed endeavouring to beat the priſoner; and the deceaſed offered to kick the priſoner; and there was a box lay pretty near to the bed's foot, which ſhe tumbled over; I ſaw her, and I believe ſhe fell againſt the bed-ſide, and hit herſelf; in a little time after, they went into the yard, we all did, to drink a couple of pots of beer, which I had ſent for.

What, did you drink your beer in the yard?——It is a kind of a garden.

What, go out into the yard to drink in the night, in the middle of April?—Yes; we had the beer out, and could not drink it on this happening; when we had been in the yard a little while, ſome words aroſe again, and the deceaſed was going to throw ſomething at the priſoner, and the priſoner took hold of her hands, and gave her a ſhake; we came into the houſe again; I did not imagine any thing happening, I called to them ſeveral times; ſays I, you will hurt one another, and then you will be ſorry for it; I endeavoured for ſome time to ſeparate them, which I could not obtain.

So you and Mr. Lewis, that lived with theſe two women, you ſtood by, and ſuffered them to pull themſelves to pieces in this manner?——They often had words in this manner before, but they did not hurt one another, and then they went to drink after it.

Why, you all knew ſhe was with child?——No, I did not; ſhe was a woman that I did not altogether like, and I told the priſoner not to let her come into our room ſeveral times, for I did not like her, ſhe had very bad expreſſions.

You were both of you two abominable brutes, to let theſe people tear one another to pieces in this manner?——The deceaſed cried out murder in the yard, and the priſoner ſaid to her brother, Richard, go and give that woman good words, for ſhe makes a ſhameful noiſe; in a very few minutes, we were all friends; I inſiſted upon the priſoner's coming home, and ſtaying no longer. As we were coming to go home, the deceaſed ſaid to the priſoner, Fanny, you have got a good loaf to carry home to your children, but I have not got a bit of bread for mine; the priſoner ſaid, you ſhall have ſome, and ſhe ſaid to me, Jem, cut her ſome; I cut three ſlices, but ſhe thought it was not enough, and ſhe cut a fourth off it; I likewiſe gave her ſome butter; then we went to the Crown, and had another pot of beer, to depart in peace; then the deceaſed ſaid to the priſoner, Fanny, you promiſed me a hat when your child died; and the priſoner ſaid, that I did; if you will go with me, you ſhall have it now; and they both went home together; and there happened to lay a piece of pork, which I had bought for dinner, and ſhe ſeemed to have ſome kind of inclination to this pork; upon which the priſoner lighted a fire, and broiled ſome, as I underſtood, and came and gave it her; I and the other man were at the Crown, drinking the beer.

How long did you ſtay at the Crown?——We might ſtay an hour and a half, or two hours; when we parted from the Crown, we went home alone, and theſe two women came back to the Crown to us.

Did any body come back with the two women?——They came by themſelves; then we ſtaid a little while, and each went to her own home, all in friendſhip; I did hear the deceaſed ſay, I think it was at the Crown, that ſhe had hurt herſelf by tumbling over that d—ned box; I do not remember hearing her ſay any thing of it in the houſe or in the yard; I think it was there; however, that was the expreſſion, and all I heard her ſay of it.

So, you do not remember her complaining in the houſe, or in the yard, of being hurt?——No, I did not take notice, there was a noiſe; and I thought as the priſoner did not ſtrike her, there could be no damage; all I minded was that the priſoner did not ſtrike her; I ſaw the deceaſed again on Tueſday night; that was after ſhe was brought to-bed.

RICHARD LEWIS ſworn.

I am brother to the priſoner.

You are the man that cohabited with the deceaſed?—Yes; I ſaw them at high words; as to blows, I ſaw none.

What were the high words about?——About this lad that was at ſea; it began about that.

Whoſe ſon was this lad at ſea?——The priſoner's; I went out into the yard, to get out of the noiſe of it; and when I came back, there was peace.

How long did that laſt?—I cannot ſay; about a quarter of an hour, or rather more; there was another fray in the paſſage, but I did not ſee it; I do not know whether it was in the houſe or the yard.

The affray was in the yard, was not it?——As they tell me; I did not ſee the blow ſtruck on the head.

Tell me the whole of what you ſaw?—I ſaw her when ſhe fell atop of the box.

Where was that, in the houſe; begin, and tell me how it paſſed?——They began firſt with words, all about this boy, and about the Rattleſnake; then the deceaſed ſtruck the priſoner, and through that, ſhe either puſhed her down, or ſhe tumbled down, I cannot ſay which.

By whom was this done?——By Frances Lewis; I do not believe ſhe puſhed her down, ſhe tumbled down herſelf.

Was ſhe hurt by that fall?—Yes; ſhe complained of her back.

Where was Mr. Buckley at that time?—He might be in the room for what I know; ſhe complained of her back.

What happened after that?—Nothing particular happened after that.

Recollect yourſelf of all that happened in the yard after that?—I was not ſober.

And can't you recollect whether you went into the yard afterwards with them, or no?——I believe I was in the yard, but I cannot recollect; I was ſometimes in the yard, and ſometimes in the houſe.

And upon your oath, you cannot give me any account of what paſſed in the yard?—I cannot.

After the affray was over, they were all ſociable?—They went out together.

Where did they go to?——I underſtood they went to Mr. Buckley's houſe.

Did not you go to the Crown?—Yes.

Why did not you tell me ſo?—I went to the Crown, and Mr. Buckley and they came to us.

What time did you get back from the Crown?——About ſeven, as near as I can gueſs.

Did you go to bed?——I did.

Did your wife?——No, ſhe did not go to bed till the Sunday; I went to bed, and ſlept ſeveral hours.

What buſineſs are you?——A coach wheelwright.

How long was you in bed?——Not more than ſix hours.

When you got up, what condition did you find your woman in?——She complained of a pain in her back.

How was ſhe on the Sunday night?——Very poorly.

Did ſhe get up on the Tueſday?——Not at all; I never ſaw her up after ſhe went to bed.

A fine life you are leading, to ſit up all night, and drinking, and getting into theſe affrays, and living in this abominable ſtate!

PHEBE MACCOLM ſworn.

I am a midwife.

I hear you was good enough to go to this poor woman?—Yes.

What time was it you firſt ſaw her?—On Tueſday morning, between the hours of eight and nine.

Was ſhe delivered before you came?—The buſineſs was wholly done.

What ſtate did you find the woman in?——She was a ſtranger to me; the firſt ſhe ſaid to me, was, Oh, Mrs. Maccolm, Mrs, Maccolm, Mrs. Maccolm, I ſhall die! I did not imagine it was from any ill treatment, but from her labour coming on; I then was not acquainted ſhe was delivered; Elizabeth Rowe ſays to me, your buſineſs is ready for you; ready for me! I ſaid; and going towards the bed, I ſaw what ſhe meant; bleſs me, ſays I, you are not at your time; the child was alive, but when I firſt ſaw it, I did not expect life in it; I took the child, and was intending to ſit down, and dreſs it, with the child in my lap; I ordered Elizabeth Roſe to get the deceaſed to bed; the place was very poor; with her going to lift her, ſhe ſeemed to ſhake, as though ſhe could not bear to be moved; I aroſe from my chair, and ſaid, I will do it; I attempted to take her by her two ſhoulders, to aſſiſt her; ſhe did not appear as if ſhe could bear it; I then held her under the right arm, and ſhe aſſiſted herſelf, and got off the bed, and ſat without any aſſiſtance in a chair; ſhe expreſſed ſhe had been ill uſed by Mrs. Buckley, a woman, ſhe ſaid, I knew; that is the priſoner; I did not at all recollect who ſhe meant; ſhe was as comfortable as I could make her; I put her to bed, and I left her; the child was alive; I ſaw her no more till the Wedneſday evening; on the Wedneſday evening I had been out of town; when I came home, I heard the officers of the pariſh had been at my houſe, and that the woman was exceedingly ill; I went before I ſat down in the room; I then ſaw the deceaſed in a fever, and ſhe was very ill, and then complained of a pain in her head; ſhe expreſſed it was a mercy that this woman was there, for between them both they would wholly have murdered her, but who ſhe meant, I cannot ſay; I looked upon it to be the huſband and the priſoner.

How long did you ſtay with her at that time?——I did not ſtay many minutes.

Did you adminiſter any medicines?——No, Sir; ſhe had a gentleman, which is here.

Did ſhe appear to you to be quite in poſſeſſion of her ſenſes, when ſhe ſaid this?—Yes, Sir; I did not perceive any thing elſe.

No mark of being delirious?—No, Sir; but ſhe certainly had a fever.

Did ſhe mention any other circumſtances?——No more than a very great pain in her head.

BARTHOLOMEW BOWEN ſworn.

I am a ſurgeon, No. 127, Whitecroſs-ſtreet.

Is not the perſon here that attended the woman?——I did. On the 12th of April, between ſix and ſeven, or thereabout, Mr. Briant, and the other overſeer of the pariſh, came to my houſe, and deſired me to go with them to ſee a poor diſtreſſed woman, becauſe they ſaid they had ſent for the apothecary of the pariſh, and he would not come; I went with them, and found her in a dying ſtate, with a putrid fever; I told them, this woman is a dead woman, and they deſired me to ſend a trifle in; I ſent in a balſamic, that was not taken, and the next day they told me ſhe died, between ſeven and eight in the morning.

Was ſhe at that time in her ſenſes?——She was in her ſenſes, but as low as could be to be alive.

Had you been informed ſhe had been delivered lately?—Yes; they did not tell me ſhe was ill treated.

I ſuppoſe, in the ſtate ſhe was in, you did not think it of any uſe to make any enquiry reſpecting that?——On Friday, Mr. Riley and me examined the body, and we found ſeveral bruiſes and contuſions in different parts of the body, and particularly on the os ſacrum, and between the two ſhoulders, and the upper part and the lower part of the left arm; then, according to my own opinion, it was by violent paſſions, and by ſtruggling, each of them, which brought on a premature delivery, which was the occaſion of her death.

How the premature delivery was brought on, you cannot tell?——No.

Are thoſe putrid fevers often the conſequence, or do they accompany deliveries?—Always in ſuch caſes they cauſe mortifications.

I thought they were more likely to be inflammatory?—They turn to inflammatory, and then mortifications enſue.

Do you apprehend in this caſe a mortification did enſue?——Certainly.

SAMUEL RILEY ſworn.

I inſpected the body, and found ſeveral marks or contuſions on different parts; the principal of which was on the os ſacrum, one between the two ſhoulders, and on the left arm, the lower part of the upper arm, which extended juſt below the joint, and a few livid ſpots or contuſions round each wriſt, the occaſion of the marks of violence; my opinion is, that if ſhe had not been in the ſituation that I learned ſhe was in, the bruiſes themſelves were not ſufficient to have cauſed her death.

Would bruiſes that have been received a few days before, acquire a worſe appearance, in conſequence of a putrid fever happening?—Certainly.

That bruiſe in the os ſacrum, is that a likely thing to happen by a fall againſt the corner of a box?——Yes, or againſt the floor.

This ſpecies of fevers, is that the ſpecies of fever that ordinarily attends child-bearing?——Generally, it firſt ariſes from an inflammatory fever, which is what we call a puerperal fever.

Where the party is delivered on Tueſday, and is in a dying ſtate on Thurſday, is that the puerperal fever?—I look upon it, that this fever was brought on by paſſion.

I want to know, whether this kind of fever is a common circumſtance that happens upon premature births the day before?——It is common for a fever to attend perſons in this ſtate.

Is it this ſort of fever?——The ſame fever but not ſo violent.

An inflammatory fever that degenerates into a putrid fever, I ſhould apprehend would require ſome time?—Not much, my Lord.

Theſe puerperal fevers are brought on I ſuppoſe by a variety of cauſes?——Yes; either from pains of delivery or the ſtate of diſcharges after delivery.

It is natural enough, when you are informed that there has been a great affray, and that there has been blows, to take that into your conſideration, and to aſcribe it to that.

(The priſoner gave in a paper to Mr Garrow, which he ſaid, neither he nor any body elſe in Court could read.)

Priſoner to Sarah Robertſon. Did not you take the diſh out of her hand?—She did not meddle with her with it; I took it away from her.

She was in a paſſion with the priſoner?——Yes; it was a twopenny diſh, I took it from her.

Why did you take it from her?—I dare ſay ſhe would have done the priſoner ſome miſchief, if I had not.

Was that before they began fighting at all?—It was in the affray.

Court. Is any body here belonging to the Crown?—No.

Where is the Crown?—In White-croſs-ſtreet.
